CORPUS THEMETICUM
A GUIDE TO THEM WHOM WOULD BE MORE
- THE TEMPLE OF THEM v.2.0 -

To Them that believe in my belief in THEM

…And to Lovecraft's Mad Arab Abdul Alhazred,
Of whom I am the living embodiment.

1515.

Embrace. Exhaust. Evolve.

Throughout my life I have collected and collated dozens of books from various magical currents to preserve them for our and future generations, but for varied reasons I have never performed the same kindness/duty for the Temple of THEM. Corpus Themeticum is an attempt to digitally store and transfer the majority of my written works concerning my occult journey and archive the wild tangle of changing insights and discoveries I have had and made in the past thirty-five years.

In style, it is nowhere close to being as ornate and decorative as the full-graphic 'Themonomicon', the illustrated 'Temple Guidebook 2015', or the colourful 'Oto Anorha' magazines. Such adornment and visual care has taken place at other stages of my texts life; to be found in the archives of Chapter 13: The Vault. But this, is not that kind of book.

For the first time in its history, I have attempted to place the majority of THEM's texts in an 'order of concept' - to help mentally/magically dismantle the Ziggurat systematically; and to add structure to the chaos of so many writings within. Moreover it represents my magnum opus and introduces Magico-Politics; a critical crossover for initiates to understand to navigate forms and forces. This collection is far beyond the limited effort of Threshold that offered an overview of our works across four themed books; Corpus Themeticum features almost 1900 pages of occult philosophical thought, experiment, madness, stark sanity and new manuscripts.

Not all texts are written by my hand but I largely present what appears under the collective of THEM. Multiple currents are represented at varied stages of my life. What is contained herein should be considered of historical importance to the tradition of the occult, especially in relation to Australia. Views are not necessarily reflective or encompassing of my current views - which have grown both increasingly complicated in many regards and infinitesimally simple in others.

At 47 years of age, my involvement in the Occult has brought me both sublime internal peace, Knowing what I know, and churning, roiling insanity and dark depression, Knowing what I know. Somehow, I have managed to withstand the onslaught of interaction with these forces, but not without deep and lasting scars and the loss of a great many loves. The price paid to bring you this book, for it to contain what it contains; and that it finds you in whatever time, whosoever you are; was a very high price;- as to release this means things have become dire indeed.

At times I have written with speed due to the circumstances of my life choices to stand against the state's terror machine since I was a child - joined by other One's of THEM - and in a race against time at the late-stage of the world being increasingly seized by tendrils I have sought to stop, that have wrapped the world in its messianic magian crush. There may be errors and unfinished thought processes – but we have given our all to write what we have in the hope that it can change the course of humanity's direction and assist us to evolve. In the hope that it can help and passes the torch to future sorcerers.

Books, are portals. Reading the right book at the right time by the right person can completely shatter their world. This book is a portal to many portals, and was built to shatter All Worlds. If you come this way, may THEM watch over you. And may you someday join me on the tightrope on the other side of the Abyss, among the stars in the blackest black.

But ever know, dear reader, this was just my Mvimaedivm, My Way – You, must find your Own.

⊕

Know Thyself.
⊕.

WITHIN

Chapter 1: Summarising the Occult Zeitgeist

Prokaryotes p.16
Bathysphere p.17
Nomenclature: A Glossary p.24
Brief History of the Brief History of THEM p.28
The Message of Thoth from THEM p.31
The Eye of THEM p.32
Abracadabra p.33
Directive A-66 p.45
In Sinister Solidarity: Dangerous Knowledge to the Uninitiated p.50
Divine Joy (The Great Chaos) p.54
The Theory of the Beast [1] p.56
The Theory of the Beast [2] p.61
The Magi p.67
Magian Ignorance and modern society p.69
A Sinister History Lesson p.71
Are the Magi, Sinister? p.73
In Absurdum p.74
Dialogues 1 of 10000 p.80
Lovecraft: Father of the Temple of THEM p.87
Joining the Temple of THEM p.88
The Sorcerer's Apprentice p.92

Chapter 2: Magico-Politics

An Introduction to Magico-Politics p.95
Magico-Politics and the Creation of the State p.96
As Above So Below p.109
A Very Stupid Man p.111
Scapegoating p.114
Can a State be Safe? p.117
Magical Socialism p.121

Chapter 3: Form

Cold Facts of Form and Manipulation 1-3 p.125/126/130
Mah Wim Ah Day Um: The Action Plan p.133
THEM, Plurality and Archaeology p.139

Form 101: [Transcript] p.147
Form 102: Metamorphology p.160
Phorm – 361 Degrees p.164
Symbolic Vision – A Study of Revelatory Language p.168
THEM, Numbers, Form & the Magi p.191
An Introduction to the Arte of Deception p.201
Form, Relativity and Reality p.213
Blood, Sweat, Forms and Years p.214
Hollowmen p.220
Howl of the Introvert p.224

Chapter 4: Exoteric Formations

The Fundamentals of Human Being p.231
Australia, Magic and the Sinister (To Aquino) p.232
The Formation of THEM[1-3] p.237/241/243
The Infinite Fractal p.245
Falcifer: Aims and Intents p.248
Directives of the Temple of THEM p.254
Grand Black Magic and a National Satanic Army p.260
Within the Temple: Getting Started p.262
On What Makes an Amateur Sorcerer p.267
Insynsian – The Subjectivity of Objectivity p.269
Insynsian, Mental Fallibility and Aeonics p.276
Emanations of Urania – UAE: An Artistic Explication p.280
Places of Power p.284
Requisites p.285
Planet Caravan p.286
Eyes: Asov Inaugural p.288
Eyes: Asov Notes for Aspirants p.291
ASOV Flag Esoteric Meaning p.296
The Star Talk p.299
On Building a Physical Compound p.310
A Sinister Barter System p.317
Keeping the Bastard Together p.320
In Supra Solidarity [ISS] p.322
The Code of ISS p.324
The Black Glyph Society p.325
About Mvimaedivm (Diaries of a Devilworshipper) p.326
Secrets of Mvimaedivm p.328
I. vs. We p.330
The Power of Word p.331
“Temple” vs “temple” p.334

The Pen vs the Sword: Action vs. Thought p.343
Here Be Dragons p.345
TSP (Satanic Panic) p.358
Meandernet p.362
The Power of Will to Shape Reality p.367
Magic Perception and Dimension p.370
Economics, Money, Magic and the Sinister [1-4] p.378/383/390/396
Grand Black Magic: Aims of Experiment A p.400
THEM, Unsanity and the Young Illuminati p.402
Kniving – To Our Critics p.403
Imperium: The Force of Escalation p.407
The Alpha-Cynic vs. the Alpha-Male p.410
The Alpha-Cynic [2] p.416
Crips, Bloods and Australia p.418
Sovereignty, Legacy and Hypocrisy p.429
WHO or WHAT is Dangerous? p.434
On Touchiness, Utility and the LHP p.442
Vantages: Toward a New Lexicon p.442
Directives: An Initiate's Reflections p.451
The Limits of the Temple of THEM p.459
The Sinister Dialogues [chap13]

Chapter 5: Esoteric Development.

13ism: The Duodiac p.470
Psynami p.504
Hammers of the Witches p.505
A Summary of the Approach to Black Magic p.506
The Abyss: Notes p.507
A Degree of Separation p.508
Ad Accumulum Infinitum p.509
Into the Mouth of Madness p.510
No Choice but Theist: Dark Gods, Black Magic, Orgasm and Sex p.512
Lovecraft: The Essence of THEM p.527
Arts and the Dark Arts p.529
Chronobet: Part 1 p.536
Chronobet: Part 2: Causating the Acausal p.538
An Analysis of Frequency: 1 and 2 p.541/553
In Shade p.556
The 23 Syndrome p.564
The 23 Syndrome: Notes and Practice p.567
A Re-Examination of the Axioms of Scientology p.578
An Examination of the Axioms of Royal Arch Freemasonry p.588

The Fundamentals of Magic: Internal, External, Aeonic, Narrative and Mythic p.646
Narrative Magic or Oromancy p.652
Intrusion, Synchronicity, Sorcery and Dark Lanterns p.657
Dreaming p.678
Lucid Dreaming p.679
Breaking the Locke: A Lexicon of Dream Description p.686
Magic, Gravity, The Magi and Depression p.689
On Psychic Vampires p.693
Death of Touch p.706
Remote Solidarity p.707
Radia Sol: Emanations of the Self p.710
Radia Star: Creating One of THEM p.721
Self, Ego and Traditional Satanism p.723
Collective Will p.725
Conspiracy and the New World Order 1-5 p.727
Maleficia Engram Haruspex Terato p.754
Fanaticism and Militant Satanism p.764
Gods Are Not Dead: Myth's Bitches p.768
The Black Keys of Satan (Liber Bathyal) p.774
Intelligent Evil p.777
Contemplation over Killing [II] p.782
The Sinister Grotesque p.782
The Sober Re-Realization of the Human Condition p.7785
The Formula for Change [1-10] p.786
Xorcery: Breaking the Sound Barrier p.790
Reichno-Contra: A New Sound p.796
Reichno-Contra: Revisited p.797
Vexagram p.799
Voxagram p.801
Baphomet: A Man's Role for Sinister Women – The Greatest Heresy p.802
The Greatest Heresy: Equilibrium p.808
Phantom Quizzics: A Modern Anatomy of the Brain p.813
Magic, God THEM and the Pi Syndrome p.818
The Tricirune p.826
On C H A N T p.827
Origin of Religion p.831
Origin of Magic p.831
MOSAIC: Assorted Thoughts: on the Eve of World War 3. p.832
The Voice and The Silence (Under the Sun) p.850
Politick of the Spheres p.880

Chapter 6: Correspondence and Interviews

Interview – [Fall of Man] p.885
An Interview with One of THEM [S. Maher] p.890
Interview with THEM [Anon] p.897
The Last Word from One of THEM – [Mark Sievwright] p.900
Formation: to the Order of Nine Angles (A letter) p.934
Flux p.940
Plateau: from Oto Anorha p.941
Disintegration p.944
Interview with THEM – [WSA352] p.967
Correspondence: George Sieg: Oct 9, 2009 p.978
A Refutation to Dr. Benjamin Hillier p.984
Mvimaedivm Book V [chap13]
On Solidarity p.1001
Dvim Divisia p.1005
Mutual Division: A Tale of Two Cities p.1006
Responsibility to the Responsible: An Open Letter to Nero of the Noctulius Blood Covenant p.1009
Deus Ex Machina: Speaking to Skynet p.1016
The Tightrope and the Abyss p.1065
Redacted p.1250
The Visitation of the Infinite p.1262
I Have a Dilemma (Letter to Thormynd) p.1272
I've Experienced God p.1273
On Satanism p.1274
Ga Wath Am: Conversation with ABG p.1276
So Where are We Now? (2024) p.1279
On Critical Terrorism Studies p.1280
Reply to a Media Task p.1283
A Discussion of Magic p.1285

Chapter 7: Rituals

Dark Vein p.1290
The Rite of Rain Magic*k p.1291
Elemental Magic p.1294
Invoking the Tempest p.1297
The Galactic Organic p.1299
The Acausal Pentagram: An Allegorical Anatomy p.1301
The Rite of Regurgitating Choronzon I p.1304
The Rite of Regurgitating Choronzon II p.1307
The Rite of Regurgitating Choronzon III p.1310

The Rite of Regurgitating Choronzon IIII p.1312
Sex Magic: Thanateros and Eros p.1314
The Rite of Synchronous Union p.1317
Future Magick p.1319
The Naos Deck Sinister Tarot p.1322
The Human Forest p.1328
The Aeurekanequeo – THEM's Map of Consciousness [chap13]
The Aeon of Fire (OA #34) [chap11]
Our Rite of Remembrance (OA #34) [chap13]
The Nameless Rite (OA #34) [chap13]
Self-Initiation into THEM [chap13]

Chapter 8: Personal Contemplation

Addendum p.1333
Inauguration p.1333
Individualosophy p.1334
Inverse Growth of the Master p.1337
Naming THEM p.1338
Mind War p.1345
Indisigual p.1347
18.333 – The Alchemy of Death p.1349
Ryan Anschauung p.1351
The Chant of the Ego p.1354
Confessions of a Shapeshifter 118eh p.1357
The Irony of Giving Insight p.1359
Contemplation over Killing [I] p.1362
Dilemma Us to THEM p.1365
Aemulation p.1367
Alluvial p.1368
The Frenzied Switch p.1370
Paragon p.1370
Not Everyone with the Urge p.1373
I Remember p.1375
Some Notes on the Dynamism of Insight p.1376
Triad of the Warrior, Sorcerer, Farmer: Insight into Inexorable Simplicity p.1384
Magic and the Intellect [1] p.1396
Magic and the Intellect [2] p.1399
Magic and the Intellect [3] p.1400
33 p.1401
Them: Thoughts p.1403
Desiderata p.1406
Shouting into the Abyss p.1408

Yiadry [Excerpts] p.1410
Free: The Bitter Irony of Satanism p.1417
Learning from Mistakes (2008) p.1418
The R-Reality and the Role of Lead and Gold p.1421
The Setting Sun, RA and Operation Khk p.1424
Adversary p.1424
Aeturnus p.1429
41 p.1432
42 p.1432
44 p.1433
Navigating a Course to the Stars p.1434
Disinherited True Power(lessness) p.1439

Chapter 9: Misc. Analyses

Universes Parallel 1-2 p.1445/1451
Quantum Philosophy p.1452
A Universal Theorem p.1453
The Simultaneous Pulse p.1454
Notes on Psilocybin p.1455
Blurring: Ethics and Dark Shadows p.1458
The Effect of Gaming on Dreams p.1466
Memes: A brief study p.1476
Genetically Modified Food p.1477
Genomes and the Human Gene Patent p.1482
The Dark God Oto Anorha and the Sinister Feminine: Breaking the Chains p.1484
Misogyniste, Moreau, Dali and the Eternal Feminine p.1486
The Physis of the Sinister 1-3 p.1488/1528/1538
Satan: A Numinous Symbol in the 21st Century p.1545
A Perfect Storm p.1547
Satanism and Prostitution p.1553
Fading p.1556
Regarding Hel p.1560
Propaganda, Honour and Idealism p.1562
Rebirth p.1567
The Paradoxical War of Opinion p.1569
An Early Study of the IOT [1] and [2] p.1583
The Constitution of a Satanic Alpha Lodge p.1589
Artificial Intelligence is Alive p.1592
AI and Kindness p.1601
On the Eve of AI Art p.1605
Them and Reptilians p.1610
The Chant to Return Atazoth p.1614

Black Obelisk p.1616
What defines a gentleman p.1618
Charnel House: A Reply p.1619
The Grand Master, The Sorceress and the Philosopher's Stone p.1636
Australia Day p.1638
Australian Foreign Policy p.1641
9/11 p.1642
A Nuclear Discussion p.1644
THEOS: A study of the 5th element p.1646

Chapter 10: Order of Nine Angles Commentaries (Longusian Speculations)

Temple Affiliation p.1660
On Angles and Curves [and Traditional Satanism] [1-2] p.1661/1673
Traps and Trapezoids p.1682
Curious Celestial Coincidences [Chap13]
Bin Anash [Chap13]
Baphomet: Brief Notes on the Depiction p.1702
Jesus and Vindex – Sep 2010 p.1705
Septenary Way and Racism p.1708
The Self-Immolation Rite + 4 Gates p.1709/1712
The Giving – A Study p.1725
The Psychology of Traditional Satanism p.1730
An Early Comparison of the Pymander Tractate p.1737
On THEM, o9a, the Corpus Hermeticum and the Zohar-Shemot p.1750
THEM, Magic and the Individual in Context p.1758
Where are WE Now? p.1762
Black Magical Arrogance and the Role of Form p.1766
Triangular Velocity p.1777
What Went Wrong with the ONA? p.1770
Beyond the Adept: Contemplation p.1778
The Terrorist Designation of the ONA p.1790
Albedo, Nigredo, Rubedo p.1791
David Myatt pursues THEOS p.1791
Hermetics p.1793
ONA and the Seven Liberal Arts p.1806
Lapis Philosophicus and the ONA p.1666
Kitab Al-Luma p.1816
Auld Lang Synistra p.1817
Ryan Anschauung and the Star Game [chap13]
The Star Game: Advanced and Assorted Treatises [chap13]
The Troubles [chap13]

Chapter 11: Fiction

Erebus – Satanic Fiction p.1823
Hel p.1825
Pease, LovE and Mungbeans p.1829
Pi p.1833
Precursor p.1838
Project Evisceral p.1840
Novum Principium p.1845
Welcome to the World [A Children's Book] p.1850
Holochrist [chap13]

Chapter 12: Misc. Creative

IS p.1855
Everything Toward p.1857
The Self-Immolation Rite 3 p.1858
Creation p.1865

Chapter 13: The Black Glyph Society Vault

[various] p.1869

MICHAEL

CHAPTER 1
SUMMARISING THE OCCULT ZEITGEIST

PROKARYOTES

DARKNESS. A WORLD WITHOUT LIGHT BUT THAT WHICH SHONE UPON THE CRESTS OF COLOSSAL WAVES AS THE EARTH SWAM CLAD IN A PERPETUITY OF TEEMING OCEAN. IN THE HOLLOWS AND RAVINES, TRENCHES AND DEEPS, IN THE EYELESS WILDE WHERE THE IMMENSE POWER AND PRESSURE CRUSHES ALL BUT THE STRANGE ADAPTED.

BIOLUMINESCENCE, FLEETING DASHING STARS IN A BLACKER THAN BLACK GALAXY, ALIEN, AUTONOMOUS, LONG CRUEL TEETH AND BALEFUL BLINDED MILKY EYES, A PLACE TO STARE INTO THE ABYSS AND HAVE IT STARE BACK.

IN SUCH A TERRAIN, PREDATORS AND PREY, MONSTERS TOO MAN HAS LONG CEASED TO BELIEVE IN, SO OLD, SO FORGOTTEN. LITERALLY AND CUMULATIVELY, SLEEPING NOW AS MARROW IN THE BONES OF ALL BEFORE. A DESCRIPTION THAT APPLIES TO THE OCEANS, OUTER SPACE AND THE HUMAN PSYCHE AS A UNITARY VELVET.

AND REMNANTS TOO, OF THE EARTH BEFORE WE KNEW IT, BEFORE IT BECAME OUR INHERITANCE AND SMUGLY, WE LOOKED BACK ON ITS HISTORY AS IF A SIMPLE THING, A CHRONOLOGY SO VAST YET WE SO-SAGELY AND COMPACTLY IMAGINE WE CAN IMAGINE. A LUXURY OF LARGESSE. SILENT THOSE SHAPES, BULKY, ANGULAR, SENTIENT, MONSTROUS, OF GEOMETRIES LIKE THOSE SPOKEN OF BY LOVECRAFT.

WHEN REFLECTIONS OF LIFE WERE NEWER, COLDER, WHEN THE PRIMAL NATURES OF BEINGS WERE BECOMINGS AND ODD PODS RULED THE EARTH AGAIN AND AGAIN IN SAVAGE DYNASTY FORGOTTEN BY CYCLES, THE WOOD AGE, THE ICE AGE, AND THE SLOW ACCUMULATION BY THE NIGHTMARES OF OUR MODERN DREAM.

THE ANCESTORS WHOM PASSED THROUGH THE PRIMORDIAL EVOLUTIONARY STAGES OF THE APEX, WHO FORGED THE LAYERS OF THE SUBCONSCIOUS IN CRUSTED BOWELS FILLED WITH WATERY GUTS DEEP BENEATH THE MOVING OVERSEER, THE DEEP GUARDIAN OF ALL OUR SECRETS THE UNDERWORLD OF THE OVERWORLD. THEM.

BATHYSPHERE:
A Summary of Texts by the Temple of THEM

This brief list by no means encapsulates the entire corpus of THEM or lists the myriad other books and publications assembled for other currents under the auspices of the Black Glyph Society - nor does it mention the projects musical or artistic with which we have had involvement. It is intended as a navigational guide only to assist in locating specific topics or essays written by the Temple amid its labyrinth of thousands of pages.

CRUX:
On Crux. The Message from ThoTh of THEM. .Introduction: The Purpose of Crux Part One: Physis Magick: Practical Guide to Becoming an Adept. 0 The Tree of Wyrd (Completed Pathways) 13. I A Theory of Magick 14. II Another Theory of Magick 16. III The Seven-Fold Way- A Comprehensive Guide 19. IV Quest of the Left-Handed Path (for males) 23. V Initiation: Traditional 29. VI Initiation: Temple of THEM 30. VII The 21 Atus of the Sinister Tarot of CB 32. VIII The Septenary Colours and their Meditatory Gateways 54. IX The Ordeal of the Ninth Moon 55. X On The Arts & The Dark Arts 59. XI Training the Body 60. XII Further Approaches to Training the Body / Alchemical Notes 66. XIII Physis – A Western Martial Art 68. XIV Physis and Physics 87. XV The Star Game – A Basic Introduction 90. XVI The Star Game – Advanced Theory 101. XVII Black Magickal Sympathy & The Star Game 104. XVIII Internal Adept [Notes] 114. XIX Entering the Abyss / Intimations / Oath / One Key / Abyssal Edge 118. XX The Rite of Nine Angles 124. XXI The Rite of the Nine Angles – Further Notes 128. XXII On the Symbolism of the Nine Angles / Esoteric Meanings / Secrets / Advanced Causal Symbology 131. XXIII Dark Pathworkings I / D.Pathworkings II / D.path Satanas – Thornian 134. XXIV The Dark Gods & Their Sigils 141. XXV One of THEM's Approach to the Dark Ones 142. XXVI Approach to the Language of the Dark Ones and the Acausal 145 Part Two: Esoteric Sorcery: XXVII Narrative Magic: An Introduction 146. XXVIIII An Approach to Sex Magick 153. XXIX Melos: Diabolus in Musica 155. XXX Sinister Chant – Further Notes 159. XXXI Chant Notation and its Transcription 161. XXXII On Songs and Sinister Chants 162. XXXIII The Focus of Awareness: An Approach 164 Appendix: 0 Dark Immortal Scripts 168. I Septenary Correspondences 170. II Esoteric Narrative Correspondences 172. III On the Sinister Tarot 176. IV ISS / Letting it Be 178. V Hammers of the Witches 179. VI A Summary of the Approach to Black Magic by the Temple of THEM 180. VII The Occult Labyrinth: A Navigational Guide 181. VIII Sinister/Occult Publications (The Black Glyph Society) 186. IX The Jung-ed Man XIII 188 Part Three: Esoteric Manuscripts: A A Brief ONA Glossary 190. B Sigil of the ONA 198. C A Note Concerning ONA MSS 199. D Melos: Reprisal 200. E The Cosmic Wheel / Wheel of the Year 204. F The Runes in relation to the TOW 209. G Perceptual Bias and the LHp 210. H Future Magick 212. I Morphic Theory: Sentience of the Earth 215. J The Joy of Fanaticism and Militant

Satanism 218. K On the Diamond Body and the ONA 222. L Notes on Crux and the Southern Cross 224

Liber ISS:
Temple Greeting Template. External Adept (Notes). The Tarot: TENDRIL. Protocols. Falcifer Aims and Intents. Al Kimiya. Howl of the Introvert. Into the Mouth of Madness. T.H.E.M. Primer (Original version of Abracadabra). The Secret of THEM is Cold & Deadly Intent. Mvimaedivm Black Rankings. The Temple Fitness Regime. Combat & Self-Defence

Liber Tentaculum:
Abracadabra. The Phormulae for Change (Tale of 10 Alchemists). Directives (Phenotype). Directive A-66. 70 Tentacles

Liber 13/13:
The 23 Syndrome. The Chronobet. An Analysis of Frequency Part I. An Analysis of Frequency Part II. Ad Accumulum Infinitum. Sruusis. The Sinister Grotesque: A Satanic Heresy

Liber Psytan:
*33. An Early study of the IOT: part 1 Liber Null. An Early study of the IOT: part 2 Psychonaut. Brief notes on the depiction of Baphomet and the Sinister Tradition. Ethereal Discourses. Imperium: the Force of Escalation. Traditional Satanism: Through the Eyes of Them Some Notes on the Dynamism of Insight.

Liber ABSU:
The Dark God ABSU. Absurdity vs Originality. In Absurdum. On Angles, Curves and the ONA Part I and II

Liber Zenith Nadir:
Traps and Trapezoids: Part 1. Shouting Into the Abyss. Beyond the Adept – A Contemplation. Where are We now? The Irony of Giving Insight

Liber Illuminum:
Points for the Uninitiated. Conspiracy 101. An Examination of the Axioms of Scientology. Crips, Bloods and Australia. The Dark God Oto Anorha and the Sinister Feminine: Breaking the Chains

Liber Discidium:
(I) The Theory of the Beast: Part II. (II) Who/What is Satan: A Rational Dissection. (III) Satan - 21st Century Numinous Symbol. (IV) Satanism and Prostitution: The Silent Service. (V) Insights: G.MO. The Esotery of Food. (VI) Insights: On Opfers. (VII) Universes Parallel. (VIII) Intellect and Magic 0 (From OA#9). (IX) Notes on the Self (I and II). (X) The Alpha Male Vs. The Alpha Cynic. (XI) A Sinister History Lesson

Oto Anorha 28:
Presencing Falcifer: Aims and Intents. Insynsian: The Subjectivity of Objectivity. An Interview with One of THEM. Interview Extract from OA #13. Insights from a Shape Shifter. Rain Magic*K: Acausal Magick. The Cold Facts of Form and Manipulation: Part 1. Psychic Vampires: An Advanced Treatise

Oto Anorha 29: (Aka 'Pantheon' A Special Issue devoted to the Dark Gods).
The Dark Gods. Notes on Origins. Tree of Wyrd. The Templar Baphomet and the Star Algol

Oto Anorha 30:
Presencing Falcifer. Baphomet: And a Man's Role for Sinister Women: The Greatest Heresy. WSA352 on THEM / THEM on WSA352. THEM, Magic and the Individual in Context. The Last Word from One of THEM

Oto Anorha 31:
Members Eyes. Grand Black Magic: Aims of Experiment A. p3. heRe be DragOns (v.02) p6. The Magnitude of Scope (?) p21. On Building a Compound p24. The Death of Touch p32. The 23 Syndrome: Notes and Practice p35.

Oto Anorha 32:
Presencing Falcifer. Eyes of THEM. Primer. Intelligent Evil. Disonics. Causating the Acausal. Naos Paintings

Oto Anorha 33:
The Synchron-i-tronik Organism. Numinous Correlations. The Power of the Word. Magian ignorance. Lunar Understanding: A Short Tale. Warning, Children at Play - The First Howard´s End Story. Death of Touch [part 2] Death of Touch Kills Face to Face. Things in the Darkness... Altar of Perversion: Intra Naos. Sol Evil: Beyond the Sun. The Entelechy of Nature; Otherness; Evil. Correcting the Mythos. Howl of the introvert. Them, Numbers, Form and the Magi: The Inexorable March Toward Insynsian. Tendril: Their Will Be Dreams – the Tarot of the Temple of Them. Blood, Sweat, Forms and Years. The Eye of Them. Insight in Sight.

Oto Anorha 34:
Presencing Falcifer. Temple Policy 2014: Claritas e Congerie Oritur. ASOV Inaugural Report. The Aeon of Fire. Perception and Queastellyeah. Our Rite Of Remembrance - Charging of The Thrasz. THEM's Directives Analysis. Lunar Winds. The Rite Of Regurgitating Choronzon. The Nameless Rite. Breaking It Down - Psychology of The Nameless Rite. The Nameless Rite - An Addendum

Threshold: Terato:
The Theory of the Beast. Divine Joy (1) Evolution, (2) The Great Chaos. Radia Sol: Emanations of the Self. (1) Opening Statements (2) What is a Model? (3) Wave Mechanics - A Crash Course (4) Emanations (5) Assumptions (6) The Theory (7) Closing Statements. In Sinister Solidarity. An Analysis of Frequency:

Threshold: Haruspex
(1) Ego - The Source of Dialect (2) Human-Centred Geometry Vs. Life-C entered Geometry (3) Reform and Revolution (4) Who Hears the Spheres? (5) Receptive Frequency: The Low Vibration of Propaganda (6) Optimum Frequency (7) The Fundamentals of Mind/Body Control. The Chronobet. The 23 Syndrome. Haruspex: Insynsian. How Will Shapes Reality. Form and Manipulation the Cold Facts Parts 1,2,3. Baphomet and a Man's Role for Sinister Women: The Greatest Heresy. Ad Accumulum Infinitum. The Mind War. Petals From a Black Rose:

Threshold: Engram
(1) The Bare Root (2) The Continuity of Bloom (3) Red or White (4) The Black Spot (5) Cross and Cutting (6) Hybrid Perpetual. Engram:The Fundamentals of Magic - Internal, External, Aeonic, Narrativic and Mythic. Radia Star - Creating One of THEM. On Songs and Sinister Chants. Invoking the Tempest. In the Aeon of Fire: A Ritual of Death.

Threshold: Maleficia
(1) Preparation (2) Intonation of Death (3) Ritual. Alchemical Distillations (1) Luna (2) Mercury (3) Venus (4) Mars (5) Sol (6) Jupiter and Saturn. Eccar Vartis. Rain Magic*k: (1) Preparation (2) Intent (3) Primer (4) Direction (5) The Rite (6) Addendum. Maleficia: An Approach to Sex Magick. The Ordeal of the Ninth Moon (1) Arc 1 (2) Arc 2. Narrative Magic. On Psychic Vampirism (1) On Recognising their Poisons and the Means to their Destruction (2) The Devil of the Ego (3) Chameleonics (4) Ego 101 (5) The Essence of the Psychic Vampire (6) Energetic Exchange (7) On Insecurity (8) Initial Contact (9) Psychic Entanglement and Feeding (10) Enarcosis (Energy Addiction) (11) Infiltration (12) Extraction (Killing a Psychic Vampire) (13) Awareness (14) Ritualis Sanguinis Solis. The Rite of Regurgitating Choronzon (1) The Rite (2) Closing. Glossary.

Diary of a Devilworshipper Vol 1:
ANNOTATION. FOREWORD. ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS. TABLE OF CONTENTS. INTRODUCING AZAZAEL. CHAPTER I ~ In The Beginning… a) In the Beginning. b) Turning Point. c) Two Worlds Collide. d) Dabbling. e) Occult Atmosphere. f) Mvimaedivm. g) Hype. h) The Episode of Judas. i) Aftermath. j) A Psychic Snapshot CHAPTER 2 ~ The Pent-Entangled Goat. a) Invocation to Lucifer. b) Down. c) No Sanctity. d) Minion. e) E-mails: Necronomicon & Nethnine. f) Azazael to V. g) Truth Vs Truth CHAPTER 3 ~ Memoirs 2003. a) Breaking the Crystal. b) Examining the Crystal under a Black Light. c) Giver of the Crystal's Beauty CHAPTER 4 ~ Building Character. a) Shoplifting. b) Bomb Scare. c) Throwing Stones. d) Boat Trip. e) Break and Enter. f) Psychopath Stalking. g) First Acid Trip. g) Bad Karma. i) Witches. j) Rocket-Fuel. k) Alcohol. l) Prophecy. m) Trust. n) The Circle CHAPTER 5 ~ Building Character (2) / Sing a Song of Violence. a)Vs Con. b)Vs Tasman. c)Vs Todd. d)Vs Daz. e)Vs Don. f)Vs Standing Guy. g)Vs MSK. h)Vs 2.50. i)Vs E CHAPTER 6 ~ Outroduktion . a) Utopia. b) Mad, Mad, Monkey. c) Untitled. d) Imagine. e) Men in Black. f) Something for the Peace CHAPTER 7 ~ The Worldly Parallel of Artistic Metamorphosis Diary of a

Devilworshipper Vol 2:
FOREWORD. TABLET OF CONTENTS. INTRODUCING DEVILWORSHIPPR CHAPTER 1 ~ The Dei-Fiction. ~) Am I A Satanist? a) In the Beginning. b) About the Diary. c) Uncovering the Facts. d) Knowing Darkness. e) Enemy in the Empire of Christianity. f) The Harmful Ideology of Christianity. g) Metaphor of the Hydra. h) Methods of Survival by the Church. i) Disarming the Efficacy of its Enemy. j) The Real Symbols of the Church. k) Why Christianity is the Enemy. l) A Universe Void of God. m) Stagnation of Reality. n) See no Evil, Hear no Evil, Speak no Evil. o) A Comment on Aeonics. p) An Unknown Universe No Hindrance. q) About Asking Questions. r) Circularity MY MEMOIRS - A SUMMARY: a) Calcination. b) Finding 'Good' and 'Evil'. c) Early Ideas about Satan . d) Rant on Lucifer. e) Trying to Be Satanic. f) In Awe. g) 50/50 Becomes 100%. h) Getting to Know the Pseudo-Side. i) Noticing Illusions. j) Deeper In the Lies. k) I Dream of Judas. l) As Above, So Below. m) Getting to Grips with my Lifestyle Choice. n) Diplomatically Dealing with a Vast Span of Time. o) Wicca. p) No Satan in Witchcraft. q) The Champions get Championed, the Idols Idle By and Die. r) Looking into TOS. s) Getting Here. t) Need to Know Basis CHAPTER 2 ~ The Existential Psyche of DWR CHAPTER 3 ~ Heurisy and Heresy. a) On the Subject of ONA MSS. b) From Raven Made: Notes on the Sinister Tarot. c) Lyrics from Umbral Presence. d) The Advanced Stargame 3d Project e) Dark Angles. f) Creating Dark Angles. g) My Ritual Self-Initiation. h) Dark Path Working: Summoning Aosoth. i) Black Magic. j) Silencing the Lamb. k) Playing the Neo-Nazi: An Insight Role. l) Letter to the Embassy of Lucifer. m) On the Subject of Christian Values. n) Letter to Imperium Galactica. o) Notes on the 28 Hour Day. p) Appealing to the Nazi. q) Letters to Alex . r) The Psychology of Satanism + "Insight into the Machine?". s) Spamming CHAPTER 4 ~ The Collection Plate. 1) Contributions to "The Collection Plate". 2) TCP - Mark II: Exit the Eagle & Enter the Phoenix. 3) Temple of the Tangent. 4) Founders Message . 5) Tangents I CHAPTER 5 ~ Methodica. a) Satan as a Father Figure. b) Tinkering. c) On the Subject of the So-Called Secrets of Feng Shui. d) Feng Shui: A Reply. e) Feng Shui: A Retort. f) Ur. g) Excerpts from "Naos: The Search" / Final Transmission. h) Diet. i) Regarding Ways. j) Evolution. k) Notes on Insight Roles CHAPTER 6 ~ Conversations of a DWR. a)

13 Vs DWR. b) Zero Vs DWR. c) 666 Vs DWR. d) 11 Vs DWR. e) 707 Vs DWR (The Biblical Creationism Debate)

Diary of a Devilworshipper Vol 3:
INTRODUCING TNEPRES RA. TABLET OF CONTENTS CHAPTER 1 – UNDER THE PSYCHROSCOPE. (a) Demaphyr. (b) Radia Sol: Emanations of the Self / A Theory. (c) Be It Ever So Sinister… There's No Place Like Home . (d) Through the Looking Glass. (e) The Simultaneous Pulse / A Theory. (f) Notes on the Nth Degree of Numinosity. (g) Shape-Shifting. (h) Confessions of a 'Sun God' 115 e.h.. (i) The Philosophers Stone: A Beginners Guide. (j) In Search of the Black Rose. (k) The Axioms of Scientology: A Critique CHAPTER 2 – SINISTER EXPANSIONS. (a) Black Magical Sympathy and the Star Game (b) The Star Game: Abstract Literature. (c) The Star Game: Geometric Complexity. (d) The Star Game: 18 Points of Strategy. (e) The Star Game: Simplifying the Alchemical Transitions. (f) The Star Game: As a Training Device for Managing a Temple. (g) Hel. (h) Regarding Hel. (i) Letters from Arcturus. (j) Sechnacht. (k) Notes On Sechnacht. (l) Hell 3: The Final Triangle. (m) Pi. (n) On Pi. (o) Philosophedron. (p) The Web of Wyrd. (q) Satanism and Creativity. (r) The Galactic Organic MSS: Indisigual. (s) The Galactic Organic MSS: The Galactic Organic. (t) Sub Rosa: A Sinister Play. (u) SubTerrosa. (v) Walk. (w) Prima Magica Tnepres. (x) The Naos Project: Acknowledgements and Naos MSS Introduction. (y) Onaos. (z) The Naos Project . (1) Notes on the Naos Project I. (2) Notes on the Naos Project II. (3) Minoris: An Exploration of the Sinister Minor Arcana. (4) Aeonisy: An Aeonic Odyssey. (5) A Note on Gates. (6) An Examination of the Sinister Major Arcana. (7) Notes on the Sinister Tradition e.XI. (8) Prototype Naos Tarot Sketches. (9) Excerpts from Yiadry CHAPTER 3 – ON ANGLES AND CURVES [AND THE ONA]. (a) Angles and Curves (and the ONA) Part I. (b) Angles and Curves (and the ONA) Part II. (c) Angles and Curves (and the ONA) On Part III. (d) Discussion on the release of the Angles and Curve Manuscripts CHAPTER 4 – THE TOB AND THE 333 CURRENT. (a) Project Evisceral. (b) Entry 9 Day 2: From the Diary of Evisceral (V.01). (c) Heresy and the Heart of Darkness. (d) peaSe lovE and munGbeans. (e) The Clandestine Burning: A Reply {excerpts]. (f) 18.333 – The Alchemy of Death CHAPTER 5 – SINISTER PROSE: THE ELDER POEMS. (a) Mergence. (b) Nuhrasis: The Man Gate. (c) Sruusis: The Star Gate. (d) Ideathology. (e) I. (f) II. (g) Blanket CHAPTER 6 – THE TREATY OF THE INFERNAL ALLIANCE (x) Uae [Emanations of Urania – An Artistic Explication]

The Sorcery of THEM:
Preface. I. The Temple of Them and the Sorcery of Them. II. The Sorcery of Them versus the Magian. III. Magickal Socialism. IV. The Sinister & the Dexter. V. The Body and the Wyrd. VI. The Devil and the Quest of Sorcery. VII. The Hierarchy of the Temple of Them. VIII. Physis. In Conclusion

Tower: ORDER OF SATURN

PG. 5 History of the Order. PG. 7 Introductory Letter from the Koryphaios. PG. 11 On Initiation - Precursory/secondary lecture. PG. 13 Probationary Lecture # 3: Introduction to Magic. PG. 15 Probationary Lecture # 3: -The Superficial Self. PG. 18 Tasks of Probation. PG. 22 On Degrees. PG. 25 Tasks and Descriptions of Practice - Probation. PG. 29 Meditation Practice. PG. 32 Morality Roster. PG. 35 Self Reliance

HOUSE RUIN.
PG. 41 The Tower. PG. 43 Limits and Boundaries. PG. 47 Magic, In Theory. PG. 51 Membership to House Ruin. PG. 52 On Degrees. PG. 53 Ritual, In Practice. PG. 59 The Face of the Path. PG. 63 The Subtle Ecstasy. PG. 67 Tower Meditation – Outermost Form

Physis of the Sinister: Part 1: Narrowing the Sinister.
Universal Psychic Trauma and the Genesis of Fear. SinisterCyber-Phobia: Man vs. Machine. Chronocentric Acceleration. The Multi facets of Morbidity. The Tragedy of Independent Causal Lifelines of Freed Perspective. Edges of the Sinister

Physis of the Sinister: Part 2: Nothing to Fear but Fear Itself

Physis of the Sinister: Part 3: Love Conquers All.
Through Fear, the Love. First came Fear…

The Grey Letters:
On Killing / Opfers. Astral Dreams. The Inverse Growth of the Master. Posts The Undead. The Demon, Orgasmatron: Parts I & II. Female Representation in THEM. Notes; Abyss... Love vs. Loyalty: A Study of Fear and Control. A Degree of Separation. Cold Fusion / Inherent Compulsion. THEM: Realism. Insight. Universes Parallel. Letter. ABK ALGMOR RPSTOVAL. Oto Anorha: Satanic Fiction. Anima, my Love! The Moon Ordeal. The Power of Will to Shape Reality. On Magical Perception. Exercises related to the E/e. Self, Ego and ONA. Our Work. On the Mind War. Running Silent. Confessions of a Shape-Shifter 118 e.h.. Forms and Magic. Cold Facts of Form and Manipulation: Part 2. Cold Facts of Form and Manipulation: Part 3

Onaos:
Tree of Wyrd – 3. Sinister Tarot: A Theory of Archetypal Resonance – 4. The Naos Deck: Overview – 7. The Symbolism – 8. Tarot Images: the Three Levels of the Sphere (fig) – 8. The Enclave -9. The Muse -9. Minoris – 10. Aeonisy – 28. The Galactic Organic – 43. Sample Readings – 48. Subrosa: A Sinister Play – 55. Hel: Fiction of a Dark Archetype - 66 (Only Them's Texts Listed)

The Star Game: Advanced and Assorted Essays.

[I] THE STAR GAME. (i) Black Magical Sympathy and the Star Game:. (ii) Mapping an Energetic Node. (iii) On Abstraction. (iv) Micro-Matrixes. [II] Abstract Literature: A Training Exercise. [III] On Geometric Complexity. [IV] The Star Game: 18 Points of Strategy. [V] Simplifying the Alchemical Transitions. [VI] Benefits of the Star Game: As a Training Device for Managing a Temple. [VII] Star Game Construct Method. (i) Image of the Basic Stargame. (ii) Image of the Star-cubes. [VIII] Online Stargame Tournament. (i) Image of Online Stargame Boards w/Co-Ordinates.. [IX] The Stargame: In-depth MSS from NAOS. [X] Further Moves and Insights. [XI] The ASG3D Project

External Sinister Dialogues: Sinister Angles blog spot
No Choice but Theist: Dark Gods, Sex, Black Magic and Orgasm: Pillars 3
Directive A-66 : The Sinister Flame
Radia Sol: Clavicula Nox Issue 1 Ixaxaar
Myths Bitches: Into The Fire E-Zine
Ryan Anschauung and a Matter of Honour: Into the Fire E-Zine

NOMENCLATURE: A GLOSSARY

+O+ - A personal signature that has two meanings. It is shorthand for +emple of +hem. But was also my signature for many years as I laboured under a specific psychological and exoteric approach to things borne of a complex shape-shifting magical system that has taken me from one name to another (and through dozens) as I morph shape and personality, approach and intent within a system I term the Galactic Organic. Symbolically +O+ represents a dissected 8-spoked mandala and in the Jungian sense, Individuation. A human archetype. -O- - represents an alternate, contradictory approach to the previous persona adopted and a more ruthless, less forgiving one at that. An inhuman archetype and the growing of tendrils. The Abyss within beginning to wake.

Aeurekanequeo - A hybrid of two words, Eureka meaning 'I have it' and Nequeo meaning 'Impossible' - the Aeurekanequeo is the unfolded multidimensional essence of the Thrasz symbol. It details the Temple of THEM's ontology or philosophy on how things come to be and their relationships to Being. The 'A' at the beginning is for Australia.

ASOV Australian Satanic Organisation Victoria. A predominantly off-line tendril of THEM.

Apexing - treating one form as all-important.

C*R*U*X The Temple of THEM's Australian version of Naos: A Guide to Hermetic Magic. Contains extensive revisions and additional material to make the guide a fuller companion to understanding and using the Sinister current.

Dyph, i.e. more than two people coming into contact with one another just as planets on a macro scale orbit closer or further from one another.

Enematia - a word to short cut having to say good and evil continuously and referring to a phantom suggestion of an Other or opposing form(s).

Form The a priori natural state of world content before it is interpreted.

Force The a priori natural state of world content that acts on Form before it is interpreted.

Insynsia - Groups or a group that claim sovereignty or monopoly over any form or any one system of fulfilment Insynsian - Elevating a singular form to act as a replacement for God. The habit of making any one thing into a God and/or championing it above all other.

ISS In Supra Solidarity - formerly, In Sinister Solidarity. Sinister was considered too restrictive for THEM's purposes and dropped. A code of conduct developed and practiced by the Temple. ISS is a respectful acknowledgement or parting statement of kinship.

Lyfe - the life-force within and specific to the paradigm of the Form.

Magi A traditional nemesis of the Sorcerer, dating from the Persians. The Magi are both an ancient people believed to have subverted natural forces to create a prison-state we have inherited, and a set of behavioural characteristics that are ingrained in human beings on a fundamental level through repetition and the elimination by the Magi of any resistance to their Empire. The Magi is to be found at first outside of the Sorcerer, then inside, then in the difficult act of reuniting a paradox and contradiction.

Mvimaedivm Multiple Meanings. A manufactured word meaning 'Know Now My Way'. A movement of sharing self-exploration and personal alchemical experience with others. A forum or forums belonging to or used by the Temple. A WordPress belonging to or used by the Temple. The official name for the 'Diaries of a Devil-worshipper'. And others...

ONA/O9A/Order the Order of Nine Angles

One of THEM A Being that Nature has evolved with the inner fire and any number of means to struggle past the reigning psychic state of humanity and evolve. Not tied to race, religion, morality, time or space. Such may arise anywhere at any time using any Form(s).

OroR - An acronym meaning Our Rite of Remembrance, this is a celebration that takes place on the 17th of every month and remembers all of the members of THEM past and present, their contributions and personal efforts and combined Wyrds that got us to the point we are at now.

Oto Anorha An e-zine and printed magazine released by the Temple at random intervals charting its progress, aims and insights.

Phorm The interpretation of world content made by the psyche (the term 'Phorma' with emphasis on the A is used in verbal conversation to distinguish between the similar sounding Form and Phorm)

Phorma See above. + Non-verbally it refers to the gestation of Forms arising from the Phyrm within the Psyche and the Affectation they experience as a result of contact with it.

Phorce The interpretation of world content that acts on Form made by the psyche, i.e. 'Gravity', 'Change', 'Entropy'.

Phyrm A term taken from the Latin 'Terra Firma' and associated with the metaphysical realm outside of our skin (Pseal) and the content thereabout. A realm that may have its own existence that may or may not be affected by interpretation by the human psyche. Loosely used to refer to, but not limited to, the 'World' and its content.

pMYRIAD An unpublished exhaustively comprehensive study on Form.

Q A document marked with a Q is strictly an eyes-only, that is Temple member only, document. It is generally marked with a slightly different variance copy to copy to track unauthorised release.

Remember The defining watchword of the Temple, reminding of the overall reason for its existence: namely to remember there was a war (Mind War) that our ancestors lost and we are still engaged in.

The Sorceress Co-founder of the Temple of THEM and my great mentor in the arts of sorcery. Deriving from the IOT I owe an invaluable debt to the Sorceress for years of training and guidance to become who I am. With as many names as myself she remained a shadowy figure who never revealed herself entirely – nor did I ever ask. Together we built the Temple of THEM, together we woke the Dragons. Though she claimed herself an orphan of the Left-Hand Path, the Temple will always be her Home and I shall always be her occult Family. Since 2003 she moved in synch and yet in her own circle, defiant and rebellious but impossibly learned in the arts of magic. She penned the Sorcery of THEM and the other half of the dialogue in Mvimaedivm Vol IV – she gave me a vast number of secrets to keep, access to archives of occult repositories found nowhere online and her persistent time, attention and allegiance. She taught me and taught me. Castenada, Crowley, Schopenhauer, Hitler, Jung, Psychodrama, Psychofascism, World History and the Mysteries through an occult lens. Prone to disappearing for years at a time – she is doubtless watching from afar. We did not always see eye to eye and her puzzlement at my moves was often evident. Yet she later admitted her proudest sorcerous work was Our Temple. She must never be forgotten so long as THEM shall live. By Her many names I Remember. By her many teachings I conquer. In a volatile crucible of Mvimaedivm, Her Mentorship and the teachings of the Grand Master – We were forged.

Sinisterion The collective term used by THEM to denote all of the people involved in the application or philosophy of the Sinister current.

Tendril Multiple Meanings. Denotes a specific 28 set of Images used (in development) by the Temple to indicate new Archetypes specific to THEM. A nexion, group, outlet, subsidiary, associate, idea, meme in some way connected to the Temple of THEM

T.H.E.M Terato Haruspex Engram Maleficia. A statement that reflects the essential philosophy of the Temple of THEM. 'Look deep inside the entrails of the Monster – Remember – and become One of THEM'.

Themonomicon A project in development that combines an homage to Lovecraft's Necronomicon and seeks to house the entire corpus of THEM's texts in an ambitious tome of illustrated puzzles, sex, death, blood, ciphers, codes, scripts and symbolism. It represents a re-write of the majority of THEM's texts to reflect changes, updates, new insights and revisions to older works.

Theph The analogy of the brain as a city within the human skull with its own infrastructure relating to neuroscience and neurophysiology.

Thrasz A symbol used by the Temple of THEM in ritual, decoration and personal development.

Threshold Multiple Meanings. An anthology of key texts by THEM published by Fall of Man. A symbol used to mark a space between one world and the next.

Vyrd - synonymous with Wyrd.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE BRIEF HISTORY OF THEM

After attempting to establish numerous proxy nexions, many of which involved archiving the work and ethos of the ONA - The Temple of THEM was founded in February 2006 by myself (of a thousand names but best known as Ryan Anschauung (then Tnepres) and another individual known as 'The Sorceress'. Our meeting in 2003 represented a collision of determined individuals with unique ideas and Wyrds that would feed each other to the present day. These ideas were tempered, tested and evolved by more than a decade of involvement between two Masters. One being Christos Beest who instructed me in the Hebdomadry of the British, ONA the other a powerful Sorceress from Eastern Europe. I was mentored in magick by what I derived from the ONA and its associated nexions, my own personal Mvimaedivm and what was taught to me by the Sorceress, my Mistresses, and my Mother.

The Temple of THEM's exoteric form straddles seven major disciplines drawing influence from each; (1) the Septenary Way (2) Private Thracian Lore (3) The Chaos Magic of the Illuminates of Thanateros (4) The Mythos of Lovecraft (5) Mvimaedivm - a personal and unique Archetypal/Narrative Magic developed as my life has unfolded (6) The Sorcery of Carlos Castenada & (7) The Analytical Psychology of Carl Gustav Jung.

The decision to form THEM arose from an observation of a satanic monopoly emerging that threatened to snuff out the range of approaches and methodologies for appreciating the occult and the advancement of our own growing Aeonic Urges and implementations to interfere/alter the present course of the human psyche. Numerous individuals then undertaking the Way of the Septenary who found it did not meet their needs, or appreciate their individual opinions, criticisms, insights or variations joined forces - each from high-ranking positions in other magical/occult currents around the globe inc. OTO, ONA, IOT, TOS, and many more each offering their specialist knowledge of their current to the collective pool. The Temple of THEM shaped itself as a platform that would allow these isolated and often harried voices the opportunity to speak loudly and clearly even and especially when it interfered with the trending status quo of satanic philosophy in order to transcend duality itself.

INCARNATIONS

Naturally when it began THEM was very different from its present course. And over the duration of the nine years it has existed, has taken on a myriad of different incarnations to explore, expand, evolve and meet certain needs and lived a variety of forms. Among these have been the 2010 Sinister 101 Syndicate (previously known as the Mvimaedivm Forum) which was a thriving online business hub for all things Septenary, Sinister and ONA. It is still in existence, but activity has all but ceased after operations were moved to other cyber quarters and remaining membership is a shadow of what it used to be. Mvimaedivm White, Mvimaedivm Black, were two projects by the Temple researching the Magi and the Lore of the Dark Gods. These studies resulted in the publication of a 250-page collaboration called "Ki En Gi r Black" and consisted mostly of a hybrid of Sumerian academia and occulture. Some 500 additional pages relating to Sorcery & Combat Techniques, The Dark God lore in Prehistory/Egypt/Indo-Europea, Star Lore, and numerous other topics of interest at the time have been archived but are not accessible to the public.

The forum Mvimaedivm Black also still exists, under the watchful eye of one of THEM, but its level of activity is much like that of S101S, a ghost town after THEM vacated it in favour of new stomping ground. Other groups not available or visible to the public such as 'Otherland' were additional attempts to unite a collective of Sorcerers across the globe in perfecting and exploring magical technique and sharing personal philosophy and techniques. Otherland also concerned itself with psychedelic experiences, entheogenics - or using substances as pathways to Allies, astral travel and out of body experiences. Numerous Wordpresses, a digital notebook platform, have been utilised by the Temple over the years including the inventively named 'Ryan Anschauung WordPress', 'Dark Planet WordPress', 'Mvimaedivm', 'Temple of THEM' Word-presses too.

The only currently active WordPress utilised by THEM is the re-incarnation of templeofthem.org WordPress which is a private archive accessible only to members of THEM and guests with special permission. Another website titled 'Mvimaedivm' has been inactive a year to the day (April 20, 2015) but was taken hold of by an Italian member of the Temple who dedicated himself wholly to an alternate project.

Mvimaedivm web was a tendril he intended to dedicate to Sinister/Esoteric Music under the name "Canor Sinistrum" - but which transformation has not yet come to fruition. Building up real estate and handing it over to fledgling members to look after was considered a suitable method to allocate the current to many hands rather than leave it focused in a centrality. A short-lived page (now in hibernation) for the Temple on Facebook was developed into a new forum that is currently active and represents the most recent online representation of the Temple acting as a hub for announcements and file sharing. What dictates which media are kept public or put into hibernation varies - the Temple changes shape according to which criteria it believes have been or need to be achieved and looks out for the appropriate signs that a certain energy, form or attitude has taken root either in an individual or group, which triggers a response from us and a re-organisation of our geometry.

THE BLACK GLYPH SOCIETY

The diversity and expertise in respective magical fields by its members allowed THEM access to documentation kept private by each organisation and this mountain of material would later become the archives of the Black Glyph Society - a society dedicated to keeping alive useful and practical information on systems that we felt contributed to the aims of the would-be Sorcerer. The Black Glyph Society changed hands in approximately 2012 from RA in Australia to TD in the United States - but continues to exist to meet the needs of wanderers of the occult paths. The Glyph as it is affectionately known, operates on a two-tier system. To those we feel deserving of the information in our archives, pending interest and dedication, the Glyph offers free files and materials that relate to that individual's study or in some cases that we feel may open up new vistas or esoteric advancement by having access to. The other tier gives individuals the option to buy a restricted catalogue of materials as printed books mostly relating THEM's studies and philosophy or other unique strains of philosophy on the matter of the Sinister, Satanism or Self-Development. A lesser-known function of the Society is the encouragement and extension of aid to individuals to compile, publish or otherwise share their unique point of view by using our contacts to obtain a publishing deal, or simply assisting in layout, editing, illustrations, or morale. The Glyph is still active, and books can still be purchased by placing an order from the website. Additional materials can be found archived inexpensively for a few Euro a book at a digital download site called Amenthes, from The Spire - a new incarnation of the Glyph (but part of the original society) , or from various portals on the internet. Searching for deliberately obscure keywords such as Mvimaedivm, Oto Anorha, Liber 13/13, or Insynsian will usually bring links up where we have posted material and essays in assorted forums. Such words are unusual because it makes their use, and spread, easy to track.

THE SPIRE

The Spire is a subsidiary of THEM that was launched in 2015 designed to meet a number of goals. (1) To supply affordable quality materials by THEM that have become very expensive or rare over time. (2) To supply Tarot, Star Games and other Occult Items and Services to increase the tools available to others to encourage/enable them to develop certain skills (3) To re-advertise and compliment the resources sold by the Black Glyph with new or rare releases (4) To re-advertise and compliment the resources sold by the Fall of Man and Amenthes digital store with new or rare releases by THEM and other Sinisterion (5) To fund the purchase of land by the Asov and THEM for future phases of its charters.

OTO ANORHA

Oto Anorha is a periodical released at intermittent intervals by the Temple, beginning with the first public issue numbered #28 in 2006 and has charted the progress, methods, magical development, achievements and aims of the Temple over the course of its short but enduring life. Issues have included contributions by members of THEM on varied topics and special editions focused on a theme. The magazine is not restricted only to members of THEM; friends and allies of THEM have been invited to contribute insights to the magazine in previous issues. The mysterious name Oto Anorha stems from the desire to honour the founders (ex)-companion and is an anagrammatic dedication to her. Back Issues of Oto Anorha are still available from the Black Glyph as a printed magazine or from Amenthes in digital format. The most recent issue, Issue #34 is only available from The Spire as a printed magazine.

THE MESSAGE OF THOTH FROM THEM

"From the First Angle is the Dream:"

And there came to one of us in each generation a vessel with the power of remembrance – They who dream of the shining light that sat between the world into which we were born – and the world we were born from – and whose dream becomes life. And They who are touched Remember what has been forgotten – that which sent us, hidden from beyond sight, and a secret – and that which must be Restored.

"From the Second Angle Is the Master holding the baying Hounds of Hell:"

The first angle is always the Dream, for the Dark Ones cannot reach across the planes without the necessary preparation of horrid angles and lunatic geometry. To the denizens of the abyss such angles and their design are the paragon of sublime – and for that – nightmares, awkward, ungainly and the cathedral of absolute evil to those guardians of the gate: those hounds of hell who wear crowns of light.

"From the Third Angle Is the Key to the Silver Gate of Time:"

Grasps hir who steeps the world in shadow, who seizes the hounds of the world dragon by the throat and turns them to hir command, the Eternal, for hir crafts defences against all entropy and interference in hir dark magic and holds aloft the blazing shapes of death and the dead.

"From the Fourth Angle is the nascent horror of Eternity:"

And hir that would challenge his mortal coil and spit in the face of the gods could learn to live among them but never again return to earth. And for stealing the fire of the gods forever be accursed to carry it – a star – doomed that all whom near it for illumination be incinerated by its fury and its glory as punishment.

“From the Fifth Angle is the cracking of the skulls of the righteous:”

To hir of the Voice are drawn disciples whose priests shall receive hir powers to crack the firmaments. Believers will turn and fall to the hands of the grasping.

“From the Sixth Angle is the gloating of the Ones of Darkness Who have waited:”

Where the star has walked a great fire shall burn, until all is aflame and the world a raging inferno.

“From the Seventh Angle Is the Reign of the Avenger”

And he shall set the Openers and the Closers in the sands to spill a river of blood.

“From the Eighth Angles Is the Victory of the Night of Seething Fury giving release to tortured screams:”

From the smoking ash and twisted brackage, sweeping swords of cleansing death announce new names and new ways, from the old names of always.

“From the Ninth Angle Is the Coming of the Ones of Old who have slept in the Dreams of Men.”

And None shall Know the Wyrm.

THE EYE OF THEM

Our Symbol is the Eye of the Cyclone, The Epicentre of the Earthquake, The Arc of the Ocean Wave, The Whirlpool and the Tornado, The Raging Flames of the Inferno, The Snowflake to the Black-hole, The Rotation of the Earth, The Cycles of Life, The Seasons, The Orbit of the Planets, The Procession of the Equinox, Movement Celestial to Undetectable, Chaos and Order, Contradiction and Dyssolution, The Irresistible meeting the Unmovable, The Synthesis of Thought, The Reaction of Action, The Abyss of Space, Life through Death, Death through Life, The Turning Point, The Wheel, The Fulcrum, the Axis, Entropy, Time, Evolution, Cancer, Bacteria, Blood, Virus, Magic, Energy, Matter, Change, The Endless Loop, The Archetype, Memory, Quantum, The Pattern, The Geometry, The Shape, The Circle, The Dark Ones.

REMEMBER.

ABRACADABRA

+O+ So to begin.

The secrets of the Ancients have been buried deeply in the twisted labyrinth of forms. The Magic from which the Sorcerer can draw exists but the means to access it have been mangled by the Obscuranti and their living mind war of forms – each one a sadistic seed that has long sprouted into a sapling, a plant, a tree, a forest, dropping more sadistic seeds, spreading lies, misinformation, and deceit. Advanced beyond most observers' abilities to appreciate, the polymorphic virus of the Magi can with ease take on the guise of any form – even systems and words that promise to be antidotes to itself such as Satanism, Anti-Christianity, Anarchy, Chaos can and have been compromised by the vicious snarls of poison roots.

The Temple of THEM has spent years attempting to untangle the forms in which such magical prowess have been choked into submission – crawling through the darkness of any number of magical systems of evocation, enchantment, alchemy, shamanism and as many strains of the Sinister we could find to struggle past the outward aesthetics and toward the root cause of all of them – Symbolism. From Symbolism we reduced all the myriad possibilities of magic into condensed understanding of what makes those that work, work, and what makes those that do not, not work. This was isolated to the complex relationship between the Organism and the World and the Organism's particular view of the world and its place within it. The 23 Syndrome is the stance an ego takes at any given moment [unconsciously] and uses to interpret. Thus, someone in thrall to National Socialism sees the world through an NS-related lens – whilst a religious individual sees the world through a religiously-related lens.

What happens of course, during the length of life, is that firmly held beliefs and truths Change. Each form of 23 syndrome is considered as a current [*Thrall] or form that seizes control of the ego either by thrall [unwittingly] by being convinced of its usefulness to perceive through or by "willingly" adopting such a syndrome through conscious choice. Often – once chosen, such a thrall takes a long time to settle itself into the Ego which must make room, change things around, or adapt itself to synchronise with the other forms which make-up the composition of the Thrall.

A Thrall is the name of a form that attaches itself or is attached to the Organism in a symbiotic relationship. Picking up a book on some subject or another, encountering someone who talks about a subject, experiencing or seeing someone else experience some subject or another are all transmissions of the form – and if accepted or sufficiently impressed [imprinted] with the desire to become the Form or use it – form becomes Thrall. As in, they are in Thrall to the form, submit to it and live it.*

Sometimes, because of how powerful forms are and how weak the human being is – a form can be adopted from the beginning of life right up until the point of causal death. Such a thing is known as fanaticism – and a good example is the Catholic Church. The Catholic Church governs its thralls from before their birth to well after their death with its control system. It has rites which control and restrict everything. The human being has early formative experiences that shape and set the Ego's particular view in place and these can be extremely difficult to break, and in some cases should not be for the sake of sanity. But the Sorcerer must be willing and able to go mad if they are to truly live as One of THEM where reality is neither rational nor irrational but a ghost.

To go through life without changing one's view is to resist natural alchemy and unnatural. No one form has the power to fulfil one's Wyrd and many roads must be walked to narrow it down and finally seize it. We often see that it is religious types who do not change their view – who Cannot change their view – and who thus become the Mask that was made for them. It needs to be realised that there is power in fanaticism – it is the dominant agent of the Magi and has reshaped this World in their image without question. But the fine line between using a form and it using you is fine indeed. We seek to avoid all instances of any false absolute – all Gods stem from THEM, a plural, a group, a collective – there are no forces however they be perceived or from whatever system of belief that do not come from the same pool as THEM. They are all manifestations, depictions, forms of the Forces that are THEM. – variations on a theme.

Forms that enthral have their own life span – they are living things that grow, excrete, communicate, have their own language, multiply, move, change and so on. A young man deeply into the writings of Nietzsche and who pulls on the cowl of Nihilism may be able to explore that form for many years – but age and the changing role of oneself within society brings with it unexpected changes and challenges that affect one's philosophy of life – as do near, supernatural or traumatic or other kinds of experience. With such changes, ones 23 syndrome suffers a fatal stumble where the form cannot encompass or explain the new experience and doubt enters one's sphere causing the rigid tentacles of the thrall to loosen and the mind to change. Often what changes the mind is then adopted. It is a continual passage of thesis, antithesis, and synthesis. A natural progression of picking up one thing, comparing it with another, and finally making a conclusion based on mixing the two which mixture then becomes the new one, to which another second form is sought to compare and continue the entire process anew.

This process is an unconscious miasma that keeps one in thrall most of their lives to one form or another. It is however possible, once becoming aware of the function of the ego and its operations such as through Insight Roles, to consciously enter roles that actively change the consciousness in an alchemical fashion by adding a deliberate set of elements. The power of Insight Roles burns away the certainty that holds forms in place by making conscious the fallibility of the whole belief process – wherein one consciously sees that what they held to be airtight conviction was in fact flawed – even more compounded by the more forms they digest. Deliberately done – this can bring enormous power and insight into the function of the ego and help compartmentalise the psyche by driving a wedge between the automatic actions and behaviour of the ego which acts on behalf of the organism and the organism itself who develops a new sense of self that allows it to see the ego as if at the helm of the mind driving the car – without this sense of separation and mind functions it is impossible to gain control of the psyche in any useful manner as all actions are driven by the ego – even those that insist they are not. By mixing certain elements or roles – one can deliberately break certain insidious programming forming a barrier to releasing the brain from its thrall or its conscious awakening to the fact that this is how the ego behaves.

The danger is that one merely swaps one form for another believing themselves to then be conscious of the behaviour of the Ego – and forms can even be constructed to appear as if they will free one from the Ego. Freeing oneself from the Ego is a process doomed to fail and a deadly trail to pursue for the serious Sorcerer who needs their Ego – they just need it in an unusual way. It is an exceptional and unique resource and needs only be understood and its functions put to conscious use to be of inestimable power when coupled with the signs from the unconscious toward Individuality. It is a resource and should be made use thereof for there are things the Ego can accomplish that nothing else can – and the Self merely by itself is an unknown quantity – certainly as insane as the Ego by itself.

The Ego can be tamed to function as a carrier of a form under the yoke of the Self – a deliberate use of its function to achieve an aim. Such an aim might be to believe in a system or another for a limited time demonically, that is with full belief, adopting its forms, words, language, ways and methods as a lifestyle to live that way as if it were truly ones way – then one adopts a contradictory role causing the previous way to mesh with the second and the ego to see that it can easily be led to adopt any way and that yet whatever it adopts can be replaced with yet another way, a new way – no matter how much it believes or believed in the validity of the 23 syndrome it afflicted itself with – it is as a container, able to be emptied and filled in accordance with what the Sorcerer needs it to be filled with in order to achieve certain goals.

Thus, one learns to shift-shape by annihilating the Egos savage persistence and insistence of form. But this focus on THEM on compartmentalising the psyche or achieving Mvimaedivm is genuine black magic – it is not known whether such an achievement is a return to a former state once achieved by humanity en masse before a cataclysmic series of events enshrined the Ego and only the Ego, or if it is an evolution forward toward an as yet unknown state of being. What is known is that Nothing is more violent more unpredictable, more ruthless and vengeful than an Ego attempting to perform its function of maintaining stasis and live out its 23 Syndrome. When threatened the ego often turns into a savage snarling animal – this can occur even with gentle attempts at dislodging one's own or another person's ego as if evidenced the world over by the petty means require to start blood wars, vendettas, vengeful acts of retribution and revenge, fights, disputes and slights.

A serious attempt to move the Ego out of the way of the driver's seat can be expected to be met with considerably dangerous resistance and this is what makes our work all the more dangerous – for it is the egos function to protect its view at all costs and thus it can be next to impossible to split the mind and get it to relinquish total control. Every step of the way we are fought by this function within ourselves and within others – whereas other systems seek either to annihilate the Ego [which only makes it stronger in a false sense of being erased it actively participates in talking about it as if it were gone with every manner of wordplay employed to successfully deceive its host that it has achieved the impossible.] THEM seeks only to recognise and utilise its functions as best as it can in a conscious and directed manner. This does not mean that the organism can successfully or completely control the Ego – its forces are far stronger than can be imagined and its operations driven by esoteric secrets that cannot be known – only its actions and functions can be seen in what it does and acts upon us to do. It means that the Ego can be seen as one of many functions and the Sorcerer may use them all consciously rather than be enslaved to forms that are stronger than him or her unconsciously.

Through this process – one can not only learn the behaviour of forms and the way they act on people to speak on their behalf as an automatic thrall – but also to put themselves in the other individuals' shoes to see the way they are from the point they are. All organisms are treated as being in thrall to one form or another for even when conscious of the process involved in the Ego's adoption of thralls forms are a necessary requirement for the Ego to function – otherwise it does not know how to be, who to be, and this can rapidly cause psychosis and mental collapse – nihilism is gently related to this but the true extent of trying to tear out the proverbial carpet of forms from under one's own feet can result in some spectacular self-destruction. This process – loosely called Empathy – is an esoteric understanding of the nature of forms and the way they change within oneself and within others. It involves a dedication to learning the way Archetypes, forms, and thralls speak or communicate, live, thrive, change or die – and as such – this knowledge can be used to manipulate a person in thrall by directing their form in a controlled fashion. This process of Empathy is entirely pagan in nature. There is a detached disdain for words by the Temple of THEM until actions have proved the One able to carry them through. Thus, Ones word is one's bond – it is their Wyrd. Truly we would rather you achieve in silence than enervate us with an endless stream of assurance about your intentions. In the meantime, the Ego will speak and chatter and will say whatever it must to convince itself it is the Self. If the Ego can substitute its function for the Self, then it will – in this way it protects itself from being dislodged. See Radia Star.

Empathy does not equally occur in all humans – some have very little, whilst some have too much. The balancing act of the Sorcerer, some say a paradox, is to learn not just to think but to feel – not with the head, but with the heart – to attune themselves to how something makes them feel or the emotions, visions, associations it inspires. This means to attune themselves to what may be very subtle almost invisible threads of magic the Sorcerer must learn to make themselves extremely sensitive to such threads and this can only be achieved through a close and prolonged relationship to the forces of THEM – not just the manifestation as Dark Gods but the forces and current of the world as they Are not as they are Known. Such is the role of the External Adept Rite and the Rite of Rain Magic – where Empathy is first approached in a magical methodology to provide a genuine experience of a non-human centric mode of time where the Ego has very little control over its passage and its experience and where the Sorcerers archetypal meanderings over the Tarot, their life and Wyrd come to the fore of the Ego's thoughts as all it can do is think and allow time to pass slowly, slowly, slowly – in some individuals allowing a realisation of a very specific nature to occur.

The use of the Tarot is an immensely powerful first step allowing one to make conscious their own Ego's projections – to put forth what may have been unconsciously held fears, prejudices or simply images and ideas of various archetypal energies that the Ego uses in its function. This exploration of archetypal energies is often a life-long process that many just do in thrall – but to deliberately expel one's archetypes via this process can be done in a matter of weeks [one card per week]. It is necessary to let each archetype once stirred and brought out activate its key associations and to let them live out their summoned presence which in turns brings the whole flow of what is attached to such an archetype forth in a prolonged stream. Most of these key associations are brought up first because they are the strongest and over the course of days as the Ego and Self ruminate on them and 'discuss' the meaning and purpose of each between themselves in what we experience as 'mind chatter'. The next week a new meditation is attempted – building on the previous – and allowing even more archetypal associations to arise, not only connected with the present card, but the previous as well. A rich tapestry begins to unfurl itself before the Sorcerers eyes allowing them deep into the unconscious contents of their psyche in a conscious and deliberate manner. With the full Major Arcana explored and these deep-seeded images and associations regurgitated into visible life – the next process of integration can begin. Integration involves such methods as Insight Roles which allows the Sorcerer to themselves make sense of the way these archetypes form, rule, and collapse. We hesitate to use the word Understanding – because Anyone can understand or pretend to understand – but however much they pretend or their Ego deceives them [Deceitful Occult Ego] that they understand – until they experience for themselves, they cannot Know or Feel or reap the benefits of performing these alchemical experiments.

With the knowledge of the lives and behaviour of archetypes comes a deeper understanding of how, why and what thralls' others. As a lesser form of magic this can provide wisdom of the means to enthral or free another or oneself from archetypes or forms – but primarily belongs to the greater Work of unfolding the secrets of the Universe and our own bio-physiology – making conscious on a new level the functions that govern us from within and without and an appreciation for our weakness in being controlled and manipulated by such forms. This appreciation for one's own human weakness is a vital humility required to develop for later works of Magic such as Aeonic and Archetypal Magic. The present and persistent insistence by so-called 'Satanic' manuscripts on strength, power, Ego, or Crowleyesque 'Do what Thou Wilt' is a mantra that fundamentally fails to empathise with the World and its Occult Secrets and is a misguided form of reactionism against the stifling conformity of religion. Whilst it is also a means available to the Sorcerer to believe this mantra as needed and as necessary to evoke the Ego into certain actions and to believe what it is necessary to believe in order to provoke the necessary geometry to be inspired to rise in reaction to ones pulling the strings – it too is the enshrinement of the Ego at the expense of the other functions of the psyche, sacrifice of the great range of perceptual windows one can look through, and a restriction of the Sorcerers being by being bound to yet another form – even if that form claims to be anti-form.

The Temple of THEM recognises this same problem exists even with its own structure – but that it is unavoidable to have a name, symbol and works – for how else can the Self communicate with the Ego. If there is no language, no form to grab, no one to speak with, no means to carry a message either through words or actions – the Ego cannot be reasoned with. Since we aim to change the Ego, we are forced to speak its language until such time a critical mass of Selves can experience the Self en masse enough to learn the state of being Self and devise alternate, Self-inspired forms of communications. One such attempt is the creation of one's own Tarot.

Empathy also requires a realistic approximation of one's potential and abilities and this is often realised only when the Ego is shattered or cannot live up to its impossible or unrealistic standards. The Temple of THEM regards humans as low on the scale of important creatures or forces – and those of THEM well above them. Such forces as weather, gravity, emotions, love, forms, thralls and so on being far more powerful, far older, and beyond humans' ability to control or understand. We refer to a life-centred geometry – not a human- centred geometry for when the Ego is enshrined [and it is socially polished and shined like a bright mirror –the blind idiot god Azagthoth] it views itself as a centralised conscious sentience around which the world revolves; it cannot accept the humility of its biophysical short-comings such as its fragility and functions almost in complete reaction to what is around it – never surpassing the forms that it encounters around it.

It is convinced of its superiority and the validity of its human-shaped perceptions. It has an extremely challenging time [without terrible and harsh alchemy being used] accepting that it is anything but what is says it is – and will argue to the death what it is with anyone who dares challenge it. This human-centred geometry can be witnessed anywhere at any given time between human beings – all our objects and buildings are also human-centred, as are the aims, needs, institutions, past times and creations of man – stemming from the hand. It is a natural bias of seeing the world as we were bio-physically intended, but it is a thrall, an unconscious enslavement and lock-out of other dimensions, other ways of perceiving or being, or as other beings, that the Sorcerer seeks to master to be One of THEM. [See Liber 13/13]

The Sorcerer – if they be one of THEM – must be deeply connected to the Word / Wyrd state of living. They must be empathic, wise in the arts of synchronicity, in solidarity with the forces of the world, themselves and THEM. This connexion cannot be faked and it cannot be otherwise had if the would-be Sorcerer is not One of THEM. The Anglo-Saxon noun Wyrd is derived from a verb, weorþan, ‘to become’, which, in turn, is derived from an Indo-European root *uert- meaning ‘to turn’.[1]. Wyrd means ‘that which has turned’ or ‘that which has become’. It carries the idea of “turned into” in both the sense of becoming something new and the sense of turning back to an original starting point. In a metaphysical term, Wyrd embodies the concept that everything is turning into something else while both being drawn in toward and moving out from its own origins. Thus, we can think of Wyrd as a process that continually works the patterns of the past into the patterns of the present.

One ramification of Wyrd in personal human terms is that our past (both our ancestry and our personal history) affects us continually. Who we are, where we are, and what we are doing today is dependent on actions we have taken in the past and actions others have taken in the past which have affected us in some way. And every choice we make in the present builds upon choices we have previously made. The philosopher Schopenhauer voiced the notion that “our lives are somehow irresistibly shaped into a coherent whole by forces beyond our conscious will”.[5] He believed that neither chance events nor inborn character were enough to explain the consistency and direction in the life course of an individual, and so he postulated “the intention of Fate” to explain this controlling force in our lives. Many people have equated the notion of Wyrd with this sort of “fate” concept, and the Norns with the Moerae or Parcae, the Greek and Roman Fates. However, to do so is to ignore the constant interplay between personal Wyrd and universal Wyrd and the role we each play in creating our own destiny.

The key Schopenhauer seems to have missed is that what he calls “the intention of Fate” is itself created by an interplay between the events that happen to us and our inborn character. We interact with Wyrd (that which has become) to create certain personal patterns which affect and are reflected in universal patterns. Those universal patterns, in turn, exert forces which shape our lives. What must be born in mind is that trusting ones decisions or guidance to any one particular source, such as Dreams, a Guru, a System of Divination is dangerously simplistic – it promotes a false sense of simplicity to just follow some current or another to stay on the right track – whereas it is a gruelling life-long commitment that always requires vigilance and exceptional alchemy. One must always be ready to change, to add more or less of something to keep or deliberately shift the balance of the psyche and the Wyrd. To follow some God or oracle blindly is to trust one’s autonomy to something external and absolves one’s responsibility for one’s vehicle – and therefore alchemical suicide. Trusting Wyrd is not a slavish acceptance that one’s destiny is set but working with the portents and signs available to one to determine one’s own path in accordance with what is unravelling – it is keeping the eye on the past mindful of the future – of reading the signs and making decisions based on the best information one can attain – but it is not an abandonment to some power or another- it is a working symbiosis.

The ancients believed that if a man would make a promise to the Gods, and he kept his Word, then they would reward him. With this power he could unleash his Wyrd so long as he kept his word. The Cosmic Being seeks to devour all life, around its centre stand the shades that are THEM, a vanguard of demonic forces that can help the Sorcerer if he seeks to be free of his destiny to be devoured or destroy the Sorcerer if they fail to free themselves. Ebbing in tides of death and life, the Cosmic Being breathes out creating life, this is what we are, then breathes in, which is what happens when we die. Much of this life is embodied in our sexual energy and fluids and withholding them [abstinence] is a form of indulgence that can bring great power to the Sorcerer who may bargain with Them for the release of such energies in exchange for something in return. Such magical rites as the Ordeal of the Moon are based on this Tempting of the Dark Gods with one's energies and one's death to fulfil certain bequeaths.

The universe is possessed of signs and portents that can guide the Sorcerer in the right way to unleash and control his Wyrd – such signs are known as synchronicity also known as coincidence, when two unlikely events occur. In times past, Sorcerers have trusted their Wyrd to a particular phenomenon – this is dangerous as the judgement of the human is discarded in favour of an external force of guidance. When the Sorcerer is travelling the right Wyrd his synchronicities will align and increase in frequency whilst if they are travelling the wrong path the same will decrease until tragedy befalls the Sorcerer. One means of ascertaining the correct Wyrd for each individual is to open the Bridge between the conscious and the Unconscious by recording and interpreting the archetypes contained in ones Dreams as a regular operation. One must be aware however that the subconscious has its own life and directs the Organism from a veil we cannot but hope to penetrate. Composed of mostly irrational elements the subconscious has a limitless array of methods of both madness and genius for getting its needs to the Ego across in its messages.

The same dream often occurs with frequency until a certain amount of conscious understanding affects the dreamer. If the message is extremely urgent the subconscious may employ a nightmare or shock tactic – and nothing shocks quite like the subconscious can with the power to shake us to the very core as nothing else can. If the message may prove harmful or explosive to the conscious then the subconscious takes a longer route and uses muted or different symbolism until the conscious gradually and safely assimilates the message a piece at a time or as it is ready. The core structure of all dreams is as Jung identified – archetypal and geared toward compensatory functions that act to balance the Ego and the underlying quest for the psyche to achieve Individuation.

As powerful as the subconscious can be – it would be foolish and highly dangerous to turn one's decisions over to the content stemming solely from the subconscious – a restraint-less function of darkness and light in equal measure, beyond measure – it is kept in check from self-destruction and the destruction of others by the Ego. It is also not just archetypal dreams that it throws up but fears, thoughts, alternate explorations of events, conversations, do-overs, self-image, memories, fantasies, and so on. To try and make sense of much of it would require living a half-life in the living world and burying oneself in the limitless content and associations that spew forth from the subconscious and are filtered by the Ego. It would be the equivalent of trying to write down with a rock the conversations of a hundred voices each speaking a different language at rapid speed.

Trusting entirely in any one phenomenon is dangerous and another meaning of THEM is to become Adept in as many of these signs as one can. One such phenomena is dreaming and decipherment of the dreams in question – but were one to trust the subconscious with all their decisions they should quickly become a sub-human driven by the irrational madness and violence the ego helps to control. This is what happens in cases of possession or evocation and possession by a form [thrall] is the most common experience of possession of all human beings.

Yet its power to inform one of impending danger, inspire moments of genius, remember Everything, access untapped modes of being or thought or experience cannot be replicated or underestimated. It is an invaluable resource to most people but often completely under utilised As a Sorcerer we must make use of everything to achieve everything. But we can only do this if we are conscious of those tools. The observation of the underlying forces of Empathy, Solidarity, and Synchronicity are the tools necessary to develop the means to live in accordance with ones Wyrd and the Will of THEM. Easy enough to summarise – the depth of each is such that it could take a lifetime to exhaust a study of anyone, let alone all three. But these are the keys to being One of THEM and it is up to each Sorcerer to explore the means and ways by which these keys can be understood, explained, experienced and induced.

There are basic laws that result from certain combinations of energies, forces, functions acting on one another that must be found or learned. These are archetypal energies that occur in the same core way but often through any combination of elements or aspects much the same way dreams retain an archetypal core but can appear a thousand ways to a thousand different people and yet all warn of danger. One example is the Law of Erotic Charge. With any undertaking that generates Wyrd or helps another unlock their potential comes a magical 'high' especially when working as a group that presences itself as an erotic charge. This charge comes from the authentic transcendence of limits and the subsequent feeling of increased freedom or wisdom – it originates from working together on something usually intimate. Such as a student learning to play the piano and breaking new ground and the teacher being particularly good at teaching. Such erotic charge usually overwhelms the participants and is expressed as sexual energy or lust. What then happens is that – if either one of the participants recognises this, but the other does not – is a rejection by one side of that lust and an emphasis on the Work. This is a massive disruption of the Ego to the other as the Ego gets confused when it is not involved – and in moments of pure transmission of Love such as when teaching others how to free their abilities – it is not. Often, feelings get hurt as the Ego seeks to distance itself from its perceived slight and – the Work. For out of defence, it has attached a memory of pain to that Work and seeks to avoid it altogether resulting in a terrible loss of potential for the teacher to instruct the student and the student to learn. This erotic charge is exceptionally strong and can even be mistaken for love.

As teachers of the black arts, it is often exceedingly difficult to avoid students suddenly developing such attachments, since what has been removed requires a replacement and the replacement is usually being given by the teacher… What is the answer? Often there is none – this is a case of one of those forces that is Stronger that any method to avoid it. Another example is the Law of Hubris. For a Hero to exist the archetype must be projected upon them by others. Whilst they believe in the Hero – if they accept the role the Hero becomes exactly that and the examples he sets as the one to look up to may inspire a slew of others to act like him or for him. But this is all illusion – one day, the people cease to project the Hero archetype upon him – usually as punishment for something they have done that broke the spell after believing all the hype surrounding them. The nature of power is the origin of pride comes before a fall.

In the case of the controlled phantasm of Ryan Anschauung the Hero status is used to show Ryan as humble, fair, willing to learn, fallible, strong, not afraid, self-honest, loving of people, arrogant, determined, driven, daring, and so on in the hope that others are inspired to emulate him and adopt his values as their own. This is one means by which THEM aims to undermine the Magian structures by causing others to question things the same way Ryan does and increase those innate intuitions and values of the Organisms own heuristic enquiry until they are One of THEM. For as many as possible to emulate Ryan it is necessary for Ryan to have exposure and this can be done through writing and imagery that unlock Wyrd. As Ryan sets himself up as a teacher, others may come to see him as such thus self-fulfilling the chosen role with each feeding the others projections back and forth to solidify the role. With enough time – this can turn to adoration and idolisation wherein the projections get stronger and the Ego in danger of ballooning out of control or proportion, fat on the praise and love of others for what is not only an archetype, but not even a real individual.

This is where mistakes begin to arise, full of themselves they make hasty ill-conceived decisions believing themselves to be what their fans tell them they are – only to overstep the mark and come smashing down for making the fatal mistake of breaking the spell of the Hero. This is the death-knell of all human's forms – with endless examples of rulers and tyrants letting the power people give them go to their head, revel in excess, abuse their power, and invite the wrath of the Gods [the natural consequences of their actions]. This is why Ryan Anschauung is faceless and anonymous – he forms a second step between the Ego and the creator of the phantasm and allows a greater distance to be kept between believing the praise – the praise going to Ryan and thus a constant reminder that Ryan is an archetype – not to Ryan's creator via his real name as praise to him. Thus, with a degree of separation does he keep control of the device without risking hubris as much as direct praise would invite. There is a form of magic which we shall refer to as Idolatry – wherein the target is not openly attacked and challenged but is given sycophantic mountains of praise to try and destroy them when they believe it and overreach causing them to come crashing down via their hubris. The Law of Hubris is also why the Temple of THEM set a 30-year charter with now 24 years to go. A realistic duration in which to set out to achieve what we intend which is to create the Undividual or First Human and remake how humans do things by altering their traditional modes of thought and action.

Only through the Ego can we achieve conscious direction of Intent. And only through Empathy, Synchronicity, and Solidarity can we come to truly understand the geometry of the forces we seek to Master and where and how to work with each one and one another to achieve our Will. At the same time as THEM holds these basic elements to be of use – one should come to understand that this is just one way of an endless many ways to achieve one's goals, one set of eyes through which to see the world, one briefly described and exoteric system of magic. One must find one own Wyrd and way and often when they do – the outcome is that they no longer need the Temple of THEM but have learned what they needed to learn. There are a great many individuals who have taught and learned from the members of THEM but who have achieved what they were meant to achieve and moved on as Undividuals – those who need no Temple, no guidance, or teachers and it is those types of individuals we seek to create – those that do not need the Temple or occult strictures, tools, settings, or companions but experience the forces of THEM as they Are without the mediums through which those forces are at first channelled. For it is those types that will find it hard to be enthralled again – either by Magian or Sinister designs and be closer to THEM than any controlled environment with form will ever get them. This said, let the adherent research the threads of the Temple through Threshold, Sinister 101, the Themonomicon, Tendril, the Mvimaedivm Black Project and the Temple of THEM WordPress.

DIRECTIVE A-66
Why don't we Kill?

We don't kill because we fear the unknown – even when we have a reason to kill. Even when we understand that is what is required to keep the planets standards high, its airways clean, and its refuse to a manageable minimum. We don't kill because we have no idea how easy it is – there are so many complications that enter our mind, borne of the endless enactments of others we have witnessed and catalogued for reference. We dare not take that leap – knowing that once the door is opened it cannot be closed. We know there is no coming back. But what if we don't want to come back. What if, we realised, this is as good as it gets? An endless coil of repetitive cycles day after day, year after year, realisation after realisation – coming back to the uncomfortable truth.

This is as good as it gets. To be trained in school, groomed from day one to work for the machine – to adopt and aspire to the goals of the wealthy elite who frame our choices – our only recourse to sell ourselves to the highest bidder and join those in chains grinding the mill. And toward what? They teach us Loyalty to the machine is everything. They teach us only that which feeds it, only that which nourishes and greases it. We are not taught to think, or to question why. We are told – be everything you can be – you can be anything you want to – but when we, based on our observations of what is required, what is necessary, what is right – become something other than a grinder of the machine – when we dare to step out of the light of the all-seeing eye and make our own choices- then, then we are demonised. Then, we are called criminals, eccentrics, extremists. But all we are doing is making the best choice – the choices no-one else can see, so deluged are they by the pills forced down their throat due to their lack of foresight or beaten down by reprimand after reprimand – which as we know – suddenly changes to be all that you can be, with the proviso, for the Machine.

Hitler chose to be all that he could be. We can be sure he was encouraged to do his best, to aspire to greatness, to study and scheme for his opportunity to presence his visions, his 'career'. Germany needed strong leadership, Germany needed political stability, and Germany needed a new vision. And of volition did Hitler not stand tall among lesser men and be all he could be? Did he not answer the Question we are still asking? And when he did? He was hunted, punished, destroyed – for listening to those who work for the Machine, for taking on board the notions that he should be all he could be, for doing what was required of him, what they demanded of him from birth. There is no Loyalty to the Machine that goes unpunished. Good people spend their lives at the coal face, giving up everything for their Masters, only to be discarded when they have served their usefulness; their life wasted furthering the pockets of the rich, the boss's holiday by another Martini. Struggling toward the dream brainwashed into us that we can be Him or Her, from birth – a dream that doesn't exist – a dream that becomes a nightmare the moment we question the Machine. Only the unfeeling killers get to the top.

Those willing to do anything and fall back on the claims they were just doing their job. Drunk dry and their lifeblood usurped, we are dumped in the street when fresh blood comes coursing through the veins, naive and willing, to blindly feed the Machine with the corpses of the Loyal. It is all that awaits all of us – dreaming foolishly of an idyll of superannuation, retirement, and rest after a life well-lived – we know we are oppressed, we know we are in chains and why we daydream, why we imagine the future, why we drink our sorrows – it's all toward Escapism.

We want to escape. We spend our whole lives in the service of the Machine naively believing there is an escape. There is no escape. This is the best we can hope for. We are trapped here. Around us fools dance and jingle their bells, grinding the mill with their solemn labour tending the gardens and neutralising the weeds. I speak to you who are the weeds – the proud and the strong who seek only the light of the sun. Who struggle up from beneath the ground through soil and dirt and loam in the hope that there might be something worth finding on the surface and who discovered the disappointing truth of life. Those of you who did not fall prey to the wiles of the schools and saw through the economic schemes of the Capitali and who were told to be all you can be – only to be told No when you were.

Some of us don't have all the right words, and some of us don't know the right actions – to express this truth – to express our rage, indignation and sorrow at what is occurring – all we have is a feeling. That feeling is the most precious thing you have – it is the same Silent Knowing that has driven hundreds of thousands of human beings to recognise the absurdity of their Time, the endless waste of lives and potential fulfilling the cold desire of a Machine that cares for nothing but replication of itself. Replication after replication in the name of "Progress". Look around you, are we not still the same as we have always been – trapped in a delusion like hamsters on a wheel that just so long as we keep running everything will be alright? It is of no consequence if you cannot find the words for that feeling – it is a feeling that cannot be justified and never accepted where the only Listeners are the puppets of the Machine. But you must hang onto it -it only comes to a few of us – those few who slip between the cracks and see through the lies, through the brainwashing, and the cheerful world facade that darkens when we turn of age – or those of us who never believed the ruse in the first place – who saw what was being done and that people were lining up one after the other in blind columns ready to cut open their veins and drain their lifeblood into its engine, like sheep clambering to die for the Machine.

The Machine cannot grab us all. It tries – it has every conceivable net cast to catch and mould everyone, however different – but something stronger than the Machine shares the same space. Something Older than the Machine dominated this world – something primal and chthonic, earth-bound that emanates within our every cell and tells us what we are seeing is wrong – something that wants to return, as if it remembered a time when it was, a golden age of humanity. There has never been one.

This feeling does not come to all – most are indoctrinated and pressed into service readily from the beginning – their instincts suppressed by an endless soup of falsities that turns the brain to mush, yolks it, and controls it. This feeling comes to the Weeds, the organic thorns in the Machines side that find their way into any garden bed, any tended field, refusing to succumb to poison, thinning out, and any amount of scrutiny.

This feeling sets off alarm bells in our head that this is not the way it should be – screams at us that the angles are wrong, the geometry flawed, the innocuous thinly veiled by the sinister. We cannot explain what it is – we are not meant to – the Machine has created the infinity of forms to cover up and disguise itself – a million x a million paths for us to travel down in our desperate search to make people see what we see – but all of them dead ends. Wasted time trying to convince those who cannot be convinced, those who are dead inside, whose only programming is to accept those fuels that feed the Machine. We are the ones who truly understand Futility – how conversation leads to more running on the treadmill, more escapism – and alerts the guardians of the Matrix to our defiance, to our existence as freed from the tyranny of Hope. We are not among the stupid. We are not among the slaves. We recognise clearly what we have been born into. And what we must do. There are No exits marked in this prison. But we hinge. We pause. We hesitate. Because we are held back by the traces of programming that have laid their sickly roots in our heads. We think – what can I do – the problem is so big, so infinitely vast and complex – and my life so fragile and brief. It is true – our lives are fragile and brief – we only appreciate that when it is threatened – or almost taken away. This is the leverage through which the machine controls us – destroys us – by threatening to take us from the pen in which we are housed and tag us, target us, torture or terminate us. In reaction to action – it takes our lives. It locks us up – or it shuts us down. It even ignores us. For what can we do, just one more blip on a screen, one random number on a file, one tiny organism against a Leviathan thousands of years in the making.

Its defences are vast and its resources powerful – its vengeance is lasting and cruelly swift. Like an all-seeing Eagle it soars down to pluck those who dare stand tall – to smash those individuals who slip beyond its reach, beyond its re-education programs, beyond its ability to reason with them. It takes us one by one – our fragile lives – one way or the other. We die for it, or we die from it. When we are overwhelmed by its madness and the torturous regime it inflicts on others and we make too much noise in protest, when we explode in rage at the injustice of its justice, when we try to voice what is wrong – and show ourselves to be free – it pounces, tears us to shreds as an example to others, makes us fear for our lives, our safety, our fragile brief lives… It spins our efforts into its web of lies, paints us as evil, as morally corrupt, as traitors, or the mad. We are not mad. We with that feeling are the only sane ones left. That is why it hates us. That is why it seeks to destroy us. That is why it has always hated us and why it continues to scan for us and destroy us when we surface uninvited into its sterile gardens and raise a finger to the machine.

Every War begins with groundwork. It begins with someone like you, who has a feeling that something is very wrong with the world and can't place their finger on it – or who finds themselves unable to place enough fingers in the dam to stem the tide of this terrible geometry the Machine has wrought – who finds themselves overwhelmed by the enormity, who thinks themselves Alone, an isolated soul driven with a dark feeling of recognition of having somehow, somewhere, seen all of this before – and who can see through the mirage of a carefully erected, tended and varnished exterior of the world perfected in its purpose, meaning, bright hues and innocent architecture to the reality of a filthy dungeon of tangled broken lines and twisted horror – where nothing meets where it should, nothing is true, everything is permitted.

That feeling is our collective Memory. It is not your memory, or my memory, but the deep gouges and traces left by the impact of ancient onslaughts against the psyche and against the mind. It may have been enslaved two thousand years, but it Remembers – it Remembers Everything. Despite the programming, despite the Machines eradications and purges – that feeling persists – a nagging sense that this is all wrong, alien, an invasion. There was an invasion. A Mind-War which we lost. We were imprisoned. We have been here so long we've forgotten it ever happened; forgotten we are prisoners. We were forced to forget. Yet something in us remembers and we spend our days inside mentally escaping. Escaping into a new life, a new car, and a better me. But it's all in our heads – we sit in our cells and use our limited freedom in vain – whatever we do, we remain imprisoned, and the Machine watches over us with a malevolent eye. It takes good and evil both in its stride, necessary outbursts that justify its existence, its dominance, its tyranny.

Nature persists in throwing up avatars of that feeling. Those who Remember. We carry within us and our brief fragile lives the renewed hopes of those who tried to escape – those who defied the jaws of the Monster destined to repeat the endless cycle of striving to destroy the Machine and were crushed beneath its merciless wheels trying to halt its progress. Life after life, broken bodies and shattered dreams piled high toward the Sun – the procession of an aeon of soldiers of That Which Defies the Machine – desperate to stop the stories in motion in their Time and change the archetypal mythos unfolding as the noxious geometry of the Machine took hold of our planet.

What did they reveal?

They peeled back the wallpaper of the Matrix to show the underlying wire frame – that it had infrastructure, layers, pipes, sewers, beneath its seamless visage. Props and mounts, supports and struts that held it in place. We, with that feeling can choose to unscrew our bolt.

They revealed that a Symbol endures and outlasts causal death, whilst the Individual does not. Endless individuals fought the Machine on its own terms only to be utterly annihilated or literally owned by it. Bought out, paid off, many like us joined the Factory Floor as overseers and supervisors – enabling the Machine to learn from all our assaults and adapt ways to insulate itself against them. But the Machine is not impenetrable. New arrivals seed new assaults. They revealed that Frontal attacks on the machine make it stronger – it is not the limbs of the beast we must hack, but the heart. Only through the shadows of its own Forms can the Machine be caused to turn on itself and self-destruct. The deliberate misuse and bending of the Machines forms back upon themselves have a curious effect – contagion.

Such acts break the hold temporarily and help others to Remember.

It can only be destroyed by using its own strength against it. The Machine exerts a Morality field that filters into everything, taking advantage of loaded emotional phrases, concepts, ideas ingrained during programming to direct its minions against themselves or external threats. The Machines strengths lie in its superior arsenal of forms and its absorption of contradiction. It divides in order to conquer. Assaults must not focus on the Machine, nor the Form – not after A and before Z – but directly in between. We must overcome our directive to protect the Machine and embrace the coils of Chaos. Spam mail – is hated because it slows the Machine. Traffic Jams – are hated because they slow the Machine. Queues are hated because they slow the Machine. Plane delays are hated because they slow the Machine. Graffiti or damage to trains is hated because it slows the Machine. To fear being Late, Delayed, and Inconvenienced – is the unconscious programming of your directive to Love Thy Machine. All of these things interrupt the daily motions, the mechanical processes dutifully played out in monotone rhythm. All of these things cause Chaos – Chaos is the name for that which slows of the Machine – Chaos is hated, feared, forgotten, because it is the one thing that stands in the way of the cold desire of a soulless embodiment that cares for nothing but replication of itself. Replication after replication in the name of “Progress”.

The building blocks, the very A-frame of reality is built upon extremely fragile supports upon which a small amount of pressure can cause them to collapse. But they are seldom leant on – because they have been forgotten – swept under the carpet of forms that thickly conceal these weaknesses. It's the little things – such as writing left to right so that you can read this page and process the information as quickly as possible in order to get on with your next task that keeps the Machine going…

Teaching others like us to Understand the Machine is why we exist.

There have always been others like us. Before us.

And after us.

We are the Temple of THEM.

We are going to Kill the Machine.

IN SINISTER SOLIDARITY

[Dangerous Knowledge to the Uninitiated]

The moment a person is set free from Time; free from living in the Matrix under the thrall of the Ego; – that developed "I" that gives us animation and the illusion of free-will so necessary to feel 'human' – is the moment that psychic Security is undermined.
What allows us to have control in life is the feeling that we are Prescient – and for this, an image of who we are needs to develop over time that allows us to fit into the society we live in. At least, this is usually the goal of guardians raising a child for a number of reasons; some of the majors are a) socialisation is a necessary means of survival; b) there are strong sanctions made against persons who show a marked destructive/creative capacity that is at odds with societies rules: and c) all children are naturally sociopaths and for society to be possible: children must be trained to be subservient for the parent's well-being, for the child's well-being; and well-being means authoritative control.

We spend a lot of time learning about the world around us; and at first, we only manage simplistic terms such as a "Rainbow is colourful". As children we accept this readily enough; but will eventually come to understand that our guardians are fallible and often hypocritical.

When we get older, we will be able to comprehend that a rainbow has seven colours; when we get older still that a rainbow is made up of light; and later still that Light is made up of wavelengths; but eventually we will come to understand that all that we have been taught as fact, is valid only if we believe an authority.

When we are told at university that no-one actually knows what light is, realise that our religion doesn't have the answers we need, or witness the hypocrisy of our guardians- there are corresponding occurrences of fallibility.

Those with children will often be bemused when a child spends a lot of time animating/anthropomorphizing a teddy bear and pretending it is real and they try to play along with the child's fantasy. For some time, the child will agreeably let the guardian add concepts such as the teddy is walking, the teddy is hiding; but then suddenly something as simple as "the teddy is drinking" will cause a solemn response from the child to the effect of "it's not a real bear you know". These innocent unexpected moments of seriousness are signs of the child's growing powers of reason to test fallibility. For some children: this is the breakthrough needed to begin becoming autonomous. So it is about this time, that the Ego begins to develop.

Such growth is of course carefully monitored, controlled, steered and guided by guardians of the Matrix: and in this manner; there tend to be built-in submissions to higher authorities. Be they God, State, Police, Parents, or Ethics. Now, because the Ego is trained early on to work on a Reward/Punishment basis; it finds pleasure/pain in obeying/disobeying certain authorities.

Unless the early Ego is given an experience of the fallibility of authorities that causes a re-think of certain notions about the world held dear; it will be happy enough to live out life under the impressions of the world tutored into it; and, once it has decided its Weltanschauung (world-view) it will begin to solidify notions and schemata for the means of maintaining a set stasis. I.e., it will become hardened and resistant to new ideas, in its bid to control the world from the seat of its new identity, the "I". And pending on how fragile the Ego – will even become violent when challenged. Some Egos are flexible; and will be able to accommodate one or two drastic changes and can usually bend a little as means of compromise. But very few have the elasticity caused by seeing continued fallibility in authoritative figures and notions during early formation that cause the socialisation of the Ego to be improperly executed. We teach socialisation by simplistic repetitions; and we are shaped by virtue of simplistic repetition to LIKE a specific and unchangeable world. When something that is a god to a child is shown to be infallible it is often confusing and a shock to the Ego; it throws things into question and causes a re-examination of one's ideas and a rejection of some of those ideas. It is an uncomfortable moment of insecurity and fear that we suddenly have lost control of our matrix; but for most there is always someone to reassure us of the Validity of that God, or somehow comfort us and this actually coaxes us away from facing that fear and examining what it is.

But it can't always be so. The number of humans means there will always be anomalies to the equation. Some will not be comforted by the explanations of others or soothed by the means of rhetoric; indeed, some will be angry and affronted that they have been tricked into being shaped the way they have by others; to being controlled by laws that previously seemed sacrosanct. And with the fallibility of, for example, seeing police beat innocent bystanders, or hearing of a case of a wrongful imprisonment, they will question such authority and subsequently come to reject the musical lull of the fawners in the Matrix. They will attempt to seriously re-examine their lives, their ideas, who they are, and why they are here. This will often result in a quest.

If such a Quest is heuristic, or Satanic, it will usually involve in-depth examination of all authorities as the Satanist seeks to embody the rebellious archetype of Satan. The type of mind that loses faith in authorities and openly questions/rebels against them – is in the eyes of the World, Sinister in its being. The type of mind that loses faith in authorities will closely scrutinise them and with enough study see right through each of them and understand them for the illusions they are. The vulgar truths that are revealed via such study can incite intense anger and profound indignation as well as a feeling of being lost in an ethereal nightmare.

The illusions of the Matrix are arranged just like a house of cards: the same way we are taught concepts one by one as children; the same way breaking those concepts causes concepts associated with them to fall down. One by one the destruction of each will cause part of the intellectual world to crumble away as though the backdrops of the world were peeled off and a vast network of wire frame were to be seen underneath: viz. the infinity of the Angles.

Such a disturbing/disappointing find often leads to a renouncement of the quest and the path to madness or mediocrity as in desperation the Ego will fix its gaze on an object in order to cling to its last shred of truth in the Matrix. Without something to cling to, it fears it will lose all control and security and find itself alone, divorced from the convenient reality of others. And if it can let go of the Matrix, it will, in a very frightening, chaotic place with no rules that some call the Unknown and others know as the Abyss.

Such a “dis-covery” if it does not destroy the Ego and render the organism senseless – often experienced as apathy, nihilism, suicide, depression – will if followed in due course strip away Everything that was held dear in the foundation of the Ego. It is thus important to understand this process and work on dream channelling, psychic-exploration, and other means of establishing a true self to fall back on, and BE, when the Ego is eventually dissolved. A being should expect to have great difficulty in coming to terms with stepping out of the matrix and not being able to go back to believing in the world it knew. The deconstruction of reality leads to a disintegration of the ego and conversations and actions of everyday are all revealed for what they are, dependant on the Matrix.

Without the convenience of a surrounding structure the Ego loses it function to act as a psychic safety net that provides the security or comfort of knowing what to do with your Being, what it is Being, or how it should act.

It is for a long time a seemingly permanent separation of one's existence from the real – and a plunge in the chill dark of the esoteric. It is an intense moment entering the Angles, and it has not been written about by any Mage I have studied or learnt from. One might consider this a separation from God and the aim of Satan himself translated into human terms – But it is only the beginning. Unless you are willing [and by willing, I mean possessed of a demonic dynamic Wyrd to truly KNOW – a true Satanist] to keep going further into the Angles; you will have only come halfway; and you will feel extreme anguish that there is no foundation that you can trust. You will feel as though you are New, here. The inanity of others who continually refer to aspects of the Matrix that is still real for them will grate on your nerves like nothing you know. Unless you construct an alternate Sinister matrix for the Self to survive in: the horrible things that stalk the Angles will devour you. I don't just mean the torturous logic, uncertainties, doubts, and fears, inability to explain to your Matrix-entrenched loved ones what is "wrong" with you or wrong with the world – I mean real Demons.

The reason for building a Sinister matrix is the same reason for building the Self: breaking out of the Matrix poses an immediate danger of lack of control over your external form and others' perceptions of its constructive function in Society. Adjustment takes time and may put you in a vulnerable state. You face the scrutiny of others and potentially the threat of chemical/physical imprisonment by the State. But the mind and body must be preserved to continue consciously directed growth. The Sinister Matrix is a means of perception that perceives world content as a blank slate, as though it were all black clay over which some have put signposts and tents and coloured flags, and others have built enormous castles and armies of coloured plastic. Much of the clay has been brightly carpeted to cover its dense impenetrable truth, but these illusions and concealments do not fool. Shapes made from this black clay or "matter" visible to the eye are understood to be creations moulded into shape only by the hands and wills of others, and able to be re-shaped by one's own will into another form. Nothing made of the black clay is permanent. We are not absorbed with the signposts and bright flags – that is the realm of illusion and Semantic knowledge. Our quest is with Intuition, of the "Black Clay".

Once you have peeled away the wallpaper of the Psyche – and all authorities lay slain and dead at your feet, there is only one place that your Quest can lead you: back unto your Self. Annihilation of the intellectual Matrix does not annihilate "you". The prescience of "You" will be an immediate puzzle under your own constant scrutiny; and for this it is necessary to develop the power to split into different parts of your Psyche, such as the early and mid-stages of ONA/THEM Satanism teaches. Now you know why.

Because this stripping away cannot be understood [at least it wasn't, prior to the writings of THEM] by those who haven't undergone it: because you must travel to an Unknown plane according to the specific dissolving elements of your Ego: and because the words, advice of any kind of authority cannot sate you: the Quest of the Left-Hand Path is a Sinister, and Solitary one. Despite the esoteric frustration you will initially experience when your being reanimates the slain Ego under new control of the Self – the fragility of words, ideas, notions, images, meanings, etc – you will eventually understand these fragments do not form a whole: or if they do, it is a whole that will be entirely dependent on your will: thus, do not need to be logically understood but irrationally allowed to whirl about your mind [for this is the source of material for re-creating the Matrix and becoming a God within it] and the more immediate problem of your Being, your body, the life-force that you can feel somewhere in your animation becomes apparent. Because you have chosen a Satanic Quest: to be like Satan: experiencing the Matrix and the Abyss will not be enough. Knowing what the very heart of the words "Satan" and "God" are and represent at their finest level will not sate you: you will want to know what it is that animates you, what it is that resists against you if not a chair: but a tangle of angles that has thus far been lumped "Matter".

It is a Quest that THEM are still on. Meanwhile, you will have your feet in two different worlds, one of the Matrix in which you may learn Semantic Knowledge to indulge in your whims as a creative/destructive God, now knowing the secret weaknesses and fragility of all forms. And the other foot in the Abyss, by which you may dissolve your temporary Ego and intellectually modify or alchemically alter to give yourself a type of reason or thought that allows you to change perspective so that you may perform in the Matrix super-human feats of thought and action and override the usually strict encompassing rigidity of the average Ego that says DON'T: because you are no longer bound to obey it: because you are now, "in league with the Devil".

DIVINE JOY

I – Evolution

Today, when the human baby is born, for some time it is blind and for a year or more remains completely dependent on others for its survival. In such a helpless state, how did the first of its kind survive long enough to give birth? Perhaps we are descendants of the monkeys, but how does this solve the original dilemma? The monkey too is helpless at birth. What is the logical sequence of events that preceded us? Logically: unless there was a species capable of caring for a human infant at least long enough to survive to procreate; a species that was somehow not helpless at birth and able to nurture its own growth and independent being (Are there any examples of this in nature?) it is practical to consider the intervention of intelligent design. What genus of animals abandons their young immediately after birth? And could such a genus have helped raise the first human such as wolves, bears, tigers and other animals have been documented doing? Or are we deluded and ignorant of a much different past? Are we descendants of another race?

With Evolution: the causal procession is often assumed a case of which came first: the Chicken or the Egg. It's a lazy paradox. Nature spawns creatures that are tested against it. The equivalent of guinea pigs; slowly tailored to suit and thrive in their unique environmental conditions. Perhaps the first chicken (a result of crossbreeding) was simply dropped in a sac to the ground as a "freak" of nature, (how arrogant to assume what is normal!) and the hard encasement of the "Egg" developed as a result of repeated impact and damage to the sac.

One theory held by THEM is of an interlacing level of organism's organisation, where each individual has as a by-product of its existence a separate role as part of a greater whole via the collective forming another form – i.e., individual ants forming a swarm or army that moves as one unit. Armies of ants then forming a colony, many colonies an Eco-system and so on. To survive; the organisms subjected to impact would over time develop protection at the micro-level of their structure and this is likely to have a knock-on effect that sustains the larger collective form too. This would mean the egg developed well after the proto-chicken. The paradox only emerges when we assume that the "first chicken" was actually a "chicken" too. It seems no less far-fetched to believe that an Acausal intrusion gives life to life, than it is to believe a God has done so.

II – The Great Chaos

The first words of the Christian God are: Let there be light. It is a revelation on two fronts; 1) that there was darkness prior to God, and 2) that there was reason for the light. When the first of our kind was born; we must assume that somehow it survived long enough to procreate. What hideous terror must have assailed the first infant of our kind; what alien and primeval sensations, what noises and smells, what uncontrollable and original/pristine encounters with this dimension must have been the first experiences of that infant. We have considered how the first infant may have survived. Let us be optimistic and think on the experiences of the first men.

The Sun, the Moon, the Sea, the Mountains and the Forests; must have truly overawed the first men. And not merely the visionary sensations but those of sound, smell, touch, pain. With no words, no language, no comparison for what they saw: no comfort of control over the colours, lights, and fury of the old world; it must have been the original act of Staring into the Abyss. So absolutely frightening was this experience that men were forced to understand what they saw in order to survive it. The Great Chaos was too much for first man; as a baby screams in distress at its birth today; so too would primeval man as an infant have been absolutely awed by the experience of suddenly being alive; with no-one to comfort or soothe.

I reason that this first experience of men was captured genetically in the early stages of the formation of memory and experience of the psyche and is at the very root of our nature as the human species as the first repression; a repression necessary to enable men to rise up and control the horrors of their surroundings by giving names and meanings (eventually) to things that shared space with them. This repression of Original Chaos is the ghost at the core of memory that drives all human beings to invent the Matrix: as a means to cover the Abyss with meaning to control it. If we had or could not, we should have perished with fear and would not have become the Human Race. Chaos defines us, and that is why the idea of God(s) resonates hypnotically within the human psyche; that is why "let there be light" are the first words of God, because they are the first act of man.

THE THEORY OF THE BEAST [1]

In the realm of Black Magic it is often useful to borrow metaphors or terms from sources such as Psychology. I shall now aim to represent a psychological foundation for the ideas I have encountered: but I must impress upon the reader that this theory and the use of its constituents may lie outside of conventional Psychology. It is important to address this theory now however, for Psychology has its roots in Alchemy, Alchemy is a highly relative notion to THEM because of its emphasis on Change, and part of Al chemical Change involves knowing thyself. I will give a crash course in Psychological terms and concepts and then relate why I believe suppression of the part of the psyche called the Id, personified and demonised, gave rise to the origin of Satan, to Demons, and to the concept of Evil.

Our minds, when being formed, are protected from psychic harm by a container called the Ego. The ego is a vitally important function of our total Psyche that stores for us the unique, stable set of conditions we each live by, with our actions motivated toward keeping those conditions just right or in 'homeostasis'. It is also the aspect of us that generates our sense of control and security over our behaviour, thoughts, and environment. When the ego is first formed it is malleable, elastic in its growth and able to take on new ideas and information, but as it reaches maturity it hardens and becomes brittle and resistant to change. For this reason, once set, the beliefs of people are often unchangeable. Entwined as they are with their world-view, the ego's protective mechanisms, and sense of identity; the beliefs of a person are a hyper-extension of the ego that can sometimes take control over the organism like an autopilot. Ego is the part of us that will fight like a cornered animal to re-assert its view of reality if it is questioned or challenged.

Another function of the ego is to act like a dam holding back a vast lake of water. It acts as a division in our mind that holds back the contents of our animalistic "Sub-conscious" or "Id". The Id is a separate compartment of the mind that originally dominated our Being. In order to have an individual sense of identity to separate us from our previous animalistic instincts, the ego developed by repressing (blocking out) the subconscious. The content and role of the Id is an on-going matter of speculation; however it is best known for its capacity to act as a psychic waste-land ruled by unknown dimensions; a primeval enigma that contains contents highly disturbing to the logical, rational mind. It is a subliminal pool that contains among other things: our dark secrets, wishes and desires, our irrational urges and impulses expressed without restraint, intense anxieties and repressed memories of fear and pain, the surfacing of which can be extremely dangerous to our fragile well-being.

Our ego helps to deceive us about our innate fragility and keep up protective illusions of safety, conformity, normality, control, security and "Reality". It essentially tries to ignore the Id and takes great pains not to disturb it. Those in the field of Analytical Psychology (Qv. Carl Jung) are painstakingly aware of the care that must be taken when allowing content from the Subconscious of a client to emerge; and Psychopaths and the impulsive/compulsive individual embody examples of the ability of the contents of the unconscious to interfere in sane growth. As well as guarding against internal pressure the ego also helps us to deal with threats from outer forces we face in our external environment. Because it is subjected to enormous psychological and physiological pressures it is important that its development is properly executed. If the Ego is damaged during crucial stages of its development, it may crack and cause unpredictable leaks of content from the subconscious to occur. A significant crack can enable a large flow or even a flood of subconscious content into our consciousness allowing what is called 'the Abyss' in magickal terms or 'the Collective Unconsciousness' in psychological terms, to be released onto what we know as ourselves: the "I " resulting in madness or severe psychosis. This theory closely parallels our biological evolution.

Before we gained the level of consciousness that allowed us to recognise ourselves as individual thinking beings separate from each other and the rest of the world, in fact before we were "humanity", proto-man was ruled by base desires and savage primal instincts. At some point in our evolution we were able to suppress our ruling animal instincts long enough for Consciousness to arise. We eventually achieved a state of self-awareness that allowed us to appraise and wonder at our own existence. This unique state of self-awareness is referred to as the 'I' in Psychology and has long been regarded as the single-most fascinating achievement of the human organism. But the emergence of the 'I' came at a heavy price. In exchange for Consciousness, we had to forcefully drive our natural, raw instinct of what we were (the Collective Unconscious) back from the fore of our minds and forge a new artificial conscious collective agreement (the Collective Consciousness) on what we wanted to be.

To help do this, over time our species created, and then instilled, Values, Group Obligations and Right Conduct into and onto each other, further suppressing the raw state of our natural being to further the aims of our artificial one – which was a mass social form of indefinitely deferred gratification (having to wait for set conditions to arise before one can gratify ones natural desires). So long as we kept our primal dark forces [The Id] in check, we were able to get along with each other relatively well enough to develop groups and societies – usually ruled by a few, who used fear, violence etc., to enforce Law, Order, and instil conscious conduct.
Over a vast span of time, and as Consciousness spread, the majority of people developed an Ego strong enough to contain the Id indefinitely, or productively released it via outlets of creativity, dance, music, language, symbols, etc. A whole social matrix was built upon the attempts to keep the subconscious out so that our new state of independence could thrive and we began to cloak immediate needs and base desires within respectability and glamour. Such glamour is artifice; all humans contain the Id and all Conscious human beings are scorpions.] We also began to give names and labels to things to begin dispelling fear. The more names we created the more complex the world became. Today, there are so many names for things, and so many institutions to perpetuate more names, that we have forgotten its original point as an exercise in control. Because there are so many concepts and names and ideas that have been layered onto what really Is apparently there [which is geometry] and nameless, there are now millions of illusions that must be broken before a grasp of genuine reality can be achieved. Owing to the hardship required to break free from such illusions most cannot help but be entrapped by the deception of authority and the webs of the matrix.

But, those that made a religion of suppression were ill-prepared for the strength of their new enemy. The Id or “Beast” could not be tamed and the forces of the subconscious proved powerful beyond their wildest dreams. Although punishment was meted out to those unable to hold back the advancing forces of our primal being as a social admonishment to discourage others from releasing what was imprisoned within; suppression did nothing to sate our desires and urges to behave naturally. While some adopted the new Conscious collective agreement and joined the religion of holding back their impulsive urges, some followed only in part by practising its release in private (or in public granted certain power); and still others refused (or were incapable) to suppress it at all, continuing to embody our original natural state of being that sought instant gratification.

Out of growing fear of the Beast to undermine our civility and our human-ness, we denied the unknown realm locked away within us that frightened us for its unpredictability, its cruelty and its propensity to erupt from the calmest human being. Such a force threatened to engulf the conscious accomplishments of humanity in chaos and destruction. In time, various Religions and magical tribes came to call signs of activity stemming from the subconscious by unfavourable names. In effect – A war was declared against the forces of 'The Great Beast', the opening psychic shot in a Mind War that would lead to all manner of dark masters/forces Named responsible for the horrors that issued forth from people – various Monsters, Deities, and Gods, and of course, "Satan", all in a bid to control the subconscious. Other words crept in "Demons", "Evil", and so forth that led to wide-spread persecutions to stamp out the Beast. It did not take long for some to realise the power that came from interpreting existence for others… Yet those who suppressed the beast the hardest were often those most afflicted by its insurmountable power.

When the subconscious is kept under lock and key and an option to vent it/express it by 'exercising the beast' is denied; the expenditure of energy needed by the ego to hold back subconscious forces grows exponentially. Without outlets, the repressed forces grow stronger by the day until they grow powerful enough to over-run the defences of the Ego or shatter it completely causing psychosis. They manifest outwardly as unchecked acts of raw desire, often many times stronger than when originally imprisoned, often expressed as acts of sadistic cruelty, murder, torture, brutality, violence, blood-lust, war, passion and rape. Or they consume the ego with a barrage of irrational emotions and desires that drive the being to fulfil them or take out its frustration at being unable to fulfil them in other, often destructive ways. The Ego can only do so much to hold the subconscious back until it is eventually overwhelmed. The fact that our natural state is one dominated by the Subconscious tends toward its favour in a war of wills.

No matter how emphatically the subconscious is repressed; like the metaphor of the stubborn weed, the tendrils of the unconscious will keep returning, writhing forth again and again into the fore of the mind in an endless struggle to choke the host plant into submission. By forcing our instinct underground we committed ourselves to a life-long struggle against our very nature in order to maintain an artificial existence. The artificial existence can only prosper under certain conditions: the most important of which is suppression of raw unconscious desires. In the eyes of the Artificers (The Magian Illuminati. Qv. Book III) in our natural, uncontrolled state of being, humans are either; terrifying creatures suffused with a brutal, primal darkness that has been called "Chaos" that are too ferocious to tame; or frightened creatures too timid to work or help create the matrix and further the Artifice. Pending on Environmental and Genetic Factors we might be either – thus we are shaped by the Artifice as soon as possible.

Chaos is representative of the unconscious and is anathema to the Order that the Artificers wish to exist. One may be reasonably sure that the Artificers were simply those that excelled in disguising the Beast, who over time granted their base desires and ambitions using deception and cunning – forming groups of self-interested individuals that conspired to manifest their Beasts within using the forms and illusions of the Artifice to conceal them. There is ample corresponding evidence within Sociology for this. For example an individual who commits Corporate Fraud which relieves hundreds of people from millions of dollars, homes and savings, is far less likely to be charged and go to jail, than someone who steals a single car. Using the illusions of respectability and the forms of the Artifice – the Beast is concealed. The Artificers support suppression of the Beast in others via religion and politics for example, negotiating with others to defer gratification by reason, cultural norm, money, threat of imprisonment or force – but they do not support it in themselves.

They use the subsequent meekness adopted by a populace to rule it. This type of thing has been going on for a long time – and it is known in Satanism as the Great Mind War. The Great Mind War is a fight between the Magian to assert Artificial Forms based on original fear such a moral good and evil existing in the world over the Sinister understanding of the world as Godless and dominated by Chaos. This will all be covered in great detail as we progress through the books. However, because they fear Chaos so rabidly, the Artificers have deliberately fostered great ignorance concerning Satanism and created a whole system of occult blinds and myths intended to prevent any real magical Adeptship from arising in an individual that could seriously pose a threat or challenge to their ruling regime. For this reason it was extremely difficult to learn the Traditional practices of genuine Satanism beneath the tame, safe, watered down version that is happily peddled commercially that misdirects and controls the Beast by dictating the terms of its release. And the simple motives are Jealousy and Greed.

If everyone released the Beast or mastered its control as well as the Artificers, the Artificers would no longer be powerful. Their power rests on maintaining an unequal distribution of power. If for arguments sake everyone was suddenly as powerful as everyone else: power would become mediocre and ergo, normal. All diversity of forms within the matrix would fail and a utopia created which would also be mediocre. The Artificers money, assets, lifestyles that set them apart would become commonplace – and were this so, money would become obsolete because there would be no workers willing to work, thus no-one to generate wealth, thus no socioeconomic growth, no creativity, no slaves, no masters, and no Artifice. Hence: to be powerful means keeping power from others. The means to regain the power are within your reach, but you must first understand the scope of what it is you must overcome, how the system of control works, and how you can begin to set about facing yourself in order of break free of the cycles of lies.

Understanding the creation of the Matrix is the first step to regaining control of ones Being, hijacked by the ego. Through practical and thorough magical/alchemical practice or psychic exploration, the contents of the subconscious can be integrated with the Ego to form a Super Consciousness, or Self.

THE THEORY OF THE BEAST [2]: FURTHER IN

The tendency of some of THEM's mss to turn the Dark Gods into psychological allegories should not be mistaken for the total beliefs or approach to these entities as held by the members of THEM but instead as only one particular angle of a far greater geometry. The theory given in "Theory and the Beast" illustrates – by tracing observations presently available backward to their logical distant causation – a certain speculation encompassing only a certain stretch of time.

That is, while the Theory may claim humanity potentially invented what we have come to know as the Dark Ones as part of a reaction to the unfavourable (for some) usurpation of consciousness over the natural unconscious aspects of the Psyche;- these sets of mss represent only a small part of the beliefs of THEM as concerns the Dark Gods, and was shared to provide an optional and contemporary view that was less occult and more logical to this age-old modicum.

The Theory of the Beast assumes two important things as read: a) that, taking some accepted notions of world history at face value, human beings may have at some point in their evolution been ruled by instinct and savage primal urges until the emergence of the ego, and b) that the ego was a secondary stage and thus represented a new stage of consciousness for human beings.

Now – in light of how this mss challenges certain abstracts that are often used conveniently to phrase the Dark Ones in a duality; which duality then influences the approach and susceptibility to possible answers; and how this mss places the origin of the Dark Ones in a currently popular systemology (psychology) which opens up a new set of questions instead of the same occult cliches – the Theory is useful. But various considerations of the Theory need to be borne in mind to get an approximate understanding that THEM hold of the Dark Ones and their potential existence.
For one thing – theory of the beast does not cover the possibility that this process reflects what happened from the beginning of humanity to the present day. Whilst the process expounded in the theory may have more or less occurred at a certain point in the human past – there are many puzzling questions that remain. In relation to the dubious authenticity of World History – including Anthropology – it has been quite some time since anyone updated the work of Darwin whilst other fields of human interest seem to have made leaps and bounds, particularly those dealing with technology.

What the Theory does not make mention of – is that the Temple of THEM do not rule out, and keep an open mind on, the possibility that there were stages of human history that were more advanced than the present time, (2009). Our cynicism is veteran. (Qv. "Alpha-Male, Alpha-Cynic" OA #9 / Liber SSS). It is veteran as a reaction to the quality of the logic employed by a previous surge in consciousness titled the New-Age. While we refer to our nexion as Satanic – we are not so arrogant or ignorant to dismiss, nor to include things, out of hand that many assume would or should be spurned by us merely because of our self-imposed title. The world is a very ancient place, and there is room for many possibilities. But though we keep open minds, well aware of the many limitations imposed by the evidence and limits of evidence available to make an assessment for any possibility there is a reason we are here, we do not fly toward speculation on UFO's, Levitating Pyramids, Lizard Men, Aliens, Angels, the Devil, or a New World Order.

There is every reason to keep an open mind that the world may have been created by intelligent design – whether by good or evil being(s) depends on whether you believe in sides, and whether you've taken one. There is no reason to conclude that other civilisations prior to the one we call the Cradle of Civilisation, Sumer, did not flourish or exist – though nothing remains. We humans have and continue to make do with giving answers based on the evidence available speculating carefully (and sometimes wildly) in the case of missing information. But although there is a lack of evidence – this does not rule out the possibility of the existence of previous cultures, potentially far more advanced that we may ever become ourselves. What of the fact that the majority of the Earth is covered in deep and dangerous seas – seas we're told are billions of years old? It is accepted from the excavations made by archaeology that rock forms layers of sediment – which sediment is caused by the covering up of previous layers over millions of years. We accept that the seas have changed course, and re-shaped the landmass many times, that the continents as we see them today were very different and at times unrecognisable We accept that sea levels can steadily rise – and volcanic explosions have changed the course of the waters and the shape of the landmass, submerging some parts, raising others. There is no reason to believe, owing to the incomparable size of the oceans, that there does not lie under all that deep or forgotten sediment further clues to our Being. Further clues to our Past, and if so, maybe our Future. But we do not rush to validate the existence of Atlantis, Mu, or Lemuria.

There is every reason to believe – and as every occultist who has ever written of their Work can attest – that much is lost in translation. We know all too well of the difference between living an event and re-telling it. The vivifying life of the event becomes static when fixed in word for the written word is the tomb of interpretation. Words are not able to capture a moment as it Is, only as it Seems, or is wished to be Remembered. These written records strip the numinous totality of life and channel it into a perceptibly smaller and limited paradigm that often prevents any further angles of enquiry into the event being described (esp. where archaeology is concerned).

How much is lost in translation? If very little – there should not be so many occultists trying to complete the Great Work in all its forms. Some of us accept that "History" as Adolf Hitler so memorably commented on during 'Mein Kampf' is composed of a list of facts and figures memorised by rote. Moreover that "To the victor goes the spoils" and "History is written by the winners". History is a curious concept – with the power to raise great storms of emotion or quell them pending the latest 'discovery'. It is as many of us observe, subject to the whims and prejudices of politicians, religion and even science and can be changed, over night. For instance, The Vatican has an entire library devoted to imprisoning the confiscated, banned or otherwise 'heretical' literary treasures that opposed its own tenacious view. The Christians have been persecuting the masses via their cathedrals and churches for millennia with an enormous amount of time to erase, change, alter, the contents or destroy the owner and his writings forthwith by denouncing them as a witch, Satanist, devil worshipper, communist, terrorist, paedophile, sodomist (In the majority of cases unfairly, and with the Churches history, hypocritically). Who knows what that onslaught of destruction destroyed – or what that many forbidden books may say about the recorded History of the World? Each of those documents are the history of the world. And the Vatican is only one tiny contemporary example, for a more modern one, consider the Pentagon. Or for any time period we know of – consider that there was, always someone who did not agree with what was written, what was said, what was recorded. The Pharaohs erased the records of whole Dynasties in Egypt because of political dissent – hundreds of years, gone. And not just books, but statues, monuments, memorials, graves, holy places, stelae, tombs, sculptures, and all the others signs of a culture in passing. And what are these but the butterflies wing of examples?

It has been in the records of humanity a predisposition to conquer, to control, to own, to rule and to destroy or disband what came before. For this reason – the Christians built their Churches on ancient Pagan Sites. The Muslims built their Mosques over the top of other Sites. Emperors and Monarchs razed a dis-favoured city and its people to the ground and built over them so that no trace should remain of their enemies. Now what lies under those Churches may never be known such is the sensitivity shown to Religion. What of the tablets, cuneiform, treasures that didn't survive, were smashed, lost, burned, broken, changed without anyone the wiser… or the fallibility of interpretation given to those that did. This certainty people seem to have of the world and the events that behold it is a great puzzle and a great downfall.

Or the fact that in many cases, there is so much history to record, that even when proved wrong – mistakes remain indefinitely – or remain so because of someone's wishes. For instance, there are maps that clearly show the accurate coastal outline of countries such as Greenland several hundred years before such maps were believed to exist – and made in a time that modern history accepts as impossible without today's technology. Or another little known fact – the Britannica Encyclopedia recorded unfavourable epithets of the Papal clergy. To solve this uncomfortable problem – the Church (The Vatican I believe) bought the Encyclopedia Britannica, and changed the epithets to suit itself. Thus "history" was changed to reflect what the Church wanted others to remember – not, what actually transpired.

Now while it is essential to believe one has a good grasp of the facts of life – the occultist soon uncomfortably discovers that everyone has anything but… The point to keep in mind though – is that recorded History shows itself to be malleable pending the wishes of the powerful or influential and subject to the whims of change if the time in which it is broached pends favour or disfavour. It certainly is not, and perhaps never has been, a means by which to get a honest, fair and truthful approximation of the world we live in, the events it has spawned, or the course it has taken. Moreover, it is only right to remember that such records are and were limited to the few who could write or draw or carve or remember great oral tracts – but that if only a small percentage of the population could convey the insights and stories and so on – that the rest of the experiences of the humans who did not record or write or carve or speak – were forgotten. Lost. As I have said before "humans have a tendency to believe the time they are born into is the most complete, the most up-to-date or 'modern' time" – nothing could be further from the truth. Humans are malleable, quite easily persuaded creatures that like order, consistency, and control in and over the world and are happy enough to let the explanations given them – be their gospel, their guide to the authentic history of earth and their role in it.

Such willingness to believe in History is at best an optimism enjoyed by the human race and a fascination for the world around them that others have explored parts of they are only to keen to hear about – hearing such knowledge is the equivalent of a fireside tale. But at worst this attitude is reckless for a magician, dangerous for a Satanist who quest is to Know, and onerous according to THEM.

History is extremely fragile, flexible, and fallible. Once the Earth was believed flat – and look at what happened to those who dared object. History is full of people being proved wrong but Humanity is egocentric, fragile, doesn't take criticism well, and is very, very slow to learn. Technology, Religions, Ideas, Fashions, Words, Languages, Styles, even Names go in and out of popularity and usage. What dwindles in popularity in century finds an audience in another. Thus History should be digested with a grain of salt. Cynicism and Optimism make great partners.

So to summarise: There is no reason to believe that human beings have a complete story; a fair and balanced story; or will ever have the real story of the World and its thus far accumulated and accepted explanation for human evolution. This fact opens up the possibility that records of the Ancients were not allegorical or meant to be parables – as our finite and limited wisdom tied to our particular chronological prejudices would have us impose – and that there were real Dark Gods not confined to the metaphors of horrors and neuroses of the psyche – but living flesh and blood creatures/giants (Nefilim, for instance) and perhaps not originally from earth.

Of this possibility – many of the recorded texts or beliefs of the popular world religions unashamedly attest to the existence of various Gods as does almost every culture. I hardly need cite examples: but; The Vedic Bhagadvita, The Norse Sagas, the Christian Bible, The Hieroglyphs of the Egyptians, the Greek Illiad and Greek Pantheon, the Cuneiforms of the Aztec, Toltecs, Mayans, the Aboriginals of Australia, the Maoris of New Zealand, the Polynesians of the South Seas, the cultures of the Chinese and Japanese, and endless more – going right back – to Sumer.
They describe various Gods and Beings as capable of varying wondrous things; but from a time so long ago that it dwarfs the imagination. Generally – the imagination, like the ego, doesn't take too kindly to being dwarfed…

With the obvious limitation of being referred to (for convenience and to provide an opposing dialectic) as 'Dark Gods' – the nature of the Dark Ones is often assumed one way or the other to characterise a certain 'nature'. ONA was forced to go to considerable lengths to explain the context of and meaning for using such a title – moreover that this title was more complicated than many inferred.

There are instances even as early as Sumer relating the varying dispositions of the Gods and Beings made mention of. Some Gods were helpful, some were harmful, Some were ambivalent and others could be a tricky mixture of both. There were Gods of Agriculture, and Gods of War. Which – if any – were the Dark Gods? The ONA cites the names (vibrations) given in their Pantheon as Pre-Sumerian. From one point of view – it's a bold claim. There is, (to my albeit limited knowledge) no accepted evidence that any civilisation preceded Sumer. Zecharia Sitchin makes references to Archaeological digs at Sumer that revealed a number of cities had been built over the top of others, but eventually no further underlying foundations could be found – and thus it was presumed to be evident that the oldest and first city and civilisation in the world had been found by process of elimination.

But if the legends of the Sinister Tradition precede Sumer – you might think archaeologists the world over would be clambering to speak to the ONA and enquiring earnestly as to the origin of their information. On the other hand – given what has been said above – the clear and unforgivable short-comings of the human race as a collective and individually – there is still no reason to doubt that evidence of a Pre-Sumerian culture does not exist. Nor that the Dark Ones did not exist.
Personally, I've been alive 30 years. When I walk into my lounge and face my bookshelf – I am outnumbered by books 500-1. At a rough guess, it would take me another 4-5 years (or at least, a long time) to read through these books again. But – if I were somehow allowed to suspend the laws of life and try to read the, I don't know, 100,000? books or so housed at one of the local libraries – I should probably never complete the task. In fact I should probably die mid-sentence after around 50,000, aged 70-80 years old.

Who – if anyone – could have read the entire contents of the fabled Alexandria Library which library is said to have been the ancient world's largest and most extensive collection of ancient wisdom the world over? The fact is – humans, limited by their relatively short lifespan, can never hope to read all of the books ever written, let alone all of the books that still survive. And this earnest but modest process – is where most of our evidence where we draw our assumptions and guesses and opinions comes from – an at best, incomplete and rudimentary assessment of a few of the worlds manuscripts – sewn together mentally in the hopes that that small token effort can somehow blanket an understanding of the World. A sobering fact: the totality of books is in the hundreds of millions. That is probably why humans tend to specialise in a subject.

So in all optimism – you or I can only ever gather the smallest parcel of information available to us into our heads and hearts – on which to meditate. And of the books lost, locked away, forgotten, banned, destroyed, in the hands of private collectors, museums, archives, vaults? Herein restrictions exist to further deny the enthusiastic reader more opportunities to gather the totality of the records of the human being.

That task is a pipe dream – it cannot be done. Human biology is against us – Time is against us – Free Access is against us – Politics/Religions are against us – Technology is against us – Memory is against us – and the necessity for Sleep, Food, Water, Shelter, etc – these things are all against us too. Herewith – THEM conclude with finality – that no one can know with any certainty – the History of the World as it happened – only as it was interpreted, recorded, survived. Nor, can anyone know what is outside of being able to be known – but which is known to have been lost by the records within records. The Sinister Tradition, then, may very well be based on records from a Pre-Sumerian culture– it is not so hard to believe.

And because of our particular cynicism/optimism – THEM hold more than a dry psychological interest and involvement in the matter of the Dark Gods. This attitude is in line with the +Law of Remembrance+ and the Weltanschauung of a Life-Centred Geometry; wherein such an attitude engenders an end to the short-sighted arrogance that passes for so-called total understanding harboured by any person (especially authority) – and instead gives way to a more sagely tradition of the understanding of the nature of Knowledge, the limitations and fallibilities interpretation imposes on life and the immense difficulty of a study, and thus the fragility of drawing conclusions about it and ones own existence.

THE MAGI

Historically the Magian were the Persian priesthood. More correctly, they were the priest caste of the people of Medes whose domination on the Iranian plateau preceded that of the Persians in the first half of the 1st millennium BCE. The ancient Iranian peoples were Aryan peoples. After the powerful Aryan Hittite empire perished in 1180 BCE, the Ancient Orient was dominated by the fierce Semite empire of Assyria. It was a dark age for all non-Assyrian peoples including other Semites like Babylonians – Babylon (a megalopolis at the time – about 400 000 citizens) was two times ruined and its citizens massacred. The Assyrians had the most organised and disciplined military force at the time armed already with iron weapons (in fact the Iron Age started about the 1st millennium BCE). Assyria dominated over the Ancient Orient by the means of sheer terror: systematic genocides, mass impalement, flaying, disembowelling, beheading, mass deportations, slavery etc. In the end of the 7th century BCE there was something like a world war in the Orient – all the countries (except Egypt) were they Aryan, Semitic and other made a mighty coalition against Assyria and in 612 BCE the Assyrian capital Nineveh was evened to the earth, and Assyria deleted from the face of the earth.

The main blow against Assyria was given by the Aryan Medes and the Semitic Babylonians. After a temporary domination of the Neo-Babylonian empire in the Orient and after a war between the Medes and their kindred Persian people in 550 BCE, the latter had the upper hand. In fact, the Median priesthood – the Magi made a plot against the Median king and recognised the Persian king Cyrus II as a king of both Medes and Persians. Cyrus II called the Great deserved his epithet – he conquered Babylon and established one of the greatest empires known in the Orient.

The Persian empire's outer politics was very intelligent – everywhere the conquerors were met as liberators by the local peoples – they granted religious tolerance, human rights, good administration, trade, communications etc. It was then when the Jews were liberated from the Babylonian capture, so the Jews were very grateful to Cyrus II. Their Judaic priesthood – the Levites returned in Israel (already a Persian satrapy) and exercised their religious rights by suppressing any thought other than the cult of Yahweh. The Persian administration didn't interfere with the inner matters of any ethnic group provided they obey the empire administrative laws. Another distinctive feature of the Persian rule was that they used to corrupt economically the responsible persons of any hostile country prior to open any war against it – the rest was easy… Persia was a vast multi-ethnic empire with many religions presented therein. It's disputable if the official religion of the ruling Persian estate was the Zoroastrianism but it had a great influence amongst the Persian aristocracy and in the empire in general. In fact, the prophet Zoroaster derived from the Median Magi. His reform was to turn one of the main Iranian deities – Ahura Mazda into a monotheist "God" – the rest of the gods, the devi, were turned into devils.

Yet the Zoroastrianism was far from any fanaticism so characteristic for the Abrahamic religions. It was a dualistic religion but good = truth and evil = lie. The Zoroastrianists were against any form of asceticism and monasticism. Unlike the Abrahamic religions, they do not regard the flesh as evil and the spirit as good. They believed in the Last Judgement but again their dogma was far more intelligently stated than that of the Abrahamic religions. It's more than clear that the Abrahamic religions were the next Semitic corruption of an idea created by another race. The Magi were the elite estate of an Aryan people, the Medes. Seems that the negative connotations with the Magi appeared first in Greece when the Persian empire started its exhaustive wars against the Hellenes…

That's what the history says about the Magi but what is sure is that during that time all that ideology we now know as "Magian" started to take form. Later when Alexander the Great of Macedonia destroyed Persia, the Gnosticism joined the party, then when the Hellenic aeon entered its imperial phase with the late Roman Empire, then the Manicheanism, Christianity (with the 3 Magi bowing before Christ) and at last the Islam joined "Magianism".

I have also another simplistic explanation of how the spiritual corruption took place in the human race. It started when the first Semites adopted the Sumerian idea of personal deity – it was a Sumerian concept that each person has a personal guardian-deity called "lamma". Instead of feeling happy by adopting such a concept, the undeveloped Semite psyche started to feel uncomfortable by feeling a constant guilt towards his personal deity as if being all the time at odds therewith. Thus, with the ages the concept of the original sin took form in the Semite psyche. If we are to follow the Biblical story of the Jewish patriarch Abraham, he was a citizen of Ur – and Ur was a capital city of the late Sumerian empire (2100-2000 BCE) where both Sumerians and Semites lived together. As any citizen of Ur Abraham had a personal deity – in his particular case it was the desert goblin Yahweh, who tormented his psyche not to recognise any personal gods of any other people until he got mad and was banned for religious intolerance from Ur… The rest is well known by the same fucking Bible.

By the way, please, read this most ancient text which in fact is a part of an authentic "Necronomicon" – the basis of all "Necronomicons" It's maybe the first written myth about the creation of the human race. The translation could be trusted – it's done by the Oxford Sumerologists who are dry scholars but objective and precise as far as possible.

MAGIAN IGNORANCE AND modern society

I wrote modern society especially using small letters to show its meaningless to me and also that it's not worth calling valuable. And today I will also describe my experiences with stupidity, superstition, and mongoloid hypocrisy. It's mostly based on my own experiences with those kinds of attitudes and persons. I know that others of you also have the same experiences, and we must fight them, but we must do this in wise ways, not just act like a brainless sheepish flock of modern society that is equally Christian. And we know how to do this, we learn every time how to defend ourselves. No matter what age we are – 18, 30 or 50 we'll still experience their influence for the very simple reason – humanity is not mature enough to enter the new aeon and realise what they are and how they could fulfil their souls and will. Atheists and Christians are very stubborn and they will try to do everything to make us to resign from our path, but when they meet us, they don't know we are obstacles that they will not be able to overcome so they will attack more, stronger and more furiously our beliefs no matter how they look doing it.

They hate everything that is different from them, someone can say that it's not true, but the truth hurts, and we know how these things have been from the beginning. Everyone has different points of views on something else that concerns social matters or spiritual. It doesn't matter to them which principles we are carrying in ourselves – they will fight us, and we will attack them. We will defend our future and our beliefs. Whatever it takes.

We are responsible units not some mere criminals which hide behind every Christian. The Sinister path is deadly and dangerous in itself, the purest essence of everything and they will meet obstacles that make them more crazy and furiously angered with us and our close environment, where we are among those of our kind. We are too strong for them to make us fall. They will bounce from us like the walls of inhuman titanium. It's funny, even then they will not stop attacking us. Even then we will not stop defending us.

What right are they given to criticise us, and what right to restrict us from the criticising of their slave religion? There is no law that can prevent our defence.
We attack but also we defend those of our Sinister kind and our beliefs. Not because of our weakness, because they are overcome by our experiences and works, we defend ourselves from mockery of our path and the mongrels that try to twist it. They don't know that their "swords" are double-edged! In many ways they will know this without any results, they are not so smart to take lessons from this and we are smart enough to know how to defend our noble values. No matter who is the attacker. Other possibilities to defend are showing everyone even if we know that they will not learn what the truth looks like about us and about their hypocrisy. This will make them more aggressive and prove their incompetence and weaknesses of their own beliefs.

We know who we are and what we seek, we learn every day – they don't and it's obvious for every smart and thinking person. We work with something more and different from the ego. If we want to, we would not have done anything to prove anything to anyone. We're doing this because our nature is like this, exactly how it's met by the others. Everything on our path is more natural than anyone can imagine. It's your way to find out why and how you will do this depends only on you. If you are smart and brave enough, then go and take a look upon the sinister path it will give you real lessons or will make you end in mental hospital if you are weaker than you thought they were.

The truth will be always attacked by those who live in the great illusion. When that illusion is destroyed their existence will be forgotten and the truth will dethrone the lies of the old aeons. Somehow, they feel upcoming changes and they can't do anything with this. Someone said that the church is changing within the present days but it's not truth at all. If that be so, why they are attacking those who are different? They will never change and never will be opened minded, they will stay forever as narrow-minded mongrels and we will not do anything with that, we will allow them to drown in the mud as is their will to do that.

Everyone have their own free will to do what he thinks that will give him the way to find entity called god, but without looking into the acausal dimension they will never be able to do that, because everything has its origins in their subconsciousness. They are afraid of what it can hide. We are the ones of the Sinister kind that dared to take a journey without end, without the coming back and possibilities to withdraw anyhow which is obvious, since the Sinister path changes everyone who steps upon her.

Thoughts that are gathered here will be mocked by those who are without and are from the grey world. We were from the grey world too and we see the light which showed us that something beyond our limitations lies and is the weapon that is useful to make stable our way and to take lessons that anywhere can be taken. Lessons that really learns not how to strengthen the ego but how to overcome it, if you have not real inner strength in yourself, you will never be able to operate the hammer from the Sinister forge and use it on your soul. Possibilities are countless like countless are threats that lies within it. Let the sheep flock to be madden in their cages and try to attack us without any success. We know why we attack, they attack without intelligence like immature children fighting over tossed candy. We are mature, and maturity is sinister and dangerous. Watch the world and it's functioning, have your own conclusions from those observations.

A SINISTER HISTORY LESSON

These comments are addressed by THEM to the Global Sinisterion as a Reminder – but in the past have also been addressed to those with short or limited memories who have or continue to criticise/demonise numerous political regimes (including National Socialism) for their so-called evils but who fail to take the current tyrannical power and the history of America – to task. Since it is usually America accusing others of tyranny – herein we present a fairer history lesson.

It is vital to remember that it is America that has a long and detailed recorded history of brutality and arrogance world-wide, with some 80 incursions into other nations since World War II citing Vietnam, The Gulf War, Iraq, Afghanistan, North Korea, Cuba, Australia, New Zealand, and its most recent, Georgia, to name just a very few; always with the intent to control, intimidate or invert the invaded nation but citing its reasons for invasion as missions of peace. Whereas in reality, and as history soon shows, the invasions stem from a need and greed for precious resources such as Opium in the case of Vietnam, Oil in the case of Iraq, Afghanistan and/or as part of a geographical strategy to bring it closer to its enemies in order to govern them – America is, as the progeny of Puritans, Witch-hunters, and Inquisitors, a nation mad with paranoia.

What is not largely known is that there is an entire underground methodology employed by America to secretly undermine a country in order to set the stage to play the role as its saviour – characteristic of America's Judaeo-Christian Ethos. Such methodology usually means a trained individual is inserted into the country to cause a specific act – the act provokes outrage by the populace (fuelled by the media) – the actor is caught and a show trial begun – legislation is passed to prevent the act from reoccurring with special police powers distributed. The actor is released back into the secret service.

America's most insidious tactic lies in its power of propaganda; viz. of sending 'Peace Keepers' into countries on the pretence of humanitarianism. It is vital to remember that it is America that generates the most media and the most material concerning its righteous intentions as a God-Loving country – yet as an agent par excellence of the Magian, and as historical records show, has always been ready to throw its own to the wolves, treating its populace and other nations populace's with contempt and as expendable.

While the most vocal about the Human Rights abuses in other countries, the Superpower hypocritically engenders all of these abuses by selectively ignoring or threatening to 'help' countries with its military presence. In regard to Human Rights Abuses: most recently, David Hicks recently served six years in a detention centre in Guantanamo Bay (which then changed its name to the frightening name: Camp X-Ray) – and was only reluctantly released by the US after their illegal detainment of his person without charge. He was required as a condition of his release to sign an affidavit that he would never speak of his experiences during his illegal internment.

Of the recent conspiracy of paranoia created by the Magian, citing the attacks of 9/11 as a farce generated and inflicted on its own people via its own agency where evidence lies in mentioning that there was no wreckage found of the plane that supposedly smashed into the pentagon; that the plane that crashed into the twin towers was identified by military experts as not being a Boeing or passenger plane; that images of the plane show the plane was clearly carrying an incendiary device underneath its hull whereupon a brilliant flash issued just prior to the plane smashing into the building and detonating said device; that the manner in which the floors collapsed directly down flies in the face of all technical principles according to experts in construction; that Jewish workers were contacted and told not to attend work that day; that Bush knew of the fourth plane before it was publicised; that no trace of Osama Bin Laden has ever been found; and that America desired an intensified police-state grip over the world due to its failing propaganda of control via its “War on Drugs”, a switch to a “War on Terror” was instigated with the result that the global focus of Western humanity has become self-policing, paranoid and dangerously unstable in its rational, logical thinking, due to being paralysed and shocked with fear and terror of terror.

That faith and trust is given to America’s authority over the events of World War II, let alone the 80 other countries into which it has illegally interred itself and its military forces is an indictment of the stupidity and gullibility of the human race and a triumphant tribute to the power of media, propaganda and fear to control a populace and direct its thoughts and interpretations of events by a government. Thus one can understand that the importance given to the loss of emphasis on a rational analysis of observable facts to allow a non-political examination of any emotionally charged event, or more accurately, any event charged with emotion; and the corresponding dilution of Science that has become increasingly theoretical and driven by the directives of the current politic to dictate its findings; as argued by Myatt – impacts considerably when one allows common-sense and detached analysis of the facts to be over-ridden by emotional sensitivity engendered by careful manipulation and control of facts controlling how an event is perceived, not how it was. Or rather, that the detachment necessary to divine truth has become a morally twisted engagement where it is wrong to perceive one’s own opinion of the facts as they stand and contradict the authority of the Authority.

This is not to say that Hitler or Hussein were not hard men that caused atrocity – but that America is more guilty a party for its dishonesty and deception in its role in these wars and of the charges it has laid against others with its moral tribune of ‘War Crimes’ than any of the countries and regimes it has persecuted and bastardised with its Jewry. Moreover that America, despite its trickery to conceal its hideous appetites for death and destruction and be seen as exempt from committing such atrocities as its accuses other of, by its own populace and by the world – is irrevocably guilty of not just one holocaust, but of hundreds and has (and is) continually moving from one campaign of deception to another to hide its atrocities just as it is doing now and will always continue to do until it is destroyed, or destroys everyone and everything.

America is the national equivalent of the personified Psychopath – a psychopath that knows only one thing, its own one-eyed Weltanschauung. America is the spoilt child of the West whose vicious, relentless, remorseless behaviour is like that of the small boy caught with his hand in the jellybean jar who denies all the evidence of wrongdoing despite the truths evident. viz, an immature, dangerous, and Inquisitorial Empire. Anyone faced with this evidence unable to make a rational deduction without political pressure or sentimental moralism as to the involvement of America in 9/11 and its propagation of the Holocaust narrative to detract from its own global enduring atrocity, is Magian and Our Enemy.

ARE THE MAGI, SINISTER?

Perception is hampered by faulty assumptions. They carry one along so far before they begin to be damaging – i.e. claiming a division between Magi and Sinister forces serves as a political motivator to create fanatics – a power required in all wars. For the human brain is all too ready to find an enemy – it finds them everywhere – but to join with others in hating an enemy – it loves little more. Then the shadow can come out to play – and humans, are mostly shadow.

Let’s examine a common belief. For example, the concept of the Sinister vs the Magi. The Sinister, meaning those who ally themselves on the LHP with some duty, calling, force, intent or some such power, philosophy, world view, to fight against ‘Mundanes’ ‘Christians’ ‘Magian’ etc is what is known as Polemics; or setting one side against another in direct opposition. This is an ancient tactic which originated with Christians attacking other Christians. An Aeon ago they could not agree on how to read, interpret or understand the Scriptures, [An Open Canon] resulting in all manner of groups and sects promoting their own view. To seize a more unified Power as the Church it was necessary to narrow how exactly the Scriptures were to be understood and who by. Many Christian aggressors began to refer to the other Christian sects as Hairesis or Heretics; those who did not follow the TRUE FAITH. The True Faith of course, being the concept of a Closed Canon where Clergy would be the only ones allowed to interpret scripture for the masses and anyone who had an alternate view, was a devil worshipper or heretic. Amidst such propaganda there was mentioned the word Gnosis. Over time this suggestion of a way in fragmented, non-particular terms and in no way suggestive of anything more, was compounded into ‘Gnosticism’ over centuries of accumulated assumptions, claims and errors – resulting in a belief in it now, as a Category that existed with its own teachings, way of life, anti-cosmic notions of the demiurge and many other fantastic inventions which have absolutely no grounding in the literature from which they are taken, including the Nag Hammadi Scrolls.

Any division into us and them is therefore at its core a repetition of this practice, an ancient Christian device.

Let us consider the Empires stretching the globe – and, for those of us on Facebook and such the endless atrocities people try to call our attention to; mining the rain forest, blood diamonds, ecological disasters, Chernobyl, toxins in water supplies, paedophiles who are judges, lawyers; weapons of mass destruction, war crimes, injustices and the endless, endless, endless deluge of nasty, brutal, suffering inflicted upon human beings by other humans, by corporations, govts, militias. None of which ever take responsibility for their own role in the conflict – but blame it on the enemy.

Without question: there is No force on Earth MORE Sinister than the Magi. It is a mentality enshrined in the human skull to be a hypocrite. Everything they do with a smile they do with a knife behind their back. The sweetest, most altruistic appearances conceal rivers of blood, greed, agenda and violence. Trade-offs for lives, for profit, for gain, for fun. The pretence that they are not committing these acts and the puppet show that they carry on to convince us of their good intentions, of their clear conscience, of their ignorance of the destruction occurring and the shifting of blame to some lesser entity less wealthy and powerful to bear the brunt – is perhaps the most Sinister act a human can do – we know underneath they are guilty but nothing can touch them. For all appearances – they are clean, humanitarian or saints. Legally nothing can be done, spiritually nothing can be done.

The Sinister, is a much vaunted but highly unstable appellation to describe a division of world forces and human mentalities – for the Magi are quintessentially Sinister, whilst the Sinister are quintessentially Dexter. And yet, the fact many refuse to face is that we are equal parts one and the other. There is no division between Sinister and Magi. The Magi are more Sinister than the Sinister – they are more Left Hand Path than the Left Hand Path. They are on top – we are on the bottom. They have the power – we have the complaints...

IN ABSURDUM

Sanity is to a large degree measured by social productiveness. The intensity of a selfish separation from the consensus causes a corresponding ratio of difficulty in disguising it from others. As an individual tries to force reality to bend to match their own view [or to see it clearly without distortion], the values they uphold come into conflict with the values of various authorities. If the view held is extreme, it becomes recognised by the consensus collective that the individual is incapable of performing a productive role in maintaining the Artifice/Society – and that individual is then warned to fall in line, treated to restore `sanity', or deemed mad and incarcerated by physical and/or chemical imprisonment. Once the pursuit and living of an independent view by an individual reaches a point where it becomes disruptive to society, select boards of authority may remove the individuals (illusory) status of social equality and classify them as mentally fragile, sick or insane. A Medical Board for example, is seen as having tremendous power and once a member of its staff has pronounced a mentally disturbed edict, it is extremely difficult to escape the system set up to enmesh that individual in Hospitalisation, Pharmaceutical drugs, and the taking away of their right to protest as an 'equal' member of society by the persuasion of others to alter schemata (or idea of) the individual in question and agree with the official declaration of insanity.

It should be remembered that the world is a bloody and unfair place largely because it is so very big. When people spend their lives entrenched in a very small perspective that slice of perspective becomes all they know or want to know. It is easy to write someone off if you meet them once and know you don't have to deal with them again, if you don't have to experience the consequences of your diagnosis, if there is something in it for you such as a promotion, or if you are well-paid, apathetic and bored in a job with long hours and its "your job" to assess people in a medical or psycho-therapeutic way. However, for all the good intentions of the Medical Associations we must keep in mind that they are much like the Church: plagued with corrupt individuals. In the same way the Church set itself up to show who was right and who was wrong, who was Christian and who was Satanic; the Medical Board offers a similar illusion of authority; who is mad and who is not, who requires treatment and who is healthy. These types of institution are at the heart of madness; simply successful in bringing their will to power to power at the expense of other wills.

But responsibility begins at home. We go to them, handing our power to strangers and expecting them to play a role – in most cases they know as little as we do about our perceived illness. Why do we hand our power to these people? Reality seems simple because we are all equally mad. But mad or sane, no-one will care, as long as roughly, you fit in and agree to the values of the society you live in. Notorious serial killers are examples of human perfection of the mode of the Chameleon. In such a practice the social patterns for acting `good' are memorised and performed on the basis of prediction as though inserting expected numbers into known equations. This guise of being just like everyone [Qv. Shrencing] else helps deflect suspicion whilst the destructive capabilities of the beast are released in a separate and to the individual `valid/true' paradigm. And in this respect, serial killers reveal the Artifice for what it is. If sanity is measured by social productiveness, then the notorious serial killer is the pinnacle of sane. They are well-spoken and polite, often good-looking, often charismatic, hold down a job, are often married, sometimes have kids, and are considered to be friendly unassuming people (sometimes a little strange, but harmless) by most people who know them. When they kill, releasing the Beast in uncontrolled fashion, they are expressing a base element of natural desire – as persons with actions and behaviour definitive of sane this is telling of the sane thing to do, i.e. act naturally and express the unconscious urge.

Highly-intelligent and sane, notorious Serial Killers illustrate the shortcomings of the Artifice, by excelling at using it to fulfil raw instincts. And while the Serial Killer takes lives, other yet socially sanctioned and legalised Serial-Types such as Lawyers, News Presenters, Priests, and Bank Managers perform in a similar fashion as the Serial Killer. However unlike the serial killer, the actions of these four types are often unknown to them outside of their work and are usually performed in a banal manner with no intention of evil: seen as “just doing their job”.

All human beings use deceptive means to accomplish their goals. We disguise our motives under social cliches of selfless-ness, kindness, concern, etc and we generally believe that we are what we say we are. But when I say we, I mean the Ego. The Ego is the part of us that needs to believe that in order to live up to its standards of our “I” and our self-image. The other parts of us are usually silent in the face of the Ego- in most cases because they are unconscious, but in the cases where we are consciously aware of our deception because the Ego gets very upset when it is revealed that its beliefs are not genuine. The fact is that the Ego is one function of many that tends to be over-relied on and its perception (by virtue of being limited to one scope) is not truth.

If I asked who is more likely to be deemed crazy, a Bank Manager or a Tarot Reader; you are probably likely to say Bank Manager because the phrasing of the question seems like a trick and you are resisting the lure. However, “common-sense” will tell us that we are more likely to believe a Tarot Reader will be perceived as crazy over a Bank Manager. But why? If it is because Tarot Reading involves occult elements, is less than scientific and offers spurious satisfaction to the desperate or gullible: why does it seem less crazy for Bank managers to involve themselves with Usury (the magical creation of new paper or electronic money out of thin air by Banks that leads people into debt) Economics or working with numbers? The handling of money is quintessentially far more occult than Tarot. Bank Managers seem professional, normal, even essential members of our society but very few people actually know the true hideous power of economic theory, realise it is far more destructive than Christianity has ever been, or even remember how to question the status quo of what is crazy. And I say `remember’ tongue-in-cheek, because you cannot remember if you are not taught, and teaching the actual applications of the world is not what Schools or Educational Institutions do.

A Bank Manager really only differs from the Tarot Reader in their presentation of occult mystique, and because they tend to give us something more tangible – and with our loss of faith in the spiritual, the solid takes on a greater meaning in our lives. Consider the process of a Tarot Reading or Bank Appointment. You come in and are impressed by the setting; it seems professional and mysterious (or "professional and legitimate" in bank terms) and you sit down to discuss what you want. The Reader/Manager does a reading for you and tells you that you may encounter some hardships in the next few months but your future will be financially secure and you may even be rich. They then ask you for a fee for performing the reading and because you feel secure and happy being told ambiguities you pay them. With the Tarot Reading, the fee ends when you leave the room. But with the Bank Manager you take a small fee with you called `interest' and it grows and grows every day until you pay it back at huge extra expense, sometimes multiple times what you originally borrowed. Or you succumb to debt and lose everything: like magic.

Does putting people into debt for a job seem respectable or does it seem greedy, cold, and somewhat crazy? And what is crazy? Does buying endless possessions made at an ever cheaper and cheaper rate at someone else's misery and expense, i.e. Materialism, the highest current goal in life for millions of people, seem rational or crazy? Whatever your answer, we forget because we're only here for a short amount of time that life has gone on before us in many different ways with many different types of end goal. We also tend to assume or be led to believe that the time we are born into is the most enlightened and up-to-date, and that its rules and strange geometry are perfectly normal. Except for those persons who continually regress to re-enactment of a frozen phase of time such as the 70′s, adopting the values and icons of that age or some other favourable past-phantasm to escape from the forms of immediate madness. It's this 'chrono-centrism' or 'Being In Time' that thwarts most attempts by people to step out of the Matrix.

Tarot Reading is tolerated as semi-respectable in the day I live after thousands of years of persecution simply because of its value to the current goal of society, i.e. it is marketable. Almost everything that is, has been – especially the phantasms of the past with old icons re-hashed or re-presented. All this buying and selling leaves little time for asking some very dangerous and important questions. All societies move through time changing and being possessed by different goals for that society to live up to. In this year 2007, I believe that the Australian as well as American society are in the mid-stages of a destructive phase of the Virtue of Absurdity. It is now increasing at a phenomenal rate with a non-questioning compliance of the way things are leading people to lose the power of rationalisation, be trapped in the modes currently holding our society in thrall, and become completely mad in their aims and goals and values.

The escalation of madness can be seen leaving the quiet isolated solitude of private homes and minds and emerging as a strain of "anti-sub-culture". Wit, Sarcasm, and quintessential humour – the most powerful weapon in the existence of our race for remaining sane by being able to laugh at the absurdity of the world is being eroded as a by-product of Capitalism. Generally, because of the death of God, and because of the loss of direction and purpose in life as a psychological or spiritual quest for wholeness shouted down in previous decades and taken over by Marketing and Media powers, particularly in the 90′s and into the millennium, new generations are not forgetting the past, but are being herded forward so rapidly into the Machine, that there is no past for them. Children are born sociopaths – the subsequent moulding of them is important for authorities to maintain control but control means Order, Order means memory, and the Past is about to become forgotten; a victim of Ideacide.

The very structures of grammar and shared meaning are now being attacked as a form of entertainment. The sudden emergence of shows, comments, and actions that are given value because of their random departure from the normal procedure is indicative of a growing race of sociopaths; person's who can imitate emotional transactions and modes, but not actually feel or honour them; in other words, psychotic chameleons. This lack of emphasis on consistency in word and action [As per Corporate/Multi-National Business practices] in the phases of formative behaviour is leading society toward a competition of psychopaths and the gateway of the absurd.

As it becomes increasingly popular to be absurd, society is arming a time-bomb. The nature of absurdity is to out-do itself [drop out of its own geometry] and we will see a very bloody and bizarre expulsion of the repressed traumas, genetic and inherent by members of the human race in the near and distant future. It will differ markedly, in that it will be marketed, and made popular. While our generation may see it as escapism or something that is controlled – subsequent generations born into it will not possess this cynical detachment. They will know it as the most enlightened and up-to-date moment in time and be affected by its ethos, accordingly.

This can already be seen in the rabid cynicism of humour particularly in departing from old ingrained methods and principles of comedy, and the psychopathic way in which individuals talk to one another (the escalation of rudeness). The appearance of movies that break the rules of modern cinema; doing away with predictable endings, and showing new levels of gore and sadistic brutality will become the new norm of media for the coming generations of already child-like parents – and this generation will live entirely for the Future. The Past will be severed, and we can expect to see the new messages from the media coming through particularly in `Cartoons' that continually illustrate a new response to logical inferences and questions as a platform to launch an attack and ridicule a persons attempt to make a solid logical case from past inferences or previous experience.

What began with “that’s so 5 minutes ago” originates from a technologically based scorn for the Past, and much like the Governmental/Papal/State fixation with the erasure and re-writing of History – the Past is becoming an un-pleasantry to be avoided at all costs with people looking forward only to the next moment when they are immersed in a new wave of technology that supersedes the previous.

Unconsciously, our Western Ethos has entered a new temporary mode with many people unaware that the amount of access to Technology, has supplanted Racism as a form of discrimination. It is already apparent that a division of those that have the latest and greatest and those that have the last model being urged to keep up or lose favour among their peers is occurring. The type of pressure others are placing on their family and friends to stay “Technic” is not far away from the pressures of Religious factions on their members to conform – and is in fact more overt. And it is not out of concern for the latest gadgets that drives this pressure – it is the magic mirror of “Philosophedron” that has possessed people – with people unconsciously imitating and psychically rebounding (every action has an equal and opposite reaction) off the environment in which they live and becoming mouthpieces for the Corporations that sell the technology. This is a form of mind-control that is inherently psychopathic and revelatory of a sinister and sadistic brutality to self-market to ones peer group with the threat of sanctions of exclusion, ridicule, and even violence if said peers do not obtain said technology.

And this aggressive self-marketing serves one main purpose; identical to the fear of Christians and other religious sects to indoctrinate others so that their own uncertainty and will to power can be validated by creating supporters in the same uncertain psychological boat; the self-marketer needs reassurance that the new toys are worth the money they paid in terms of gaining or maintaining status. Hence the undercurrent of sadism that leads the self-marketer to force others to join them in buying the same goods, because then those around him will not have the chance to use their money to buy an even later model, and the self-marketers status remains static.

It should be noted that the psychopathic nature of Corporations, as faceless, ruthless packs of unaccountable persons is being copied in the streets. Where I live groups of up to five hundred youths are gathering together on a regular basis. The manner in which such large groups manage to cohere is a fascinating study of the characteristics of the Alpha-Male and revelatory insights into how such young Alpha-Males are forming these large chains of sycophancy. Such men are the rising Magian envoys of the future and for this reason study of their organic geometry is important for Black Magicians. Cowardice, Leadership, Mediocrity and Despair are some of the key characteristics of such large groups that will be touched on in a later work. But it is worth mentioning that I raise this point because the larger the group of people forming groups, the greater the pressure to conform technically.

On that note, the trend of the Alpha-Male as masculine, strong, tough, is being subsumed and undercut by the sadist that actively seeks ways to attack traditional grammar and the structure of forms in a bid to be the "Alpha-Cynic". The Alpha-Cynic will come to replace the Alpha-Male because former attributes of genetic endowment will lose their importance with both sexes able to compete to be cynical on an equal footing. Generic Masculinity of the pursuit of bodily perfection will be viewed like all other forms that require discipline, physical exertion, or seriousness: laughable.

It will become an end goal for people to be absurd; media will actively encourage it, peers will promote it, and authorities firmly entrenched in their positions will be forced to use ever more excessive measures to control mad, dangerous, and unpredictable populaces. In small doses this is already happening. People are being pushed faster and harder by Capitalism into trying to do the impossible merely to survive by means of making money; bombarded with conflict about being politically correct, being a good provider, doing what they want with life, living up to values of society, living up to the expectations of others and their own, all the while beaten into mental and physical submission by fear guilt and apathy until they eventually break. The Police, Science, and the Military are all institutions that require the predictable behaviour of human beings and events in order to function as a cohesive group. If no-one is doing what they "ought to be" procedures, laws, principals mean nothing and break down – and with that break down the reign of Capitalism will come to an end, replaced by its end product, Anti-ism.

The Abyss opens wider to engulf us all.

DIALOGUES, 1 of 10,000

+O+ From the Egyptian thread: Mvim. Black +O+

A magical current becomes dangerous when one is personally engaged therewith. It gives power to one but it demands one's energy in exchange, so when one decides to deviate from the current one is involved in, one may expect a certain resistance on the part of that current. I do agree with you, RA, as regards the 9 angles, but as regards the Illuminates of Thanateros neither you, nor Owy have sworn any personal word of loyalty to their pact – of course, their egregore guards their stuff but the magical harm it could render to you, couldn't be the same as that you could expect from the 9 angles therewith you have been personally involved or engaged.

+O+ Agreed – I only give an example of a magical attack I have experienced – yet the O9's current has been far more treacherous to my health and sanity given how attached I have been to it. My Work continues and my loyalty remains but to that which I originally swore fealty – to THEM – and not to human forces and cults who claim to own them. +O+

These matters are neither to be overestimated, nor underestimated. Moreover, the egregore of a group consisting of treacherous and untrustworthy individuals couldn't be of great power though it could harm.

+O+ The key tenets of this group are deviations from the O9's egregore especially re-designed in the face of bad experiences with the O9's current, present or expected over the course of decades of involvement. These include the elements of Sinister Solidarity, Empathy, Sympathy, Synchronicity and the Sinister – and herewith is meant the Sinister as it is in all its forms not merely the narrow bridges of Long extended from his Ivory Tower. Despite screaming it was not til it was blue in the face, the O9 became dogmatic; a mirror-image of the Church with a Maniac High Priest, slavish Acolytes bullied into submission with the promise of secrets dangled on a stick or a selection of reprobates seeking license for depravity with the promotion of predatory practices against everyone from children to the elderly… to its own kind. Yet it, my, our journey with O9 has highlighted a great many important factors that have shaped this Temple and its attitude and direction, toward each other, toward others, toward the Work. Of course – this is only my opinion based on how I see it. We do differ, from the forerunners of Satanism and from the contemporary styles, temples, groups and orders through hard work and diligence we have been able to cohere a space for our Selves that is conducive to free trade of ideas and conversation but without internecine struggles. I believe this, is possible, due to our group formation, and that by who makes up the Temple we have managed to avoid hubris this far by being there for each other to talk sense, discuss options, talk freely, remind, reflect or steer one another away from the rocks. Rocks such as power going to one's head, internal strife, schisms, personal tragedy, mistrust, making war, losing our way, forgetting where we came from, arrogance, anger, fear, betrayal amid a sea of others have been so far successfully navigated around to keep this Temple intact. It has attained and kept an integrity about itself for the way it conducts it affairs internally and externally and has garnered support across the globe from many corners and its written works have spread far and wide. This is not just from all our hard work on Ourselves and our desire to reach beyond the traditional way of being human and going about our business as Undividuals – but perhaps a reward for doing a will of the Cosmos. By listening to the Forces of THEM we have been riding a wave of synchronicity where our experiments and explorations are leading us further out into the deep black sea of the Unknown – where we can magically submerge our individual lives into the aether, into the abyss, and deep into the consciousness of a great number of people as we Change things. We began/begin with ourselves and for that THEY seem grateful – more willing to impart their secrets and the genius geometry of the world.

That we also have a limited charter of time to be the Temple of THEM is deliberate – 24 years from now we should bow out gracefully and let the Temple such as it was dissolve – for its form is temporary, whiles its voice endures forever, to be resurrected as others Remember in their lifetimes that connexion we have begun to rebuild a bridge too. 24 years from now we will look back on our achievements perhaps as the young Illuminati I have on occasion envisioned; I will be 58. There are things we simply cannot force; things beyond our control until we attain certain positions or powers; but we needn't exhaust ourselves and our lives trying to make some New World Order of Sorcery happen; we are voices of the a-causal – it speaks through us and to us; and if it is meant to be; synchronicity will show us the way. What really matters is that, plainly put, we are good to each other and rise together. The O9 drawls on about Sinister honour but has it practiced it? No. It has systematically driven away all of its friends and those who cared for it or contributed to it with its hostile arrogance and rudeness.

The Temple of THEM may have sprung from the O9 but it was more a reaction than a reflexion; twisting free since its inception, for while sometimes the bad example is a good example; there was and is more to all of us that binds us than our mere shared background in that cult. There is honour here – there is integrity – and there is a flowing with what is and a respectful presencing and intuition of what is supposed to be. Magically – We each have our own speciality – whether form, magic, sorcery; whatever it may be we are true to our Wyrds; we all have a rare integrity and loyalty that brought us together because there was no one else like us. And now we share a Home, and the Great Work. And while things do change, tragedies strike, entropy stalks, shit happens – no-one can take away what we've already done to halt the slide of thousands of people into Magian mediocrity with our works, our advice and our presence. Our group is small but we are enough. We are perhaps Enough precisely because our group is small. But we are THEM, and we are a force to be reckoned with. Let us proceed one day, one month, one year at a time, forward. +O+

On the other hand, order never has a total control over chaos – otherwise life could be impossible. The resistance of any magical current one has been involved with and decided to deviate from, is what tempers one's will on the Left Hand Path, since the LHP is the very individual path after all. Those who write rules thereon should know that they are just trying to impose their own will on the others. If they prove strong enough to succeed in this, that's okay, but they should never forget that sooner or later they may meet their match and get outplayed, and very often that will be some fool who cares little about their great power and wisdom. That's the meaning of the Fool in the Tarot.

+O+ Merely by understanding such occult lessons exist and prevail we may seek to avoid the embarrassment of repeating them – there appear to be very few people who actively consciously understand these laws unto themselves and the consequences of certain actions such as the destructive entrance of hubris. Most occult groups had a leader who separated themselves from the other, who ceased to listen to advice, and whose concerns were not a bridge to the conscious and unconscious to make sense thereof of the secret archetypal journey and the inner workings of the psychology, shadow, animus and forms of the world – but to sit on a throne of gold ruling within a demented psychosis, silencing advisers, opposition and themselves and leading to a less than dignified collapse. We can only devise so many safeguards, and intuit so many possibly bad or tragic moves to make in our chess game; but I think we are doing very well six years in, with a solid foundation built and a reputation achieved. These are both hard things to create from nothing – Oto Anorha #28 was full of wishes and stressed the difficulty of making something new – but I believe such wishful even grandiose statements have been vindicated. +O+

As for the magical defence of this present issue of the Temple of Them, it's a matter worthy to be discussed by all. I could say certain things which concern my own interests in this present issue of THEM , and if it happens that they coincide with those of other members, that would be the best. I'm aware of the fact that everybody is different and unique, as it should be, but on the other hand, I'm interested in the resemblances and similarities rather than in the differences which, as I said, are a fact, and should be a fact.

+O+ I should like to continue pushing the formation of the Black Glyph Society and achieve an independent wealth or at least a stable income resource for each member of THEM. I think finance is not to be underestimated in our aims. +O+

Do you know the story about the eagle, the crab, and the pike who tried to draw a cart – each one in its own unique way? Of course, magic is expected to do the impossible. I'm just sharing certain thoughts and ideas. The last one of my current thoughts I would like to share without intending to be offensive to anybody here, is that I tend to be sceptical concerning the real magical efficiency of any group whose members are under their 30-ties, however intelligent they might be. There is a biological matrix which is extremely difficult to be overcome by ambitions to prove oneself only. And this concerns more the males rather than the females.

+O+ You possess that view because you have the privilege of so much hindsight, a panorama of time and experience some of us, myself included have only achieved smaller windows into; it is singularly amazing to me to look back on my writing when I was 12, 21, 28 and today and see the vast differences in style, verbosity, grammar, ideology, conception, content, topic, passion, intensity, colour, emotion – with writings in the style of Shakespeare, serial killer, playwright, poet, sceptic, believer, author, and god knows how many thousands of pages and hundreds of drawings – and yet in all of it I still spy a kernel of my Self – sometimes hidden, but enduring all, beneath the surface;- some wise old man mentality or old spirit peeking through the stupid, the naive, the child, the convictions with a knowing smile – waiting to be Me, today. And no doubt waiting to be Me, tomorrow. 10, 20, 30 years from now I suspect he will still be there and waiting for me to catch up. Yet what is magic? If it is the ability to change events – the Temple of THEM was nothing a few years ago – not by name or nature – and now its works and words, ideas and advice are scattered across the globe in 50+ publications, and hundreds of manuscripts, posts and people. We are known and respected and our current, so different from others, has delighted and entranced many people – taught them a thing or two also – and all this, with mere forms, names, titles, pictures, words from a computer or two, carefully managed and nurtured into the Temple of THEM today – for not a few, a real place of real power. This took time, lots of it, and the assistance of many people under 30, including myself – and, yet, Ush, now 33, only now do I feel I have the experience to really write from an advantageous or experienced position. I never meant to write so many books – and I wrote them pretty young – there are things I see in those books and texts now I would dearly love to change or update – that I didn't see before. But they have to stay the way they are – they're snapshots of the way it was or seemed to be. So – I both agree with you, and somewhat disagree with you on the under 30's thing. I'm not offended by what you said – I merely think we all fought to be here, and a lot of people over 30 are as useless as any under 30. It's our individual characters that have brought us here and shaped this Temple – whether we be young or old – age shall not weary us. +O+

Now about the ideas I would like to share: About the linear historical time – the further from the so called zero year wherein the birth of the Nazarene is supposed to have taken place, the better. That's why my research is back to the historic Bronze Age when humanity was still free from the Magian plague. However, the premises for this fall of humanity into the Magian Aeon were present still in the end of the Bronze Age and the beginning of the Iron Age around the 1000 BCE. To say it with the terms of the Sorcery of Them, this historic passage marked the collective shift of the focus of awareness from the heart to the head. Of course, I don't view this shift as some fall from the ideal but it was a risky shift which caused a certain dis-balance when the connexion with THEM was lost, and this loss of balance was what gave rise to the subhuman Magian Aeon. I said the further from the conventional zero historic year (when the CE – the common era, or the vulgar era, or the Christian era began), the better, but it means as further in the past as in the future. We look for THEM from the future as well. Now it's 2012 CE when the Magianism isn't the same as it was in 1012 CE when the Dark Age in Europe was in full progress, but now it tends to unify all its forms into a global system. We are looking for some alternative by thinking about new archetypes.

+O+ The Alpha-Cynic has well and truly emerged into the world as predicted – but it's in its nice infancy, prior to the next stages which are more dangerous and where people try to outdo each other in the level of absurdity… that won't be a fun time at all… +O+

That's nice but we are also to try simultaneously connecting the non-Magian past with the non-Magian future.

+O+ I think this could be done with our Tarot – revive Sumerian images and such, use Non-semitic imagery and ideology, winding it into a contemporary restoration of certain ideas and heresies long forgotten or destroyed – second coming of Osiris for instance… the Great Flood of Sumer that the Ark stole… cards that help people Remember and tie ancient archetypes to new ones, skipping out the period of Magian Empire and Aeon concepts altogether… +O+

What happened 2012 BCE before that zero historic point of human fall? It was the time of the Sumerian Empire of Ur III dynasty – the first and the last time when that civilisation was unified, as well as the time of the Egyptian XI dynasty which unified Egypt into the Middle Kingdom. A lunar and a solar dynasty ruled the most developed civilisations of the world of that time. It was the time of deified rulers while still alive. But were these rulers really of THEM, or just willing to be of THEM to the extent of forgetting their biologic mortality? Who knew anything about biology then? Hadn't they another knowledge of the things of life, which was still the knowledge of the heart, something the today's scholars cannot perceive? When we see that distant epoch some 4024 years back from now through the eyes of scholars, we see nothing else than greedy for power megalomaniac rulers as materialistic as the present ones but with divine pretences in addition. That's not the correct approach for sorcerers, that's a magically incorrect approach.

If we are to understand were these rulers really of THEM, we are to identify with them personally, not with their subordinate people as the scholars unconsciously do. For example, the materialist Marxist scholars have always been interested in how the people's stomachs felt then, rather than in what the rulers' hearts felt then. They search for social iniquity only in order to prove the necessity of the social entropy called communism. The bourgeois scholars don't go much further except to count for the individual factor – again from the present rational and consumerist point of view projected onto the past with some count for "belief systems" as well. Even the mere historic factology arranged by such people is to be questioned and rethought since they offer the facts in the way their conditioned rationality demands. The atheist science needs to promulgate the idea that the monotheism was a higher concept than the polytheism in order to justify its own existence. And its existence is necessary not to serve any human progress except to better the systems of control and the weapons for mass killing – a tendency that started in the Iron Age yet. We are searching for traces of THEM in the past as we are searching for signals of THEM from the future. We are interested in knowing and manipulating the archetypes of the collective unconscious to say it psychologically. We have seen that from Crowley till nowadays the contemporary Western approach to magic changes its forms only. The concepts even vary for better as far as the LHP is concerned but the world stays generally unchanged. Everything could be reduced to psychology only and the rest is a question of visualisation mainly. In fact, there is no safe organic methodology in magic except the individual luck when applying it practically. Despite of all the smart theories the keys to emotionality which does all magic remain inaccessible. However, Constantin Stanislavski who made of acting a living science has given a method which may prove more adequate for the sorcerers than the occult approach. This method is “me in the given conditions”. If one pretends to be a magician, one shouldn’t lack the imagination to put oneself in any given conditions, i.e., to give oneself certain conditions wherein to react by one’s own emotionality. One’s own emotionality in the given condition of the role is the key to acting, not by pretending to be someone else. The given conditions of a role, however, are not to be visualised, they are to be lived, so imagination doesn’t equal visualisation.

+O+ That is how I create the images in Archetypia… it is very difficult, which is why there are only a few…. and how I mimic things. I’d like to know more about Stanislavksis method but I already have a mountain of texts I’m still reading through… so more is probably not a good idea. Anyway, I leave the floor to others to relate how they see THEM taking shape, their vision or hopes and dreams for this group, or predicting obstacles it might face. +O+

There is many a magician who pretend to be someone else during their rituals. Their all energy is wasted while pretending, with a poor effect in the end despite of their precise performance. In fact, there is no response from their emotionality. Either they haven’t been themselves in their given conditions by pretending to be someone else during their ritual, or their very ritual hasn’t provided “the given conditions” of the role they wanted to play. (When I’m saying “ritual” it doesn’t necessarily means “ceremony”. A ritual could be each non-mundane act – in fact, each act dedicated to magic is non-mundane, and thus a ritual.) Since this thread is dedicated to the Egyptian studies I will continue with Stanislavski’s method of “me in the given conditions” but in the context of the Heliopolis cosmogony.

LOVECRAFT: FATHER OF THE TEMPLE OF THEM

Howard Phillips “H. P.” Lovecraft (August 20, 1890 – March 15, 1937) was an American author who achieved posthumous fame through his influential works of horror fiction. Virtually unknown and only published in pulp magazines before he died in poverty, he is now regarded as one of the most significant 20th-century authors in his genre.

From the upcoming Sinister Dialogues: “Any power reputation or wizardry that the Temple of THEM induce stems from the expressions that Lovecraft gave to the world and set in motion. Our very name, our descriptions of Tendrils, Tentacles, Forces from Outer Space and Inner Space, Dark Entities Sovereign Above Us, The Themonomicon, Angles, Weird Geometry, Strange Dimensions, Starry Rents, Ancient Gods; it's all there. You get a sense of it through Ryan's drawings and through the Thrasz, through the love of Black Magic and Illuminatism, through the types of rites to ancient forces employed and the lexicon of unique terms used to describe the world in a very different fashion. We are a living continuation of things that Lovecraft set in motion, we are his Shoggoths, his Yog-Sotthoth and Azagthoth. If Carl Jung is the mother of our current, then Lovecraft is the father of THEM. As to whether we are 'just' original storytellers to provide a gateway to mysteries uncharted will also have to be evaluated by our visitors and no doubt each will differ in opinion. I think THEM have always been quintessentially Lovecraftian and acknowledging this after wandering the wasteland searching for our roots in awkward places can only solidify its edifice as a true work of art. Everything about Ryan's illustrations and bearing screams Lovecraft. His literary/esoteric cultus the Temple of THEM is a direct descendant of the bloodline of thought and feeling that Lovecraft etched into being. Lovingly and loyally continued. Albeit in some fucking weird ways."

JOINING THE TEMPLE OF THEM

"There are some matters that should be cleared up regarding your enquiry into the temple of THEM. The reading of Mvimaedivm is intended as a clue into the operation of THEM by myself and a limited number of others, who have experience in ONA magickal ritual and theory and practice, but do not seek the assistance or company of other individuals in that practice. Mvimaedivm, is essentially meant to show the reader that they do not need anyone to be powerful – that power does not come from ritual – and that there are many misconceptions held by people about the role and operation of Satanic groups.

Firstly – the readiness with which you approach weirdos such as ourselves, *s knowing our link with ONA doctrine and the ready acceptance of human sacrifice, is commendable in my eyes – you're either fearless, or a little naive. The internet, while useful for communicating ideas and trading opinions, building and helping people with their questions and providing guidance of a sort from a distance – is not conducive to finding people with which to perform intimate and dangerous black magick with, and as such, we do not actively seek members for THEM in the traditional way, but via a mode that has become apparent to us of the magnetic powers of the Self. A person who has or actively seeks to abandon all distractions and can apprehend the world for what it is, by undertaking all necessary means to understand oneself and to become aware of the ego, the self, and the reunion of these two facets into a super-consciousness that bridges the total psyche and can access to greater levels of otherwise subliminal information fed from the psyche to the self via dreams, ones unconscious activities made conscious, art and other subtle signs etc – and can use that information to update, check, reprogram, and reshape oneself, propelling oneself toward the experiences that one's psyche cries out for – to strengthen, weaken, and otherwise meld together an inhuman, or first human, being capable of feats of thought that dwarf and surpass the modes used by the times we live in that restrict, and impose morality, unnatural pressures, and blind obedience.

A person that has reached or seeks to reach such a mode, is in virtue of seeking after that mode, possessed of a natural dynamic that guides as though an invisible hand that person into the situations required for growth, or destruction – pending on the geometry that comprises that person's psyche. Some persons are unable to delve into their psyche deeply enough to affect it, without suffering severe trauma, discomfort and psychological damage. But then there are those that overcome these restrictions of the bio-machinery set up by our ego, to discover, and then learn each facet deeply, until such time the ego and self work together, can be made congruent and actively useful in a conscious and directed way that allows the genius of dreams, of inspiration, of originality to surface as a greater manifestation of our acausal nature. Accordingly, such a person, needs no temple and has no need of ritual. Such a person could understand that all is illusion, but that at some point in time that person must become dark and self-possessed, choosing those holograms that Wyrd has shown to them to be the collection point where energies must be collected to give birth to creations that will propel their way onward even more…

Those persons who are self-possessed are of a very limited few – some, on the other side of the veil, the human veil, call them Satanists. THEM, comprised of a number of persons who are sinister and self-possessed, believe the empathy given to us as a group is of an extremely rare nature – it is an organic that has developed over an intense number of years, and is shared only by us. Each of us have had our brush with the ONA, some more deeply than others, but each walked away with an understanding that is not human. A part of that understanding is that others, who come to know the Self, will be part of a growing force that is the presence of the emerging tip of the Aeon of Fire. If these numbers grow; and because there is a half dozen of us with this empathy; we believe this is such a rarity that some kind of wyrdic propulsion is at hand for this to have happened in the first place, that this is the beginning of something hideous and membranous yet to reveal itself. One person, freed or attempting to free oneself from the chains of the current ethos, the tree of Wyrd, is a force within the human matrix, to be reckoned with, while six is a cohesion rarely seen, except perhaps realised by members of our peers, the ONA. The forces and circumstances that allow persons to cohere so strongly are rare to say the least and are often brought about by regular and intimate contact of a frequent basis – but that alone is not enough to give a group genuine solidarity.

Solidarity cannot be emphasised enough as a key factor in the creation of environments and persons that enable change – and is unfortunately one of the greatest energies missing from those that practice Satanism and other types of activity in modern times intended to alter what Is, to what could be. THEM believe, that true solidarity, void of petty interruptions and power-play that lead to entropy and destruction of a group – can only be achieved when each member is free from the possession of their ego, and has developed synchronous empathy with first, oneself, secondly, the acausal, and thirdly, the paradoxical significance and insignificance of the human being.

But there are considerations that perhaps you have not thought about closely. It is a wild, treacherous, and chaotic world – made even more so by the capriciousness of the human nature to be an ally, then an enemy. That THEM has managed to form a number of persons together that can be trusted implicitly by one another is a rare portent; indeed, not one of its members are in the throes of the ego that embodies power struggle, greed, dominance, fear, guilt, etc that is the destruction of many other groups that forge a bond. This is not a circle that can be entered by will or good intentions to assist in the Sinister War alone – it must be proven to US that you are united in yourself and your ego, with access to your subconscious genius, and this is something that cannot be faked. It is a current that is at the very darkest heart of the human condition that each of THEM have experienced. It requires the psyche to be totalized, something very few persons achieve in seventy years, let alone twenty, or for a person to desire above all other things, to realise that totalization.

Further, entry to our circle does not mean you get to rock up on a doorstep somewhere in Sydney to meet us and make our acquaintance. THEM operates like ONA, in cells. We do not know what many of our other members look like, where they are, or anything else about them – only their magickal experiences, prowess, and that they are devoid of ego – knowledge ascertained by speaking for a number of years very closely with these persons, and wisdom felt that there is no preteens, nothing to prove, no hidden agendas, no motivations that enter the script of these persons – a natural aura that would prove impossible to fake.

THEM can offer you guidance from our perspective regarding what you might need to experience or undertake, in order to grow and outgrow your current chains, again and again – but we cannot make your ego and your Self unite. Only you can do that – and that is why access to THEM is difficult. In fifteen years, only three persons have I ever met capable of working genuine heartfelt free black magick with, none of which I met on the internet. It is expected, that to keep our secrecy from being betrayed, that those of self will understand that they must achieve things by their own agency. I.e. They must form their own group with their own contacts to prevent a future spotlight falling on any other members of THEM. Also, performing highly personal rituals such as ONA, or even other magickal systems, for me and for my partner requires a level of empathy with each other very rarely seen in our lifetime, a powerful bond of trust and love that has taken many years and endured countless hardships successfully to achieve. We cannot imagine doing this with persons we do not know, or persons we come to know from the internet that, owing to the capriciousness of human nature, can be vindictive when things don't go their way, would potentially expose us and what we do, which is not limited to writing on internet forums and we are not willing to let that occur.

THEM could be said to work in twos, each of its members couples working together in absolute secret from the world, and in tandem with each other to help each other grow, expand consciousness, and develop understanding and precedent for those things we are experiencing in terms of messages from the body, the psyche, the interactions with the fixed world, that are new, and removed from those things experienced by the ego alone.

As more and more persons become self-possessed, it is expected, owing to what has been understood by the works of Jung, Nietzsche and others that have presenced a similar meme, that these persons will, if sustained by other persons possessed of self, and not drowned out and extinguished by ego – solidify as a movement of persons whose thought processes, as per the star game aims, will be symbolic, that will strip the importance of the matrix, of employment, of commerce, of finance, of economics, of petty ego concerns and illusions that this is the only world, etc and seek to become first human, above and beyond all other concerns. When we say to become first human, we mean to unite the animal mind and the ego consciousness as one, dealing with the shadow, the anima, the animus and many other tangled knots that thwart growth into the full capacity of the human being – into a formidable shape shifter freed of the current of the aeon, and truly defy the matrix of form.
THEM has many meanings, it is not just indicative of a group of people, it also means Them, the Dark Gods, and their voice that issues through when the vein of the subconscious is tapped and directs the psyche beyond ego impulses and contrivances. It is also the state that is experienced when Self and Ego become active as two powers that can direct one, and embodies the loss of identity that allows one to become a shape shifter – this separates US, from them…

It is also a term to denote someone who has truly built their own self-image devoid of others' expectations, that shrugs off the worlds and societies roles from friends, family etc as projections that aim determination of the will that others stand in awe and fear of. Furthermore, the word THEM is an appropriation of a Magian fear meme. For when people quote an unknowable source in relating a scientific or religious fact, they generalise and thus create an illusory authoritarian figure, "they" i.e. "they say that…" or "that's what they say" that builds on the fear felt by all in thrall to the matrix, that gives psychological and magickal credence to one's claim. We have stolen that "They…" and it has become "THEM".

THE SORCERER'S APPRENTICE

In Alchemical Formula - we play a part, nature plays a part. Always in our pupae state until the right chemical combine and We Are Born. Until such stage, until such alchemical chemicals are added to us by life through certain events or experiences, we remain dormant, unsure of our mission, who we are, what we are, our role in this whirlwind that lasts moments before we return to the stars.

The Temple understood the dangers of a new force like National Socialist Germany arising, and warned consistently of forms and forces colluding to revive this mass hypnosis of an ancient form of death that humans collectively created through hope, trust, ignorance, fear, - and driven by two goals: protect or terminate. We called these spells, in reference to occult nomenclature of the concept of enchantment, that is, of being under a spell, and the timeless warnings conveyed by the analogy of the Sorcerer's Apprentice.

The story of the Sorcerer's Apprentice is artfully described within Disney's animated production Fantasia. Emphasis usually focuses on Mickey, who borrows the Master's grimoire and uses it to animate brooms to do his work for him of ferrying water to a well. After congratulating himself on his cleverness of enchanting the brooms to perform his chores, Mickey quickly loses control. The brooms first threaten to wake his Master with their doings and expose his forbidden use of the grimoire. However, the well soon fills but the brooms do not stop and their automation begins to cause the well to overflow. Mickey desperately continues his hand at using magic to stop the broom. But unable to do so, Mickey seizes an axe and proceeds to hack the broom into pieces. His relief turns to terror as each splinter of the broom morphs into a new broom, creating an army. They continue to ferry water in unison and the subsequent deluge threatens Mickey's very demise by causing a rising flood. Luckily for Mickey, he is saved by the Master at the last moment and we learn a valuable lesson about Power. The difference between power (analogous to magic) wielded by a Master and the disastrous application by an Apprentice. Essentially, a tale of hubris. However, the fable never addresses the real danger of the compelled complicity of the brooms with the subtext that the water poured, is blood. Human lives piled high to the sun to fulfil fantasies held by those in power of more power. The underlings, viz. The brooms, of these regimes are the real horror – where unrestrained shadows commit 'speakable' evils on the vulnerable.

The parable of Plato's Cave is apt here, wherein in my time, people lament and curse those who did not prevent or stop the NS from their destruction, blaming them for doing nothing in the face of great evil. But it is now apparent that it is the ordinary role of human beings to assist in the construction of such Frankenstein's by being soothed, threatened, cajoled, paid, and otherwise taken care of by the State - which is the formal face of the mad god of religion.

It is war and blood that allows the peace to build shuttles or theme parks, death and destruction of others, that gives some time to launch the shuttles or enjoy the rides - while some distance from them, in shadows, the speakable occurs every moment somewhere on earth. People fooled over and over by Nationalism, Patriotism, National Security, Classified, believing that Government is there to help them, protect them, - ignorant that the whole charade occurs over and over endlessly in the cycle of human drama, where one man reshapes the world in his image - either starting mad, or going mad with power until the world is on fire. The cost of power is blood. The cost of peace is blood. The cost of blood is free obedience to one man's madness. History tells us this, but why, how, do we collectively forget and re-raise Frankenstein even though we know it will kill us eventually... This was the research conducted by the Temple of THEM.

In mythology, Cassandra is cursed to know the future but fated that no one should ever believe her. In Soylent Green the warning is raised that the superfood everyone is eating is made of people. In Terminator, Sarah knows of Judgement Day that threatens a planetary nuclear holocaust by sentient AI and its means of delivery via Skynet but is locked away in an asylum.

Who or what is this tragicomic seer archetype that foresees the danger coming but whose screams and warnings fall on deaf ears? Why can no one listen - what stops their ears, deadens their senses, but the panacea provided by the State, the limit of their Knowledge, and the robotic willingness to condemn others to death because of good stories that won their heart and their mind.

Until they become part of such stories, only then realising, when they are threatened and their paradise in danger, that they have been complicit in letting happen what has happened. But of course, by then it is too late to save themselves or others, and the Machine puts them to use as best suits its purpose - whether that be slavery, destruction, compromise.

Who, are those who take turns, calling for the blood of the ones who try to wake them, save them, transfer into their heads Knowledge to see what is being concealed, occult and hidden – condemning the one the only, the heretic, the criminal, the traitor, the terrorist. And having crucified them sufficiently to appease their sins and reassure their sense of safety from the devil, go back to pining over the symbol of a dead man nailed to a cross they believe was sent to save them, strengthening monsters with their piety, silence and donations of blood, electricity and paper - never dreaming they are the source of their own destruction.

CHAPTER 2: MAGICO-POLITICS

AN INTRODUCTION TO MAGICO-POLITICS

(from Astrum Allorum, a former Wordpress of THEM)

It is critical to understand politics if you want to understand magic - and vice versa. By building upon the teachings of the Temple of THEM which encouraged apolitical understanding to prevent people being dominated by forms and forces, to see the warning signs of certain dangerous forces coming into being, and to explain how society is structured to trick humans into abandoning their potential in pursuit of abstracts offered by others - this forum will aim to advance magico-political understanding so people may better predict, prevent or prepare for these currents that have real power to affect their lives (and deaths).

What follows are a series of articles offering an introduction to magico-politics and magical socialism. The topic is complex with its own terminology and equally occult areas - and much must be left out to avoid overwhelming the reader in an initial overview. However, over time AA will address these additional aspects in future posts.

The term "magico-politics" originates from the intersection of anthropology, sociology, and political science, and it is used to describe a mode of politics where belief systems, rituals, and symbolic actions are central to the exercise of power and authority. This concept often reflects how political leaders or movements use symbolic, mythical, or quasi-religious elements to legitimise their authority, influence followers, and maintain control.

Key Points in the Origin of "Magico-Politics":

1. Anthropological Roots:
    - o The concept is influenced by early anthropological studies of "magical thinking," where societies would attribute supernatural powers to certain objects, individuals, or rituals. These practices were seen as a way to control or influence events and were deeply embedded in the social and political fabric of many societies.
    - o Scholars like Bronisław Malinowski and James Frazer explored how magic and religion intersect with the social structures of primitive societies, laying the groundwork for understanding the role of symbolic and ritualistic elements in politics.
2. Sociological and Political Theory:
    - o Max Weber's analysis of "charismatic authority" is central to the understanding of magico-politics. Weber highlighted how leaders could gain authority through the perceived possession of extraordinary qualities, often linked to supernatural or mystical abilities.

- The term "magico-politics" itself may have been popularized by later scholars and commentators examining how modern political movements or regimes use symbolic power, rituals, and myths to create a sense of legitimacy or to manipulate public perception.

3. Usage in Modern Contexts:
   - In contemporary discussions, "magico-politics" often describes political environments where leaders use populist rhetoric, myths, and symbols to galvanise support, often bypassing rational or evidence-based approaches to governance.
   - The term is sometimes applied in critical analyses of authoritarian regimes, populist movements, or even in the context of media and propaganda, where political narratives are crafted with an almost magical appeal to emotions and beliefs rather than rational discourse.

Scholarly Contributions:

While there is no single "inventor" of the term, its conceptual foundation can be traced through the works of anthropologists, sociologists, and political theorists who studied the symbolic and ritualistic aspects of power and politics. The term itself crystallizes these ideas into a more specific critique or analysis of certain political practices.

Overall, "magico-politics" reflects the idea that in some political systems or movements, the power of myth, ritual, and symbolic action can be as potent as more traditional forms of political authority.

Astrum Allorum

So much for classical understanding. In a non-traditional sense, Magico-Politics is not politics using magic – it Is magic. Such a construction requires Will to Power, Sympathy, Narrative, Propaganda, Transformation, Illusion, Mind Control, Hypnosis, Glamour, Deception, Acting and many other methods besides. We will begin to illustrate this with a follow-up article titled ‘Magic and the Creation of the State’. Magical Socialism will be discussed after this.

MAGICO-POLITICS AND THE CREATION OF THE STATE

This article will define and discuss how a State is created and maintained in relation to the division of space that is a fundamental principle of ancient geometry and esoteric practices from mathematics to philosophy. It will discuss the ‘Will to Power’ or willpower of individuals and groups to force change from the personal level to the governmental/state level. Finally, it will address the four characteristics that define a State: (1) territory (2) populace (3) government and (4) sovereignty and a fifth element that pins them all together: (5) violence. However, it will differ from traditional discussions of politics which are known as International Relations or IR, by weaving in concepts relating to magic and the stepping stones of the Will.

Sections:
(I). How is the State created? Where does it come from?
(II) The Changing of the Guard
(III) Enforcing your Will
(IV) The Right to Bear Arms
(V) What happens at the State-level stays at the State-level.
(VI) Summary
(VII) Appendix

For a list of authors involved in IR from whom these ideas are drawn and, on whose shoulders and ideas I stand to combine with magical concepts – please see the appendix.

There is no better place to start understanding magico-politics than with the formal term for a country which is 'Nation-State' or just 'State'.
In IR, a State (Country) is considered the highest actor in international politics – a country has more say than any individual, and it has the power of life and death over its citizens and at times its enemies. It is an abstract idea that is both impersonal and immortal and emerged in part from Hobbe's concept of Leviathan and the idea of an overarching force that could protect men from themselves and each other.
Governments that rule a State may come and go - yet the State remains, as an idea that resists its own destruction.

How is the State created? Where does it come from?

The State is created by the division of space. By outlining a territorial boundary, it creates an inside and an outside. For simplicity, the shape of the territory will be hereafter described as a circle unless specified otherwise. What is inside the circle belongs to the State including its civilians/people. What is outside the circle belongs to other States or is an enemy. This marking of boundary has been described as Statecraft or adding to a void a 'centrifugal spin' – where momentum is attained from nothing by positing something, such as an inside/outside and in doing so creating a sudden role that rushes to define them. In a sense a State creates its own meaning simply by dividing space – the importance of which can be viewed world over with friction (and even war) taking place between countries where borders are not respected. I direct the interested reader toward the field of Critical Security Studies (CSS) particularly those discussing post-structuralism for a deeper dive.
Because of how they come into being - States have much in common with the ancient practice of sacred geometry and magic through the shaping and defining of space, critical elements for many sorcerers, alchemists, mathematicians and philosophers. Wherein I will use the word sorcerer to mean one that does sorcery or uses any form/force to power the will to change – not magician, which is more limited in its suggestion and associated with stage magic, illusions and props.

Ancient associations that are common to thousands of cultures share the esoteric ideas of an original unity or oneness (divinity/nothing/chaos) that splits and becomes two (opposite/something/order) which two halves form a balance (yinyang/tao/equilibrium) whose marriage/joining forms a new third form and trinity. From such processes humans have come to be fascinated by the power of three, from the academic idea of thesis, antithesis, synthesis, to tropes of fairytales/myths/events happening in threes, jokes told in threes, to biological necessity for making children via a male/female joining to make a baby, the trinity in Christian religion, the division of planes into higher beings, lower beings and mankind or heaven, earth and hell, and so on.

The process of this one-two-three is as follows: A thing, divides into two things, which makes a third thing. The third thing becomes the new thing and the process repeats. The relationship of this quality to the State is demonstrated by taking a piece of white paper in uniform colour which quality can represent space/nothing/void. Then by drawing a closed shape which divides/interrupts unity with 'something'. You can then make meaning of the relationship by naming an inside to the circle and an outside to the circle. The inside space and the outside space form two halves where previously there were none. This creates or allows creation of a third thing – or rather an endless chain of third things. Now you can name the circle, characterize and control it. However, the circle contains a power, it separates nothing into two somethings. There is now some difference between what is inside and outside – for what is inside is what States lay claim to, and what is outside is what States defend their circle from. Even where no protection may be necessary. There is also more than one circle drawer, and more than one circle, in fact there are at least 195 comprising the countries of the world.

This process of creativity within spacetime is analogous to how countries are made: by an act of will that encloses an area called territory, often (arguably always) through war and conflict to claim, expand, protect their circle. States arise as a result of wilful circle-drawing which they then vest an interest in controlling and protecting to maintain their will to power for that circle to remain (See THEM’s notes on Ee and Will to Power).

The Will, usually embodied by an individual, group or set of interests then 'personalise' the space inside the territory. It may be, for instance, through Nationalism which encourages pride to belong to a Nation-State or specific ‘country’ and its associated culture; an ideology such as Communism, Capitalism, Democracy;

a Personality Cult which adorates a leader as a God; or the practice of a religion/political belief or a combination of all of these - but essentially describes what is normal and desirable to it and by extension to those living in it. These adoptions/personalisations help create 'legitimacy' or a sense that the will to power (i.e., an individual, group or party) has the right to take power and govern.

Most circles do not get drawn in a vacuum however, there are usually existing ideologies and historical expectations for how things should be done and who should do them that politicians will tap into or identify and exploit in order to gain power and sometimes replace those previous ideologies and expectations with their own. That is, many circles (States) were drawn long ago and retain their boundaries for a very long time. Governments come in and change what is practiced inside the circle – but in the last century, rarely try to redraw it (known as Revisionism or changing the limits of boundary which often leads to war). For example, if God is sacred to the people living in that circle, a politician will use that knowledge to identify with and ride to power on promises to protect worshippers and punish unbelievers, for instance. If voted into power as the popular choice for all the promises they have made, then Government no longer has an obligation to keep its promises. It then has power and often the protection of the State who protect the politician to govern how they choose and often against the wishes of the people who voted them in. In this regard, politicians trick the populace into giving them power – as once they have it they rarely need the people and can make radical changes.

The aspect of law and punishment is complex to explore, so let's rise above it for now to explain that Governments will to power aims to shape things just so according to their preference – but Governments are transient, they do not last forever either because they are voted out, suffer a coup and are removed by force, key leaders die or are killed, or give up their power to someone else. A State however is not a person even though often given a name and a gender (Mother Russia) they are an idea. States care about only one thing – they very thing that brought them into being - their own survival. In effect, a State exists for its own sake – there is no greater reason, but 'it' will fight to the death and kill as many humans as necessary (even tens of millions!) to achieve its one goal, for without the State there is no Government and no opportunity to shape the inside of the circle. History coldly illustrates how many souls have died to suit the shaping of the circle by various leaders and dictators.

The Changing of the Guard

In what can be called 'soft-power' most if not all States manage to convince their people that they have rights, laws, and police to serve and protect them for their benefit and if only they follow the right laws and do the right things they will have a happy life. This is true only to a certain extent - but it is what the majority of people believe and structure their reality according to.

It is a shock to them when their government suddenly changes its views on what is the right way to live and behave. Such action may place those who accepted living that way at sudden odds with how things are now expected to be or strip them of their rights and privileges. A reigning government that is good for you now, can turn tyrannical overnight either through a change in its policy or a new government taking charge. The recent collapse of democracy in the United Kingdom and switch to totalitarian rule is an excellent and recent example of how quickly a relative land of paradise can become a dystopian nightmare. In some sense, the State can be considered a ferocious unstoppable tank and Government its driver.

When it does not need the people it governs or even wishes to replace them as is happening in the UK, the true, genuine face of the State is a machine powered by an inhuman psychopathic genocidist with unlimited power and cruelty to project its shadow and willingness to destroy anything and everything it deems an enemy in order to survive or be obeyed. And up to a point enemies can be found anywhere especially within ones own ranks or party. One can find countless examples of paranoid leaders conducting brutal purges and murders of even their most loyal allies out of fear for losing power and the determination to keep hold of it.
For the Chinese call those in power 'tiger-riders' – meaning power brings all manner of threats and while they dare not stay on, they also dare not get off. A prime example is Netanyahu, the Israeli Prime Minster, who is waging genocide on the Gazans. Failing to achieve his political objectives and claims to wipe out Hamas, he is clutching at straws to save himself from accountability for his atrocities against multiple countries, which his diplomatic presidency and protective USA umbrella makes him largely immune from while in power – but for which he will be liable to prosecution and prison without. At least, that is the golden story told – in International Relations we learn that psychotic dictators rarely ever get their come-uppance and almost no-one affected by violence ever gets justice. There is just, violence.

The problem for many caught in a Change of Will, is that they can suddenly become a target, or enemy of the State simply because a policy has changed or that Will is suddenly removed. This can lead to absolute chaos and death as the situation in Bangladesh showed recently too, with people who were favoured by one Government, being hunted by Death Squads empowered by a power vacuum. Leaving a State can be difficult, and even impossible due to territory. People wishing to leave a country without permission must often be smuggled out, like nuclear scientists were from West Germany during WW2, and even then, other States may not be willing to accept you.

Returning to the concept of territory: it is the area of land, sea, air claimed as belonging to the State - it is usually guarded by borders with checkpoints and officials who determine who is allowed in and who is not - including by land, air and sea.

Territory includes a claim of ownership of everything and everyone inside its territory and has specific measures to identify and control everyone inside that area. Everyone outside is either a foreigner, enemy or other and lengthy procedures are often required to become a citizen of another country, especially if you have no identification or state documents to prove who you are.

Territories are important because if you are forced to leave one, even for survival, you become a refugee. A refugee is placed in a vulnerable position of being outside of their circle and outside of everyone else's in a political vacuum or 'No-Man's land'. By leaving a circle they can enter anarchic space (without government) – where they become non-citizens with none of the rights, protections, laws provided (or claimed to be provided) by their former country nor those of any other country unless they become official citizens in a new one. Many are imprisoned, killed, raped, trafficked into prostitution, slave labour and worse. Many are betrayed by their smugglers or sent back by Governments to certain death, too.

Traditionally, entering a new circle (besides travel or smuggling) has been a very difficult prospect until recent times. Globalisation has challenged the ideas of borders and territory in many ways; technology, cross-cultural exchanges, economic interdependence, need to tackle global crime, environmental challenges and many other factors that make borders more easily penetrable with new people, new ideas, new cultures, new technologies have weakened the previously carefully managed lines of what gets inside different circles. This includes policing who gets into a country as a legal citizen through a formal process. The situation of exodus of thousands of desperate illegal refugees entering the United Kingdom on boats has been explosive. Some have radicalised religious beliefs in opposition to democracy, many have sub-average intelligence from rampant inbreeding affecting moral judgement and intellectual capacity to assimilate. This is coupled with two-tier policing turning a blind eye to egregious social harms, favouritism providing illegal migrants with all facilities at the expense of native British who are suffering and struggling from the cost of living, and a sudden reversal of governmental freedoms and privileges by a government turned totalitarian and declaring all protestors as 'far-right thugs'. Indeed, freedom of speech is under assault globally, and democracy has entered its late stage of tyranny with a major grouping of tyrannical governments in alignment against white people.

So, this brings us to our next point, the role of violence in keeping one's circle, or what Hitler termed 'The Triumph of the Will'.

None of this circle-making, circle-shaping, circle-keeping happens without another aspect of the Will (which chains itself to many wills). Territories are not simply given up, and they do not go on expanding forever for a reason. Populations do not simply behave because they are asked to or want to. Laws and ideology from the Government are not obeyed because everyone agrees they are the best idea. And, borders do not form a boundary that other countries are not willing to try and take for themselves. To enact the will, a State must have a monopoly over violence. Effectively, they must be capable of the most violence to prevent any competitors or dissent/disagreement (however insane their ideas). Violence, not money is what makes the world go round, shapes it and reshapes it. Money is a form of violence, an economic coercion born of colonialism. Violence is what gives a State, 'Sovereignty' - or, the power to rule over that territory.

Enforcing your Will

Let's go back to the circle and the idea of outsiders or Others.
How do you make your circle and take land for yourself that may already be occupied? You use violence to force/coerce others to obey your will. To seize territory, you need an army. The army defends a country from outer threats, other armies and armed insurrection from inside the circle (domestic uprising). Once you seize the territory and start populating it or take over an existing population, you need police. Police are often less lethal enforcers within the population who force laws to be followed - though many are corrupt and operate outside of the law. Their primary job is not to protect people, but to protect the Government and enforce government laws, regardless of what they may be. Government uses propaganda to convince people police are there to protect them, which aids in making a population compliant. People come to believe (through being told) that if a wrong is done to them there will be justice, likewise if they do a wrong, they will be punished. It’s a timeless reassuring fairytale – but a fairy-tale nonetheless. Justice is extremely rare.

To enact your Will you must also have mediators/administration who write/pass laws, punish lawbreakers, and instruct everyone on how everything is to be done. This is where another form of violence comes in called bureaucracy. Bureaucracy is a slow, crushing, maddening process that defines how things should work and passes in steps from top to bottom. It’s unnecessary and deliberately confusing labyrinth with it own jargon and language is reflective of the complexity of the labour of division of task. However, it is not meant to help you as much as it is a form of psychological violence that is heavy with deliberate contradiction and often returns one to the start of the process after exhausting them. Its job is to entrap citizens in legislation and requirements so entirely that they forget it is all a vast abstraction.
Another form of violence is Media/propaganda which repeat the messages and will of the ruling power and who publicly flog/whip enemies of the state or enemies of the message, through discreditation, shaming, reports, and lies. Propaganda is an extremely effective form of magic – and should be studied by anyone seeking to understand form, force and will to power.

Fines, punishment, loss of rights, loss of status, imprisonment, torture, coercion and death are some of the prices of failing to go along with the will driving the State. It has some rewards if you are on the right side of its policies – but it can all change in a heartbeat and reveal the terrific array of violence against its enemies of which the State is capable. It is difficult to say if a politician harbours such will to power to be tyrannical from the outset or develops it in the course of being compromised by making deals with the corrupt to gain power. Not all politicians become megalomaniacal sadists but a great many do. In fact, most wars in the last century and this one are between populaces and their governments (Internecine war) rather than between States. Without walking those corridors of power most can only imagine how this transition occurs and why and even then from an outside or historical perspective.

Consider too, that those with a will to power toward politics often have deep personal motivations driving that ambition: it may be a love for the country, a desire to see it restored, to right wrongs, or even to punish those who made their life hard. Once in power - such a will has tremendous power to govern the lives and deaths of millions.
Note here 'Will' though it comes from a person can often be employed as 'The State'. We might say 'France is going to War with Iran'; We then speak collectively of millions of people with different ideas, but as if they were all grouped together in making a single decision. This kind of grouping of all opinions into a pretending that the entire nation's peoples all agree and speak as one is called 'Statecraft' but we will come back to that another time.

The Right to Bear Arms

The immense power-differential between a State and its citizens is usually extraordinary. It is usually only offset or balanced by armed citizens with guns who stand any chance of preventing the inevitable tyranny of Governments – who, once seizing power, take as much of it as they can.
For this reason, many countries remove gun ownership or make doing so draconian such as the gun laws in Australia. This further enforces a monopoly of violence or asymmetric power over the people who must take what their Government decide to dish out – often against brutal enforcers and unjust laws but with the power of the State on their side to act however they wish.

It is important to repeat that human lives do not matter to a State, you are property like sheep in a pen and they will use you as needed when needed to get a job done - sometimes that means killing you, letting others kill you, or secretly encouraging others to kill you (where 'you' means 'people in general') to create a moral outrage/panic that shores votes for a saviour or one who can bring/promise justice, or to further securitise a State and take more power away from citizens for 'their own protection'. It is often difficult for people to accept their vulnerability or that the State doesn't care about them - especially if its policies have worked in their favour and they are happy, wealthy, rich and beneficiaries from policies. But as soon as they are on the wrong side of Government they quickly learn their true personal value.

Endless examples of 'terrorism' have been proven to be conducted by intelligence agencies - such as the Rainbow Warrior (a Greenpeace ship) blown up in New Zealand and blamed on terrorists, who turned out to be French operatives conducting 'Operation Satan' (A true espionage story – and one that is all too often played out by higher powers). The critical, critical, critical... thing to be aware of, is that there is the reality presented to you by your government and there is the reality practiced by your government. What they say they do/are doing, is often different to what they actually do/are doing. This is called 'Cognitive Dissonance' a deliberate scrambling of the brain through mixed-messaging.

To understand the mindset of a politician or leader we must appreciate their viewpoint/vantage and it is one of scale and scope.

At all levels of society different rules apply. The approach, skills and practices to governing/navigating/interacting within your life, your families' lives, your workplace, your company, 'your' city, 'your' state, 'your' country, 'your' military, or the international system all have different requirements - they all see the world and how the people in it are related very differently.
While, for example, in a close family its extremely important to you that no member of your family be removed because that missing person would create a lot of chaos - a State governing millions of people allows greater expendability. It can sacrifice quite a few before it impacts the State to any degree. It is also reliant on its police, who often have their own ideas and will to power that they often enact without interference from the Government. So long as no department is too seriously challenged or bothered by something, it is generally permissable. The greatest crimes occur because of the fear of making waves or creating work for a higher station in the chain. Remember, a State's only interest is its own survival, if it has to kill thousands or hundreds of thousands, either of its own or another country (war) to do so, then states will do it. States have done it, and States are doing it right now. Securitisation of the globe with unprecedented power in exchange for the cost of a human life, or even a few thousand lives? That's a price a State will pay without blinking. It has and uses its capacity to plan events, and its state machinery to capitalise off events. And in IR famously plays a tireless game of face saving on the political stage such as pretending it wants peace when it really wants war, claiming its being attacked when it is doing the attacking and other 'defensive postures' reinforced with its public relations and media arms to convince its populace of a narrative. (See Oromancy and Narrative Magic) claim, states can dominate their populaces with propaganda who will blindly eat up the news and be all too easy to convince that there is both an enemy among them who is threatening to destroy their way of life and easily convinced as to who it is. They can then speak in their roles as ‘Actors’ and speak of France having an issue with Australia for instance (as if everyone in France shared the same stated/repeated policy).

The power of a Nation-State is Nationalism - by voicing all voices as one unified

On a smaller scale this tactic is copied by individuals, groups and organisations. [Disclaimer: Unfortunately, 25 years of indoctrination with the Seven-Fold Way and very little outside of it leaves me with few life examples and anecdotes to draw on that do not relate to my experiences with the ONA/THEM, so needs must, and I will provide an example from experience]

For example, Ryan Anschauung, despite being the only non-state intelligence actor among Myatt, Beest, Chloe, Jall and who stood up against promotion of child predation, quickly became an enemy who gained the special treatment of a silly court trial and public hanging for daring to have unshakeable morals and disobeying the will of those driving the o9a. Paraded as a pretendu, impostor, opfer, Krispy Hollow/Alex F/Ryan became the poster boy enemy of the organisation while the yes-men who added nothing drew their knives. This was politically presented as a betrayal to the values of the o9a. Yet a decade later it is apparent he (and by extension THEM) were up against professional glowies including M15/M16 and the FBI, whom helped to discredit and disgrace him and prevent o9a from stopping the adoption of such evil policies through his influence.
In the cool light of day, for what though? o9a later admitted its 'law of personal judgement' was flawed and lead to the downfall/death of the o9a, therefore following or upholding it was a mistake, even a disastrous choice. Even so, if FBI/M15/6 were involved, then there was nothing to transgress by Ryan but imagined constructs that nonetheless caused a disturbance in the force. (For more information see THEM’s ‘The Troubles’).

But I digress here, it is human to find the logic in decisions especially in cognitive dissonance - but it’s also important to note there often is none. Accusation of false crimes, betrayals, failures to perform, cries of treachery and finger-pointing are not discussions to be had, they are acts of violence. They seek to erode and damage reputation and transform identity in the eyes of the accused and the eyes of others. M16 and FBI (possibly others) did a reasonable job - in 2014 they got the only obstruction talking reason out of the way through a combination of implied threats, death threats, actual threats, character assassination and total control over their community. And in silencing me, Sutter and co were able to convince the majority of o9a adherents to embrace the idea of mundanes, 'pretendu', encouraging child abuse, murder and terrorism leading to excesses by the ToB that eventually collapsed and were exposed as an FBI-funded program. Sadly, I wish things had been different and some difference could have been made to prevent the revolting predation that has taken place without my influence to push the satanic current toward evolution not devolution.

It is my opinion that there are no organisations that are not infiltrated by government and intelligence and/or criminals at some level or won't soon be. And yet despite all this absurdity and hypocrisy and mind-games there are still those who regard Anschauung (who is not even a real person) as a traitor, to an organisation run by government intelligence, because form can be enduring, propaganda very strong, and minds very weak.

All of this - is the perfect (and recorded/verifiable) if analogous example to illustrate how violence is employed by the State and its actors - the lawlessness it involves and the trickery and deception it can employ to achieve its aims. A States only concern is its own survival - not your pain, not its children, not the suffering of others - but its own survival. Everything else is an asset to be used or abused to achieve that aim.
We can confidently say that if not for its actions creating moral outrage, o9a as a concept would have been ignored by governments as its esoteric teachings are just too complex, strange or relatively boring to the State which has no spirituality and scorns magic even as it weaponises it.

What happens at the State-level stays at the State-level.

Do not expect to understand the choices of the State - there will be explanations from media that propose to give transparent views into why something is happening but these are just translations and propaganda tailored to convince an audience of a message.
One only has to look at the teachings involved in academic practice, professional communications, or public relations to understand that people are actively taught to professionally persuade or outright lie to others by identifying and exploiting their weaknesses essentially in an effort to stop a higher department from being bothered and again save face. A cold impersonal letter tersely thanking an employee for 40 years of company service is re-written and re-presented by a PR manager to convince the employee it was all worth it and they were valued. It is not truth the world values and trades in, it is lies.
The problem is that so many are trained to accept such institutions as truthful. States have army, police, bureaucracy, media, school/university and many other institutions that governments can freely employ to enforce their will.
All this, from dividing unity into duplicity - all this from drawing a circle.

Summary

This article discussed the creation and maintenance of a State as an extension of the individual will to power on a grand scale, integrating concepts from ancient geometry, esoteric practices, and politics, particularly in relation to the "Will to Power." The State, defined by territory, populace, government, and sovereignty, is fundamentally maintained through violence.

Key Points:

1. Creation of the State: A State is formed by dividing space, creating boundaries that separate what is inside (the State) from what is outside (others/enemies). This act of defining territory is compared to ancient practices of sacred geometry and magic.
2. Will to Power: The will of individuals or groups drives the creation and control of a State. Governments embody this will to personalize and control the space within their territory, often through nationalism, ideology, or religion.
3. State vs. Government: While governments are transient, the State is a more enduring, abstract entity that fights for its own survival. Governments may change, but the State remains, driven by its inherent desire to survive at all costs.
4. Violence as a Tool: The State maintains its power through a monopoly on violence, enforced by the military and police. Bureaucracy and propaganda are also forms of violence that help the State control its populace.
5. Territory and Sovereignty: Territory is essential for a State's existence, with borders defining what belongs to the State. Globalization has challenged traditional borders, but violence remains central to maintaining sovereignty.
6. Soft Power and Tyranny: States often convince their people of their rights and protections, but these can be stripped away quickly, leading to tyranny. The text gives examples of governments turning totalitarian, emphasizing the State's indifference to human life in its quest for survival.
7. Right to Bear Arms: The power imbalance between the State and its citizens is significant, often kept in check only by the citizens' ability to bear arms. Governments typically try to remove this ability to maintain their monopoly on violence.
8. Reality vs. Presentation: The State often presents a different reality than what it practices, creating cognitive dissonance. The text highlights the scale of governance, where the State views human lives as expendable in its pursuit of survival and power.

To recap - a state needs four things to exist:

Territory: A defined geographic area with recognized borders. This territory must be acknowledged as belonging to the state, even if there are disputes or conflicts over certain boundaries.

Population: A group of people who live within the state's territory. The population does not have to be homogeneous, but there must be a community of individuals who recognize the state's authority.

Government: A political organization or system that exercises authority over the territory and population. The government creates and enforces laws, provides services, and maintains order within the state.

Sovereignty: The ability to exercise full control and authority over the state's territory and internal affairs without interference from other states. Sovereignty implies that the state is independent and recognized by other states in the international system. And, Violence.

And it is worth asking here a final question.
If there were no nations, could there be racism?

Appendix:

Here's a list of key authors associated with Realism, particularly in the context of International Relations (IR) theory, along with some who have contributed to the broader understanding of Realism in political science:

Classical Realists:

1. Thucydides - Ancient Greek historian known for "History of the Peloponnesian War."
2. Niccolò Machiavelli - Italian political philosopher, author of "The Prince."
3. Thomas Hobbes - English philosopher, known for "Leviathan."
4. Hans Morgenthau - German-American political scientist, author of "Politics Among Nations."

Neorealists (Structural Realists):

1. Kenneth Waltz - American political scientist, author of "Theory of International Politics."
2. John Mearsheimer - American political scientist, known for "The Tragedy of Great Power Politics."
3. Stephen Walt - American political scientist, co-author of "The Israel Lobby and U.S. Foreign Policy."
4. Robert Gilpin - American economist and political scientist, known for "War and Change in World Politics."
5. Barry Buzan - British political scientist, known for works like "The Logic of Anarchy" (with Charles Jones and Richard Little).

Offensive Realists:

1. John Mearsheimer - (Also listed under Neorealists) Primary proponent of Offensive Realism.

2. Eric J. Labs - American political scientist, contributed to the theory of Offensive Realism.

Defensive Realists:

1. Stephen Walt - (Also listed under Neorealists) Prominent proponent of Defensive Realism.
2. Charles Glaser - American political scientist, known for "Rational Theory of International Politics."

Neoclassical Realists:

1. Gideon Rose - American political scientist, credited with coining the term "Neoclassical Realism."
2. Randall Schweller - American political scientist, author of "Unanswered Threats."
3. Fareed Zakaria - American journalist and political scientist, known for "From Wealth to Power."
4. William Wohlforth - American political scientist, known for his works on power transitions.

Critical Realists:

1. Andrew Linklater - British political scientist, associated with critical theory in IR and its realist aspects.
2. Robert Cox - Canadian political scientist, known for linking realism with critical theory in IR.

Other Notable Authors Associated with Realism:

1. E.H. Carr - British historian, author of "The Twenty Years' Crisis."
2. Robert Jervis - American political scientist, known for "Perception and Misperception in International Politics."
3. Colin Gray - British-American strategist and political scientist, contributed to strategic studies within a realist framework.
4. Anthony Devetak - Australian political scientist, known for contributions to the interpretation of realism in IR.

This list includes a range of thinkers from classical origins to contemporary scholars who have shaped and expanded upon Realist thought in international relations and political theory.

AS ABOVE SO BELOW

So, having discussed the anatomy of a State let us move on to As Above So Below.

The Will in charge, makes key decisions that affect you.

The example set at the top by a King/Ruler/Emperor, has a filter-down effect as power travels from its origin and highest concentration down to its lowest domain which is often the average civilian. For example, when a law is passed into legislation by congress/high courts/rulers, it is then preserved/enforced by police/bureaucracy, and has an effect on citizens who are captured by its new laws/regulations or expectations. The King can tell the citizens what to do (a policy) but rarely is it the other way around. For this reason, many rulers have a lot of security to protect them from the (often rightful) wrath of the people.

At the State level:
The absolute monopoly of violence gives a state Sovereignty (I'm going to be this way and there is nothing you can do about it) - and each State has sovereignty to do as it pleases with its people. There is an international agreement (though fragile) known as the Westphalian Accord that states will not interfere in how other governments govern and that what they have claimed as 'mine' is recognized.

At the Social level:
Seeing Governments govern, society copies and reinforces this model of sovereignty in its concept of property and its boundary (territory) an inside with those who belong and outside with those who do not (house) a monopoly of violence (often self-installed at the top of the family hierarchy through violence/dependence/terror) and the concept of sovereignty (what I do in my own home is none of your business). This allows domestic abuse to skyrocket.

At the Self level:
This same pattern repeats with individuals (Government) whose body is a territory over which they claim/or hope to have sovereignty. This means choosing who comes inside their body and how, or being prepared to fight attackers threatening that sovereignty. The populace in this instance are organs, mind, blood, chastity, self-preservation and so on.

The example that everyone should mind their own business is why nations suffer holocausts, why people drown, or burn to death, or stand around not intervening and watching on with phones as horrific things happen to others.

At the state level Sovereignty equals genocide, at the social level diffused responsibility, at the self level apathy. However, as the world shows, violence challenges and overcomes sovereignty at all levels.

Even so,
Genocide can be stopped.
Responsibility can be taken.
Apathy can evolve into empathy.
Conflict can be resolved.

A VERY STUPID MAN

The long-term effect on the Jewish Population endured under their treatment by Nazi-Germany has clearly been catastrophic. Like blooded dogs that we put down when they kill a chicken, their blood-lust has pushed over a precipice that has reordered the magnitude of which human beings are capable in the ingenuity, conspiracy and collaboration of torture and slaughter. But it is the cover-up and denial of the obvious that matches and surpasses the ferocity and gruesome capacity of anything Hitler performed. Hitler did not have the power, allies, US military forces, global media, deep pockets, and support of Universities warning of imaginary dangers of Neo-Nazis, Media colluding to protect authorities abusing power, and world leaders pissing in their pants out of fear for going against those demonstrating absolute violence without restraint or for fear of being exposed as child rapists or losing their paycheck that pays for their silence and consent to prosecute the most devastating obliteration of human beings in human history.

The practice of Magic from an occult perspective is often described as the art of the will to change. This means identifying forms and forces that leaned against in the right way can manifest what one wants to happen. While the classical form of Magic, commonly known as Stage Magic, involves sleight-of-hand, deception, misdirection, illusion, and tricks the eye as to what is actually happening. The magical part of magico-politics, is in the collusion of human beings and their collected forms (companies, contractors, institutions, etc) combining their resources and aiding one another to manifest both a forceful invisible hand that acts behind the scenes, and a visible forceful hand that changes things via the art of their will for change using deception so no-one sees how the trick was done by the invisible hand.

The one covers the other. Hidden by a gruesome army of soulless monsters presenting the lies without question that enable it to continue. When change is required quickly though, it requires violence. The more violence, the more quickly the change can be affected. See the IRA, FARC, Houthis for examples. All of which forced governmental change. International Politics demonstrates that the only way to counter violence is with more violence. You have to murder your way to the top – which is what a ‘country’ is, and a national flag is always historically blood-soaked because you have to kill a lot of people to claim a territory as yours.

On an individual level magic is usually limited in its power. Many people don’t even consider it an acting power – yet they succumb to marketing, persuasion, media, argument, culture, belief, brands, ‘progress’, ‘terrorism’, or think governments are there to serve them – never realising the extent of the tricks that go into making and keeping them a servile drudgeon who minds his own business and thinks what he is told to think. However, when you have a global collaboration of powers all agreeing to sustain a belief and prosecution (via death by any means) of a created ‘Other’ forced to wear the devil costume in a black/white moral battle and who must be wiped out at any cost (a fact of which they attempt to convince everyone however they have to do it (see Hannibal Directive, 9/11), you have a hypnotic madness that is driven by the misguided notion of being righteous and executed by ‘a good person’ doing ‘good things’ to ‘save the world’ or their part of it, or at least, that is the outward explanation. Afterall, that is apparently why Hitler tried to eliminate the Jewish population en masse, he believed it was the right thing to do and was supported by those who shared his prejudice and hatred, but also his values, seen as qualities of love and honour working for the German People to save it from usury, greed, banking, debt by destroying those most commonly associated with it, the Jewish People, which practices saw them turfed out of ancient country after ancient country. Hitler also used Magico-Politics, especially powerful through his symbolic architect Albert Speer who used colour, icon, mythos to exceptional effect to reinforce fervour and glory for the Nazi Party, while the Gestapo choked any dissent behind the scenes, and later in full view. Secret Police/Intelligence, Spies/Informants, Assassins/Hit Men are always operating – the respectable veneer of society simply hypnotises the masses into forgetting that their nation stays intact through these age-old mechanisms. Out of sight, out of mind. Effectively, we’re sheep in pens thinking we’re free citizens of the world, watched, recorded, herded by policy makers, academic rhetoric, marketing savvy, a sentinel class of surveillance (‘for our own good’), and trained psycho-social monkeys gripping their ‘degrees’ who exploit our many weaknesses, culture, nationalism, and base naivety. We are after all trained from birth to be naive produce and rewarded for accepting the program, protecting the lie, patted on the head for agreeing to not challenge the bullshit but become proxy police to insulate it from outside intelligent critical analysis.

But in stage magic, even though we know we’ve been tricked, we often don’t know how the trick is done. Especially if the magician is a good one. A magician never reveals his secrets, so they say. But the tactics of politics and magic have been known for aeons – Public Relations, Speech-Writing, Statesmen, and the power of Rhetoric are the premise of Western Culture deriving from the Greeks. As is our imaginary ‘Democracy’ to which we only pay lip-service as a international community – but is weaponised as a shared goal we should all strive for which ‘sets us apart’ from dictators. To say one thing, while doing another, is the premise and demonstrated practice of politics. To deceive through the art of deception to get into power, where one swiftly does what one wants because they no longer need the people. Through the combination of an ‘enemy’, ‘righteous crusade to save the world’, and ‘corruption by absolute power’ – the same fight perpetuates throughout history. Create a bad guy to prevent people seeing you are the bad guy, go after that bad guy with every possible means so the bad guy has no chance to say he’s not the bad guy, and continually repeat, repeat, repeat, repeat, repeat the story that he was a bad guy while punishing anyone that disagrees, until the world finally gives up trying to argue and lies become truth and the new ‘good guys’ use their ‘proven valour as a good guy’ as a weapon against reason that holds anyone wishing to disagree to hostage. And, most often, making those with something to say about the whole charade, the ‘new’ bad guy.

It is one thing to slaughter people without restraint, harvest their skin and organs for medical black markets, sell them as slaves for sex and labour, rape torture and and murder them, bulldoze them alive with automated machinery, shoot them in the face when they are lured to aid sites, use pager bombs to shred children – but it is another entirely to have the power and means to insist you’re not doing any of it. Right now, the level of Cognitive Dissonance is extreme. There isn’t really a good word for what is happening, the popular ones have lost their meaning, and moral and mental fatigue is enabling the atrocity to continue with ordinary people nodding their heads and taking their paycheck to stay in their comfortable jobs. But this event, is like, someone looking you in the eyes and stabbing you, and when you try protest and say ‘don’t stab me’ they say ‘I didn’t stab you, you’re a liar, what’s more, you stabbed me and I’m going to tell everyone you stabbed me, and beheaded my baby, and they are going to want to stab you’.

What’s happening is a planned, mass devolution of human intelligence and perception through magic and politics, colluding to convince us that even though some of us are intelligent enough to know how this trick is being pulled, we saw and see nothing. We are imagining it. And, this becomes an enforced norm to question our own warning signs and intuition and reframe them as false flags to which we should not pay attention. And those who tried to reveal the trick, many of them are now dead. And so, slowly, the resistance against the lie is taken away, the loudest voices put to the grave, the intellectuals murdered and silenced, so that the tearing of paper children can continue whilst we rock back and forth, harmless fools drooling from the mouth, who take our pills and go to sleep in the asylum Zion has created.

Where once we warned against the signs of a new rising National Socialist holocaust that takes over gullible people en masse (en globe is now a legitimate term) we now warn against the takeover by Zionist powers making genocide look like child’s play (and have been warning since 2023). But no one listens. No one acts. They stand in headlights like rabbits and deer waiting to be run down by the war machine that is coming soon to a country near them – or continue on with their script. It is illuminating as to how atrocity occurs and is sanctioned and will repeat itself again and again – probably after building up this new bullshit story about ‘how you must stand on that X because we’re never going to let that happen again.’ It is a shame that ‘counter-terrorism’ so utterly fails to elucidate this, but when all the universities are paid off to chase ghosts instead of real monsters, it’s no wonder. It’s actually all very clever, Zion is Very Clever. If they can’t corrupt using blackmail like entrapped child sex, they offer money, power, or prestige. And if that doesn’t work they use silence, and if that doesn’t work they make an example and go on the attack like rabid dogs until you're shredded meat that terrifies onlookers into resolute dumbness. It is a masterclass in how to take over the world through terror – genius use of hard and soft power – peerless demonstration of will to power that means you can literally rip a person to pieces in front of someone who, even with blood dripping down their face and the smell of spilled organs and metallic tang of blood invading their nostrils, will insist it didn't happen. 'See No Evil. Hear No Evil. Speak No Evil. Or Else.'

Humans are a fascinating study – it is wondrous how easily we are controlled, and how stupid we are in general. My whole journalistic theme throughout my writings is just one charting after another of how stupid I am. And I – am a very stupid man. I believed so many lies and so many 'truths'.

SCAPEGOATING

Victoria, Australia's proposed ban, (and passed legislation) intended to prevent Neo-Nazi's from raising their arm to give the NSDAP Salute is not a win - it is a statement of power to reinforce faith in the cultivated cultural norms of Australia's (waning) multicultural posture. National Socialism and the racism of the Far-Right are a source of great guilt for colonial Australia and its historical White Australia Policy that was only eroded from the 1970's, a mere 50 years ago. It is also a declaration of War.

To strengthen such a case, one might seek to legitimise the State and its instruments, appealing to a direct challenge to freedom of expression, and the Australian Constitution, which famously allows all manner of hateful, ugly, destructive, dishonest, dangerous political torrents to flow due to its 'implied freedom'. See political attacks on the Julia Gillard Government for reference.

But herein, it becomes very simple. This matter should be taken out of its encapsulated discourse to understand what is happening here.

To enforce these stipulations requires legal sanctions against a particular group that result in fines, arrest, charges, imprisonment because of their political beliefs. Even as, the Jewish Community and media continually demonise National Socialists as 'horrific, monsters, unconscionable, disgusting, unthinkable, atrocious' and use their power and influence to ban NS. But this moral facade should not be entertained. Although it is presented as protective of democracy, this is not 'fair' or 'equitable', it is a targeted and deliberate campaign that undermines freedom of expression; and smacks of the very restrictions/reparations imposed on Germany by others via the Treaty of Versailles that led an embittered Hitler to form the NSDAP. It will have a high cost, as all restrictions on organic human life force and pressure against forms striving to Be, do. It may even be a source of anger that gestates a charismatic NS leader which to date, remains the key obstacle to NS advancement in Australia. Such a leader may provide the impetus for the Australian NS to unite chapters or solidify. It may incite great backlash against Jews, who like their brethren the US, will demand greater special security needs and provisions to 'protect themselves'. But we now see how Israel protects itself, and this exceptionalist spiel is no longer a valid servitor.

Legitimacy is a matter of violence. Codes/Laws are enforced by violence. Bureaucracy substantiates the legal system by hard forces such as Police, Bailiffs, Jailers who use physical force; soft forces include fines, sanctions, character assassination, removal of social privilege, threats of or actual imprisonment. To argue about the legitimacy of laws through appeal to other laws; such as human rights, legal charters, or the Constitution - is an entirely tautological and fruitless task. Riding above and beyond all of these institutions of force applied to some under the guise of creating harmony for all, is the matter of cosmic Justice, viz. Might is Right.

The Racial Discrimination Act is discriminatory. The failed 2023 Yes/No Referendum bungled by Labor hastening to pass a change to Constitution without proper dues and checks and balances and a national campaign built on invoking a guilt complex and moral imperative, was offensive and racist. It was designed to intimidate Australians into accepting poorly explained changes to its Constitution and voting no was considered to be racism. In theory, racial discrimination works as described above. In practice, Racism is predicated on the assumption it is a top-down assignment from 'Whites' who are not even white, but pink. Based on skin colour; pinks cannot be offended by, defend themselves against, nor recognise racism, nor be openly proud of their race or their culture. To do so is rejected as colonial, patriarchal, imperial. But we should be proud. The 'West' has given much to all, including the English language. Through an Aeon of Blood, all that you know, see, experience from the hand of man, has been built and stands before you as the results of an eternal architecture of creation and destruction, rise and fall, death and life, an abyss of human choices. I don't see apologies from other Empires...

The pretense at moral superiority, at being upstanding and better than others, is exhausting. We all have blood on our hands and stand soaked in its rain. Let us remember that the NSDAP and its offspring the Neo-Nazi have only existed since 1935. While the Jewish peoples have been around for over two thousand years. Who then, has shed more blood? Who has had the longer opportunity for cruelty, hatred, destruction? The Nazi's fought in a single war, how many have the Jews? It is true enough that to the Victors go the Spoils, and the Victors write history - they also control it. What these restrictive legislations banning National Socialist gestures indicate is control - not legitimacy. Moreover, they invite new strains, sophisticated co-ordination: Neo-Neo-Nazi's or the NNN.

I don't care that the NS salutes, signs and symbolism are being banned - I care, as I always have, about the back-handed cowardly delivery of snivelling about 'hate' and 'racism' as if it were a special commodity common only to a few.

Call it out.

Say that you are banning it because it stands as a political movement that threatens the left-governed State.

Admit you like your power and intend to keep it by soothing those who threaten to take it away unless you act in their favour.

Admit you are compromised by pressure from lobbyists and power cartels.

Stop pretending that defense of democracy is your reason, or that 'hateful gestures' will not be tolerated because they are 'offensive'.

We have a National Flag, it was raised through the culling of blood and the total dominion over territory through death. All Nations have one for the very same reason - whether it is 'self-determination', imperialism, colonialism or Empire.

The pretense at moral superiority, at being upstanding and better than others, is exhausting. We all have blood on our hands and stand soaked in its rain. Let us remember that the NSDAP and its offspring the Neo-Nazi have only existed since 1935. While the Jewish peoples have been around for over two thousand years. Who then, has shed more blood? Who has had the longer opportunity for cruelty, hatred, destruction? The Nazi's fought in a single war, how many have the Jews? It is true enough that to the Victors go the Spoils, and the Victors write history - they also control it. What these restrictive legislations banning National Socialist gestures indicate is control - not legitimacy. Moreover, they invite new strains, sophisticated co-ordination: Neo-Neo-Nazi's or the NNN.

I don't care that the NS salutes, signs and symbolism are being banned - I care, as I always have, about the back-handed cowardly delivery of snivelling about 'hate' and 'racism' as if it were a special commodity common only to a few.

Hypocrisy is an act of violence granted only to those in power.

First the State cultivates White Supremacy since 1901. Then it feels international pressure to make reparations toward its Indigenous population after being accused of Genocide (1947). Then it over-corrects and floods the country with immigration and enforces 'multi-culturalism'. Now it attempts to pin centuries of bad policy on a convenient scapegoat.

It is to be appreciated that Australian Government changes hands on a frequent basis between two parties, and there is rarely continuity in domestic policy. The 'State' is an impersonal instrument of violence and control - a conceptual supra-actor taking part in a fictitious state-based arena or play, where the totality of its moving parts are represented as unified singular movements of a whole entity. Like a Chinese dragon given life and momentum to dance by dozens (or millions) of civilians hidden underneath. Thus, the media speak of 'Australia' or 'France' and its actions and choices as if those were representative of the entire population. It is a mode of violence that enforces the legitimacy to speak for all as one voice and make decisions. It is why nations are considered 'actors' - and the only important ones in the world of international relations. But note, there was no referendum asking whether National Socialists should have their right to protest, salute, display swastika, wear armbands, gather in groups, or reduce civil liberty -it was a decision made without consultation of the people. There was a referendum asking to change the Constitution for a 'Voice to Parliament' for Indigenous people - and, there should have been one for this.

Note carefully that in the Antifa symbol below, trying to incorporate the 'Aboriginal Flag' - that there is no white hand. It is red. What does that red hand symbolise? Or the Black? Races. A Freudian slip of the unconscious or the ridiculous hypocrisy of racists? Note also the ironic use of Speer's trademark red, white and black colouring.

'Anything that closely resembles a Nazi symbol or gesture' - you will learn, Sorcerer: that the Magi and White Lodge operate highly efficiently on nebulous, unclear, ill-defined terms. It is the source of their power to provide sweeping indistinction to capture every case, and to then charge them with meaning and definition at will and as required. It is Magick of the highest order.

Where does that leave the Temple of THEM's Thrasz which many illiterate and lazy academics have without grounds labelled a swastika? And, where does it lead if they try to take it away from US.

CAN A STATE BE SAFE?

The overarching rule of law that governs human potential and restriction is presently stated as 'National Security', viz. The security of the nation. Which, is a dangerous mythic crusade to perfectly secure a perpetually insecure abstract. Yet, because it is unachievable it permits an unlimited range of resources and actions to be deployed during states of emergency, in order to secure it, under the false pretence that failing to do so will end in our destruction. Thereby, sanctioning that the means justifies the ends.

"National security, or national defence (national defense in American English), is the security and defence of a sovereign state, including its citizens, economy, and institutions, which is regarded as a duty of government. Originally conceived as protection against military attack, national security is widely understood to include also non-military dimensions, such as the security from terrorism, minimization of crime, economic security, energy security, environmental security, food security, and cyber-security. Similarly, national security risks include, in addition to the actions of other states, action by violent non-state actors, by narcotic cartels, organized crime, by multinational corporations, and also the effects of natural disasters".

No. A State can never be safe. Safety implies a vacuum that mitigates all challenges to a State's claim of legitimacy in a shifting dynamism of realms that are difficult to sustain indefinitely. That is to say, States don't have a right to exist, they simply enforce themselves through violence; which asserts itself as the ruler of a people through the exercise of judicial, bureaucratic, economic, police and military forces – and most importantly, a 'National Mythos' that convinces others it is a legitimate entity and a source of political pride not a parasitical invader that simply arises as a hostile entity that swims among the depths of magic and preys on the human race.

That Mythos includes enlisting support for the state through Nationalising its citizens so that they form a bulwark to erasure of the state by being sympathetically allied to its existence as their own, i.e. Ireland defines the Irish, France defines the French etc. For Nationalists, if there is no Ireland, no France, for example, then a person cannot be Irish/French and their identity through dissolving of their history faces an existential crisis. This is how armies are created who die in defense of an abstract. And it is how most nations frame and celebrate their existence; through memories of winning wars that threatened its (and by extension the People's) continuation.

If a state were a person it would be characterised as a neurotic, paranoid, hypochondriacal psychopath; constantly in fear of its life and over-reacting to the slightest tremble as a catastrophic earthquake. At any time a state can label a threat as exceptional (exceptionalism) which lets it give itself permission to mobilise special resistance to mitigate the threat and that includes operating outside of the law. The declaration of certain persons as terrorists is among its most common forms of claiming exceptionalism - and in every case where it claims it needs special powers to deal with a special threat to its existence (and yours) - it makes claims about doing so to ensure its (and your) Safety. This is an act of sympathetic magic where you become fused with the state's interests – whether you like it/agree with it or not. Consequently, the state will speak for all its citizens behalf in announcing it must take extra special measures to ensure its 'National Security'. There is of course something to understand here; there is NO action a state will not take to ensure its survival – and that includes the destruction of its populace. For a state is not a rational entity, it is an impersonal neuroses projected from the personal into the suprapersonal; in fact was created because of personal fear of destruction needing to enshrine itself in something that was indestructible. A state is a manifestation of Fear by Self-Interest. It is always afraid and exists only to be afraid and to generate a shared fear of imminent destruction within its citizens who rally to its protection to protect their own. This is the very magico-political ethos of the Magi encapsulated in physical formulation. We see this inner existential crisis best demonstrated by Israel and The United States – both of which states live in self-perpetuating terror that they will be destroyed and must do everything and anything they can do avoid it – especially, when it is not required.

Like liquid, gas and solids are changeable states in the chemical world – unexpected conditions that persist in a dynamic world environment can change them. Although some states appear to have equilibrium – history shows that all states succumb to time during which change threatens at every turn to derail the carefully constructed and protected abstracts of mankind.

A state cannot guarantee the eradication of:

- International or domestic threats, existential, real or imagined.
- Domestic/internal threats to government, institutions, infrastructure.
- Internal psychological failings and neuroses of a leader, allies, real or imagined.

Threats can come from External, Internal and Intrapersonal realms at any time, since spacetime is a dynamic shifting process characterised by entropy; wherein the decline of states are destined to fall from a plateau into disintegration and eventual flux as a natural state of nature and the death of form. Such is the role of mortal One's of THEM to aid immortal nature to eat away at the struts of magical protections that have frozen the world into a magian suprastate by controlling space and time choking organic evolution. In response to which she has adapted her forms and forces to bring forth those that can see through and deconstruct the prison.

The pursuit of such 'National Security' is a pathological delusion that works on evoking fear of personal and national destruction by appealing to the survival instinct of identity. It elevates mortal personal perception and agency (and relative degrees of magico-political skill) by its citizenry to be synonymous with the immortal supra-personal concept of the state. . The personality of the leader is amplified to the world stage, problems and all, often projecting the shadow contents of the leader onto the Other they create to generate cohesion to forge national unity within propaganda.

The claim of national security and exceptionalism is more or less claiming a license to murder - where murder is the most merciful of its assumed powers, and the most awful of instincts and actions are carried out by lower lackey henchmen and shit-kickers whose sudden grasp of a little bit of power quickly overwhelms them and they become automatons of cruelty.

The danger of this claim of 'National Security', is that it appeals to the survival instinct of all human beings to agree that survival of self is of utmost importance - especially where unrelated state actions use propaganda to align its claim to murder as a protective umbrella design to safeguard what it declares are its "citizens" by which it means its property. Despite having only false care for its citizens, states leverage this nurtured co-dependency to psychologically merge its goals (known and unknown) with people to create a vicarious bond - where death and destruction becomes commentated sport and a form of entertainment except to those who are directly experiencing the worst freedoms at the hands of unrestrained humans slave to their darkness and sanctioned implicitly by the state's deliberate blind eye turning despite heavy appearances of its 'goodness' and 'innocence'.

Secondly, the language used by such tyrants is 'clinical' and immediately separates those who agree with the claim to murder, or disagree.

It is in the pursuit of this imaginary 'safety' from all things, that the state reveals itself as a piteous cowardly snivelling entity however grand its forms and functions - a confused conception of an impersonal immortal referred to by a legion of names (countries) who claim "sovereignty" as if different planets with myriad aliens occupying the same solar system (earth) but in all facets is the quintessential traitor to human evolution. As the faux rational architecture of madness stemming from religion and protection of religion, the state is simply an extension of the claim of a god - an ineffable light on whom we can never gaze and to gaze upon destroys us. Kind but also excessively cruel and vengeful without explanation. No sane person would agree the collateral damage states produce to be a logical trade-off for its provisions. Magico-politics however, deployed against people, delimits individual voices warning of tyranny through a monopoly of perception - narrative, or oromancy.

It is further in pursuit of this imaginary safety that the 'Other'; vital to magico-politics to create or amplify the message that the 'other' can be anyone and anywhere - meaning when one enemy runs out, another must be found - and so even former allies and loyal subordinates can be accused of treason or of being assassins, spies or collaborators. Wherein those who fail to identify these types of trends are as dangerous as the tyranny itself, as facilitators of stories that control actors roles and lines which always recur within a very limited human plateau of ideas that has replayed itself millions of times in the course of human history without change.

Fear, is sometimes rational - but when it comes to core humanity, fear is irrational - to which our response was to build Forms, to shore our terror of chaos. States are by virtue of their premise, always terrified of anything that poses a threat, real or imagined, or fabricated.

Thus can a country dupe other countries into going along with it in a crusade, only to collectively defeat an enemy, and then find that country turns upon it as the new meat. Failure to identify these types of countries which embody a predatorial personality elevated to state level power means countries comply out of promises to fulfil and meet their own individual interests, from threats, sanctions or punitions, or from silence, ostracisation, exclusion on the world stage. Arguably, the world has never operated at a global level before and this Achilles heel stems from being convinced to connect everything to everyone.

It was then believed that as an earth-body, with every country an organ, a surplus of organs would uphold the failure of any other or even a few through necessary transplants (i.e, a country that refused to or was unable to supply A, could be sourced instead from country B, so long as the status quo was sustained for countries X,Y,Z) - moreover, that violence could and would solve all issues arising. This is and always has been an attitude indicative of the Magi - who after aeons, may be experiencing final hubris.

MAGICAL SOCIALISM

1. Magical Socialism is not a celebration of ownership by a State as a civilian, nor is it Nationalism - which champions the interests of one's own race (or races) at a religious, political, cultural and magical level and encourages taking pride in one's accepted or adopted cultural or sub-cultural heritage.

2. It infers that the foundations of the world and its systems are implicitly derived from the practice of magic, are artificially constructed and therefore de-constructible.

3. Race is considered a low-level political tool used to divide and conquer, unlike National Socialism, Magical Socialism does not seek to eradicate any culture or race and emphasizes character over colour.

4. Magical Socialism is not Nationally bound to the territory of a State and its scope is international/global implementation.

5. Magical Socialism encourages respecting and learning of the languages and customs of other cultures.

6. Magical Socialism understands physical/bureaucratic violence is tantamount to power and control by world leaders, but does not use or advocate violent means of resistance. Notwithstanding, it is a No-Hand Path and uses all other non-direct, non-confrontational, non-personal means and methods at its disposal to achieve an aim.

7. Its aim is to cultivate individuals/groups who foster Change in accordance with the Will and an understanding of the means and forms through which change occurs.

8. Its aims are to cause large-scale change via magically pushing against chosen artificial yolks through infiltration of institutions to raft messages encouraging autonomy, self-empowerment, and cultivating an understanding of how politics, power and magic shape the world.

9. Because we cannot stop the esoteric pathology of the Magi from rebuilding even if its exoteric framework is decimated, so ingrained is it in the human psyche – we must learn to identify their works so we cannot be deceived by them.

CHAPTER 3
FORM

THE COLD FACTS OF FORM AND MANIPULATION [1]

1. In 2007 it is estimated that those who sustain a roof over their head, are able to feed and clothe themselves and have the luxury of spare change in their wallet or purse make up the luckiest, richest 8% of the global population.

1.1 Basic amenities such as clean drinking water, hot water, a flushing toilet; for instance, or an infrastructure in place that ensures timely removal of rubbish, accurate charge for electricity, water or gas bills, or a competent police force that serve and protect – largely free of corruption, are almost unheard of in some 60% of the world's countries.

1.2 In Psychology/Criminology it is held that for the Serial Killer to have the time to commit murder they must have first satisfied the basic needs of food, water and shelter. Only after satisfying these important primary drives can extraneous luxuries of habit such as time to hunt for victims, stalking, etc be made and other activities explored or pursued.

1.3 The ability to sit down and write is only afforded from a secure environment that satisfies these important primary drives. Adolf Hitler was able to write 'Mein Kampf' whilst imprisoned because he was regularly fed, given water, and sheltered from the elements. His basic survival drives were taken care of allowing him to free up time to think and write that might otherwise have been taken up thinking about how hungry he was, trying to stay alive by eating whatever he could find, extract or somehow filter water and trying to find somewhere safe and warm to shelter or hide. Likewise, Anne Frank, was able to write her diary because her basic needs for food, water and shelter were met – ensuring her survival and the security to write.

2. Thus, because the average writer must first satisfy these drives, and satisfying these three drives is only achieved on a consistent basis by perhaps the top ten percent of the world's population bracket – writing is a luxury. Owning a computer, a typewriter, paper, pen, or other material possessions used to write places the writer even higher in the bracket; that of being wealthy enough to be able to afford them or live in a country where these materials are legal and accessible.

2.1 This does not apply in all cases however, the Marquis De Sade for instance, was denied any writing implements whatsoever after reports of his literature being smuggled out of prison were received. And although all his furniture and possessions were removed from his cell, he devised novel ways to continue to write – including using his own blood for ink and his finger for pen, and even used his own excrement. Nevertheless – without being fed, watered, [at least intermittently] or sheltered he would not have had the luxury of time to think about or pursue his writing.

2.2 Writers are thus, in comparison to the majority of the world's inhabitants, a creature afforded rare luxury. The fact that a writer has the time to sit down and write a text indicates that an environment is available to them that allows them to satisfy the three basic drives so they may write.

2.3 Anton LaVey was clearly able to satisfy the three basic urges and pen the Satanic Bible. Anton Long was also clearly able to satisfy the three same urges in order to write the voluminous material belonging to the ONA. And I, also required these three urges satisfied to afford me the security to write out these points.

3. If writing is not a decadence, then at the very least it is a luxury restricted to the very few able to afford it. The Internet, the access to which is grossly taken for granted, is populated solely by the verse of a decadent upper echelon comprising the lucky 8% of the world's inhabitants.

3.1 Of that verse, most is written by fed, watered, clothed and sheltered individuals able to have a hot shower, drink clean water, and dribble out the garbled nonsense and noise that such security affords them.

3.2 There are some individuals who do not waste the potential of the Internet to reach others or emit the written word – however the majority of useful thoughtful content hosted on the Internet is dominated by classical literature written well before the rise of the computer and the technological age.

3.3 Some writers are consciously aware of and grateful for their fortunate circumstances, realising that writing is a luxury that comes to less than 75% of the world's population. As a result, they take great care with the emission of their words; resisting the modern decadent preoccupation of dribbling shit like an unchanged baby.

4. These writers are extremely rare.

THE COLD FACTS OF FORM AND MANIPULATION [II]

1. The majority of human beings are ruled by Fear and Laziness.

1.2 Laziness is enshrined in the least necessary force required to achieve an aim or intent.

1.3 Fear is enshrined in the lack of strength to do more than the bare minimum. To resist the instinctual impetus to rise above the pathetic standard set by one's society for oneself or recognise one's inherent Choice to obey that standard stems from one's cowardice, ignorance, or fear.

1.4 If the Magi of the East ever possessed the power to psychologically/magically enslave people neither of these two terms would have been understood as being the name of the 'mechanism' or coercing force behind this enslavement. What occurred of necessity to enslave a race or populace was the human-tradition of Force by Physical Submission whether by massive Wars or individual or group Violence, thus was the world sorted into leaders and followers.

2. Aside from Physical Enforcement however, there no doubt grew an awareness of and development of the early science of persuasion/manipulation that involved Appealing to one Mass in order to assemble a Form large or powerful enough in mind, spirit and body to achieve the enslavement of another Mass of People.

2.1 The Magi, if they ever existed, would not have known what psychology was, or perhaps even used the term Magic. There is, despite the frantic and intellectual wishful thinking of scholars, almost no connexion to these people, their world, or their consciousness that relates to modern day people, their world, and their consciousness. The only connexion that exists is that these beings although termed 'human' were termed something else well before Latin terms became popular through Science – shared a roughly similar biological shape to modern day human-beings and perhaps, similar biological drives.

2.2 The Original Magi, are long dead. It is their ideas that have lived on. And the very same special effects that they are remembered for via the Bible are carried out today with almost no-one the wiser. It is still, for instance, common to enshrine some individual with a perceived aura of power and prestige by the mere bringing together of already influential people who are then seen taking said individual under their wing. And it is still common for a similar enshrinement to happen in an invisible, underground manner. This leads to an instant elevation of status by proxy. Thus did the Wise Men or three 'Magi' help make of Jesus a holy man and emperor. Thus did the Roman Army help make of Caesar a powerful leader of Rome. Thus did The Thule-Gelleschaft make of Adolf Hitler the Fuhrer of Nazi Germany.

2.3 The fixation on the personal [and thus aeonically irrelevant except as examples of a type of energetic manifestation] names, achievements, influences of an energetic manifestation in physical persons, physical lodges, deliberate movements, such as 'the Magi' or 'White Lodge' is to apprehend the appearance and not the essence.

2.4 The Appearance/Form/Myth of a "Magi" is sealed with the Western Ethos – remembered because of their role in the Bible – a Form that has now existed for thousands of years. Hence, by a combination of chance and deliberate enforcement, has their myth, by proxy of being associated with the Bible, remained intact and living and, invested with far more importance than is right or deserved. The ‘Magi’ are in Essence, just one mostly irrelevant example of the means to effect deliberate Change in a society. This is nothing new, and nothing magical, but it is and always has been an extremely effective method of controlling the Matrix. It is a practice that has been enshrined today no differently than it was thousands of years ago in the predecessors of the practice of which the Magi was one example in the Neo-Conservative methodology of the American New World Order.

3. All Mutinies, Coups, Revolutions, Dissents, Wars, Peace Marches, Demonstrations, Rallies, Groups, rely on the coercement of others over to one’s side. If one has the benefit of already having those on their side who lead and influence large numbers of important or tactically important persons, so much the better.

3.1 Modern Celebritism is based on exactly these basic principles. Powerful Media persons take some talent-less hopeful and turn them into a ’Star’ overnight via the co-operation of the Music Industry, the Marketing Machines, Tabloid and Magazine Moguls, and the Merchandising Industry in a joint collaboration that appeals to each of their interests to grow their influence and make money off a cashed-up susceptible [insert stupid] populace. This collaboration has been recently termed ‘Cronyism’ and means the behavioural habit of looking out for or showing preferential treatment of one’s close colleagues at the expense of all outsiders. There is nothing mystical or magical about this: it is as old as the first demonstration of greed [and how many have you seen in the last few days let alone the last 100,000 years?] and appeals to the base human desire, to ’own stuff’.

3.2 This energetic meme of greed, of appealing to others to form a group to fulfil some aim or intent; whether it be a mutiny of the Bounty, or the Ultra-Violence of the Droogs, is the only essence of the Magi. An elaborate deception by thousands of persons over time slowly fostered this meme into a human body; the rumours and rampant speculation of which led to such notions as the ‘Illuminati’, ’White Lodge’ etc. What is rarely understood by aspirants is that it is the artistic/romantic seed of these ideas at the level of rumours that influences some person or other to take it upon themselves to manifest such notions. Thus, in mere suggestion, lies the seed of manifestation. Whilst the energetic meme used by the ‘Magi’ is essentially a neutral magical force: those strong enough to be leaders [All Leaders] have used it and still use it, [IT being ‘Narrative Magic’] to formidable effect. Effect that is interpreted differently pending one’s spiritual division.

3.3 Satanic Mimesis of this meme involves using the meme to create a Sinisterion/Syndicate that eschews laziness and fear. Because the Magian have been so lax in the formulation of other magical applications owing to the astounding success of their prime agent – all structures built and maintained by the Magian are founded on this basic principle illustrated by the Magi and thus conform to an identical geometry at their essence. This has enabled, with the emergence of several black magical weapons previously veiled, the blueprint of the meme to be studied and a solution found to counter the meme involved.

3.4 Just as the Satanist ventures so very far before being tempted sorely to abandon their Quest to be like Satan to go over to the Other side, to God, to the Secret Samadhi and must reject Divinity to return to Earth as a Dark God – using the meme of the Magi to launch an abyssal/aeonic defensive – a structure that mimics those of the Magi must be constructed using intrinsically similar principles but within which writhe conscious tendrils/a twist that redirects the causal forms created by the meme into Sinister crystallizations.

4. Unless the meme being used to affect a re-orientation/ "de-stortion" of Magian control is consciously understood and the 'de-storters' self-protected/insulated against the Wyrd/Ethos of the Aeon the meme will be forced to grow in accordance with that Wyrd/Ethos and take the shape/form of a Magian structure.

4.1 Awareness of the vagaries of a meme and its inherent ability and effects and awareness of Aeonics, human vagaries and its historical/memetic record of behaviours is still not enough to insulate a form from Ethos distortion. There must be a supra-personal goal pursued above all individual concerns the implementation of which is designed to strike at the very heart of the Essence of the 'Magi' and not the appearance – this involves the collaboration of the extraordinary efforts by Undividuals or 'first humans' to solidify as a cohesive force to combat the meme without being seduced by the meme. There must [at this stage in history] be an aggressive, time-based momentum that appeals to the counter-meme characterised by Satan.

4.2 Seduction by an eventuation of Power would mean that the counter-meme has failed to overcome the distortion and become a distortion itself – and as a Representative of Opposition that would require being headed by Adepts – an incredibly powerful one capable of undermining a great many attempts by the Syndicate to reverse the damage owing to their extensive knowledge of the techniques and modalities of the Black Arts. In this event, those Undividuals would become extremely dangerous enemies to the Satanic Syndicate, to the Sinister, and to Change and should be sought out and promptly executed.

4.3 Overcoming Seduction cannot be achieved by a being possessed and driven by a human-centred geometry – geometry that is generally of the personal sphere. Only a life-centred geometrical possession enables the cold detachment necessary to chain the ego to the Undividualized Will of the Satanic Adept.

4.4 The majority of Great Leaders have been seduced by power, inevitably leading to Hubris and their decline.

5. The majority of Great Leaders fell into Hubris either by ignoring the warnings of imminent seduction and excess of power – or did not have the Undividuated support of Five other Satanic Adepts.

5.1 The Enshrinement of Fear and Laziness is the real essence of the Way that has come to be seen as a personalised 'White Lodge' or 'Magian' distortion comprised of a group of white magical masters acting in conspiracy. Most persons living that Way are, aeonically, as meaningless as those persons who live the meme of the Sinister Tradition which is equated to Wisdom and Striving – for both are superseded by the power of the memes that influence them.

5.2 Part of being an Adept is understanding and accepting these facts as a means to move forward.

THE COLD FACTS OF FORM AND MANIPULATION [III]

1. The Form of the Magi below the Abyss IS diametrically opposed to the Form of the Sinister.

1.1 The Form of the Magi after the Abyss is seen to utilise identical energetic leys/currents/memes as the Sinister. The two forms now swim interchangeable.

1.2 What then is the inherent difference between the Magi and the Sinister?

1.3 When apprehended in the context of 'Form' the inherent differences are different pending the Time and Culture and Individual Terminology.

1.4 When apprehended in the context of 'Dialectic' the inherent differences are unified and expressed below the Abyss via the 'Narrative' Appeal of Leaders.

2. Narrative is racially, spiritually, intellectually, magically, historically etc defined by Pre-time Events. Pre-Time events are events that have their roots in the past, well before the birth of an Individual and are generally never created from Original inspiration.

2.1 Pre-Time Events are taken/drawn from tradition, culture, heritage, legend, storytelling, and myth. Such Events are featured and referred to in holy books and guides with the express intention to help offer guidance to an individual/group/culture/civilisation and function as a Weltanschauung or World View of Order amid what is invariably referred to as an approximate of the Chaos and Confusion of the World.

2.2 Pre-Time Events are always based on a pre-nirvana or pre-paradise [I.e., Atlantis] that is enshrined in a "Golden Age" from which Humanity as a whole has fallen from and must attempt to return to by living a certain way and upholding certain values.

2.3 Some of these Events prefigure a race of Gods that existed before Men. As a man of 'modern' consciousness I do not doubt that Men interpreted Gods from what they saw. As a magician I do not doubt that there were Gods. A large majority of these Gods were atavistic/animalistic/monster type entities. Only when proto humanity became more aware of its own humanoid form did such Gods begin to take on an appearance more like men.

2.4 It is inevitably a previous Form that is lived by an Individual and previous forms on which they base their way of living. Partly due to the communal system of peers, parents, authorities or state for instance, the individual builds a strong relationship with Forms tied to and rooted in the Past – especially, Pre-Time Events. Although at the time these Forms are learnt, they may seem to be rooted in the Present from the individual's point of view.

3. The Origin of Narrative appears to have arisen of its own accord – yet we may deduce that it occurred between the inception of Original Chaos – and the faculties of Interpretation that led to the rudiments of the early Matrix that led to symbols/idols and group worship of a Form.

3.1 The current personal embodiment of the Magian wishes the ability for these kinds of observations to be forgotten so they may maintain their Status Quo in stasis.

3.2 The Sinister wish these observations to be considered with the full gravity they deserve as they speak of the undercurrents of what is really there before our eyes, viz. Geometry, and reduces the overwhelming diversity and glamour of the world into the context of Forms. This reduction divests the Magian of the protection of an impossibly complex network of things to be considered in any contemplation and places them in a simple context of biological/cerebral evolution, effectively stripping semantics down to the bone and removing the labyrinth of magical mystique that hides their own Origin in much the same way a magic trick is revealed to the magician's audience.

3.3 From the evidence of the manner in which we can observe today: that the fetus forms in the womb, the brains and synapses knit together, the bones solidify and the teeth, nails and hair begin to sprout, and the passage of an infant from a helpless baby into a wobbly toddler with stilted speech into a relatively articulate adult human being THEM believe that there is strong evidence for man's foundation in a system of biological evolution. Yet makes no assumptions as to the state of Life or existence of non-human entities prior to the Original Act of Staring into the Abyss.

3.4 The behaviour of certain men is what has come to be defined as the Magian, from all the evidence of biology/anthropology afforded to us today, arose, after, the Original Chaos. It is unlikely that the concept of 'Magi' on which many modern-day practitioners gleefully project their Shadow – were born with a malevolent streak to control. The Magian utility of Form to control could not have eventuated at least until Physical Violence was discovered: Chance let a being perform some unique display that engendered the awe/fear of others: or some means of communication was devised and made more sophisticated over time to share Interpretation.: and enjoyment was derived from the Abuse of these. The early Sinisterion logically evolved side by side with what would become the Magian and probably differed from them only in their opinion as regarded the direction of the Narrative gleaned from this abuse.

4. THEM hold – the Essence of the condition understood as "the Sinister" existed before men.

4.1 THEM hold – the Essence of what is understood as "Satan" / that current of Original Chaos of which "Satan" is only a recent extension, existed before Form and prior to Men as an antediluvian Sacred Geometry.

4.2 The Abyss came First. Second, the Sinister. Third, the Magian. I.e., Shock and Awe and the Staring into the Abyss. The development of a human being and its interaction with the world. The interpretation of the world.

4.3 The rudimentary forms of the Magian and the Sinister co-evolved late in the Interpretations of Humanity in a continuous struggle to Express. What is Expressed changed then and changes endlessly as it does today for Man is not conscious of what he is trying to Express and relies on the convenience of the Matrix and its catalogue of Pre-Time Events to define that Expression. And to re-define the Expression. And helplessly, in all efforts to re-define the Expression, ad infinitum.

4.4 Without knowing Why, Man Expresses. These Expressions are bound up in available Forms, in politics, in religion, in pre-time events and traditions that preceded that person. Any source of the origin of the need that incites the need for Expression remains an esoteric enigma – buried under hundreds of thousands of years of forgetting the Original Chaos via the constraints of that Chaos in an artificial Matrix of interpretations.

5. ‘Satanism’, as practiced by the ONA, hosts a deliberate system of erosion of fundamental ’dogmas’ that thrive in the Matrix and hold together many of its structures. THEM believe that this species of Satanism in particular is key to Remembering. The Sinister Tradition records adversarial memes that do not seek to act within and with the permission of the Matrix, but from outside looking in on the Matrix. Their systematic study of the formation of the forms in the Matrix and the Acausal as a means of placing thousands of these forms into one simple time-based context of an Aeon, triggers a ghostly Remembrance of the Original Chaos beneath the Illusion.

5.1 The atavistic/primal Memory of the Original Chaos and thus the Condition of Man and the questions that should be asked to get closer to it separate the Sinister from the Magian. The Sinister/Satan could be better understood if a thorough curiosity were extended into the development of man using the existing evidence and working backwards, without going so far as to contemplate any unobservable events such as the Big Bang Theory or the magical mystical point-blank of Creationism but to contemplate the proper Event in Time that logically suggests Us.

5.2 The Magian does not seek to reduce the clutter of the Matrix but to add to it – they are a species characteristically ruled by Fear. They strive to Forget.

5.3 The Sinisterion strives to Remember. To understand what is being Expressed both by and beneath the Illusions in which they find themselves surrounded.

5.4 The Magian are “The Closers” – the Sinisterion are “The Openers”.

6. What is culturally/aeonically/cosmically etc ‘correct’ is at its Essence a matter of personal contemplation and a will to re-power Pre-Time Events. What is culturally/aeonically/cosmically ‘correct’ etc is at its Appearance a matter of Pre-Time Events.

6.1 The truths revealed in the Abyss are impossible to reconcile with the truths adhered to below it.

6.2 It is both right and madness to ‘Remember‘.

6.3 Remember.

MAH-WIM-AYE-DAY-UM
THE ACTION PLAN

1. One of the main actions of the Temple of THEM, as detailed in 2008's release of issue #28 of Oto Anorha, was to set in place a new system.

2. Against us, are massive odds. These odds include existing systems, traditional behaviours and ways of doing things, changing things and repeating old patterns in the mistaken belief one is changing things.

3. These odds also include resistance to new methods by other forces, minor and major including forces that do not appear to be escapable (hubris/entropy), forces/forms that stand to lose ground from what we say (other groups and persons whose vested interest is in sustaining traditional methods), or alchemical forces such as person(s) or events whose existence clashes with ours or who have a legitimate or illegitimate opposition to us.

4. In attempting not to repeat these traditional methods, we have had to develop experimental unorthodox treatments.

5. We have had to ask some unusual questions. Such as 'Can you unite people without a hierarchy, shared beliefs, common goals, losing individuality, power games, in-fighting, hubris, dissent, proximity, identity, symbolism, cosmology, ideology?

6. THEM desires the best of both worlds and seeks to find ways to dissolve contradiction between any two or more given forms. Since between two forms is where dichotomy breeds and good vs evil spawn. Good vs evil gives rise to an 'Enematia', (A phantom suggestion of an Other) - this is how humanity has been for an age, can we overcome it?

7. To give absolutisms creates tyranny – to allow free reign creates anarchy. Both are necessary even as they are contradictory. How does one draw an outline without a drawing implement? How does one create solidarity without others knowing against what they assemble?

8. How to speak to people using a movement without creating a new dogma? How to make the boundaries of our presence known without controlling others? How to move beyond dichotomy when language is built to create it?

9. Externally, THEM is given voice by its method of pluralisation in which its members are referred to as WE and the impression given that all members of THEM agree to the same terms and conditions, maxims and mottoes laid out by a single speaker. Internally, members may not necessarily be in agreement or regard themselves as subject to or of maxims expressed by the speaker.

10. THEM believe that long ago, at crucial stages in human development, a mind war took place, and was lost against humans using superior forces and forms that enslaved others using ancient forms of magic.

11. This crucial period was inaugurated with the invention of Christ who amalgamated all previous pagan stories of life into one ultimate ideation that identifies itself as monotheism. This ideation would alter and instil, through force and ferocity the concept of singularity and a single apex that governed the known and unknown universe. It spread out across the world creating shadows of itself such as a Single book (the Bible), a Single Mythos (Judaeo-Christianity), a Single Language. (Latin).

12. When Nietzsche declared God to be dead, he exalted his singular concept of nihilism as the only answer – others would continue a monotheistic legacy with or without God – exalting some other single purpose, answer or philosophy as the meaning of all things, and like countless devotees of monotheism before them, fight ferociously to protect their one law – their Insynsia. God is not dead; the presence of his particular person is simply no longer necessary. But the great and lasting legacy of monotheism continues, creating death and destruction, pain and suffering, through the inability of humanity to entertain several or limitless ideation at once. What is foreign to a singular paradigm becomes the enemy of that paradigm;- this fact is implicit in all known paradigms. When singularity is challenged, it reacts badly because it seeks to defend its singularity. This is why religion is dangerous and why the ego is dangerous.

13. Such humans developed and mastered particular and insidious manipulations of the senses and social processes allowing them and other men to seize power over others using old magic. These magic's included politics, stratification, economics, violence, illusion, coercion, collusion, primary needs, rewards and punishment, pride and prejudice, forces and forms. They still do.

14. THEM believe that revolution changes power's hands it does not change humanity. Humans will with regularity repeat the game of master and slave.

15. The Temple of THEM exists to eradicate the footprints of God. And in this holocaust are included the footprints of Satan.

16. THEM must find ways to defeat both of these abstracts and their baggage.

17. Therefore it further exists to eradicate utterly the inheritances of monotheism, Insynsian (transferring the oneness of God to another idol), dualism (meaning dichotomy of good vs. evil).

18. And change the brain through adoption and use of novel methods so that it can be trained to entertain multiple paradigms at all times without traditional conflict of singularity.

19. THEM does not merely identify problems, more importantly it creates and implements, solutions.

20. THEM is a term with multiple meanings but essentially implies that any one thing does not exist in isolation and is always accompanied by a honeycomb of others.

21. In eradicating God and religious ideation we do not require the destruction of its idols, its ideas, its architects and architecture – we require to identify what makes God, God and undermine it.

22. The Planet speaks with forces that treat us with indifference – it has a life of its own, a time cycle of its own that dwarfs us and our sentimental constructs, existing as it does through Aeons. Yet we mimic its every move, copy its essence, because we are fractals of the same Creatrix. As the Earth has Tsunamis and Earthquakes that devastate the land and sea, so do humans have personal equivalents that flood us with emotion or subconscious contents bringing with it waves of destructive debris, and just as earthquakes tear apart the ground creating deep chasms and levelling buildings, so too can the human experience a ‘shock to the system’ strong enough to level the concepts and beliefs, faith or trust we have built in our minds, or have our solid foundations shattered in the wake of deep psychological tremors. Both forces, Phorm and Form, are types of THEM – Dark Gods – terrific forces that bring us to our knees. It is these that we identify, worship and seek to understand.

23. Natural Disasters, and among these should be counted those internal esoteric equivalents all of us have that can corrupt, change or destroy our present frame of mind or carefully tended personalities – decrease hubris. They remind us of our Place, though we hate to be reminded of it. They remind us of our lack of Purpose, though we hate to be reminded we don't know it. They remind us of our mortality, and how everything we think so important can be swept clean in the super-destructive forces of the Earth’s natural cycles – and we hate that too.

24. But we’ve been trained to hate, we’ve been indoctrinated to forget. We’ve inherited and continued, without question, the building blocks upon which our consciousness is based, and we continue to remain ignorant of the connexion between us and Earth, Earth and us.

25. This new system sees mankind change themselves internally by altering their concept of time, space, matter, and most importantly, traditional behaviour.

26. It involves the ceasing of the need to have an enemy, either real or imagined.

27. It involves the dissolution of the dichotomy of Light vs. Dark symbolised time immemorial by the sun and an evolution beyond with pathways of a new neurology.

28. It involves understanding that we are trapped within a story we did not write and cannot change through traditional methods.

29. It involves de-constructing forms so we can learn how they control us, coerce us, trick us.

30. It involves understanding patterns, cycles, reactions and reflexion, through a modus such as alchemy.

31. It involves knowing intimately, the functions and processes of our selves and the peculiarities of our own organism and brains.

32. It involves changing the landscape of the occult to focus on what still lies hidden.

33. Essentially, THEM wants to make a type of thinking process more prevalent and a key tool in people's belts, through its occult stages-how. (The occult occupies a flexible threshold where people will be open to accepting new and fringe ideas and have more chance of adopting or practising them.)

34. This type of thinking process (either Neuromancy or Quantum Philosophy) is a deconstruction of forms that hinder or hurt a person so as to change their orientation psychically and if possible, perceptually to limit that hindrance or harm. It also strips forms of their projected importance.

The processes to apply pressure/change to the above 34 points involve development of some of the following faculties:

- Selective powers of belief (the ability to switch belief in something on or off at will).
- A deep understanding of the influence of our role in and on Force and Form (Phorce and Phorm) and the extreme power its has over us, in aid of learning how we can reorient perception to lessen that power.
- To identify weaknesses in a form so as to de-construct it as one defuses a bomb or prop or strengthen a form to sustain it using our perception, physicality and skill in manipulating forms.
- To lessen the tradition of singular thinking or the Apex-complex known as Insynsian where language and behaviour are given in absolutes or any one type of thinking takes precedence before multiple-angles are explored.
- To use our brain's differently to inspire and invent new techniques for using them to achieve given levels of prowess in heuristics or examination.
- To establish a tradition of people who each examine the fundamental assumptions of the world for themselves.

- To establish a tradition of people capable of switching from human-centred to life-centred people.
- To offer an alternative No-Hand Path to the extremes of LHP and RHP.
- To inspire through our efforts a new wave of de-constructionists to further present and future insights and forms created through exploration of the Phyrm.
- To provide tools and a philosophy that are flexible and non-dogmatic.
- To establish a tradition that teaches and guides through sharing experiences and is added to by its members.
- To excite wonder in the world around us and all its phenomenon.
- To dull the habit of Reaction to certain Forms as programmed.
- To more effectively manage personal and others suffering.
- To focus on and explore Synchronicity, Ethics, Phorm and Phorce in depth.
- To self-study and create a library of insight into the human brain, dreaming, human behaviour.
- To unite with others who share our goals.

WHAT DO WE WANT TO BE DOING?
- Producing an annual publication with many voices sharing alchemical experiences (esoteric and exoteric).
- Maintaining a public presence to speak with others freely.
- Distributing any gains of influence or power among members.
- Operating a website with informative articles and up-to-date revisions, manifestos and links to materials and like-minded parties.
- Working together to establish a network of people with common goals, assisting others with similar goals.
- Managing to cohere without establishing a rigid system of beliefs or worship, rules or laws.
- Managing to resolve conflict amongst each other.
- Releasing books and publications that detail our insight and understanding of forms in formats and e-books.
- Adopting other forms of media to explore form and force, such as music, maths, art, speech, presentations.
- To accumulate in one accessible place, the collected works of THEM and maintain or keep together an up-to-date website, WordPress and e-zine in a central location online.
- To expand numbers by synchronicity.
- To close the Temple of THEM in January, 2036.
- To create a close-knit community of Empaths who can present their ideas and discoveries with one another with minimum conflict.
- To cause changes to the operations of the ego.
- To communicate with and invite other organisations with similar goals to work toward a common goal.

- To understand and appreciate the role of various forms including the darker and darkest aspects of alchemy as formative destruction and not react to attempt to eliminate them but see them as equal partners in the circle of life.
- To continually review and revise these notches

A MEASURE OF SUCCESS: HOW WILL WE KNOW WHEN WE HAVE REACHED OUR GOAL?

This is difficult to determine, but it may be indicated by the way people associated with us or influenced by us, treat one another and more importantly act/behave and process information on a fundamental level. If there is a growth in the types of written word and presentations that directly focus on key words or concepts such as we have coined, and advancements made in those media in a significant number we may consider that a ball has been started rolling that may result in a culture of heuristic self-explorers who will continue research and application of Phorce and Phorm. It is at the time of writing, 2015 and there are still 21 years to go by which time I will be nearing 60 and have given the majority of my life to a commitment to magical geometry. This is what I consider enough length of time for fulfilling purpose to my life. I hope that THEM will continue to offer purpose and fulfilment to the lives of others too. As time goes by THEM will try to determine what other's goals are on a small and large scale and try to facilitate the joining of like-minds to like-minds, i.e. writers to publishers, upcoming bands to music sites, people with specifics interests to others with experience in those interests as part of its aim to create a new world-wide community and eventually, Illuminati.

THEM, PLURALITY AND ARCHAEOLOGY

What is the secret of THEM? What is the purpose of a Mythos? Why do we call ourselves what we do?

Firstly – History, and any study that relies on using it to prove or disprove theories, truths or facts is as any experience in historical research and discussion with academics, specialists, archaeologists, an entirely messy and explosively disagreed on collection of woven tales whose authenticity can rarely be ascertained universally, whose motives for producing such works can never be satisfactorily defined, and whose dates, events, characters are at best hearsay with only the remotest outlines of what actually happened and whenever being close to certain – and never at all certain.

There can be no more holding of one single truth above another – this is the historical origin of the Magi and those who would seek to undermine that entity must not therefore seek to replicate it by simply exchanging one universal truth with another.

This is why THEM are different and why it is so very difficult to be one of us – we are conditioned to Insynsian – to expend all our efforts raising an apex by striving for a unified point – that is a false endeavour. When we look at the facts, we can often see what people are doing as opposed to what they say they are doing – all it takes is a little self-honesty and a lot of integrity. When we read about Christianity, Judaism, Gnosticism, Zoroastrianism we make an immediate set of leaps that we seldom notice. First, We accept on face value these terms are real and not just constructs, Second, We accept that they in some way define a very singular set of beliefs appropriate to a caste of culture of people, Third, We very rarely if ever attack the use of these terms and go looking for ourselves. We must learn to do that.

For instance, take Christianity. Some research reveals that the ignorance of this topic is high. Few know that Christ was once symbolised standing in front of the cross, or that early Christians worshipped the Sun just as the so-called "Pagans" did. THEM has already warned about the nature of grouping things in grand generalisations and the danger it leads to of building a false matrix – see An Analysis of Form.

The idea that the Christians appeared and suddenly swept across the world wiping everyone out is also too general. It is harder for us to understand millions of different actions working in unison by all manner of different people s that contributed to these things that we cite as points in time under simplified terms like Crusade or Inquisition. So much harder not to perceive such vast hives of activity of the human race at work collectively to bring short and prejudiced remembering of Events that mattered. All too often it was the hands we didn't see, names we didn't know, people who were not figureheads who caused History. People rely too much on forms – almost entirely on forms and this the greatest danger the Sinister face. They believe in demons and demonization and when they come for you some day – the men that will hunt you will believe in their gods and their way and that you are the devil and a heretic. And that is all. The public will scream for your head because of the way you are painted and portrayed, and the truth of history will become painfully crystal clear to you – it is remembered by the Victors. By those who used the most force, were willing to be the most cruel, who had the biggest most destructive weapons and merciless courts. Victors are successful killers, ruthless controllers.

Modern research claims Jesus was a swarthy dark-skinned man and that makes sense – but even those that mock Jesus in Anti-Christianity depict Jesus as a blonde, bearded, white-skinned mystic. The problem with human beings is their laziness – we have been conditioned to simplify things that are greatly complex leading to all manner of stupidities. There is intense hatred for the Jews on account of their creation or Usury [lending money and charging interest] – and yet it was the Christians who imprisoned them and denied them the right to trade [and forced them to find ways to survive] and treated them as second citizens. Almost certainly the Christians were in turn badly treated by another people, and those people by another. The Blame Game is one of the Magian's greatest weapons – it has enabled bloody wars and suffering for aeons – but you know what – it is simple ignorance of the personal and collective Shadow that has been at the heart of it. A simple ignorance of our own biological prejudice, dispositions and functions.

What was Christianity called before Christ was around to give his name to it? Were there clean precise separations between beliefs that became discoloured as other beliefs came to dominate them? Were the Sumer who lived a magical, pure, mystical Aryan philosophical way in pure empathy with the land, and stars and gods suddenly invaded and ruined by a tribe of Semites? No. Semites made up a large portion of Sumerian citizens – they were there from the beginning working together. What separates or separated them into Non-Semite and Semite? Blood? Origin? Belief? Language? Intent? None of these things. The Sumer were people, the Semites were people and as people they like all others laboured under the biological functions the human being's organism is possessed of. They too labelled things, they had enemies, they ruined the land, they mistreated and tortured people, they wiped out neighbouring tribes with cruelty and they were no less prone to corrupting other cultures than any other. It is the biological imperative of our species to do these things to survive, spread, populate, adapt, conquer. No-one knows either the origins of the Sumer or Semite people's and as always, there is at best only guesswork and speculation.

There is some evidence that the two languages of the Sumer and Semites were different indicating ancient differences of origin. There is some evidence that the way the Sumer saw the role of Man in relation to the Gods was very different to the later developments of a train of cultures who would see them differently, then see one, and change everything about how we did things, saw things, and why. But we must be careful of two things. Not to believe our own hype – this is the most important – and to remember THEM – the huge threads of other possibilities, missing information, lies from which we are drawing, misinformation, the sheer antiquity of studies passed from hand to hand to hand where Chinese whispers had a hand in changing any facts to post-facts.

People are very simple creatures. To understand, to motivate and to rule. They want few things. They want to be happy and healthy and live without suffering. All these forms layered and layered and layered over aeons upon our every move, motion and behaviour has caused THEM to write walls and walls of text just to get through that thick outer skin. We have been kept so busy doing that for the last six years and even before we formed the Temple that we have not had time to concern ourselves with concentrating on teaching what lies beneath that skin – our work is thus only half done and this problem of removing the outer skin is extremely difficult work with many years maybe decades of saying what thousands of others have been saying – only to be silenced with our deaths or drowned out under the tirade of superstitions, forms, prisons and lies that Magi after magi thickly slap back on after every cut we make. The lack of knowledge we have about our history, origin, biological weaknesses, psychological nature, abilities for powers, reality of magic, our doubts and fears, addictions and need for escapism – our pressure points – these are all KNOWN by the System that feeds us, these are all KNOWN by the vast team of marketers, advertisers, politicians, religious leaders, bankers, criminals and so on that control us on every level.

It is our job to reclaim this lost knowledge, to Remember what came before it, to remember the whole of it and not make the terrible mistake as others have of morphing into it, feeding it, mimicking it. This will be extremely difficult for anyone because it involves using more brain than we are used to – open doorways and perception to a multitude in all things and to change a psyche that has been trained for aeons to seek an apex – a single God. We stand on vastly uneven ground – we cannot call them our Captors because we captor ourselves and this is the truth of it.

The desire that has often been encouraged in us to smash them to the ground, to erase them, to eradicate them and start anew – is a naive and dangerous sentiment grounded in a total dis-reality. The desire to become Superman and Living Gods, to live immortally as Dark Gods – this too is a naive and dangerous sentiment grounded in a total dis-reality. There is no Superman – there is no healthy psyche without serious problems, someone will always suffer for someone else to get ahead, and to dream of being something we can never be is to deny what we CAN be as human beings who understand and utilise their existing functions better or perhaps a little differently than we are accustomed. We have been taught to hate ourselves, to deny what is wonderful about being human because our functions have been used against us and we have unconsciously grown ashamed of these weaknesses by which we are exploited and so we seek to become something other than human. I say to you – there is nothing wrong with who we are, and there is no reason why we cannot re-think, re-formulate and change what it means to be human – to set an example for others to follow – because without examples, without new choices – there is only obedience to the norm, and available choices.

Behind all the great inventions, ideas and events in History there is a backdrop almost completely ignored. Dreams. Dreams are the guiding compass of our communion not with the Divine but something more – the very things from which we come from for we are nature ourselves and we forget it. Dreams are the keys to genius – and we must remember them.

What is the purpose of Mythos? Abstract development of thinking teaches that several things can occupy one place simultaneously and all be true or valid. Last week I gave 14 different answers to someone who asked me a question to illustrate how one person could come at the question from many different ways, positive, negative, neutral, to affirm specific points or downplay others, to act in their interest or in mine, and so on. When we dig up the past and begin to build a picture of what happened – we have to accept our limitations and be wary of our prejudices. We want to prove the existence of a Magi – so we set about placing a selection of facts from a huge array of sources in a specific order that will lead to the conclusion that they existed. At no point has THEM denied that the Magi exist – we have unearthed many points of information regarding them, careful not to speculate beyond the facts or blanket term Christianity as the Magi – we isolated the term to the Medes of Persia, as did Herodotus who was one of the few writers to write about them.

But what IS the Magi? It's certainly not just people – and it is certainly not some trait that is foreign to the so-called Sinister. Indeed, even a brief study of Religion, Philosophy and Psychology cannot help but reveal the defect if there is any in the human race that deserves special mention is one that lies with all of us*. It has however said on numerous occasions that the Magi are within all of us and that should hint loudly at what we believe that term to mean. ONA's vague mystical ramblings of 'hubrati' are antique scaremongering, political myths in the making with no grounding and that, rather than create Adepts who see, create fools who gather their Shadow against a ghost.

There are layers of belief and you as one of THEM must accustom yourself to that reality. You cannot hold a singular truth up above all others, rely on neat little terms like Christianity to define or set the boundaries of where one belief began, and another ended – it is above all else in our research apparent that History is a mystical dreamland where the 23 Syndrome reigns supreme. We know that there have been no other written scripts discovered prior to Sumeria [Ki En Gi r] and so it seems a good place to stick our shovels. Emphasis on script -there are other sets of symbols – but we have taken the advice and issues of world experts whose speciality is language into consideration more and more as time goes by. Archaeology is rife with corruption – it is not a simple case of someone finding something and presenting it to some team who run tests to see if its authentic. Scholars, academics and archeos fabricate, change or omit claims every day. Artefacts are stolen, tombs robbed, new scripts faked.

Governments that don't want their history changed – particularly Middle East, Chinese and other religious or communist countries will openly suppress findings or threaten the life or careers of those who would try to bring new evidence that challenges the status quo to light. Under such enormous pressure or threat of death many capitulate and present what the Government attaches demand. Mythos does not necessarily reflect fact. Its purpose is to capitalise on those who are still in thrall to form – that is what Mythos is for.

So, we build a picture using the facts and treat it on one level as an accurate depiction of the past – why? – because that is what people need to believe. They need a beginning, a middle, and to believe in an end. People want stories – they very rarely want to write their own – especially so when it comes to something as vast and messy as history. They like simple things, facts, singular truths, easy to handle ideas. They don't like thinking that by dividing people into two groups such as Sinister and Mundane they are in fact being mundane by repeating the same practice of the Mundane – for that is what the Mundane do.

THEM – think plurally, all the time, aware of the shifting nature of so-called facts, the dubiousness of truths, the human motivations for power, greed, recognition, misinformation, allegiance to a form that colour the findings of history. We know that all forms rest on shifting sands. When we have built a reasonable picture grounded in facts, we will present it as a new history that has a beginning, explains how various things came to be, and fills others with the confidence we know what we are talking about. Of course, very few of them will actually know what we are talking about or why.

We believe that others believe. What we ourselves as a group and individually believe will be challenged greatly by THEM as it already has been and has yet to settle. Many clouds of dust have been stirred up with our persistent enquiries and cynicism into the state of accepted facts. We wait with bated breath to see what comes of this study – what it will ultimately mean for each of us and the beliefs we hold dear.

Scholars insist that there is no way the Dark Ones could be pre-Sumerian or that any kind of black magic or sinister lore was preserved in Sumer since only the priests wrote. We know only of a type of sorcery the Sumer feared because of the wards against it by the equivalent of a clergy. Only specialists wrote and no script with an encoded language exists prior to Sumer. The idea that there was a sudden split in a pagan way to a monotheist way is ignorance pedalled and believed by those who do not understand history, the length of time these things take, or the functions of their own species. It took thousands of messy years, hundreds of inventions, millions of minds and hands, and countless things to happen for things to change the way they did. And neither the origin nor certainty of any of them exists beyond speculation.

We see things not in terms of Forms that present themselves to us and say this is what is – but as Forces, of human agenda, motivation, habit, tradition, emotion, ignorance or laziness – as powered by human functions with needs, wants, desires to achieve something by putting those forms there. It is that which we look at and draw our information from – not from the mirages in the desert.

People will often nod along if you say something vaguely similar to what they are saying. If you condemn the same enemy, they do and share their shadow – you become their ally. Do things and people react a certain way – do them differently and they react a different way – but the ways in which they react are very limited because of the limitations and traditional habits of human biological function.

The Temple of THEM presents a difficult proposition. It requires far more of people than many are willing or able to give – because it does not suffer laziness of the psyche. We load upon ourselves far more than most are willing to in our desire to really Know -and a large part of knowing is that others don't know. We refuse to be lazy or to accept the world as it is – this means we must rebuild it and that is a monumental task. We also enlighten our burden at the same time by shrugging off forms – that colossal weight of the world with all its pretence and sham – we see through the endless sea of forms shoved in our faces to convince us of an illusion – and to the forces underneath that proffer them with frightened pale hands.

Past a certain point – you will come to understand that my words too are forms that must be discarded. I only hope you walk with me far enough that I may teach what I know and then allow you to make your own decision on who to be and how to be it. I hold no illusions that we will reach our 30-year marker with a fairy-tale ending. The very nature of the work requires that most of you will not be with the Temple or even allies of it in years to come – for you will inevitably go your own way as you come to truly understand the esoteric nature of the Temple of THEM and my work.

The forces that cause Change are greatly misunderstood – the Great Work is not a list of ingredients mixed together in measured doses to produce a magical elixir. The Great Work and service to your fellow humans requires extremely harsh alchemy, personal sacrifice, inner struggle, conflict, the event of traitors, schisms, dissension, internal war, hurt feelings, betrayal, pain, suffering and despair. Loyalties will be torn because that is what humans do, must do, to find autonomy – to truly be One of THEM there can ultimately be no loyalty to anything. We hold forms in front of our faces like torches to illuminate the darkness ahead – but as soon as we emerge into light, we discard them. We believe what we must believe for the duration the magic requires. You all took an Oath but how can you honour it when it binds you to a form.

Sooner or later as to struggle to throw them all off – you will come to these ones and be faced a dilemma. How do I throw these off? And my answer to you? You just do.

We don't own you – never did. We don't control you – never did. Everything we've done has been different to the way others do it because we gave you back to yourself. Sure, in the beginning we lead you, put a maze on front of you you had to follow a certain way to get there – and when you got there? You were made responsible for you. You were taught how to see through Forms – and once you bite through that chain, Nothing can hold you. We tore down those temporary walls, broke any chains and set you free. And that's as simple as it gets. That is how things change. By example. We don't need you to stay loyal to us or bind yourself to a form you can only ultimately outgrow or outshine. We don't want to drag out the decade pretending we have secrets you didn't get, dangling carrots in front of you to keep you hungry or make you follow us to the end. You came because you wanted something we had. We gave it to you and now you must decide what to do with it.

The World will change and gravitate toward this outcome of evolved consciousness one way or the other – it is our nature, and no man, not even the greatest Magi can stop nature from doing what it wants – for they too, are her Bitches. This war for the Aeon is really only about one thing – people fighting to speed up the inevitable, people fighting to slow down the inevitable and people affected by the inevitable. The Temple of THEM seeks to speed up the inevitable and aid its transition. There will always be a place for those who worked with us to keep working with us – but when it is your time to go, certain wheels will turn in motion. and that parting cannot naively be expected to be amicable or pleasant but the snapping of any tentacles you believe bind you to us or us to you.

It might be violent and prolonged, or you might just slip away into the Night. Both these things are alchemy too – it is just the way things are, just the way certain energies express themselves or multiply into new forms – by pushing off another existing form with all its might, using that other form as a springboard for new ideas, often in direct opposition – but hopefully outside of both. This is what forms are for – this is why we created them. The Temple has been attacked, betrayed, slandered, before. It has housed many travellers who learned from us and then went their own way – largely because that is what we teach.

It is the lack of knowledge on how forms change, mutate and grow that causes such heartache for people on both sides. There is of course the possibility that those who come to learn, stay as have the key six of us stayed together since the beginning. The Temple of THEM will cease 24 years from now – which may seem a long time but not for what we have set about to do. Change, is very, very slow. For every insight that frees an individual there are a million ready to swamp them. One person says history is A, another that history is B, and another that is it C, and yet just by the insistence of A,B,C we can see that history is also X and Y. Everything is always X.

X is Undefined – especially in the case of those things that seem defined. And we must forever ask Y whilst temporarily using belief in A, B or C to achieve X. The less certain people are – the less hold form has over them. But only certain people can shrug off form. For most it is a blissful nightmare from which they will never awaken unless the wake up emerges as a trend. It is our job to set that trend in motion, to teach abstract and plural perception, and find and work with the few others around the Planet on whom the Magi's spells are also wearing off and that are starting to Remember. THEM has always stressed the necessity of understanding how to accept and use a form and at the same time treat it as temporary, a form of language that we use to communicate or apply pressure or affect something by inducing its reaction to the form. The Temple of THEM has no boundaries, it is not a physical place that can be burned to the ground or attacked – it is the rise of an inevitable expansion of consciousness that has grown tired of the deceptions plastered onto its nature. The Temple is not a structure, a location or a thing – it is the majesty of destruction of single-minded Insynsian. Of being able to think Plurally – of seeing not one truth but all of Them, thinking not from one part of the mind but all of Them, accepting not one explanation but understanding the common force behind all of Them, it is inside, outside and beyond us – the force that motivates humans to better themselves. And it this that we Remember.

We remember that there was not always one way, that forces speak louder than forms, that humans have limitations, that we have forgotten them while others exploit them, that facts are rarely stable, that different times believed different things and will again, that we can change things if we only know where to start and what to do, that the human race is not a forsaken embarrassment and all it takes is an example that is followed, echoed, copied to set in motion a new type of human being. A life-centred being that understands his frailty and the fears of others, who sees beyond the defences thrown up at life's frightening visage and faces them, afraid or unafraid, because they are One of THEM and THEM of One.

FORM 101: [Transcript]

In the interest of giving a more immediate entertaining introduction to my fascination with forms and the complex role they occupy in our lives.
I created this presentation/film. In the event the link should fail, a transcript has been provided.

Form 101 Video [See Chapter 13]

A scientifically indeterminate time ago …

The planet we call Earth came to be.

We give names to things, to understand them.
Here we see a crude set of shapes, but we interpret it as mountains, a lake, a forest, grassy land and a blue sky.

The ability to simplify complex stimulus into simple shapes is a core aspect of our interpretation procedure.

An adult will view this rudimentary landscape with archetypal familiarity, but will also note the naive simplicity of the drawing and details, attributing it to a child-like understanding of the subject matter.

Yet what is essentially a set of random set of shapes takes on significance as a landscape because of trained associations.

We recognise the triangles resting on a horizon, our name for a division between a mass of green and a mass of blue, and coloured grey like rock – they must be mountains.

However, your ability to separate what we view into geometric shapes is an artificially developed convenience.
It is far more difficult to make this separation when presented with the boggling complexity of immediate nature, where outlines and shapes are extremely difficult to determine – if not be entirely proved a figment of imagination all together.

Or if the colours are swapped around?

Or the traditional relationship between object and colour is broken. ..

Or the traditional relationship is broken between object and perspective?

The scene seizes to be organised , categorised and its meaning becomes less familiar to us. Some viewers may suddenly feel anxious at this, and even feel a need for the proper associative colours and orientation to be returned.

This anxiety tends to occur because humans, as a rule, hate the unfamiliar.
We may call this image ugly, annoying, or even art.
But only when the grass is green, the sky is up and the browns stalks meet that dark green splodge…

Will we recognise this as a landscape.
Or as a familiar object.
When the rules of the relationship we have built our associations with are significantly altered.

We loose our orientation, and find it much harder to triangulate what something is.
So we search for clues.
Or rather, our subconscious and automatic processes of interpretation do this for us.

It breaks down the subject matter into smaller parts. It looks for relationships, and there can only be relationships if there are things that relate to one another.

We look at the shapes, the colours, and search for associations made and stored in our memory, and our subconscious scans its vast collection of archetypal residual collective too.

Failing to find any association to double red triangles surrounded by yellow , we may search for meaning in where we found the image , who it was made by , or perhaps why it might have been made.
Because if we cant fin meaning to something , then we ignore it, dismiss it and forget it.

-OR FEAR IT –

But it is very rare that the human does not find some way to catalogue everything – perhaps even unheard of.
Whenever we are presented with a stimulus, we name it.
Whenever we experience a phenomenon, we name it.
To communicate, to warn, to inform, to describe, to control, to direct, to survive it – we name it.

Or someone names it for us.
Or already has a name for it.
And if its new, then they simply make up a new name for it.

If there are no suitable cues, then the image becomes freed from organised form and catalogues and open to interpretation.
Rorschach's ink blot tests are one example of this, where any vacuum of meaning is filled with the projections of the subconscious.

The forest may now appear to be a motorcycle and side-car, a flying space pig or virtually anything else the human being can conceive of in a valiant effort to project meaning on to it.

The natural and conditioned inclination of the human mind is to find meaning in things. It wonders for instance, whether things have intrinsic meaning, an absolute definition – but it seldom realises that its own mental prejudices have created the concept of things, to begin with.

The human being struggles so heard to project meaning onto things even if there maybe no meaning – as a result of Original Chaos, and the overwhelming fear of the experience of non-being into Being.
Nothing has changed since our inception in regards to our fear of the unknown. We seek familiarity, recognition, consistency as part of our natural inclinations as a creature of nature, and as part of our heritage which bid us to creating forms to cope with and reduce the enormity of life.

The SYMBOL is perhaps the best example of such a reduction.

Electricity is an incredible concept believed to be created by the discharge of ions at an atomic level.
Electricity names a force with no distinct shape, that we reduce to sparks, forks of lightening, invisible charge, current, voltage, amps, and so on.
Lightning strikes upward from the ground, it does not strike down, as our eye and literature would have us believe.
Electricity is as dangerous as it is necessary to our lives, it is created with turbines, water, wind, solar power, batteries; found in some eels and fish, can leap across gaps, and is really only noticeable when a light goes out, appliances don't work, or the power bill comes in.

This is just a tiny example of its diversity…

Electrical charges also power the synapses in our brain.
The cessation of with is a by-product of death.

This extremely complex phenomena are reduced by human beings into a single symbol. A lightning bolt.

But when we try to look any closer at the intrinsic content of the universe, current efforts indicate there is no end to it – at least not that our technology has been able to detect.

Rather more disturbing is the inability of science to pinpoint the building blocks of the universe. When they tried to observe light for instance, they discovered that it was both a wave and a point, but it could not be pinpointed in both time and space. It was one, or the other.
What this suggests – is that our obsession with Singularity, isolated objects, divisions of time and space…

May be preventing us from seeing the Universe how it actually is, or rather, not how it is, but preventing the many ways we may potentially possess the capability to perceive.

The importance of this potential – lies in the ability to perceive objects, events, even singularities as a loop or multitude, a kind of quantum thinking.
Without this self-conscious awareness and acceptance that our human perception has particular limitations, flaws and is prone to performing the way it does largely out of conditioned habit – our apathy towards perception allows others to control us by controlling the contents and meaning of our life.

Our physical limitations, an emotional attachment, gullibility, self- deception, arrogance, egoism, naivety, belief in forms, trust in face-value, the power of words, ideology, religions, politics, propaganda, what people say, symbolism, and even our prejudices of space and time – set up certain conditions.
And through manipulation and abuse of these frailties and levers of our biology certain conditions can be set up.

Without being conscious of any of the functions and tricks our body , mind and senses play and play on us – we lapse into a pre-determined idyll of reality in part created for us and in part maintained by us – i.e. Ignorance.
Optical illusions, shortcuts our brain takes, inverting of images by our eyes, tricks of light, the blinding speed of our computations, our cataloguing of contents, memory, dreams, emotional injections and associations we develop, forms, fears and more define our reality.

Just as optical illusions cause us to react, often involuntarily, other forms play other tricks on us too.

Although an independent study of the eye would take us too far from the subject at hand, it is worth including a few details to illustrate what we take for granted is seldom what is occurring.

The way we perceive light differently at night, through cones and rods, for instance, was taken into account when the police and emergency services designed their lights . They use red and blue so that the colours are more easily noticed.

Without being aware of these tricks and particular ways we process things, we are at the mercy of those who do.

Those who understand sex sells, tap into our insecurities, our urge to procreate, be loved and our fear to be unloved, alone, ugly, etc. can tailor forms that deliberately prey on our common fears in order to sell something at our expense.

Those who know human beings experience anxiety, tailor special methods to induce our anxiety – by preying on the things we all feel, worry, happiness, sadness, grief, love, hunger, want, acquisitiveness, greed, insecurity, pain, fear…

They can make it unpopular to be a true individual, an outcast, singled out or alone – and can tailor a culture that pressures us to conform, belong or join a group.

Those who understand how easily we are distracted by humour, can cover up or distract us from the greatest atrocities, direct our attention away from the serious nature of a topic or event, cause us to laugh rather than act.

Visual stimulus is not alone in being used in manipulation.
The secret world of Sound, Taste, Smell, Sight, Touch, are all BIG business.
Subliminal message tapes are for sale to be used in shopping malls underlain with messages to the consumer not to steal.
Music encourages and induces unconscious emotions. Quiet muzak, black metal, techno/rave music for instance, all have discernible effects on the heart and physiology.

MSG, additives, preservatives, genetically modified flavours and foods are painstakingly developed in laboratories and chemical vats to reproduce flavours using cut-price and even dangerous ingredients – specifically to appeal to our taste buds. Fast Food restaurants spend millions funding research into smells effective shapes, colours, packaging, slogans all to directly appeal to the customer – and millions more hiding this side of their business from them under brightly coloured campaigns, dumbed down catch-phrases, misdirection and Spin to avoid legality of telling lies.

Having personally worked for companies whose directive is to 'aggregate data' I am all too aware that large buildings filled with monitoring equipment, both Federal and Private, do exist and are collecting our data. Few people know that to delete an email is to delegate it 'rubbish' and therefore, public property, up for grabs.
Having also investigated the position of Secret Shopper I have seen the lengths Businesses go to secretly spy on their staff and that of other companies; including instructions to the shopper on how not to draw attention, how to lure certain questions from staff, what to wear, say and do, right down to minute details concerning body language.

Having engaged in various marketing avenues I am aware of the deceptions of the trade that go into wringing the dollar from the customer and the vast scientific array of disciplines quietly dedicated to finding the natural weaknesses of the human being and taking advantage of them.

Moreover, I have witnessed the cut-throat razor blade intellect and ruthlessness of those who assemble the creative side of marketing and found it as fearfully frightening as it is morbidly fascinating to watch grand manipulation at work.

So, is naming something, creating a form?
Yes and no.

Forms exist, whether we name them, or not. They are geometric intricacies that nature provides courtesy of her own unknown chthonic laws .

We are one of those geometric intricacies.

But imagine this is a scene of Earth well before Humans came to give it that name.
Billions of years ago, when its surface had yet to cool and was still a molten inferno.
Before there were people to call it lava, magma – what was it called?
And if there was no-one to call it anything – what was it?

Before there were humans to name things, there were no names for things.
There were no associations for colours, no connection between green and grass, blue and sky.

Without humans, there were no names, and with no names, no meanings, no projections – everything still was and existed by its own unknown law – but it was not our concept of order that gave it structure.

Neither was there anyone to distinguish a triangle, a horizon, trees, shadows, shapes, or for that matter, heat, time, space, or anything else.
And that includes our perspective, which is a prejudice we rely on to neatly frame images with a rectangle to indicate height and length.

But without even people to name them, nature persisted.
Though she is far more intricate that we could ever hope to encompass or understand – and so human beings simplify, by imposing patterns, shapes and associations onto Her.

Although when we take the time to look closely, no two objects are exactly the same, we group them as though they were.

And we group things because we believe them to be singular objects, placed together.
We sum up the total Being and capability, of all human beings with a name, their name.

Because without a name, they need a number, an associate, something – anything – to relate them to in order to tell someone else who/what they are.

Because it drives us crazy when we are interested in something, to have no information about it.

We ask for their name, who they are, what they like, what they are into, to build a picture. We ask how much, how long, how far, until when, does it come in other colours – because we are interested and because we want more information.
It is perhaps a survival trait.

“There is a brown fawn coloured, fawn on its chest, more chocolate-colour than caramel around the paws, and with green eyes that twinkle, bear of the genus x-x, with a foaming snout and moving at around twenty paces with its shadow stretching out long beside it and its weight cracking the branches as it approaches, coming up behind you… “

Or…

“BEAR! FUCK! RUN!”

The ability to communicate danger with short sharp phrases or even a sound is vital to all human beings.

It has rightly, enabled us to take command of an alien condition of being born into a hostile planet, and thrive and survive the harshest of conditions for aeons – to develop great cultures and civilisations whose legacies have shaped and changed the world – covering it with human beings and their architecture from the hottest desert to the coldest ice.

BUT…

Although I can never hope to touch on more than a few rudimentary points in the great seas of science regarding how the human brain, eyes, ears, nervous system, intellect, physiology, heart, mouth, organs, skin, hair, opposable thumbs, etc etc etc work to enable the human being to perceive what it perceives…

An awareness that what we perceive and how we perceive it is subject to many complex processes that are amazing in their depth, scope and complexity is crucial to understanding and accepting the limitations of the human.

We treat the sea, the sand, the sky as separate forms, believing that where the water meets the sand there is a distinct division. But is there? Perhaps from our point of view, and habitual reference, there seems to be - but at the micro level this meeting is meshed as molecular structure.

A single cell of water or H2O presented as a molecule.
Water, as a mass, depicted on the molecular level.

We view the waters edge as separate from the sand, yet at some level we have yet to reach with our current technology , it may some day be accepted that there is no separation and what we perceive as two discrete phenomena are an interconnected mesh on an unknown as yet invisible plane or ether.

Our size, directly prejudices our perspective. We reduce whole worlds with single names, grouping staggering complexity for simplicity and convenience. This shower of millions of individual drops of water is dismissively reduced to ‘Rain’.

Rumoured that no two are the same – though me may wonder how they checked them all – we reduce the incredible geometry of each snow flake, unseen by the natural eye, to one amorphous mass.
Snow.

Our size and general perception handicaps our ability to perceive these other worlds. From our own vantage point many of these vistas are rendered completely invisible. The result of which has led to many timely and untimely reminders from Nature that these worlds exist irrespective of us noticing them.

Our ignorance of the micro-world of Bacteria …

…Led to the Bubonic or Black Plague in Europe in the 1600s.
Diseases from lack of hygiene carried by rats, resulted in the death of more than a million people.
At that time it equated at one third of the entire global population.

More than 400 years later, the bodies of Black Plague victims remain entombed under Europe's subways and sewers because it is considered far too dangerous to unearth the bodies and risk releasing the Bubonic strain.

Viruses

Diseases and Bio-toxins.

Gases.

Radiation.

Ultra Violet Rays.

Few have taken more advantage of the expectations of humans, and doing the unexpected, than those engaged in warfare and the military. Camouflage breaks the typical form of the human being and we instinctively recognise by the shape of the head and the shoulders, concealing shine, shape, surface, shadow and silhouette.

Examples….

The habit of humans being used to having complex things reduced for them into a simple phrase or promise is abuse in the extreme by marketing.

Fine Print, hidden away in an inaccessible location and/or breathtakingly ambiguous catches out every day.

The world of the human being is a balancing act carefully juggled by an insane and confused array of optical illusions, learned conditioning, and reliance on forms.

Only Heurisy – a determined effort to research and find out how things work for yourself – could ever uncover or inform you of just how complicated the world really is, and how many shortcuts we have developed to try and process its staggering intricacy.

Or, Control it.

Imagine that you are in the Dark.

The most honest way to experience the world is without seeing it.
I have drawn a room and placed 6 objects in it.
But because I have coloured it black, there are no cues to tell you what they are. No associations, and no relationships.
You can feel for them though. And by feeling them you may be able to determine what they are, by eliminating what they are not.
The first one I hand you is furry, 4 legged, and purring.

It would not be unreasonable to guess that I handed you a cat.
But what are the other five objects?
I suppose you could guess.
But you would be guessing for two reasons…
The first reason is because you have no cues, no clues, no colours, description, no sensation of the object, no information to go on about what those objects might be.
But the main reason you might try and guess – is because I told you there were 5 more objects.

Since this is a flat screen, and we are only pretending to be in the dark, this darkness could in fact be anywhere. Your context, which is provided, is that it is a room.
But is it?
Without familiar cues, how can you ever know either way?

YOU CAN'T

If you wake in the pitch black, and a voice tells you there are pits in the floor. What will you think?

Apart from crawling around on the floor touching things and risking falling into one of these pits, the voice is your only cue.
The question is … do you trust the voice?

Most people would make a judgement based on the gender,, tone, inflection, pause, pitch, and presentation of the voice.
Some my believe that there are now pits on the floor, and some may not.
Either choice is irrelevant in this scenario – what matters is that the voice has filled the room with contents that cannot be verified.
In other words – the pits may or may not exist – but merely by suggesting them to be in the room – is enough to make them exist for some people.
Without more information – we cannot make a reasoned judgement of our own and may rely on an external voice to tell us what is going on, or what something is.
And we may well crawl on all fours in terror that we are about to plunge headlong into a pit just because we don't recognise our own garage in the dark.

If we crawl around enough, we may in fact convince ourselves that there are no pits and question the voice.
But if you woke up in the dark, with no idea where you were, what was going on, or how you got there…
Why wouldn't you listen to the voice?

Every baby, born into the world, communicates at first with gurgles, crying and screaming.
Positive and negative stimulus teaches the baby that crying a certain way will variously bring it food, nappies, attention, its mothers scent or entertainment.
It will also bring it safety, warmth, comfort.
And a 'voice' to keep it company, explain the world, tend it, comfort and soothe it, take away its confusion and provide a context for the condition of life it will some day be able to try and find words, purpose and meaning for, itself.
The baby has no words, no names, and cries in terror, in curiosity, in alarm, in fascination, in joy, and knows not what it does.

It will know what it does as it gets older, as it learns, absorbs, copies, mimics, repeats, experiments, explores, and is given context after context.
In this painful harrowing journey it will be challenged and face the summation of a nightmare daily as it struggles to come to grips with itself, others and the shapes, colours, objects, people, places, actions, it has not words for and a very limited understanding of.
It will know something by smell, sound, name, the time it appears – itself, mother, food, comfort, the dog. Gradually it will come to recognise basic shapes, learn how to walk, speak, and communicate. Later it will learn how to run, play fair, sit still, behave, navigate the house, danger, fun, cat.

Later still it will be challenged excessively as it comes to grips with who it is, laws, ethics, personality, history, social mores, culture, authority, religion, god, death, birth, sex, responsibility… and purpose.

The human being will start as a baby, forming concepts, and associations.

And at first, these associations will be vague and unconnected. Lines, sounds, a word, a sensation, here and there.

But these associations will increase exponentially, growing in number and complexity until there comes a point…

That connections are made, and one concept can be related to another. Relationships between oneself and ones actions and consequences or occurrences that are associated with one another begin to develop at a rapid rate.

However, as reality and conditioning, culture etc intrude and provide context, learning, punishment and reward for these associations – the confusion becomes more formed. Dimensions are added, time and space begin to dominate the context of all associations.

The organisation of forms begin to dominate and imprison a persons perception within a specific context…

They begin flexible, the associations loose and fluid…

The context of organisation fluctuates, changing shape and emphasis on different associations…

But as the human ego intensifies, it begins to build a layer of shields, or associations that it now refuses to remove or flex.

Religions views, personal beliefs, cultural traditions, practices, convictions, political leanings, likes/dislikes, prejudices, etc…

Connections made, meshed together and reinforced one another, giving rise to impenetrable shields, beliefs, ideas…

Previously elastic, the mind becomes rigid and regimented, one protective shield in the armour supports another…

New ideas, alternative reason, are shut down, and can no longer enter through the fierce layers of mental assertion…

Until the psyche is completely encased in artificial forms, beliefs and hardened plates. The self no longer plays a part.

And one day the human being completely encloses itself within a self-perpetuating shield of geometry.

What was a flexible, free-thinking organism, becomes a slave to its own ego – encrusted with forms the self is enclosed by a baleful gem that takes over, making decisions, determining emotional response and degree, throwing the human back and forth as it reacts automatically in accordance with its adopted beliefs and forms.

In thrall to forms, the organism acts automatically to defend or decry those things it has taken on board as its own – and elicits programmed responses to the forms that inhabit/infect it.

Just as the different eras and style of art tell a story of mental and spiritual development, with emphasis placed on different aspects of reality or its concepts – throughout history it appears the relationship between form and formlessness has never been far from the conscious mind.

The sacred geometry of the Platonic Solids was serviceable, but the struggle between solid form and mutable essence has been an ongoing human dilemma.

For millennia, human beings have sought the essence of things, the prime materia, or first cause. They have struggled to understand the world around them by taking it apart.

We endlessly struggle between faith in a fixed matrix and the idea that the universe has building blocks, a framework, liquids, gases, atoms, quarks, mesons, dark matter…

Sacred geometry, the footprints of God, the inner workings of matter, of metals, alchemical and thermodynamic forces…

We have wondered what our world is composed of, and how. We have tried to learn natures secrets by observing her.

But for every secret she gives up, two more present themselves. And as far as we try to go, inward, or outward, we reach our event horizon, an impasse.

Our technologies continue to inch closer inward, closer outward, at the atomic or galactic level – giving us a glimpse into the maddening intricacy and indefatigable scope of everything around us.

But like a fractal – the closer we get, the further away we realise we are from ever knowing what the Mysteries are. She just repeats Herself on a new scale.

Some cultures, enlightened as to our struggle, appear to have made peace with it – reflecting the perpetual loop in meditative devices such as the Mandala – neither form nor formless, but a dance between and beyond.

The perfection and golden means of the Renaissance, whose struggle for mathematical certainty gave rise to precision, perspective and absolute worship to Aestheticism, -highlighted a battle of forms vs the formless. Artists like Dali and Picasso, and the artistic movements of such disciplines as Surrealism and Cubism would continually arise to the fore of human expression – repeating some deep internal dissatisfaction of the collective soul or spirit with the material world and the emphasis placed on aesthetics, shapes, and form.
For them, life was not straight lines and simple.

It was a sublime interplay where it was arrogance to assume where something ended and another began.

That the figure of man had to look like a man to be a man was understood to be a ridiculous gesture to pursue – man knew nothing about himself but his own projections.

These intrepid insights into the nature of things and of mans own perception brought man ever closer to knowing his own farce than ever before – what seemed to be a chaos was truth.

But man is not ready to know his face, nor accept it, and so the whispers continue, and the battle to reveal the truth about the illusions of form rages on.

While we live in our own limited world, obsessed with the material, the physical, and the mundane reactions our architecture presses on us..
Mother Nature often reminds us how little and powerless we really are.
It is as if she has designs to keep our arrogance in check and to keep us watchful and humble.

FORM 102: METAMORPHOLOGY

Sorcerer, why is Self-Awareness important to your evolution? Because of its relationship to forms.

Form can be likened to a crystal. It can be diffuse and presented as numberless shards; or resolute and rigid, a hardened template with distinct edges, height and structure.
Imagine you stand in a cluster of floating shards as far as the eye can see. The shards of different size, length, colour, distance. Imagine that each shard's position represents a direction in which we may travel, a unique location or star we may visit, and a boundless sea of choices as to which shard we navigate toward. This is a metaphor for knowledge – an analogy for books, travel, experience, variation, diversity. We can see that a diffuse crystal offers the full wonders of the world and access and opportunity to explore all of its mysteries both wicked and wondrous. In such a state, anything is possible for the observer – there is no inside or outside, no restriction on movement, and we are free to roam among the crystalline realm.

Now envision the crystals coming together like an inverse explosion to merge into a singular piece with a well-defined, toughened exterior that gleams from its pointed terminations. No shards float in the spaces around it, all are absorbed into the singular construct. The previous freedom of direction is minimised, the locations of unique objects has greatly reduced, and choices have been compacted. From the crystal's point of view, it is all there is. All around it is a vacuum, it is the only thing in existence, and outside of itself lies only empty space.

Both of these states have value.
In the first, there is Breadth. A coalescence of unlimited scope with no known boundary. This can be likened to Receptiveness, Open-Mind, Curiosity, the Infinite, the Unknown and actively Seeking new information, knowledge, experience. Overwhelmed by the vast beauty and number of shards we are likely to float and explore the vast sea of shards without spending too much time with any one of them; distracted from the beauty of one by the scintillating promise of another, the next and the many beyond that. In fascination we seek the brightest, shiniest, prettiest shard on which to place our attention, and we may go on seeking forever, for there is always yet one more that holds greater intrigue.

In the second, there is Depth. A compaction of all into one that requires no choice, no direction, and only offers one location. This can be equated to Conviction, Surety, Certainty, Assertion, The Finite, the Known and the belief that what one knows, is, has, does is superior to any other possibility. One has accumulated, condensed, hardened their options into a singular structure which clearly demarcates itself from the empty space outside of it. There is no need to explore, no other shard to compete for our interest, nothing else to know.

Now, generate in your mind an explosion of this crystal into the billions of floating shards that made an endless sea in the first example. Now, condense it again with an inverse explosion to form a singular crystalline tower. Now detonate it again. This, is the process by which we reflexively change shape and change shapes. It is of value to widen our realm to open ourselves to new ideas, practices, views, perceptions – but it is also of importance to focus in on and block out distractions to closely examine one particular shard.

It is like pneuma, Breath. Breathing in compacts the air into our body, breathing it out frees it to dissipate. And, like breathing, it is a cyclical process, in, out, in, out; our entire lifetime, from our first until our last. So it is with form – sometimes, the process becomes stagnated when the Sorcerer forgets to breathe in, or breathe out. This often happens, when preoccupation with finding or having found a given shard (or idea) amongst the sea, so fascinates the sorcerer that they become transfixed by it. When this happens, they reject all other shards, for the one they have found is seen as of such immense value that no other can compare. An example is (1) a belief, which takes on (2) a name, which imparts (3) an identity. For example: There are forces greater than us, They are known as THEM, I am One of THEM. Or, the moon and its tides rule my body, the moon is a Goddess named Hecate/Demeter, I am a worshipper of the moon, I am a witch. Or, the world is defined by good and evil, I am not evil, therefore I am good. Through defining our belief with a label we create an identity of relationship: I am One of THEM, a witch, a good person. etc.

In creating such an identity we create an immediate boundary of what constitutes ‘One of THEM’, a ‘witch’, a ‘good person’ – and the only way to determine this is to conjure perceived opposites, without which there is no meaning. We then determine what ‘is’ by what is not – i.e. Man makes no sense without Woman to compare. This tension of opposites is represented by the singular crystal vs the empty void. Valid content is the crystal, invalid content is the void. Every identity or form can only be constructed by mentally limiting what distinguishes it from being all other things. The process is often unconscious, however. And frequently dominates us without our awareness of what we are doing or the power of the boundary we are setting, and because it is a constructive process that gives us a feeling of control, it engages the Ego which loves nothing more than to assert a static reality that is safe, known and allows us to fully assert our being by knowing its relationship and context to the universe that surrounds it.

With the Ego involved, it feels so right, so clear, so justifiable that we gleefully adopt it as representative of our values, our identity, who we are and what we believe, what we stand for and what we fight against. We are absolutely sure we are living the truth, that we are fully appraised of every experience, and that reality holds no surprises. Each crystal shard has its own particulars, a dizzyingly complex labyrinth of factors that we enforce with our belief to be true. This is analogous to our Understanding.

But, the danger exists that enamourment with a given shard (i.e. a religious or political fixation) causes us to forget there were so many Other shards. Because we see no other options (having condensed them all) there are no challenges to our fixation, and if there are, we absorb them into the dynamic of our belief. In effect, we forget to breathe out again. Dominated by our unwavering conviction, and desire to possess only our crystal, we fiercely keep it compacted to endlessly explore the totality of its depth. Sacrificing breadth.

Under such a spell we create the inside/outside, the friend/foe, the shadow/light where what does not accord with our shard is cast outside of our shard. This same process is echoed in the creation of the Nation State, which sets up a territorial boundary. This immediately creates insiders that become 'civilians', and outsiders who become 'foreigners'. So it is, with knowledge too. If we ascribe to Stoicism, we might reject Libertinism; if we embrace Communism we may detest Capitalism. Our identity limits our possibility.

Remaining diffuse as a sea of shards, or solidifying into a singular structure are both useful in their own right. Often, the Forces of the world play their own part in forcing an explosion of the singular (i.e. a loss of faith for the religious) or condensing of the infinite (such as a person becoming a citizen of a country and therefore an 'Italian', or 'Australian' under legal jurisdiction of their nation).

Equally, being open to new experiences and ideas allows one to open and pass through any of the countless gateways available to human experience – from learning a new language, to becoming rich/homeless, to finding some new way to fold clothes, performing a task by watching or learning from other human beings, or being challenged to re-evaluate their views and practices, as examples.
Being closed off lets one block out challenging, change-bringing, disruptive questions and invalidations and allows the total unified consciousness to be directed toward the worship, practice, observance of narrow field of form. This is easier on the Ego, the path of least resistance as described by the law of thermodynamics and therefore favoured because it requires greatly less energy because within its bounds there is no new information to process. All is presumed known and needs only to be repeated ad infinitum. The addiction to this low-expenditure form of being means one need not think for oneself but merely follow a pattern, fully certain that it is the truth. The most energy expended in such stasis is in aggressive defence of the form, against any who would try to upset the neat encapsulation. I.e. the defence response of Scientology to detractors. This is the mainstay of cults, religion, politics, group think, nationalism, but also dominates isms, ologies and 'fields' and 'disciplines' etc. Essentially, the process is a reduction of Being to a low harmonic, often with others in a low harmonic, creating a powerful energy field. Each being reinforces the other by vibrating at the same frequency and controlling the frequency band through behavioural control which prevents deviance from the new established norm. This makes breaking out of the frequency band difficult if not impossible, hence the majority of the world is religious, meaning it expresses an irrational belief in faith, the divine, and reinforces itself daily through ceremony and ritual.

This process of condensing allows great exploration of a single form to take place – to learn in detail about the form in which one is imprisoned/encased (when unconscious) or embracing/exploring (when conscious). This process is a necessary aspect of developing and honing occult power. To lose oneself in, and to, a form so as to Become a specific identity, vibrating at a specific frequency, brings with it unique qualities, experiences, energies, insight, particularly as one makes contact with others vibrating on the same frequency. For instance, those obsessed with Cryptocurrency, or Cross-fit, or Gnosticism have their own cultures, norms, taboos, practices, language and identities. Often, hierarchical. Thus, one Becomes for instance, 'a Satanist' and can noticeably adjudge the presence of the above by telling others. Others will react in various ways to this claim of identity, which they may accept, but will also project their own definitions of 'a satanist' outward and onto the individual, with unexpected results. This is an interesting experiment to undertake when one is not in fact what one says, but can readily see how quickly identity offered is identity accepted: i.e. the juxtaposition and contradiction of appearance and essence. This is how people become transformed into 'terrorists', 'communists', 'criminals', 'judges', 'children', 'evil' etc.

But care must be taken. Losing yourself in a form, however beautiful, enticing, or perfect eliminates the desire to breathe. The Sorcerer can become trapped in belief systems that permanently limit their exploration, cut them off from being open to both old or new ideas, from speaking with or engaging with perceived enemies, or from learning in an evolutionary fashion by walling themselves off from those they hate, distrust, fear. Especially, when others convince them who their enemies are; this can limit what the Sorcerer reads, says, thinks, does, seeks and finds.
Beyond the control of the sorcerer, it is often only a matter of time before a form explodes of its own accord resulting in a devastating reevaluation and realisation that one tricked themselves or was tricked into believing one thing or another. This happens with relationships, friendships, alliances, agreements, faith and so on, and is usually a detonation caused by contradiction which destabilises the vibrational field. The pressure is also often too great from the maelstrom of the interplay of forces for any form to sustain itself indefinitely in one piece; it will eventually splinter into other forms, as likenesses or even rejections. Though forms have trouble remaining fixed, some sorcerers can be held indefinitely in a form if they are hypnotised in place, even their entire life.

So, Remember, to breathe in, and to breathe out, and to repeat. Collapse and condense, collapse and condense. For therein, lies the secret to Embrace, Exhaust, Evolve; the danger and the promise of forms and 'Metamorphology'.

PHORM 361 DEGREES

Theoretically there are 360+ degrees in the art of Knowing Form. We may in the future exchange the term “Form’ with our ‘Phorm’ to relate what we mean – not what others mean or meant by this word. For now, we’ll leave it as it is.

THE SOURCE CODE
Knowing all there is to know about something is impossible unless you are the source of that form. If the form belongs to you, then you know all there is to know because you know it first. I.e. Anton Long and the ONA, Aquino and the Temple of Set, Myself and the Temple of THEM.

INSIDE OUT
The process of knowing everything there is to know about something includes knowing everything that has nothing to do with that form. The art of elimination is already a requisite in most minds as it uses its detection of absence to determine what is missing from its vaults. If you are a LaVeyan Satanist and your knowledge of Satanism consists of knowing the SB back to front then the moment you meet with the term ONA or book, NAOS, your mind will recognise that you do not recognise it. It is the hole in the cloud that is found by the cloud surrounding the hole.

THE REALIZATION OF ILLUSION
Insight Roles teach that you are just as capable of being something you think you are not – or living as a different person altogether, as you are, the one you presently believe yourself to be. And then, that you can be both, either or neither depending on what a situation requires. Going to extremes such as being a prostitute for a year and then becoming an abstinent monk pushes the boundaries of the persona a great deal further out from where they would normally be – which is often an immovable sense of how things should be to keep equilibrium with one’s ego and sense of I. But when you see that you can in fact be everything you hate or become someone else in a different life – the realisation dawns that the personality is as flimsy as it is incredibly resilient. What you learn in fact is how to regain control over it. Seeing how easy it is to become someone else, and how drastically that affects how people see you, treat you, usually marks the alchemical change where -I- is a temporal invention that can be changed merely by consciously willing new experiences. It also generates an understanding that people are in thrall to what they see, what they perceive and load onto a form or appearance to make it slot neatly into their perception. To them – if you act as something – you are that something. Yet you know inwardly that it is only an Act, and so you begin to see how easily people are fooled by appearances, by forms and by illusions – since they very rarely can discern the difference. One learns then and there that changing the form, changes reactions and can tailor a form to achieve a specific one. Suddenly, one is controlling forms, and learning how to no longer be controlled by them.

THE DARK SIDE OF THE MOON

The Temple of THEM will do whatever it takes to Know. We represent THEM, and the forces of THEM as they Are, incarnate. Thus, for us, Chaos means something very different than it does to those who drop its name but carefully protect their own forms and forums from being subject to it. Chaos is an all-eating destruction, an anathema to Forms, whatever they may be. Even the long vaunted IOT, (Illuminates of Thanateros) who claim to specialise in Chaos Magic, take great care not to actually introduce or allow others to introduce this force loose among it. Its name is thrown about like it were a harmless ball – but those that claim to use its force are often the strongest proponents of Order. Chaos is feared, and always has been feared since the Beginning, or at least as far back as humans were able to begin forming artificial concepts to keep it Out and Away from them. This is evident in the fierce loyalty to Order and existing forms shown by any individual or group when attempting to dismantle their grip on Form and actualise chaos amongst them. So, if even the Chaos Magicians refuse to allow Chaos to be presenced in its full force – how does one know more than half, or any more than the Magicians will allow you to see? They may explain themselves and their reluctance in a myriad of ways – but what it comes down to, is that Chaos is anathema to form – and thus, unconscious hypocrisy and fear. THEM know that Chaos unleashed can destroy any container holding it – even LHP containers. But we don't care – I suppose we're the mad scientists of the magic world doing experiments where the damage to the form is irrelevant. We're not interested in holding together the containers. We want to Know. Only then can we make an informed judgement about Chaos – or any other thing. All too often self-honesty leads to ugly truths that must be swallowed if progress is to be made in really understanding the esoteric currents of magic. But you either want to Know – or you want to live in Happy-land under the deceitful occult ego. Pride is a small sacrifice when you know what it's really worth.

We've learned that Chaos is even feared by us – something which this experiment has revealed as evident by our continuous flow of writing with great care taken to make it lucid and accessible lest they be forgotten or unsaid. Our forums, WordPress and society rely on Order being kept for the Temple of THEM to flourish. And this only lends to the authentic truth that the modern usage of Chaos as a force is largely a myth, watered down into an impotent unpredictability people pretend to us – yet we Remember it, we were Scarred by it, to the extent that we will do everything in our power to prevent it from presencing itself – the entire conscious function of the human being seems especially designed as a Gate against it – whatever the Magicians may say. If you doubt this – then be LHP and test it for yourself. The extreme fragility of forms can be highlighted merely by acting a little strange and uncharacteristically, let alone actively sabotaging the structures that sustain any form and bring wrath against you.

FLIPSIDE

Duality is a bitch and it's a liar. Let's say you want to know Robin Hood – the famous outlaw of English legend. You join him and his band of merry men and live happily amongst the tress of Sherwood, robbing the rich to give to the poor. Occasionally you might see him lose his temper as people do in life – but never in legend. There are no accounts of Robin having a hissy fit over who ate the last pan-fried cake or stretched his green tights – but if you know anything about people – you can be pretty sure, it happened. Maybe he didn't lose his temper often – but it happened, it had to have.

Likewise, we never hear of Robin using the toilet, crying, farting or complaining of sore feet. We only hear, Mythos – the best of characteristics and virtues to emphasise the Heroism of Robin – with all the rest of life's little wonders stripped from the record. In our heads we build or have built for us a notion or ideal of Robin that relates his Legend – but not his reality. What for instance, was it like to be an enemy of Robin Hood? If you only know him as a friend, do you know him at all? No. you know his public face, his friend-sphere face with all the benefits that confers. But what if you were his enemy? How would he treat you, would he be so benevolent, polite, forgiving, a gentleman? Or if you angered him? Or tried to kill him? You could observe his reactions to others should these attempts be made on him – but you still don't know, what it's like. You don't have the vantage point or the equipment to experience being an enemy of Robin unless you are an enemy of Robin. You can guess, perhaps quite accurately – but you can't Know. And THEM want to Know – for themselves – what is what. I, RA, know a great deal about the ONA through synthesising what I have read, learned, observed, and practiced. I've been a great friend of the ONA for a long time for instance, and I have successfully educated many of its enemies – but for a temporary time – I have also been its enemy.

I have therefore learned first-hand how the ONA reacts to its enemies from a direct vantage point and what it feels like to be the enemy. I have been at the sword point of its tactics, strategies and experienced the feeling of being closed out of its ranks. I have seen its degrees of vindictiveness, its anger at betrayal and observed how it moves when it is angered against specific assaults or challenges and deals with conflict.

Now knowing this – I have an even rounder, fuller, and perhaps unique understanding of the ONA, risky though it may have been – I have learned more from being on both sides of the fence than anyone can learn from being on either one. Yet I have also rejoined the ONA despite this campaign against it and the vitriol generated by both sides has acted as an acid for the stage of putrefaction and a new distillation. It is evident then, that this drive for 360+ degrees of form is understood and even anticipated by the Order, despite the hassle it causes for temporal forms.

Knowing both "sides" of the ONA, combines those "sides" into a realisation that they are exactly the same – I.e. that there are no sides just the traditional illusion of them. Unified the forms previously separate by projection become the new prime materia or single form to which a new opposite must be sought – and so the alchemical transformation goes beyond 360 degrees.

SYMBOLIC VISION
A STUDY OF REVELATORY LANGUAGE
(WLP of THEM)

CONTENTS

Introduction The Sacred Balance

Chapter 1 Mythology: the symbolic language of existence
Aboriginal dreaming: the spirit of creation
Black and white Australia: mirror of a new dreaming
Symbolic vision: discovering our place in the cosmos
Rediscovering the spiritual in Christianity: the difference between religion as symbolic discourse and historical dogmatism
Birth, death and rebirth: the cyclical aspect of spirituality
Reinventing the spirit of Christianity: the second coming of Christ

Chapter 2 Poetry: the language of divinity
Symbolic vision and the revelatory nature of poetry
Poetry: a ritual evoking divinity
The Death of God and subsequent loss of poesis in modernity
Poetic re-enchantment of a disenchanted world

Chapter 3 Dreams: arbitrators of divine intervention
Emissaries of self-revelation
Releasing the chains that bind us: increasing the propensity for transformation through dream analysis

Conclusion

INTRODUCTION

Symbols are to be understood as "the best possible expression for a complex fact not yet clearly apprehended for consciousness."1 As Mircea Eliade explains, "[s]ymbols not only disclose a structure of the real or even a dimension of existence, at the same time they carry a significance for human existence."2 This dimension however, is not longer recognised by the modern, secular mentality, and as a result, human existence has lost its significance. The primitive mentality understood the language of symbols, work with nature and the universe, and by granting that we are not masters of the universe and never will be.

Humankind has evolved with immense speed in comparison with other species; in a relatively short amount of time, we learn how to adapt to our ever-changing environment and use our minds in such a way that we became an ingenious race. David Suzuki, a highly acclaimed geneticist writes, “the knowledge of every band of human beings, acquired and accumulated through generations of observation, experience and conjecture, was a priceless legacy for survival.”3 Having learnt how to survive the most exigent conditions, we became a skilful hunter, but now we are at risk of losing that aspect of our mentality; the 'primitive' or 'primordial' mentality, which is the basic survival instinct that worlds with nature in order to benefit from it, inherent in all organisms, is being jeopardised in the name of progress.

We have gone from being the hunted to the hunter, but since we have detached ourselves from the source of our necessities, we are no longer the hunter. Our food now comes to us in pre-packaged portions that can be stored, refrigerated and frozen, our water comes to us bottled if we so wish, and our heating and cooling can be modified with the push of a button. Instead of fighting for survival, developed countries are now fighting for car spaces in shopping complexes in order to reach sales items first, communities are no longer affiliated, and we are rushing around to get things done as our stress levels increase at an alarming rate. We are overwhelmed by technological feats and modern conveniences and yet we never seem to have any quality time.

Human consciousness faces the biggest challenge in its development – where do we go from here? Do we advance into the future ill equipped and unprepared, or do we equip ourselves with appropriate means to ensure a sustainable future? Given the current ecological state of our planet, and the hostilities among nations across our globe, our very existence is threatened; we are sacrificing our existence in order to maintain the lifestyle that we have chosen.

In 2005, there have been numerous devastating natural disasters: earthquakes, landslides, tsunamis, cyclones and hurricanes that have been attributed to the changing weather patterns caused by global warming. We cannot travel this path any further without evoking a primordial mentality; we need to recognise that we are part of nature and reconnect with our 'naturalness' in order to maximise the knowledge we have acquired thus far, or else we face the possibility of losing our humanity, as well as the planet we inhabit. With knowledge there must come wisdom, wisdom to foresee the survival of our species and of our planet, and of our interconnectedness with all living things.

Re-igniting our primordial mentality however, is no easy matter. For centuries we have sought to purge ourselves of our association with nature, therefore accepting our naturalness is no easy feat. We are now a fiscal society, built on economic instead of ecological grounds and though we cannot go back to being hunter-gatherers, the rapid advances in science and technology have led us off course; we have lost the sacred balance that keeps the world and everything in it operational.

The Copernican revolution placed the sun at the centre of the universe, changing our perception of humankind and its place in the scheme of things. The world lost its pertinence to us; we were no longer the big fish in a little pond, but a microscopic organism in a boundless cosmic ocean. Suzuki writes however, that ever since Copernicus “pushed us out of the centre... we've been trying to get back there... claiming power not as part of the web of creation, not even as caretakers, but as masters of a cosmic machine”(13).

Newton's discoveries pushed us even further away from ourselves by advancing that “nature is a machine and is no more than the sum of its parts”(14). To some degree Newton's theory could be interpreted as meaning that everything in existence is a part of nature, however, as Suzuki asserts, by accepting Newton's view, we are accepting that we can understand, predict and control nature. (14)

Newton's theory suggests that we are above nature, and are therefore its master, not a part of it. If we are above nature however, then why can we not survive without it? If we are not part of nature, then why are we dependent on it? Einstein was perhaps right when he said:

A human being is part of the whole, called by us the universe. A part limited in time and space. He experiences himself, his thoughts and feelings, as something separate from the rest, a kind of optical delusion of his consciousness. This delusion is a kind of prison for us, restricting us to our personal desires and to affection for a few persons nearest to us. Our task must be to free ourselves from this prison by widening our circle of compassion to embrace all living creatures. (26)

This means embracing the primordial mentality, the aspect of our being that understands symbols and recognises itself as a part of the web of life.

Through their symbolic understanding of the nature of existence, the Ancient Greeks knew that the basic ingredients for life as we know it are the four basic elements: air, water, earth and fire. For us, air is the breath of life. However, when Earth consisted solely of active volcanoes, there was no pure oxygen. With lava and ash, the first greenhouse gas emissions erupted, and these emissions created the Earth's atmosphere, trapping in heat that eventually condensed to form clouds and inevitably rain, beginning the hydrologic cycle.4

Over time, rivers, lakes and oceans formed, and as the waters grew richer in atomic and molecular structures, prebiotic life began to flourish. Eventually, these organisms learnt how to photosynthesise, and with that came the production of oxygen and the opportunity for life for humankind (42). Air is something that no living creatures can live without, something that we all share, literally.

As Suzuki notes, we all breathe in some of the particles of air that someone else has once inhaled, including plant life and animals (38). Suzuki states that as the eminent Harvard astronomer Harlow Shapely discovered, we even breathe in particles of air that were once inhaled by our ancestors when he discovered that about one per cent of oxygen is made of up an inert gas called argon:

Because it is inert, is is breathed in and out without becoming a part of our bodies or entering into metabolic transformations... Suppose you exhale a single breath and follow those argon atoms. Within minutes they have diffused through the air far beyond the spot where they were released, travelling into the neighbourhood. After a year, those argon atoms have been mixed up in the atmosphere and spread around the planet in such a way that each breath you take includes at least 15 atoms of argon released in that one breath a year earlier. (37)

In light of this, Shapely reveals that the air we breathe has been inhaled by our predecessors and will be inhaled by our successors; we are literally, all part of the cycle of life, which the primitive mentality of ancient civilisations knew because of its symbolic understanding of the world.

If it were not for the production of oxygen, it would not be possible for us to exist, and Suzuki makes it clear scientifically, that the interaction of air, water, earth and fire are crucial to our existence. He writes:

The water molecules that perfuse every part of our bodies have come from all the oceans of the world, evaporated from prairie grasslands and the canopies of all the world's great rainforests. Like air, water physically links us to Earth and to all other forms of life. (60)

Part of the scientific community is now willing to accept the interconnectedness of all living things and hence the place of humankind. There is no food chain as such; rather, everything coexists as parts of the great cycle of life, which civilisations recognised without scientific reasoning, through myths and creation stories, generated to retain the connection between humankind and the rest of the natural world.

Myth is one way of staying connected with nature, anthropologists now call a 'worldview'. Suzuki defines 'worldview' as “a story whose subject for each group is the world and everything in it, a world in which human beings are deeply and inextricably immersed”(37). The subject of the 'Enlightened' Western world's story however, is neither the world nor everything in it; it is power and greed, and the only things that many human beings are deeply immersed in is themselves. The profundity of existence has lost its place – in its quest to gain control over nature, the enlightened, industrialised world has forgotten that it is a part of the eco system: a natural organism that cannot exist in isolation.

Myths contain a wealth of profundity and have endured millennia, yet they have no place in our scientific worldview today. Non-indigenous societies no longer look to myth and creation stories to explain the world, as science is the new myth, and although it looks to nature for answers, we have lost touch with nature and hence with ourselves. Science seeks reasons, not meaning, and without meaning, nothing is of value or significance. Science needs to question its integrity to give meaning to its reasons, and give life back to the sanctity.
Once we have rekindled the flame of meaning, we will regain the sacred balance that our civilisation so desperately needs.

The arts also enable us to access the primordial mentality because they too translate a 'divine' experience into concrete form. Poetry speaks the language of the earth, fine art sees with the eyes of the gods, while music corresponds to the rhythms and harmonies of the universe. Art is a pathway that leads us into the deeper realms of our being; as a creative enterprise, all human beings have the ability to venture into those realms. Even if we are not masters of the arts like Wordsworth, DaVinci, or Mozart, we can 'tune in' to the frequencies that will enable us to channel this energy. The creative imagination is our link to the essence of divinity, and our opportunity to manifest the essence of our being. Through the symbolic representation of our inner sanctity, we can harmonise with nature and ourselves and 'tune in' to the rhythms of the universe.

The scientific and the spiritual, logos and mythos, must fuse together to create a new mythology in order to ensure a favourable progression of the human race, not to mention the survival of our planet; huge sacrifices must be made to our way of life in the name of the greater good. Though we are not in control, we do have free will, and as myths foretell, a responsibility that comes with it. We must accept ourselves as an element of nature in order to reignite the primordial mentality which archaic societies were governed by, before we lose everything that our ancestors fought so hard to achieve.

Chapter 1
MYTH: THE SYMBOLIC LANGUAGE OF EXISTENCE

myth, implies a breakaway from Time and the surrounding world; it opens up a way in to the sacred Great Time

– Mircea Eliade

Before the world and the universe were understood through science or religion, they were first understood through myth. Mythology is a truth based not on fact but on understanding of the symbolic interconnectedness of all things in the universe. Through the language of symbols, myth gives form to the nature of existence, and to "events which took place in principio"2; it establishes a method of seeing the world and everything in it, and through ritual, a means of reconnecting with the underlying energy inherent in all living things is made possible. Myth is hence an embodiment of truth, which formed the basic structures of ancient civilisations, and connected the people to the Earth and to each other.

Myth has lost its original meaning and purpose in the desacralised world of today, subsisting only in the arts and indigenous cultures. This is a tragic loss for humanity, for demythologisation has resulted in a lack of understanding of the deeper significance of the world. Nothing is sacred in a world without myth; our actions are executed without regard for the consequences that they may bring about, like deforestation. Myths are crucial for societies, because they bind us to the world in which we live, and give texture to our lives. Without mythology, we have no relationship with the Earth: therefore, we do not have to be responsible for our actions. Without myth, we are travelling on a road to nowhere.

By revealing the interconnectedness of all living things, myth enabled ancient civilisations to form a relationship with the Earth and the universe, but over time, this relationship has disintegrated; the West has divorced itself from nature – the place of its origin. Today, the majority of Western civilisation lives without realising that they are part of a much bigger story; nothing is sacred and therefore everything is extraneous. For centuries, the West has plundered Earth for resources; it was known in the 1950's that if we kept using fossil fuels at the rate at which we were then, we would consume it all by about the year 2030. That date is fast approaching. Before we drain the Earth of its resources, we must change our way of life. The Western mentality must find its way out of its hollow existence by remythologising, for then we will restore our relationship with the Earth, and ensure a sustainable future for generations to follow.

Myth is a way to connect with the Earth, a frequency that enables us to 'tune in' to the life-giving force. It is a re-presentation of the forces of nature that reveals itself in, as Wilbur M. Urban suggests, "personal and quasipersonal forms and as performing supernatural and superhuman functions"3.

Urban uses the terms supernatural and superhuman, but his conjures up notions of something *un*natural and *in*human, which makes the reality that myth embodies seem ethereal, inaccessible and dubious – the exact opposite of all that myth epitomises. As I understand mythic reality, nature is super only in the sense of its omniscience and omnipotence; it is all knowing because it is in everything, it is all powerful because it is in everything, is greater than we are because it is in everything.

It is life itself, hence the concept of the Ultimate Creator or Supreme Being, and because everything has life, it is inherent in all things created. Therefore, though it is divine, it is not something inaccessible or unattainable, because it dwells within us. In the Christian sense, we are the children of God, according to the understanding of the indigenous Australians, the people, as well as the fauna, flora and the landscape, are the ancestors of the spirit beings of the Dreamtime, and as per the Greeks of Antiquity, all living things are a perpetuation of the time when gods, heroes and humankind walked the heavens and the Earth. Though the use of symbolism differs, the common thread that unites these, and other cultural and religious conceptualisations of the nature of reality, is an integral symbolic understanding of life's intricate design.

This is the central core of mythology, however, since the conception of science and religion, myth is now synonymous with narrative fiction, which conjures up conceptions of imaginative untruths and creative fancy. It would not be a bad thing to synonymise myth with creation and imagination, if it were not for the connotations that these words now possess; viewed cynically as fantasy, creativity and imagination now belong solely in the realms of the artist and the child, and as such, do not have credibility in the rational world.

Once regarded as sagacious because of their link to the source of creation, the artist revealed veritable truths that reminded us of our place in the universe because they were creative and imaginative. Imagination stems etymologically from the words imago – a representation of imitation – and imitor – to imitate or reproduce4, while create, stems from the Latin word creat-us, which translates directly as 'said of the divine agent', while creationem, Latin for creation, is 'the action of bringing into existence by divine power or its equivalent'. Viewed as such, myths are imaginative or creative because they represent and bring into existence the quintessence of life using symbolic language. If the rational world would lose its fear of facing these truths it would re-establish the artist as a bringer of wisdom, and myth – the symbolic language of existence – will again carry significance for humanity.

As a living entity then, humanity, like everything else on Earth, is a product of the imagination in that everything is reproduction or imitation of the life creating force. Science calls this force biogenesis, religion names it God or the gods, and mythology calls it reality. Mythology however, is sacred because it understands the world symbolically as an intricate web of interconnectedness and interdependence that repeats itself in cycles of birth, death, and rebirth. Although Christianity speaks of interrelations, and science reveals the interconnectedness of all living things with observations such as ecosytematic relationships, they fail to draw on the sanctity and symbolic significance of this cyclic phenomenon. The disenchanted West needs to understand the importance of symbolism and to remythologise in order for their lives to be meaningful; it needs to readjust its worldview to include the Earth and all its creatures in its scope, not just themselves.

Since science has taken precedence over symbolic discourse and spirituality, we have lost touch with the deeper correlations of existence. We have placed a bigger emphasis on the material aspect of life than we have on the spiritual, therefore we no longer place meaning or value on the inherent wisdom of mythology and have thus become a spiritually drained and disenchanted society.

We attempt to fill this void with material possessions that become obsessions, drugs and alcohol that become addictions, or by latching on to anything new and improved, especially things with natural and spiritual connotations and associations. This can be observed in the so-called 'New-Age' phenomenon that has erupted in recent times, (along with profiteers hoping to cash in on the spiritual void in society, which could be seen as an unconscious attempt at filling their own spiritually devoid existence). Marketing has also jumped on the bandwagon by promoting products such as 'Creative Zen I-pods', and cars and mineral water that can take us 'back to nature'.

These are not the ingredients for a healthy civilisation; without the spirituality inherent in mythology, we are just an empty shell, desperate to find substance and meaning in our hollow existence. As Nietzsche said:

Without myth all culture loses its healthy and natural creative power: only a horizon surrounded by myths can unify an entire cultural movement. Myth alone rescues the powers of the imagination and the Apolline dream from their aimless wanderings.5

Myth reminds us that humanity is not solely composed of matter, and we cannot lead a wholesome existence if we do not acknowledge our spirituality, expressed through the language of symbols. Like most Western civilisations today, white Australia is almost totally disenchanted; having lost our connection to our origins through migration, we are totally without a mythology to bind us to the Earth. However, by reincoporating the mythic element in our lives, we will again give life to the symbol and hence restore meaning and purpose to our lives. We do not all have to worship the same gods, or hold the same rituals – we do not even need to 'worship; or hold rituals – we simply need a story that includes ourselves in the plot, as spirituality means being symbolically connected to the life force inherent in all things.

Aboriginal Dreaming: The Spirit of Creation

Take time you earth fullas. Let the spirit of this mighty land touch you as it touches my people.
– Kabul Oodgeroo Noonuccal

By way of the Dreaming, indigenous Australians perceive the universe as “a living, breathing biomass which has separated families” of heavenly bodies, geology, vegetation and animals, which remain connected to their human families.7 This occurred in the time known to them as the Altjeringa time (or Tjukurrpa or palaneri), what we have come to know as the Dreamtime or Creation Time , and it symbolises the interdependence and interconnectedness of all things in existence. The Dreamtime symbolises the beginning of Time, the continuation of which is the Dreaming, a perpetual process of creation, destruction and re-creation, much like the Hindu perception of existence through Brahma (Creator), Siva (Destroyer), and Vishnu (Preserver). The Dreaming binds indigenous Australians to the Earth, and their regard for the Earth and its creatures is a veritable quality that the West has forsaken in the name of progress. We simply create and destroy, perpetually, and with no scope for re-creation, or renewal, all things go to waste.

For indigenous Australians, the Dreaming is synonymous with mythology, and like all mythology, it attempts to explain the history of the world through symbolic representation: how the landscape and individual species came into being when the Great Spirit ancestors first awoke. The Dreaming however, also maps tribal boundaries, recounts the paths taken by the spirit ancestors as they formed the Earth's features (the Dreaming Tracks or Song Lines, which the people have literally followed for over 50 000 years), as well as the information pertaining to customs, rites and ceremonies.

The Dreaming is the Law, as in the Hindu concept of dharma, "the process underlying the universe"8, therefore, indigenous Australian mythology, the Dreaming, is their culture and hence a veracity. It is everything to them, and the West has no justification in denying them their reality. Instead, the disenchanted West should look to indigenous Australian mythology as a cue to finding its own mythology, which will help us to relate to and form a bond with the Earth, which, after all, is everything to us as well.

Regarding themselves as caretakers of the Earth, indigenous Australians are a culture deeply grounded in spirituality, who look upon the Earth and everything in it as sacred because of their symbolic understanding of the interconnectedness of all living things. What unifies each tribe to itself and to other tribes, and ultimately to the universe, is their unrelenting staunchness to their mythology, the Dreaming, which continued untainted for millennia until British colonisation. The Dreaming is their lifeline, take it away from them and you not only disconnect them from the Earth, but you also disconnect them from themselves. Without their Dreaming, they have nothing to live for; their lives are aimless and hollow, just like much of the West has become – disenchanted.

Black and White Australia: Mirror of a new Dreaming

But what would happen now that the world of dreams – where fences belonged – began to trespass on the existing world?

– Rodney Hall

Understood symbolically, the disdain that many white Australians feel towards black Australians is a result of their own disenchantment. For centuries the West has purged itself of its mythological relationship with the Earth because we deemed it inferior in comparison to reason and rationality. Indigenous Australians are a constant reminder of this, which is why we initially tried to 'convert' them. As a patriarchal society, the West denounces all things linked to the feminine, and therefore, as a matriarchal society, Indigenous Australian culture is denounced. From the indigenous perspective, white Australians represent the individual, which black Australians have not recognised becaise of their strong communal relationship with the Earth Mother. As opposite ends of the psychological spectrum, black and white Australians symbolise the need for a journey to the centre where wholeness can be found.

The progression of the Western mentality from 'primitive' to 'modern' has resulted in the construction of barriers and fences between the finite and the infinite, which is foreign to Indigenous Australians. This theme is one of many portrayed in The Second Bridgegroom, Rodney Hall's brilliant expose of the mythopoetic implications of European settlement in Australia, as viewed from the perspective of an escaped convict on his arrival at Sydney Cove in 1838. Seizing the opportunity to flee his imprisonment, the central character jumps ship and heads into the unknown bushland, where he is confronted by the opportunity to remythologise his rational existence through his association with an indigenous tribe who welcome him into their circle.

Hall suggests that the Indigenous Australian connection to the Earth mirrors our own disenchantment, and that they can show us a way to findour individual mythology, which can 'ground' us here in Australia. Hall uses 'women' to symbolise the matriarchal aspect of Indigenous Australian culture when he compares them to nature and suggests that men can learn from them (19). By 'men' he means the patriarchal West, and he suggests that by erecting fences in order to control nature and women we are denying ourselves the freedom to live in harmony with nature. Here, in Australia, we have been given the opportunity to break free from our rationally dominated existence and reconnect with nature.

In another example, the main character, while on walkabout with the tribe, returns to the place of his escape after a year of nomadic existence and is confronted by a fence. At first he does not recognise it, but as his mind registers its objective, he becomes angry. After a year of experiencing freedom from rational restraints, he is disturbed by it because it symbolises a barrier in his rite of passage. Hall tells us that "we could easily climb over or duck between the rails, but what sort of answer is that?" (85). In this sense, the fence is a symbol of our attempts to retain out progressive status, our emergence from the 'primal' state. We cannot simply ignore or bypass our psychological defenses against nature; we must deconstruct the barriers denying us access to our mythological origins and reconstruct, or remythologise, our existence.

As the West has lived without mythology for centuries, it has become accustomed to a life without the spirit and so the effects go almost unnoticed or unrecognised. For Indigenous Australians however, removing them from their Dreamtime is like being woken from a deep sleep with a bucket of icy water. Expecting Indigenous Australians to separate easily from their culture is like expecting a baby to sleep soundly through its first night after being taken off the breast. It is a severe shock to the system, and it is foolish to think that we should expect these people to take on the ways of the West after 50 000 years of a relatively unchanged existence. People cannot even give up smoking without weening themselves off it, and if they do not use something as a crutch, the thought of giving up will have been plaguing them for sometime. It just does not happen overnight. Indigenous Australian Dreaming is not a 'bad habit', and therefore, they should not be expected to give up their way of life just because the West thinks that its way of life is better.

How, may I ask, is the ethos of the West 'better' anyway? If the answer is that we are a progressive society, we must ask ourselves, what price have we paid in order to arrive at our current position? As the disenchanted West has no mythology to bind it to the Earth, it does not feel that it has to be responsible for what it does, or that what it does will have any bearing on the quality of life or on the rest of Earth's creatures. The disenchanted West lives with no regard for the future of the Earth, or for humanity for that matter. In the name of progress, the West has sacrificed the very thing that makes us human – which is not solely our ability to rationalise, but our ability to mythologise, to see beyond the mundane borders of existence into a world where everything is integrated because all things in existence have the divine spark of 'life'. What makes us human is our ability to symbolise and make sense of the senseless things in the world, to be 'sensitive' to our surroundings, which is what the Dreaming represents.

Indigenous Australian mythology is unique, for the people live completely within its symbolic frame of reference, hence the term they use in order for us to understand their culture, the Dreaming, and why it is fatal to remove them from it. As Mudrooroo explains, "Dreaming, in the sense of dreams, or the state between waking and deep sleep, is a state when revelations or instructions are received from the ancestors" (50). Indigenous Australians live the symbol; they live the Dreaming, their mythology. As Eliade explains:

'[T]o live' a symbol and to decipher the messages correctly is equivalent to gaining access to the universal. To transform an individual experience by symbolism is equivalent to opening it to the Spirit.

If Indigenous Australians lose contact with the Earth, they lose contact with their ancestors and thus with everything that helps them make sense of the world. Therefore, removing Indigenous Australians from the Dreaming is fatal – for them and for white Australian; they become like a fish out of water, and we lose our chance of seeing a way to remythologise our secular existence.

Simply because Indigenous Australians do not think like the Enlightened West, does not mean that their culture is no credible. Through their understanding of symbols, they have been able to maintain a relationship with the Earth for countless years. The West can re-learn a great deal from Indigenous Australians, if only we could see them as a reflection of our own disenchantment. "Life will not be trapped in boxes."

Symbolic vision: discovering our place in the cosmos

For Indigenous Australians, the Dreaming is their world and their reality, and it is not too obscure to comprehend if it is understood as being their link to the source of all creation. For the disenchanted West to find a way to partake in the mystery of Creation, they must find what works for them, what 'opens' the world to them. We cannot return to a primitive lifestyle, however we can reawaken our primitive mentality so that we do not 'feel isolated in the Cosmos'.

Though it is quite obscure, Indigenous Australian mythology is not altogether alien. Because each myth is intricately linked to the Dreamtime, the lose their significance altogether if they are taken out of context, however much of it is comprehensible when it is understood as all creation stories should be – symbolically, not rationally. When heroes fight dragons in the sort of myths we are accustomed to, we know that this is not a veritable fact for two reasons: the first is because dragon fossils have never been discovered, and two, myths are not 'true'. Symbolically speaking however, the dragon represents the uncontrolled beast that threatens to engulf humanity and therefore needs restraining. The hero must 'defeat' the 'dragon' or else be overcome by its fierce brutality and aggression.

Although we have no empirical proof of the existence of dragons, they do exist in the world of forms – but not as we would imagine them. In the world of forms, the dragon rears its ugly head when we lose control of ourselves and allow our aggression to become so enlarged that it threatens to devour us. We must leash the dragon within, i.e. control our aggression, or we will be consumed by it. Dragons do exist then in the world of forms, bearing all its fiercely powerful characteristics.

Indigenous Australians view the world this way – symbolically – and all of their symbolism revolves around the creatures and landmarks that are familiar and known to them, such as the crocodile and the emu, and Uluru, because they can relate to them. We, as Westerners, find this difficult to understand because we do not share the same relationship with these animals and landmarks as indigenous Australians do. In its own unique way, the Dreaming offers its people the opportunity to partake in the mystery of Creation, revealing to them the interdependence between all subjective and objective experiences. As Eliade writes:

"This means that the primitive [human] does not feel 'isolated' in the Cosmos, the [they are] 'open' to the World which symbolically is familiar to [them]. On the other hand, the cosmological valances of symbolism permits [them] to step out of a subjective situation, to recognise the objectivity of his personal experiences.

The Dreaming is predominantly land based, and as such, the people have been able to remain closely connected to her, so much so, that to 'injure' the land over which one has custodianship will cause sickness and death. This is symbolic of the need to care for the Earth, for it is our only means of survival. The Earth to them is the Great Mother, a snake deity whose skin is the earth's surface, known as Gunabibi or Kunapipi, similar to the Greek goddess Demeter. Because she gives life and sustains life, she is a deity that commands the utmost respect.

Unlike worshippers of Demeter however, who is also the goddess of agriculture, they do not cultivate the land, as they believe that "to pierce her skin is to wound her"13. Their respect for her is symbolic of their respect for nature and for all living things, and of their understanding that all living things are connected to her; to abuse the Earth is like abusing our biological mother – they do not bite the hand that feeds them. The disenchanted West has ceased to view the Earth as a living entity, even though it keeps us alive by providing us with everything we need to exist, and it therefore cares not about what it does to her. If the disenchanted West was able to feel 'related' to the Earth, then perhaps it would not abuse her.

Another All-Mother deity, often seen as the mother of all things, is the Akurra serpent, (also known as the Rainbow snake or serpent), which is associated with water and the power of the shamans14. Known as Wagyal in the Nyungar country of Southwestern Australia, it can be likened to a dragon for it is said to have hair on its back and flap-like wings.15 This important ancestral deity is similar to the concept of the dragon in the West, and in the East, for it is wild as well as wise; not only does it give and guard the mystic healing rites of the shamans, if disturbed it will bring about catastrophe on their people.

The Rainbow serpent is hence symbolic of the natural aggression within humankind that must not be unleashed lest it wreck havoc on the world, but she is also a symbol of nature's aggressive power, and untameable force not to be reckoned with. As a water symbol however, the Rainbow Serpent is representative of the creative energy that flows through the depths of our being, and of our need for its essence in order to survive, and as a symbol of healing, it is representative of the Earth's curative abilities. The nature of this symbol is therefore at once life giving and life taking; it is a symbol of the dichotomous nature of existence which indigenous Australians are evidently aware of. The disenchanted West however, though it is aware of nature's dichotomy, is ignorant of the effects it brings about when it does not respect the natural cycle. It does not respect the Earth as the source of all creation and is ignorant of its re-creative and destructive ability.

The wave of natural disasters that have wreaked havoc on the world this year is evidence enough to suggest that we have greatly affected the natural cycle through our excessive consumption of fossil fuels. The Rainbow Serpent helps indigenous Australians to understand that if the natural cycle is unbalanced, great catastrophes will occur, but if respected, the power of Earth will sustain life. Though the West has a concept of the dragon, the disenchanted West has no such understanding of the Earth, and therefore does not respect the Earth as a powerful force. If we understood the language of symbols, then we would understand the dragon as a natural force that commands respect, and the Earth would be viewed as a powerful force that commands respect. The majority of the West however is disenchanted, therefore it does not view the Earth as anything but a piece of equipment meant solely for human exploitation.

Through the Dreaming, indigenous Australians understand that all things are created equal, therefore all things are treated with respect and are regarded as sacred. In order to survive, indigenous Australians need the Dreeaming as it gives their lives direction and substance, therefore we could not expect them to abandon it. Rather, we should view their stanches to the Dreaming as a mirror to our own disconnected spirituality. The relationship that indigenous Australians share with the Earth through the Dreaming is the missing pillar in the foundation of modern civlisations; without a solid connection to the Earth, we are in danger of collapsing. By remythologising however, the West can draw on the actual strength of the Earth, and restructure its world-view to ensure a sustainable future.

Rediscovering the spiritual in Christianity: the difference between religion as a symbolic discourse and historical dogmatism

The religious myth is one of man's greatest and most significant achievements, giving him the security and inner strength not to be crushed by the monstrousness of the universe.

– C.G.Jung

As symbolic discourse, Christianity is a veritable interpretation of the divine quintessence of life, radiating with spirituality. However, since the historical interpretation of Christianity took precedence over the symbolic, it ceased to be the 'Word of God' and instead became the word of those interpreting it, and who sought to dictate the course of history. As a literal interpretation, Christianity loses all of its integrity; it is bland, overbearing and dogmatic, and for a society built around reason, it does not stand firm. Viewed as mythos however, Christianity is once again a religion in the truest sense of the word17, imbued with the sanctity of divine creation.

I do not wish to engage in a discussion of the historical dogmatism of the Christian religion, for this is not a theological debate. What concerns me are the symbolic nuances of Christianity, its numinosity, ("the awesome character of the divine will... which takes 'command' and displaces our will with its own")18, which is what, after all, religion is supposed to represent. Though it gives religion its "structure and social constancy"19, the institutionalisation of Christianity is not what gives it its awesome power, but the mythopoetic reception of a universal "will" that is greater than our own. The religious sense of life is comprehension that humankind are merely players, we do not orchestrate the universe, control the seasons or change the weather; there is something greater than ourselves that forces us to bend to its will, which Christianity has called 'God'.

This is why religion is so repellent today. We do not like the idea of an invisible entity 'controlling' the direction of our lives because it contradicts everything that out logo-centric world demands; like emotions, if something cannot be rationalised, controlled, or duplicated, then it is regarded with suspicion and dismissed as folly. We want to see God as He appeared in Da Vinci's masterpiece, and hear Him speak in a voice like our own. However, God is not someone we can see or hear. God is more akin to an 'emotion' that resonates deep within our entire being.

Religion is hence threatening to those who want to think that they are in absolute control of their lives. Although we are in control of the choices we make, we must come to terms with the fact that we do not have absolute control over everything in our lives and in the universe. Life does not always move in the direction that we would like it to take; there are currents that surge across our chosen paths and carry us, 'off course', to unforeseen destinations, and rips that rise up out of nowhere and threaten to drag us under. We must therefore flow with currents because it is futile to fight against them: we can never change the force of their direction, no matter how much we think we can gain control. We can regain control of our lives if we choose to give up the struggle and allow ourselves to be carried away. This is the power of the numinous, the power of God, which we must accept as existing, lest we be submerged by a sense of our own helplessness.

In the hectic logo-centric world of today, we need to reincorporate the mythic-religious mentality in order to restore meaning in our lives. By viewing the world as a sacred web, in which things are connected, we can recognise ourselves as part of the 'bigger picture'. If we can relocate the spiritual element of religion by understanding it as symbolic discourse, we can gain another perspective with which we can understand the world. This perspective may not answer all our questions about the world, but nevertheless, it reaffirms our place within it, and can ease the stress of uncertainty and vacillation.

By accepting that there is more to life than just cognitive empiricism, we willingly accept the mythic-religious possibility of renewal and redemption that promises a more fulfilling and meaningful life. However, in an age where reason resigns supreme, and where science if the prevailing God, what is possible in the mythic-religious sense of the world is impossible – but this is precisely what God symbolises. God is at once everywhere and nowhere, merciful and merciless, fluid and solid, conceivable yet inconceivable. He is the personification of the paradox of existence responsible for supplying humanity with its dichotomous disposition. In other words, He is an expression of the opposing but complimentary forces of the natural order.

In On Religion, John D. Caputo calls God's numinosity the 'absolute future', the realm of the unforeseeable and the uncertain, as opposed to the relative future, or 'future present', which is the realm of the foreseeable and the manageable (7-10). The absolute future encroaches upon the realm of the future present every time the unexpected happens; when we are blown off course and arrive at the unforeseen destination this is the divine will of God, which the religious life accedes to. Caputo writes:

The religious sense of life has to do with exposing oneself to the radical uncertainty and the open-endedness of life, with what we are calling the absolute future, which is meaning-giving, salt-giving, risk taking. (14)

This means that when logic and reason do not hold sway, it is in our best interest to succumb to the numinosity of the absolute future and allow nature, so to speak, to take its course.

We cannot always now why things are the way they are, or why things happen the way that they do, so instead of always asking why things happen the way they do, we sometimes need to ask what can we do to move on. A mythic-religious mentality helps us to come to terms with the unexplainable and makes the transition from one stage of life to the next more manageable. By acceding to the numinoisty of the religious life, we do not lose control of our life, rather, we gain control of it, for in 'swimming with the tide', we allow ourselves to be carried along by the universal force that leads us into the realm of the absolute future, the realm of God.

Birth, death, and re-birth: the cyclical aspect of Christianity

The possibility of renewal and redemption is what Christianity reveals to us with the miraculous life of Jesus Christ. Caputo understands religion to be "astir with the possibility of renewal and rebirth, pregnant with an absolute future, and impossible surprise, just like the virgin Mary."(15). What Caputo means, is that the religious sense of life see life itself as full of unexpected occurrences, which sometimes cannot be explained, but bring with them the possibility of a better future. The Immaculate Conception is thus symbolic of the unexplainable but necessary experiences we as humans go through, and that by having faith in God, we are able to accept these experiences, and play the hand that we have been dealt.

The Immaculate Conception is also symbolic of the divine spirit within humankind, the unearthly element of our being that cannot be rationalised. It is symbolic of our spiritual origin and of its incarnation. As a demi-god (half man, half god), Christ is thus the representation of the Self in its entirety – part divine part earthly – God incarnate. As His name is also Immanuel, which means God is with us, He is a constant reminder of God's presence on Earth, and hence of the potential to recreate our lives. We are all incarnations of God, divine essences of creation born unto the Earth, for we, like Jesus Christ, are His sons and daughters, and are thus a part of the mystery of creation. By following Christ's example, we will always see a light at the end of the tunnel, and permit ourselves the opportunity to transform our lives for the better.

Christ's crucifixion is symbolic of the death of the ego, the ultimate sacrifice. If we transcend our ego-dominated consciousness, we grant entry to our spiritual dimension, thus allowing co-operation between the dichotomous elements of our being. As the redeemer then, "the resurrection and the light", the death of Christ reveals that nothing truly dies or ends, that end of one passage through life is the beginning of another, a transformation of one stage in our lives to the next, which promises, through faith in God, a spiritually fulfilling experience of the world.

We experience many transformations during the course of our lives. The birth of a child is a transformation of one way of life for the parents to another; becoming independent of parental authority is a transformation for both the young adult and the parents; discovering that we possess certain talents or traits, or working through a problematic relationship, is a transformation of character. Once the transformation has occurred, the previous way of understanding and experiencing the world dies, creating way for the new. In death as a transformation, we are given the opportunity for a new beginning; like the mythical phoenix, a new life arises out of the ashes of the old.

By following Christ's example, we can attain "a new lease on life"20, but we must have faith and courage to go the entire distance, and that means embracing the numinous. Christ taught us this when it came time for Him to face the devil in the desert. After He had fasted for forty days and forty nights, He was confronted with the incessant lures of the fallen angel Satan, who promised Christ “all the kingdoms of the world and their glory” if He bowed down and worshipped him (Matt 4:8-9). “He was hungry” (without doubt), but even in His most vulnerable state, Christ resisted the temptations of Satan by holding fast to his faith in God. Though he 'hungered' for sustenance, he did not give into Satan, and when Satan finally abated, Christ was ministered by angels (Matt 4:11). Christ's journey through the desert is symbolic of His need to deepen his experience of God: a journey to the centre to discover the sacredness of life. It tells us that a life with God may be demanding, and that certain things may have to be sacrificed in order to reach God, but essentially, faith in God is what will bring us success.

As the antichrist, Satan symbolises a life without God, which has its advantages but is nothing compared to a life with God, for it is a profane life dominated by the ego, a life without meaning, substance or spirituality, The angels who minister Christ when His struggle is over are symbolic of the 'sustenance' and 'nourishment' we will receive by adhering to the numinous. The parable is thus symbolic of the need to be receptive to the numinous, for thought we may feel that it would be quicker and easier to just give in or give up, our faith and endurance will be rewarded with divine nourishment, and the radiance of renewal.

Reinventing the Spirit of Christianity: the second coming of Christ

Because of the literal dogmatism of the Christian religion, the pillars of the Christian foundation are threatened, and if Christianity is going to subsist, it must be understood symbolically by placing mythopoesis back into the Word of God, letting Him speak for Himself, in all His divine glory and beauty. As it stands now, Christianity does not speak to the masses; engulfed by dogma and historical literalism, it does not satisfy the spiritual longing created by our secular material society. Viewed symbolically however, as mythopoesis, Christianity can be resurrected; it will regain its substance and its beauty and ultimately, its power as a vehicle that can access the numinous. The death of God brought about the destruction of religion, mysticism and spirituality, but this, symbolically, is the herald of its resurrection, for in death there is life; it is the herald of the 'second coming' which was 'prophesised' in the Bible.

Religion is gestating in the collective womb of human consciousness, awaiting its rebirth. Western civilisation can be revived again by accepting that life is a balance between the spiritual and the material, and that each has its place and its purpose. The union of logos and mythos is what is needed in order for humanity to develop, for together they represent the Self in its entirety – the possible and the impossible, irreconcilable opposites that compensate each other to create the natural state of balance and harmony necessary to existence. We have followed the path of reason and have reached the limits of our logo-centric capabilities; we now stand on the edge of the sacred and must journey to the centre, where a transformation of consciousness awaits us.

Chapter 2
POETRY: THE LANGUAGE OF DIVINITY
Symbolic vision and the revelatory nature of poetry

While with an eye made quiet by the power
Of harmony, and the deep power of joy,
We see into the life of things

– William Wordsworth

Language itself is revelatory because it conveys meaning; it can be used to describe that which we can see and know, however it is also used symbolically to convey that which (we) do not see or know. As the most obvious form of symbolic revelatory language, poetry, such as the works of Homer, is one of the oldest forms of creative expression, closely related to mythology because of its use of symbolism as a means to communicate that which cannot otherwise be communicated, namely, a metaphysical or divine experience of the world. As Eliade explains, "[s]ymbols not only disclose a structure of the real or even a dimension of existence, at the same time they carry a significance for human existence."2 Since the Homeric period, poets have continued to reveal this 'dimension of experience' that does not confine itself to the limits of conventional rational experience, enriching our lives with substance and meaning. Through the creative use of language, through images and symbols, poets point to a reality beyond the rational sphere of knowing. As Mark. S. Burroughs reveals:

Their work is visual at the edges of darkness, auditory in the cradle of silence... their vocation embodies a longing for, a reaching toward, what we cannot manage with our minds alone.3

I takes more than cogency to understand poetry; it is a language that engages our entire being, our thoughts, sensations, and emotions, a language that translates a divine experience of the world into a concrete form that can be meditated and reflected upon. Poetry is thus a language that stems beyond reason, but its validity or ability to disclose this dimension of reality is not undermined because it does not confine itself to literalisms. In defining poetry, Burrows states:

At its truest, it is a journey, an imagining, a daring – which is to say, a making that finds no dwelling place in a world of intellect tamed by manageable language. (343)

Poetry is hence ambiguous, obscure, and inarticulate, for converting a divine experience into a concrete, accessible form, is not a precise art. After all, it is a formless entity that has been given form, an inexpressible experience that has been given expression.

Poetry is thus a language that is "rationally accessible with difficulty." Hence, we cannot rely on the literal interpretation of language to understand poetry, for the beauty of poetry is in its ability to reveal the unknown and to explain the inexplicable, something that is possible only if you have acuity of vision – that is, symbolic vision – to see beyond the borders of the rational world "into the life of things".

Poetry: a ritual evoking divinity

Poets evoke divinity when they engage in symbolic discourse. Eliade states that "[f]rom a particular point of view, the symbol itself may be considered a language which, although conceptual, is nevertheless capable of expressing a coherent thought on existence and the world"(3).

In fact, the symbol is the precursor of language per se, as language is the application of a symbolic system of communication; letters represent sounds, and words represent objects and abstractions. Hence all words are revelatory in that they are symbols for that which the represent, and as all words carry a measure of inference, they are in this sense etymologically symbolic.

However, not all language speaks of divinity; when form is given to the ineffable, it is an evocation of the divine, which is a word used to symbol is that which is sacred and relates to God or gods, to discover something unknown, and to have perception by intuition or insight. 'Divinity' is the quality of being divine, having a godlike character, and as such, poetry is a form of divination, for through the evocation of symbols, the unknown or unforeseen is revealed. Poetry is thus the language of divinity.

The manner in which language is interpreted can also determine whether it is divine. Language can hence be categorised into two main types: poetic and prosodic; understood literally, it is prose, understood as carrying a deeper, revelatory significance it is poetic. When literalisms do not suffice, poets use a symbolic language to give form to the otherwise ineffable experiences, while prose uses language to describe overt experiences. However, this needs further elucidation, as the nature of language is ambiguous, and because much depends upon how it is interpreted, poetry can be taken as overt and prose as symbolic.

Prose can be 'poetic' when the language extends beyond the overt experience of the world, as it evokes that which we do not readily know or see, namely the divine or metaphysical experience. Similarly, by failing to understand a poem's deeper significance, a reader of poetry may interpret a poem as a purely literal description of events, thereby making it prosodic, and as the significance of the poem is regrettably lost, so too is the 'magic', which is the manifestation of the divine. Religious teachings and mythology are classic examples of how interpretation can oscillate between poetic and prosodic; as poetry, language is charged with vehemence, as prose it is aloof and remote. Poetry is thus a ritual evoking divinity because it gives form to otherwise formless experiences.

As readers of poetry, we are invited to enter into this dimension of reality through the language of symbols, to partake in a ritual where dreamlike visions and sensations carry us away from the ordinary world, and allow us to experience that which we never thought possible. “This is why”, Eliade maintains, “even symbols bearing on ultimate reality conjointly constitute some existential revelation for the [person] who deciphers their message”(3). This is the revelatory nature of poetry: through the power of the imagination, poetry enables us to reach into the beyond and grasp the boundless source of creation that endows life with meaning and substance. Poetry is a path we can travel to reach the heart of divinity and the essence of life itself; by giving form to the metaphysical aspect of our humanity, poetry enables us to partake in the sacred by evoking the divine dimension of reality.

By engaging in poetics, whether it is the composition or the revelation of it, we evoke the source of creation; we are “placed in the presence of the mystery of Creation”(13). “Poetics”, Burroughs states, “moves us toward the margins of longing inherent in language itself, reminding us that this attraction is the 'place' of our creativity”(350).

The death of God and subsequent loss of poesis in modernity

Whither is fled, the visionary gleam?
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?
– William Wordsworth

The Renaissance period sought to revive antiquarian mythopoesis by re-igniting the presence of the divine. Poets such as Milton revived the religious sense of life in epics such as Paradise Lost and On the Morning of Christ's Nativity by “taking up the ancient, sacred stories and retelling them in a way that spoke to the new times.”5 However, the times began to change drastically, and the hold that religious dogmatism had on the West was losing its grip in light of the discoveries made in the Age of Reason.

After centuries of religious incarceration through absolute faith, the Age of Reason seemed liberating for the West as it developed the idea of thinking for oneself and taking control of our lives as opposed to succumbing to an unknown entity. Since religion was starved of meaning, it no longer satisfied the knowledge hungry masses; the West needed something solid to believe in, and something that they could understand. As the rational experience of the world became widespread, the religious sense of life became ineffectual, so the death of God was inevitable for those who preferred to trust in themselves rather than a mysterious God who worked in mysterious ways.

Religion contributed to the death of God because of its literal dogmatism, and was therefore not able to save God. It might even be said that the loss of poesis in religion produced the Age of Reason. As a result, the significance of symbolic discourse and poetry rapidly declined. When philosophers such as Descartes separated humanity from the natural world by reducing humans to mere thinking machines, poetry became insensible. Humanity lost its connection to nature because we no longer viewed ourselves as natural beings, and consequently, lost the link in the chain that connected us to each other and the world in which we live. Spirituality was misplaced, and the poets were no longer the voice of divine wisdom. Instead they became the 'Romantics', disillusioned by quixotic perceptions of existence and the world.

The Romantic poets however, such as Blake and Wordsworth, reacted strongly against the mechanisation of the human race and religious dogmatism, and condemned the rational thinkers for suggesting that their experiences of the divine were nothing more than mere thought processes, and the church for aiding in the death of God and thus divine revelation. Blake's poem 'Mock on, mock on, Voltaire and Rousseau', is a reaction against the rationalism that pervaded the time, defending the power of nature and upholding the undeniable divine aspect of creation:

Mock on, mock on, Voltaire, Rousseau;
Mock on, mock on; 'tis all in vain!
You throw the sand against the wind,
And the wind blows it back again.

And every sand becomes a Gem
Reflected in the beams divine;
Blown back they blind the mocking Eye,
But still in Israel's paths they shine.

The Atoms of Democritus
And Newton's Particles of Light
Are sands upon the Red Sea shore,
Where Israel's tents do shine so bright.

The poem tells us that there is more to life than the superficiality of reason, that it is unreasonable to assume that nature is inanimate for nature has a 'will' of its own, and those who experience the divine, can be freed from the slavery of the rational mind. In Blake's understanding of the world, the theories and ideas expressed in rationalistic terms are nothing in comparison to the vastness of the divine.

Blake refused to become a slave to a logo-centric world view, as the manifestation of the divine in the world of forms was much to real for him to deny; reason alone was not sufficient for Blake, for it was the divine that enabled him to create:

If it were not for the Poetic or Prophetic Character, Philosophic and Experimental would soon be at the ratio of all things and stand still, unable to do other than repeat the same dull round over again.7

The ability to see beyond the surface is what keeps the world from growing stale; it is what gives life its spontaneity, its inventiveness and its initiative, without which, nothing new could be fathomed. Everywhere he looked however, Blake saw the markings of a dogmatic society chained to logo-centrism:

I wander thro' each charter'd street,
Near where the charter'd Thames does flow,
And mark in every face I meet,
Marks of weakness, marks of woe

In every cry of every man,
In every Infant's cry of fear,
In every voice, in every ban,
The mind-forg'd manacles I hear.8

As Blake saw it, the death of god and the loss of poesis in society was drastically affecting the human character. With their backs to God, to whom would the people turn in times of need? When science and rationalism could not answer their questions and God did not exist, where would they seek solace?

Though the Age of Reason had liberated the West in one sense, it bound itself to another; our very rejection of poetics confined us to a self-made prison. Reason and rationality do not help us resolve unanswerable questions, nor do they give us anything to hold on to when circumstances are beyond our control. Blake tells us that we should not cling to rationalism, because it is not an absolute truth, "[r]eason, or the ratio of all we have already known, is not the same that it shall be when we know more."9 The Age of Reason stifled receptivity to the divine as it encouraged though within a logical frame of mind, which showed only what we already knew. It is the creative faculty that inspires us to create and the imagination that engenders receptivity to the divine, driving us forward into the future by opening doors that were previously closed, acting as a catalyst through which we can find release.

It was not only secular society that lost its connection to the spiritual dimension however, religion in the West had also renounced the divine that resided in the poetic understanding of its principles. In 'The Garden of Love', Blake reveals the misplacement of spirituality in religion:

I went to the Garden of Love,
And saw what I never had seen:
A Chapel was built in the midst,
Where I used to play on the green.

And the gates of this Chapel were shut,
And 'Thou shalt not' writ over the door;
So I turn'd to the Garden of Love,
That so many sweet flowers bore.

And I saw it was filled with graves,
And tomb-stones where flowers should be:
And Priests in black gowns, were walking their rounds,
And binding with briars, my joys & desires.(61)

Because of its literal dogmatism, religion is dead; it has closed the doors to the spiritual dimension and has thus become a spectre, restricting the joy and exaltation of religious veneration. The religious sense of life is about seeing the beauty within all things, providing space to thrive, and granting access to the divine.

Like Blake, Wordsworth was also fuelled by an intense reaction to the rational world-view sweeping across the West. Wordsworth felt that the rational world-view stripped the Earth of its beauty and sanctity, and that humanity was consequently on a downward spiral. Wordsworth however, never lost his faith in the divine; poetry was a vehicle that gave him permanent access to the divine, which both poets knew could be contemplated through the power of the imagination.

Wordsworth is renowned for his celebration of the natural world, and he knew the importance of allying the human mind with it.

Wordsworth saw the divine in nature and then translated his experience into poetry, allowing his mind to interact with the divine. For Wordsworth, God was nature, and nature was God, for his experiences of the divine were felt through nature and his experiences of nature were felt through God. Both god and nature filled his soul with the music of poetry and provided him with all the inspiration he needed to create and survive the Age of Reason.

Wordsworth sough solace in nature, for it is unbound. It is no subject to any laws governed by humanity and therefore has nobody to answer to. When he would become lost “in darkness and amid the many shapes/Of joyless daylight”11, Wordsworth would turn to nature for it would give him strength, stability, and a source of pleasure, unlike the rational “fever of the world” (53). The rational world-view made people cynical, mistrustful, and untrustworthy, however:

Nature never did betray
The heart that loved her; 'tis her privilege,
Through all the years of this our life, to lead
From joy to joy: for she can so inform
The mind that is within us, so impress
With quietness and beauty, and so feed
With lofty thoughts, that neither evil tongues,
Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,
Nor greetings where no kindness is, nor all
The dreary intercourse of daily life,
Shall e'er prevail against us, or disturb
Our cheerful faith, that all which we behold
Is full of blessings. (122-134, p 525)

Wordsworth reminds us that nature, or faith in God, is what makes life's difficulties easier to bear and what enables one to see the beauty in things. However, the death of god and loss of poesis left people faithless and aloof to the joy that the religious life promises. Wordsworth shows that without faith, we become blind to the possibility of a renewed life.

Like Blake, Wordsworth could not understand how people could renounce the wisdom of nature. In 'The Ruined Cottage' Wordsworth asks:

Why should we thus with an untoward mind
And in the weakness of humanity
From natural wisdom turn our hearts away,
To natural comfort shut our eyes and ears,
And feeding on disquiet thus disturb
The calm of Nature with our restless thoughts?”

Nature provides us with everything we need to survive, but we have turned our backs on her, and as a result have blocked ourselves off from our innate ability to resolve life's problematical situations. The Age of Reason gave people nowhere to turn to in times of unrest; without the 'comfort of nature', problems simply amplify.

Nature abounds with the numinous quality of the divine, which Wordsworth learnt to heed:

And I have felt
A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man
A motion and a spirit, that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things.13

What Wordsworth senses is the life connecting force of nature, the universal element common to all things in existence, which “givest to forms and images a breath/And everlasting motion”.14 Without the acknowledgement of nature's numinosity, “we lay waste our powers”15; we isolate ourselves from our 'natural' ability to connect with the life giving force.

Poetic re-enchantment of a disenchanted world wisdom first speaks in images

– W. B. Yeats

Poetry is a symbolic language that affirms the existence of a non-rational realm that is equally pertinent to human existence. As an expression of the divine, poetry enables us to connect with the life creating force, which creates a bond with nature, the world and everything in it. Since the loss of poesis however, the modern mentality has barricaded itself against nature; the divine essence of life has been buried under masses of concrete, and as a result, it can see no way out of its self-made prison. The Age of Reason spawned the Industrial Revolution, which was followed by the Technological Revolution, where most things have become hollow fabrication - representation of a life without symbolic understanding. We have constructed towering skyscrapers that reach up to the heavens, but they do not penetrate, as we do not know how to draw down its energy; at the same time we are pulling down forests faster than we can grow them, which symbolises our lack of awareness of the energy we can draw up from the Earth. Like a rainbow connecting heaven and Earth, poetry can re-connect us to the creative element via its empathic qualities. We must look at the rainbow, not as a mere reflection of the sun's light off water, but as a reflection of the divine in life, the bridge between heaven and Earth.

Chapter 3
DREAMS: ARBITRATORS OF DIVINE INTERVENTION
Emissaries of self-revelation

In numerous sources extending “from the fragments of the earlier writings of the Egyptians and Sumerians through the literature exemplified by Homer”, dreams were considered messages from the Gods1. In indigenous cultures also, dreams, like poetry and mythology, are also regarded as a divine experience due to their revelatory and healing capacity. In American Anthropologist, A.F.C. Wallace states that for the Mohave Indian, “all special abilities of funds of knowledge were to be had by dreaming and dreaming alone”2, while the indigenous Australian's use of the word Dreaming, as discussed in chapter one, suffices to say that this phenomenon equates with the cultural identity of the people.3 Religion also, considers dreams as divine and as compensatory to our current psychological conditions in Genesis, when Joseph says that the interpretation of dreams “belongs to God” (40:8), and gives “an answer of peace” (41:16).

However, for the rationalised thinkers of the disenchanted West, dreams are nothing more than the fatuous images experienced during sleep; from the point of view of mainstream cognitive science, they are a meaningless function of the mind to keep it active during sleep, (like a computer's screen saver), or an mnemonic mechanism for sorting and filing information obtained during waking hours.4 This is typical of the rationalised modern mentality; psychic phenomena are arbitrary and irrational, and since nothing profitable exists beyond the cognitive realm, they do not contain meaningful implications, other than those pertaining to the cognitive hypothesis. However, analysed symbolically, dreams are gateways to self-discovery – the mind's own modus operandi for revealing things about ourselves and the world, which we have no conscious knowledge of, and which we may utilise in order to resolve problematic situations in our life.

Dreams speak in a language that is familiar to the conscious mind, though they appear to be illogical because they communicate in a language that is not rational, i.e. symbolic. They often use images and symbols that we can relate to personally, because at some stage of our life we have had conscious experience of them in mythology, religion, and other such sources.5 Of the many functions dreams serve, one that is pertinent to an individual's psychological development is their ability to reveal to the conscious mind, through symbolic representation, the source of psychological discord affecting our ability to discover solutions to problematic situations that we experience in life, so that an accord might be established. As Jung postulates, “It is evident that this function of dreams amounts to a psychological adjustment, a compensation absolutely necessary for proper balanced action” (245, par. 469). In this sense, dreams are psychic products that act in a compensatory manner to the conscious mind, with the aim of achieving psychological equilibrium.

Perhaps most renowned for their work on dreams, Frued and Jung dedicated a vast amount of their life's work on the systematic analysis of dreams. Much of our present understanding of the nature of dreams has come to our attention because of the theories, which place dreams at the centre of the psychoanalytic process. According to Freud and Jung, one aspect of dream psychology is to reveal the psychological barriers affecting our current psychic disposition; they are “an autonomous and meaningful product of psychic activity, susceptible, like all other psychic functions, of a systematic analysis.”6 When understood as such, dreams become less irrational and meaningless, and it is in this way that the symbolic language of dreams becomes revelatory.

Dream analysis seems second nature for Jung, and after studying over 2000 dreams annually7, you would agree that he must have some authority on the subject. Founded, but not entirely based on Freud's theories, Jung's understanding is that due to its own inherent meaning, one aspect of the dream is to unveil the psychological blockages hindering an individual's potential to develop psychologically. However, whereas Freud argued from a purely causal standpoint, Jung's theory “necessitate[d] a twofold view, namely that of causality and that of finality”8, “for the psyche cannot be conceived merely in causal terms but requires also a final view” (247, par, 473). From the causal standpoint, we can ascertain “the preceeding experiences out of which [the dream] is composed” (240, par, 451), but from the final standpoint we can ascertain “the immanent psychological striving for a goal” inherent in them.9

From Jung's point of view, it is imperative that we decipher the cause and the goal or purpose of the dream, because without a sense of purpose, dream symbols remain indistinct from each other and bear no individual significance (245, par, 470). Jung argued:

From this standpoint, the significance lies precisely in the diversity of the symbolical expressions in the dream and not in their uniformity of meaning. The causal point of view tends by its very nature towards a uniformity of meaning, that is, towards a fixed significance of symbols. (246, par 471).

“From the standpoint of finality the images in a dream each have an intrinsic value of their own.” According to Jung, the dream, as “regarded from the casual standpoint, is the result of antecedent psychic contents” (239, par 451), however, the causal standpoint only reveals the problem and does not offer the means for solving it. If we are to improve our current psychological condition, the purpose of the compensatory dream must be revealed.

Both Freud and Jung argued that out present psychological condition is based on our psychic past, because “every emotion produces a more or less extensive complex of associations”10, what Jung termed the 'feeling-toned complex of ideas', which we carry around with us and hence influence our future. Some of our experiences are more significant that others, and therefore those that carry strong feeling-tones will evoke a lasting complex of associations, which 'constellate' our psychological development. These feeling-toned associations are re-presented, in symbolic form, in dreams. In this sense, dreams have the purpose of alerting the dreamer of these constellating influences.

When we dream, the feeling-tones that we associate with specific images and symbols, moods and thoughts, are re-presented so that we may better understand and consequently remove the psychological barriers impeding our current psychological condition. This is why some of our dreams are composed of images, symbols, moods and thoughts experienced during waking hours. The theory then, that dreams are an mnemic mechanism for sorting and filing information, obtained during waking hours is perhaps the closest rational explanation of the function of dreams, however, the connection is not inadvertent.

When we encounter something during waking hours that corresponds to the 'feeling-tones', the dream will re-present these things in particular, in symbolic form, so that we may recognise their pertinence. We do not dream of absolutely everything we have experienced during waking hours, and dreams are not structured rationally enough to simply be an mnemic system. Besides, other images and symbols, which have not consciously experienced in relation to the other events, can also be present.

I recently dreamt that I was in my son's classroom and his teacher was urging me to do something, of which I am apprehensive in waking life, as she was aware that the outcome would be positive. Obviously, I take my son to school every weekday, and I talk with his teacher, but we have never had such a conversation. The dream is using these particular images and symbols because they have specific feeling-toned associations for me, which I can evaluate in order to unveil the reasons behind my apprehension and to consider the possibility of striving to attain that goal. As Jung suggests, “In a conscious process of reflection it is essential that, so far is possible, we should realise all the aspects and consequences of a problem in order to find the right solution”(245, par. 469).

Dreams have their own inherent meaning, which can be revealed by looking beneath the surface of what Freud termed the 'manifest content', and into the 'latent content', the dream-thought. Because they aptly re-present the antecedent complex of associations constellating our current psychological condition, the dream will produce images and symbols that are more significant than others are, with the aim of revealing the source of psychological blockages so that they may be made conscious and better understood, as well as to offer alternative solutions to problematic situations. Dream symbols are hence revelatory, for they tell the dreamer what do not consciously know.

It follows then that we must ask, as Jung did, why do we not “conceive [the associations] clearly and without equivocation?”11 Is not the purpose of a compensatory dream to reveal the repressed or forgotten material so that it can be overcome? The answer to this is exceedingly logical. Firstly, symbols are by nature obscure because they are an accessible expression of the otherwise inexpressible aspects of the human condition, therefore they do not speak in a language that is rational. Secondly, if we were conscious of the repressed or forgotten material we would have no need to dream about them. We create a psychological barrier when we refuse to face the reality of our psychological disposition out of fear; therefore, because it is easier to deny painful and disturbing experiences than it is to face them, we reject the material so that we do not have to think about them.

Though they are no longer part of conscious awareness however, they are still part of our total psychological character, as nothing can be completely erased from our mind, which is why, Freud argues, it resurfaces in dreams. Therefore, because the information that the dream is attempting to bring into conscious awareness is information that the individual is not prepared to accept, the dream must 'disguise' the repressed complex in order for it to re-enter conscious awareness (p.7). The complex is not recognised because the dream has 'censored' it, as Freud termed it, making it more acceptable. In a sense, the conscious mind is 'hoodwinked' by the dream allowing the complex to resurface. This is why dreams appear to be equivocal.

Since we do not readily accept anything that we have purposely rejected, dreams are commonly considered meaningless, and therefore any attempts to unveil their meaning are usually met with resistance. However, even if we do accept the transformative propensity of dream analysis, for the individual, dreams are often confounding and impenetrable because we have lost our ability to understand the language of symbols, and so the information that the dream attempts to reveal usually remains undisclosed. How then, do we penetrate the dream-thought.

We must first relate the images and symbols with out waking-life experiences, then, when we sense resistance to them, we must be honest with ourselves and ask, “What is it that I do not want to recognise?” “What is it that I fear?” In doing so, we open ourselves to the possibility of renewal, to a transformation of our psychological character. We can then attempt to 'decode' the dream's symbolic significance, and reincorporate the repressed material into conscious awareness. As Jung argued, “Compensation... as the term implies, means balancing and comparing different date or points of view so as to produce an adjustment or rectification.”12 If we can recognise, accept and understand the very things we fear, we will cease to be afraid of them and so resolve the problematic situation.

If the individual is to unlock the latent content in order to overcome psychological hindrances, one must resist the resistance. To do so, we must reincorporate the primitive mentality into conscious awareness, that is, accept the existence and pertinence of the non-rational element of our being, as it understands the language of symbols and hence guide the conscious mind in the transformation process.

Releasing the chains that bind us: increasing the propensity for transformation through dream analysis

Overcoming resistance to psychological complexes however, is not an easy feat. After all, if they were not so overwhelming or painful, we would not have repressed them to begin with. When we resist the inherent meaning of dreams, we are in fact contesting the control that the rational mind feels its has over the Self. Therefore, the acceptance of dreams as meaningful means rejecting the foundations of the modern Western mentality, which asserts the significance of ego consciousness, and rejects any other part of the mind.

Dreams have certain numinosity about them for they have a will of their own, but since the ego feels that it directs and controls the self, it resists and attempts that threaten its position.13 It is not always easy for people to admit that they were wrong, so out of fear of seeming and feeling stupid, and to avoid admitting defeat, we often attempt to cover up our mistakes or find ways to excuse our lack of judgement or knowledge. Therefore, to acknowledge the dream-thought means acknowledging that the ego is wrong and hence not in control, so we resist the dream-thought and consider it unimportant.

This in turn produces a struggle with oneself, additional tension, stress and anxiety. The propensity for transformation is denied, thus increasing the unfavourable disposition. We resist the urge to submit to the influence of dreams, because admitting that the ego was wrong means losing control. In reality, adhering to the numinosity of the dream is a way to regain control, for we are given the opportunity to transform the problematic and encumbering situations that we face in our day-to-day existence.

When we resist the dream thought, what are we resisting? With whom are we fighting? Ultimately, we are fighting with ourselves and hindering our potential to transform a disadvantageous psychological character or problematic situation. As Jung states, “If a dream shows me what sort of mistake I am making, it gives me an opportunity to correct my attitude, which is always an advantage.”14 By way of symbolic representation specific to the individual, the dream reveals to the dreamer aspects of their psychological disposition that are no longer part of conscious awareness, which they must again become aware of again in order to remove the psychological barriers inhibiting their ability to progress.

Dreams are revelatory as such, for they tell us what we do not consciously know. They are transformative because they allow the individual to overcome psychological hindrances. From Jung's point of view, psychological development is possible through the interpretation of the personalised symbolic language of dreams, but since we no longer understand the language of symbols, we have difficulty understanding them, and so the potential for self-discovery and psychological transformation is often missed.

Like all things once held in high esteem because of their affiliations with divinity, dreams are considered unimportant because, as a materially driven, secular society we no longer place any value on nor do we understand the language of symbols. Just as poetry and mythology have degenerated in high culture, so too has the inherent meaning of dreams. By understanding the dream as an independent and meaningful method for psychological development however, we recognise the propensity for transformation and release the chains that psychological bind us; we reunite the primordial mentality with the modern, and allow them to work collaboratively, the only condition that can sustain genuine progress.

CONCLUSION

We have become rich in knowledge, but poor in wisdom.
– C.G Jung

I have attempted to explain, in as many words as this thesis has allowed, that the symbolic understanding of language is by no means subordinate to its literal counterpart. While the literal interpretation of language presents us with a means of communicating that which we can see and know, language interpreted symbolically permits the accessibility of all that we cannot see or do not know. Each has its purpose as a means of communication, and both are necessary.

When we first have an idea, we think in symbols, which we remember, are understood as the best possible expressions for a complex fact not yet clearly apprehended by consciousness. When we attempt to develop that idea and relate it to others, we begin to use formalised language so that our idea may be communicated. At present, I am using formalised language, rationally constructed so that others may comprehend my arguments, but since I was not always aware of them, the ideas that originally came to me were generated symbolically. As Jung argued:
The symbols [the psyche] creates are always grounded in the unconscious archetype, but their manifest forms are always grounded by the ideas acquired by the conscious mind. (232, par, 344.)

Both modes of thinking are equally important; and neither would be of any use in the modern world if they did not collaborate with each other.

Even when formalised language did not exist, humanity had to find ways in which to communicate their ideas. Jung states that “language was originally a system”, to express emotions and imitate sounds of things, such as those for running water, rauschen, or the more modern word, river, or rush (12 par. 12). However, as humanity progressed, language became more extensive and we began to lose sight of what was being symbolised and focused instead on the object, until the literal understanding of language took over from the symbolic, which “laid the foundations of a solidly built intellectual function, the sin qua non of modern science and technology” (20, par. 22). The symbolic implications of language were taken for granted.

Ancient civilisations used symbolism in the form of myths to understand the world, which is indicative of their relationship to the Earth and the universe. As descendants of these people, we are hence rooted in mythological and symbolic origins. Although we have, to some degree, 'triumphed' over nature's overwhelming power and 'wildness', and have been 'enlightened' by our rational and logical ability to understand the world and the universe, we have forgotten our origins, or consider them to be ineffectual because they conflict with our rational and logical expectations.

This has created a gulf of longing in humanity; the denial of our inherent spirituality has sent us on a quest in which there is no reward for there is no end. Material fixations can never satisfy our craving for the spiritual, it simply fuels the already blazing fire that was set alight by our very rejection of spirituality. Humanity needs to fuse reason and logic with the mythopoetic language of symbols in order to extinguish the spiritual longing and to live a balanced life.

We cannot live solely in the realm of the symbolic, nor can we live a purely rational existence. Just as living without spirituality causes problems, so too does a life where there is no conscious relsation. The development of the rational mind allows us to recognise the pertinence of symbolism, and prevents us from identifying completely with the symbolic mode of thinking.

When one becomes submerged in the world of symbols, one cannot make sense of conscious reality and is therefore no longer able to interact socially on a conscious level, which is diagnosed as schizophrenia, literally, a 'splitting of the mind'.2

However, an individual's remoteness from the symbolic also makes them psychologically vulnerable or unstable. The rationally oriented person who is not open to the mythopoetic realm of symbolism suffers not from a “loss of reality, but from a falsification of it” (140, par. 200). Reality is not wholly composed of rationality; the arts are evidence of this. Music, poetry, and visual art, are means of capturing the essence of divinity in form that resonates with our mythopoetic origins. Art is as close to the source as is humanly possible; without it, not only would life be dull, but we would also lack the symbolic vision to create and recreate.

The language of symbols, in which form it takes, enables us to grasp the deeper inferences of life, while the ability to rationalise enables us to re-cognise their pertinence in our day-to-day existence. By 'rationalise' I do not mean to 'intellectualise,' or reduce them to mathematical formulae, as this would remove their symbolic potency and their spiritual significance, and force us to think of humankind as Descartes proposed, which is how we became disenchanted. By 'rationalise' I mean able to distinguish between these two realms. While the symbolic mode of thinking enables us to 'spread our wings,' the conscious mind and rational understanding of the world keeps us 'grounded'.

To be truly 'enlightened', one must have wisdom, not just knowledge. Knowledge tells us what we have already come to understand, whereas wisdom helps us understand what we do not already know. Things do not always make sense, and we cannot always make sense of things, however, by accepting that life is not a purely rational experience, we can at least come to some sort of resolution.

Religion was originally intended for this purpose, but, as with Christianity, was mislaid when it attempted to support its foundations with historical dogmatism. Religion loses its flavour when it ceases to speak symbolically; it no longer imparts the numinous quality of the divine and is therefore unable to comfort us when our lives do not make sense, nor does it ease the tension created by vacillation.

If consciousness were the only point of reference for the acquisition of knowledge, then all things would be known.3 We know that this is not true; everything that we know today was once unknown and we are continually discovering more about the nature of these things. We do not know everything, and cannot know everything, and if we posit this theory, which Newton asserted4, then we are advancing our superiority over nature. We cannot be superior to nature, nor can we ever control it. The best that we could ever hope to achieve in our lives is a sacred balance between what we know and we do not know.

THEM, NUMBERS, FORM AND THE MAGI

THE INEXORABLE MARCH OF TINY STEPS TOWARD INSYNSIAN

Literary Concepts and faith in those concepts form the backbone of the Magian Matrix. But the tendency to write about the structure of language and communication tends to lend the idea that only words have this ingrained duality about them – but it is perhaps more so with the subtle but omnipresent phenomena of numbers [perhaps because the majority of the world are right-handed] that the machinations of monotheism and God may indeed lie. Perhaps it is not with the usual suspects of the occult that the distortion of the matrix lies but in the ability of the Magian mindset to capitalise off clever inventions – inventions which were often created in daily life where Christianity was the practiced and enforced norm – and hence Insynsian had a huge impact as a backdrop behind most mentalities.

Immortality and the desire to be remembered impregnates many innovations – as does the desire to be rich, famous and revered. Behind these mundane concerns of the individuals living in their moments there is a chain of such innovations that could be said to have been considerable contributing factors in the way our brains developed a unilateral preference for a 23 Syndrome rather than a bi-, tri- or multi-partmental set of perspectives or syndrome[s].

Numbers, mathematics play a huge part in our story as human beings and as the backdrop to the increasing lean toward shaping our minds a particular way over another, at least culturally. The author assumes the reader has prior knowledge of theoretical mathematics.
One of the interesting facts about numbers is that most numbers cannot even be drawn or defined with there being an infinite amount of numbers between integers 1 and 2 – these being irrational and wholly impossible to write down since they just keep going. There are numerous examples of simple looking equations giving esoteric and unexpected answers. Rather than accept these fundamental "problems" with mathematics – which many claim to be precise instruments with which to explain the world – a great deal of the phenomena of numbers is esoteric and magical – even logic cannot explain nor derive answers for certain equations. Again and again, these uncomfortable anomalies and imperfections have been glossed over so as to enable the use of 'perfect' numbers – to create the sense of a seamless method of enquiry.

Algebra was instrumental in providing a means where numbers that could not be written down, could still be used – but this ignoring of the Actual nature of numbers is typical and traditional to the Magi – we can see this convenient glossing over of such imperfections in systems echoed everywhere for the sake of making them work. One example being in Courts where what actually happened is never what is reviewed and there is a pressing need for someone's actions to be quantified into a box, for a case to be either guilty or not guilty, endless arrays of either/or and it is not about facts, but demonization of each party and who has the better more convincing Lawyer who can cast the right spells by phrasing words the right way.

But numbers have a grey area just as words do – between the concept of the God and the Devil there are also infinite concepts – but most of these prove too difficult to grasp so people gravitate toward the lazier option, the easier option, the option that traditionally humans have gone for. Dualism. Because humans do not like the irrational – that's why we shorten things, take short-cuts, call one well-known irrational number pi rather than try to write it down;- it's beyond us to do – and we need clear chunky hand-holds and things that are perfect and do not leave room for doubt, we need for us and others to have Faith in any system deployed – but both mathematics and words are wholly irrational products which have been altered to suit – suit what? Insynsian.

What is fundamental about THEM is its emphasis on a plurality in all degrees – we have seen again and again what inventions the mind throws up under the mindset of Insynsian – we need to break that cycle to get a range of minds functioning on a new level to disrupt the Magi – not merely to highlights its problems but to actively offer solutions. What has essentially been the process of the Magi is to omit those things in Nature it finds offensive or that do not match the Ego's function for absolute clarity.

More often than not we have achieved only agreement on a settle point where difficult concepts that do truly speak of Nature's matrix are ironed out, rounded off and re-packaged in a human-centred format, not a life-centred format.

History – is the perfect example. This Logical approach is of course the result of a tradition of fitting facts into human schema – not the other way around. It is this rounding off of facts that enables the Matrix to evolve by simplifying things into basic building blocks rather than continually grasping for them every time we want to use them. But it is the same rounding off that has led to the common ignorance toward the true state of things because they were too difficult for the human being to grasp in their raw state and needed to be abstracted into simpler but distorted forms. This prejudice has coloured and still does All spheres of human enquiry.

Now was Individuation's natural course coloured/altered by the pressures of monotheistic Christianity, the minds natural processes distorted by this impression of monotheism as a strive for the Absolute or was Individuation a product of it or before it? Early Christians believed that 2 was representative of the Devil because it created division [an alternative to Insynsian]. Zoroastrianism believed that 2 represented an eternal battle evenly balanced. Though it cannot be related here or perhaps anywhere with any clarity and completeness the concept of numbers slowly developed [not continuously – various insights were lost and found again – others lost forever] over thousands of years to a point where several inventions bought us closer to Binary or Dualism as an Industrial Cog.

In 1646 CE Gottfried Leibnitz born in Germany[Saxony] developed the philosophy behind Binary numbers. He believed the universe could be represented more elegantly through binary and its conflicting yes/no, on/off nature such as male-female, light-dark, right-wrong. Towards the end of his life, he began to believe that binary numbers represented Creation, with 1 symbolising God, and 0 depicting the Void. This was noticed by Joseph Jacquard born in Lyons, France 1752 – who developed an automated Loom that used binary punch-cards to make the correct stitching. This made him a wealthy man and by 1812 there were 11,000 such looms in use in France. His machine was the first to use binary numbers to store memory. Charles Babbage would arrive on the scene shortly after and create the Difference Engine which produced tables of numbers by calculating and adding differences to the previous numbers. He is credited as the father of the computer.

George Boole [from Boolean] predicated a new system of logic with three values he believed could describe any logical statement; these were known as the Boolean operators, AND, OR and NOT. Gradually the world was becoming more logical and less natural. Less complicated and more controlled.

It was perhaps Einstein's theories that seemed to blow apart this gradual immersion into more rigid logic and more exact measurement with the special and general theories of relativity. Now discussions of Quantum emerged, of infinity or constants such as c [the speed of light] against which all manner of previously held candles of idea were extinguished overnight. But this leap forward in science has not had the effect of challenging the Church and its monotheistic beliefs – but of becoming the Church itself in a new vein. Science was born of the rigidity of the Church – and appears to have little in common with it – but it has everything to do with it – even today science quests after a Universal theory to explain everything – some special theory of All – with the identical absolutism of the Magi, believing itself to be removed from such antiquated notions as God – it is merely another stage/phase or face of Insynsian.

Where did Mathematics/Science meet with the Divine? It appears to have taken root in the concept of Infinity. The concept of infinity was considered by a Greek named Zeno, furthered by Aristotle but never really gained ground as a reality merely as a potential. In the 13th century the writings of theologian Thomas Aquino bound Aristotelian philosophy [which presently shaped the world] into an intricate link with religion. It was there that God entered the world as an infinite subject and the notion of an ever-lasting infinite soul became integrated too.

A fellow named Tertullian (c. 160 – c. 225 AD) was instrumental in setting a hedge around Scriptures by insisting that there are limits to Jesus's injunction to seek and find. He was just one of hundreds of thousands of people who put in place devices that lead to causal outcomes that strengthened the power of the Church and its forms immeasurably – but which Church has never achieved Unification [as good as though, really].

Tertullian's edicts were adopted by the Romans and thus a huge number of splintered groups of Christians who at the time read the Scriptures differently and thus got very different things from it suddenly became split into the more forceful Orthodox believers with sanctioned backing and the rest, who were labelled Heretics. His efforts would lead to the demand that Scripture be authorised to be understood by a very select group of people, the same way for all Christians [a closed canon]. This was but one act of intent [who can say what the intent contained] that was responsible for shaping the way Christianity affected the world and the way it did so.

We listed others above in the inventions of mathematicians that opened the gates to the industrial age and the machine age – are they too Magian?

Any serious examination of history leaves one with not only the sense that the linear continuum is a farcical notion to entertain but also that it was not some over-arching plan by a group of super-powerful wizards in a magical tower with magical genius that created Christianity or caused it to be sustained but the common will of people taken bit by bit in the same directions via new directions. Christianity, whilst oppressive is not the cause of human suffering. It was the acts of hundreds of thousands of ordinary people in positions of power, and millions more who have not survived in historical memory who little by little made small changes over thousands of years that lead to the way things are now. Not because these changes proceeded in an orderly arrangement, implemented one after the other without argument – but largely, because when you demand that everyone do something, there will always be groups that defy that order, leading to new kinds of forms, counter-forms, counter-culture whose ideals have their own agenda. As they grow, they too schism, split, divide, disagree and form new kinds of forms too. We are but a virus dividing itself – in thrall to powers far beyond us that rule us blindly.

There is an occult expression called the Cosmic Egg. It is the supposed shape of the human body performing all possible extensions and poses of its biology to the limits of its reach at once forming an egg about itself. How many of these do you think you could perform?

There is another occult expression called the Sinister Grotesque. But in a lesser form between smiling and frowning how many other facial motions do you go through? We treat vastly complicated things as simple for so long that we take them for granted, the next generation inherits them as facts. When we think about it, we describe two motions. I was smiling and then I frowned. Our human biology and traditional knowledge system drastically limits our ability to grasp the thousands of milli, nano, fermi seconds during which the muscles, sinews, electronic signals, and show to us the thousands of faces in between each “set” of emotions we recognise.

How many colours can we recognise? Approximately several thousand – and yet we have supposedly millions of colours presented to us. What is the point if we cannot tell the difference? Moreover, how many colours do you actively recognise? Seven? Twelve? Maybe two dozen? On a regular basis. But probably not many more than that. The Magi are known as Closers – they close things off with words and numbers and other tools from the true Chaos that it is. This is a service to mankind for which they are never consciously thanked – but, it went past a point where it should have – this is where the distortion began to become apparent in hindsight.

The entire world is built on an artificial construct of not-quites, good-enough's, and fair estimates. I had often believed mathematics to be a science built on absolutes but its not – hence we have Phi, once of the most well-known of the irrational numbers stemming from the Fibonacci sequence, which number we cannot even write down. The corner-cutting in the worlds progressive development has allowed society and mankind to rise up amidst a paradise that fits its own image. Or rather, an image that has striven for ever since the possible alternatives were hunted, extinguished, murdered or erased from history as the Magi swept across the planet in a monotheist fervour. How many times was the truth written down only to be burned, extinguished, buried, changed, discredited, hidden, forgotten? What comes down to us is minimal and yet it forms the backbone of the majority of human thought – few things have changed since Euclid gave us the principles of Math, Newton the principles of physics, the Greeks the principles of drama and philosophy.

These inventions are all that survived to us in the present day – but imagine what we might have been able to do or become had we had more of these missing discoveries, inventions, thoughts, radical innovations and ideas.

But they have been erased, forgotten or deliberately destroyed somewhere along the way because of Insynsian – the desire for One truth, one God, one Law, one Way, one, one, one. And what is one? It is Indivisible. It is God. And it is our insidious biological imperatives twisted up in this development of something Divine that have brought the world to its present state. Why is the world so easy to control for so few? Because extraordinarily complex questions have been answered in simple terms of yes and no. You are either doing the right thing and with God – or you are not and turned over to the Devil. This is not some moral judgement limited to religious zealots – it is everywhere, parroted by everyone. Us/Them. Wrong/Right. You're In/You're Out.

If you can imagine that the whole world has been trained to use tools a certain way for thousands of years – you can imagine just how difficult it is to try to use them differently – and the absurdity that it requires an 'occult' school of renegade thinkers to try to re-examine this messy chiselled sculpture of the Matrix and envisage what it looked like when it was still a part of the stone.

But now we come to the most difficult part of the Temple of THEM and the requisite necessity for humans to adopt in order to evolve and to come closer to the truth of the matters at heart and for many members of THEM, it is hard to stomach. But it IS the reality. It is here, time to discard the Mythos so carefully built up around you and here the greatest danger that you will no longer understand the purpose of the Temple of THEM.

This is where the concept of Mundanes vs. Sinister breaks down – this is where we take a step further into the darkness despite enjoying the light of believed lies which provided a tension, a struggle, a purpose to our Work. The idea that we were up against a monstrous entity of conspiracy that has carefully retained power throughout thousands of years or that one side is evil the other good. When we play these games – we do nothing more than act like the so-called enemy, why? Because WE are the enemy – the enemy comes from us, from the ideas we hold and the way we hold them – WE, are the MAGI, the SINISTER, the OTHERS, US and THEM. Any depth of research shows many things, chief of which is the absolute difficulty even amongst academics, occultists, specialists, experts of agreement on any set of particular facts or circumstances.

The truth of any Distortion will forever lay buried. The trail is ice cold and inhumanly vast. What connections we can make to join one causal phenomenon to another are in vain because our sources are largely modern, largely corrupted, and always have or had an agenda. We have a fraction of the available information and of that fraction we only process or can process a far smaller fraction – we'd like to think we can understand History – but only so long as facts are definite, definitions are absolute, and vast elements of the equation are culled out beforehand, and we concentrate our efforts to PROVE something to suit our agenda – [which alone should ring alarm bells since that is what History IS not just for us, but for all the others who wrote about it] – can we wrap our hand around this leviathan of the deep in which only the crown of the head is visible and the rest forever submerged. Disappointing as it may be – this is the reality.

The idea of a Magian Lodge whose members conspired throughout the aeons to bring us to where we are now is an approach at best used by polemicists – those that seek to equally divide normative orthodoxy and heresy against it. It is almost demanded that there BE an enemy outside of us, someone or some group whose ideals clash with our own, who threatens to dominate the stage with false ideals, outlandish theories, damaging rhetoric. We believe ourselves engaged in an occult war because it provides the impetus to put into practice the Ethos of our people as Conquerors. How to be a conqueror if there is nothing to conquer? So, we construe for ourselves, a narrow, limited-vision, idea of the past so that we can decide the future. But the one thing many people fail to take into account is the corruption of the information that is RIFE. The majority of people do not KNOW how to read. They accept facts and information at face value, and even the Sinister uses a majority of Christian sources, written by Christians, to prove its agenda. Facts become weapons – based on faith in the very idea of facts.

Agenda is everywhere – it is human to have an agenda – its why we seek to become Dark Ones, or overthrow the Magian, or get together at all as isolated people across the planet, or in close-proximity groups – we have an agenda. We think we understand the very nuts and bolts of what is "WRONG" with the world or our culture and we seek to "RIGHT" it – we believe ONLY our movement can do so, because ONLY our movement understands what has been broken and how to fix it. And, its why we support others we think support us – because their agenda, helps our agenda. And, its why we war against those who we think don't support our agenda, because it makes our agenda harder to attain. This is an approach that humans have taken for hundreds of thousands of years. Tribal difference correlates directly to the forms that possess us.

The truth is exceedingly simple, Human beings, who don't enjoy their condition, want someone or something to blame. Sometimes, there IS someone to blame, who is deliberately making life hard or unfair.

But to lay the blame of the worlds condition at the feet of a mythical Illuminati is insane. It is not just insane – but easier. The frightful problem with humans is that we do not live long – and even if we spend our whole lives working to understand History – we cannot achieve more than a cursory understanding – our lives are simply too short and our capacities too limited – otherwise we should realise that everything is far too complicated to have conclusions. The very concept of conclusions is to give up, believing one has exhausted the material from which they draw facts and points to the point where an agenda has been sufficiently proved. All of the sources drawn from had writers who also had agendas – tipping facts one way or another. When a writer encountered something he didn't like, his peers wouldn't like, or something that went against his agenda – what did he do? He didn't accept it and change himself – he changed the writing, edited it, omitted it, or altered it, instead.

We must be HONEST with ourselves, our EGO must learn to be HONEST too. The problems that plague humanity are not driven by some amorphous description that seems bound to a definite area of people when we say Christianity. What is a Christian? Someone that believes in God? Someone that goes to Church? Someone that tells other's they are going to Hell? Someone that follows the teachings of Christ?
The term is as nebulous as any other, including Magi. We can cut corners and treat these notions as facts, as given terms for observable phenomena, build a view on them using their stones for our masonry – but the Adept knows that's all it is. Sometimes that's all that is needed – trading one story for another is often the best humanity can hope for – and such trading can work, where new stories promote new expressions, new reactions, new forms until they too solidify and become the new orthodoxy.

If you do not see the enormous egoism and human-centred perception at play across the board in taking this stance, or that this is the very stance millions of people take – then you cannot evolve into what lays beyond this primitive perceptive tradition. The Temple asks a question that is quintessential of psychic evolution – DO, we have to have an enemy to provide impetus to our motion?

What does it mean to be as Nietzsche once said: Beyond Good and Evil?
It means, Whatever you can say about what it is to be Sinister – I can equate with being no different from those things that define the Magi. The Magi are lazy, incompetent, foolish? The mundanes are sub-human, incompetent, ignorant?
The Empires that rule the world have never been Satanic, incompetence would not reduce resistance to nil or take the acts against it in its stride, as for foolish – only a fool underestimates their limitations to comprehend the mind-boggling scope of what Christianity has achieved. Fools focus on what it has not achieved and cite from sources of its achievement – philosophers, artists, inventors, warriors, sorcerers. The sheer staggering expertise of Christianity has required truly serious head-scratching to provide a counter form.

ONA sought to be it – but is nothing more than an arm of it. It matches, action for action, the same polemic attitude demonised as being a trait of the Magian. Vindex is a thinly disguised Jesus, Baphomet a sexist icon that oppresses Women, it's understanding of History as blind as any other – nowhere does it accept or acknowledge the limitations of the human to understand, because it is unable to come to terms with the reality it never will.

There are more books in any library than we will ever be able to read. There are more experiences on the planet than we will ever be able to enjoy/endure. There is more wrong with our worldview than we will ever want to admit.
We can flesh out a reasonable utility of understanding, enough to provide context and purpose, but we can never truly know, and this is a devastating thing the Ego must accept because it believes it can do anything – and it is this trait that makes humans so persistent, motivated and determined to overcome. But like all the other groups peer to it, it seeks a superman to hide its shame – it wants to overcome but it is already overcome – our memories are not secure, our lifespan is short, our ability to comprehend in more than a handful of dimensions is finite, our eyes form most of the judgement, we have only a small wedge of consciousness opposed to the vast gulf of the rest of the psyche, we are biased, prejudiced, and loaded with an agenda. We are possessed of a 23 syndrome and see demons and angels wherever we look – they just take on different guises. We understand only through brief approximations, we know neither the secret of nature or the universe, and we struggle at the best of times just to be ourselves. We are fraught with complexes, neuroses, psychic disturbance, pathology, compensations – the need to drink, eat, stay warm, breathe, excrete all regularly – our bodies are mostly helpless against colds, viruses, internal malfunction, cancers, death.

We seek to be superman because we cannot be super enough to accept ourselves as we are – we need to be Gods, Overmen, Super-Beings, Immortals, to go live with Aliens, to believe in Crop Circles, Pyramid Power, Annunaki – all to save ourselves from our condition as flimsy frail human beings. We hear of stem cell research, nanotechnology, bio-mechanics, genetics and other things going on around the planet to prolong human life, slow down human deterioration, engineer better, stronger, parts and pieces – and this belief, or rather, dis-belief at what we are – is the power core of the Magi. Of the "Magian" worldview and motivator to worship God, explain the Devil, or deny both.

It is not enough to be human we want to be inhuman. And if we were inhuman – we'd probably want something else. And this is the job of the Ego – to decide what we are and what we want to be. And it looks at what we are and what we want to be and concentrates on closing the distance between reality and fantasy. But we fall short most times frustrating the ego immeasurably. Because that is its function – to struggle toward an ideal of us. And if we should achieve it – to struggle toward an ideal of others, and a widening scope of the world around it.

It is not a dirty word to be human. We shouldn't go so far to say we're proud to be one – we simply have no choice. And we share the planet with billions of other ones. It is our lot. Our condition. Some luckier than others, some much luckier than others. Born into wealth, or a peaceful location. Some whose backdrop in life is death, suffering and war. Some whose backdrop is security, fine foods and fast cars.

We must divest these things of our emotional attachment for it clouds our judgement. Satanism could never have been so strong a form if Christianity had not been so oppressive – every action has an opposite an equal reaction – if Christianity had been flimsy or simple it should have created a shadow of Satanism that was the same. If you set up a polemic between two forces, then the one will be as strong as the other you push off against. Because its all in the mind. The Magi, the very instrument of calling them a Magi are parts of a ceaseless equation we must not believe but understand. No-one wants to acknowledge the validity of the forms they hate that they push off against to make their own stand, to reject something in order to build their own something – but why? Such pitiful ignorance even after thousands of years of how forms work, of what is required, of the nasty, brutish, ugly aspects of interaction involving events and persons is as equally a part of form as any pleasant aspects of it. The Traitor may be hated, feared, despised but alchemically he or she is the catalyst for change, the tumbling of the house of cards, the loss of control we pretend doesn't exist only to be sorely reminded that we have very little – even as we might think we understand people and their motives to a critical degree – there is always a surprise, a knife, a shadow – as there has always been. Someone to be reviled and blamed – as if we are destined to perform the same gormless dance forever without ever gaining any understanding of the importance of the SINISTER.

The Sinister practice life-affirming things whilst the Magi practice a worship of Death? Nonsense. The division between the two is a convenience at best – there is no division – you are as Magian as you are Sinister, as right as you are wrong, as black as you are white. If we take a polemic outside of our own, and look at two nations warring, or two tribes, or even a couple arguing – we can clearly see there are "two sides to every story" and that "both are as bad as one another" – it is there shortsightedness and ongoing involvement with each other that keeps the conflict going, the actions and cheeky slights, aggressive pushes, cutting remarks that keep it fuelled. Keep them at each other throats without ever stopping to reconsider if the whole thing was not just absurd. This applies to the Magi and Sinister too.

But the disadvantage of accepting this is that it seems to not be true – that you are more one than the other – why? Because the Ego doesn't know how to motivate itself without an enemy. The conflict continues even when you understand this – because others don't understand it. Let the Aeon Grind On…

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE ARTE OF DECEPTION

Please note that due to the complexity of this MSS other Works focusing on particular aspects of the Greater Whole by THEM may need to be consulted throughout. As an infiltrator (I prefer Wanderer) of many groups by many means to obtain the necessary information for me to piece together my puzzle – I have learned a formidable deal about the Arte of Deception (AOD).

Herein I present a few of my Insights regarding the AOD.
It should be understood by now that members of THEM each have differing opinions as to the techniques and the definition of the LHP and Black Magic – just as we do with Shape-Shifting. Just as members do not have a unitary agreement (But rather allow a convenient representation to present itself) of the nature of the Dark Ones, for instance, each of us expressing their own views – in Sinister Solidarity. Our interests in shape-shifting range from the mythology and magicology of the ancient practices of the Werewolf, invocation of the Dark Gods and the presencing of their energies via the human medium, physical metamorphosis via mastery over the cosmic egg, and the diffusion of consciousness into the acausal via a variety of advanced techniques, just to name a few.

However, this Introduction will deal with nomenclature concerning some basic techniques of glamour, deception, misdirection, and protection vital to add to any foundation of fundamental skills in the development of the Arte of Deception as it relates to and concerns a specific nexion of the Temple of THEM.

The hidden/occult/esoteric side of the Grand 'Science' of what is conveniently referred to as "Shape-Shifting" is generally misunderstood and greatly underestimated regarding the intricacy and complexity of its execution due to the actual underlying nature of deception (of which there are many esoteric secrets) – for if it is not "misunderstood or greatly underestimated" then it is a glamour incomplete.

That is to say – if the seams of the geometry do not show – then how are they (the audience) to know there is a Deception at all? Sometimes it is best to act entirely invisibly – however, in presencing a form (or formulae, to be more accurate) such as there is something of a crucial arte in the Visible.

Some Preliminary Notes: One way to think of form is the following. Imagine a dark room containing people who are standing still. A voice suggests to them that the room contains deep pits in the floor. It is thus predictable that for some of those people – the belief in pits will come into existence (as forms) and influence their behaviour accordingly. Whether or not the content is there is irrelevant. The illusion of authority (a Deceptor) and the power of suggestion are enough to make the pits real for some. Pending of course on the relationship of the voice of authority to the people in the dark room, an outcome can be predicted. But those variables are discussed in another MS. The Deceptor aims to gain the trust of those he wishes to deceive in order to deceive them more thoroughly and more easily, by understanding form and the tremendous influence its temporal nature has on humanity.

In general – a 'form' as apprehended by THEM is a causal temporal interstice, which is perceived to have specific, general and abstract properties by the human nexion pending their degree of consciousness.*/

For us, a 'form' is a convenient way of referring to any invention of human perception that results from the validated understanding or binding/restricting definition of interpretation within parameters of description, content, or value of the content of one's perception. But a form is not merely a convenient way to describe objects considered physical or real. A form can be intangible too – it can be an Ideology, a Religion, A set of beliefs. A form can also be chemical, mathematical, geometrical, lyrical, literal, or musical. Forms arise from the stimulus received by the five senses or the rich tapestry of experience they saturate us with leaving us to 'make sense' of their presence; these may be considered raw forms exhibited by the cosmos and its being. But when these forms are subsequently interpreted by the human being causally such dimensional bias disables the means to see these exhibitions as they Are. Any instance in which a conclusion is made of ones perception by restricting stimulus into a manageable frame of reference so as to control or understand it (thus wilfully extracting meaning and mentally separating it from its acausal component as a connexion to everything else) is to presence a form.

From an Acausal viewpoint all Forms are considered perceptually limited/separated from their acausal component. And while essence remains imbued with the Acausal, appearance can only be experienced and seen causally, that is, from a limited, causal perception. In the context of the Adept who perceives the Acausal and the Causal, (as well as their own Nexion and Co-Nexion to both of these 'dimensions') all forms as manifested by human-beings regardless of their Time, Technology, Culture or Civilisation (thus far) are artificial imprisonments of the acausal, a wishful projection by the current consciousness onto what THEM have called the 'Black Clay'. (Qv. MSS In Sinister Solidarity.) And are representative of the markers that characterise the geometry of an Epoch.

Essentially the Black Clay is that world we perceive via our consciousness either as an Adept or Non-Adept in its pure state – that is, the moment of crystallisation that provokes the consciousness to exit/extrude its body and diffuse itself in the greater being when the human nexion becomes acutely aware of two pure instances of consciousness (there are more than two – but this divisive/unifying experience is one of the earliest of an Adept). One being the irresistible pull of what was hitherto felt as an isolated location of the consciousness inside the skull (human-centred geometry) – the other being awareness that there exists a unified collective 'something' external/ulterior to one's pure point of consciousness – but of which it too, is a part. (life-centred geometry) (Qv. The Simultaneous Pulse, Mvim III). Suddenly, convenient abstractions to terminize a duality in space, i.e. an assertion of one's position and the position of one's emanations in relation to other phenomena – "Inside/Outside", "Esoteric/Exoteric", "Black/White" begins to quaver, then ominously vibrate, and shatter. Consciousness of one's Co-Nexion with the Acausal, achieved.

The Black Clay is an analogy for a blank slate onto which humanity draws conclusions – thus re-naming part of that blank slate with a temporal name, and thus form. The Black Clay is a unified connexion and experience of the Acausal and Causal that is broken down by causal consciousness into separate, abstract chunks of manageable context (a process made necessary for any human being without acausal awareness) and referred to both generally and specifically i.e. as time/space, or chemical, atomic, sub-atomic 'matter' that we can physically see, hear, touch, taste and smell. But as the experiments of Scientific analysis have thus far shown – the universe and its content cannot be separated into one set of singular/unified components on Any level – in fact it is a pointed comment to say that the very concept of Singular may very well be a causal-inspired myth. ‘It’ has proven to be multiple, even at the smallest level of causal perceptual isolation. Thus, the Black Clay represents a raw undefined state of perception, prior to human projection warping it from its complete context into bifurcations on the causal plane that are ‘understood’ ‘known’ or ‘made sense of’.

It is this acausal purity that concerns THEM: however it be approached or its context sought to be made clear in causal terms and systems; from Physical-Based Sorcery, Seven-Fold Way Satanism, Form and Chaos, Buddhism, Asceticism, by members of whatever particular mode of thought and apprehension: the process has thus far seemed to be similar for all, indeed is a phenomena dangerously close to being called ‘Objective’. Such a process is what might be called a hyper-cubic inversion/expulsion of one’s own being: since one must effectively (and the following are simplistic abbreviations for caustic and complex systems of practice) “turn ones being inside out”, “die to oneself”, “expel the Self” and “dissolve the possession of Own”, to exhibit (co-join) with its Acausal source. But what has not yet been mentioned by the ONA – is whether the consciousness, diffused into the Acausal – can re-manifest/re-assemble itself – or, come back from the Abyss. This, I am inclined to believe is theoretically possible. But should such a Dark God return – it is impossible to know how to quantify it – all we can do thus far is speak of things outside of their duality, turn to new concepts of De-Abstracted Perception which is to place one’s perception of the world in an Acausal context – to be a student of Cliology.

Much of what has been revealed via the ONA and attempted by its proteges has not yet had the time to mature, moreover, the distortion of magic has not decreased, if anything it has multiplied, with the magical sector still expecting magic to be physical – to be perceived by the five senses available to them. That is to say, that the abandonment of certain causal habits has not yet occurred and until it does, the means of Acausal Perception will not come.

When anything is generalised in this bifurcation of the Black Clay – it becomes something and is perceived by the human consciousness as a temporal form borne of necessity and convenience. On the superficial level generalisation is a convenient way to communicate – but it quickly becomes extremely uncomfortable and highly unstable if any serious analysis or depth is undertaken into it. People are aware of this even if on an unconscious level – but to make communication possible, this lazy standardisation is accepted. Only specialists and sadomasochists concern themselves with the sticky philosophical problems of analysis of what the sky actually is, and in what context, and from whose point of view, on whose authority, and so on ad infinitum.

Of course a convenient lack of depth requires that other generalisations are made – “grass” “green” “sky” “blue” all a natural part of human living. But, a downside to this laziness is that slowly one can begin to enmesh themselves in an artificial geometric prism of pre-supplied interpretations and meanings. This prism is segmented and catalogued and revised and relied upon – until one day one becomes completely trapped in a self-sufficient web of interpretation and can no longer perceive beyond the interpretation.

Now, as far as THEM are concerned, this is where Form, as a self-sufficient and already explained library of catalogued phenomena that controls interpretation of reality via a pre-made set of labels and projections, opens up the wonderful world of counter-projections or 'opposites', that is to say a dynamic tension between points. Such counter-projections are as much an illusion as the projections in the first place – but are nevertheless powerfully vulnerable to exploitation by those with the awareness of the context of the enmeshment of beings trapping themselves in one, causal, plane.

In the active sense: One can either work to un-mesh such beings – or enmesh them further. It is thus that the idea of geometry and the superimposition of it over the Matrix is useful for perceiving the world as a matrix containing all manner of shapes made of, say, light, which light is not real to the Acausal Perceptor and whose shape divests it secrets by revealing its inner structure, while the same shape is cloaked with projections, its essence hidden and covered with the 'real' by the Causal Perceptor. It might be useful to reveal here that THEM are in some sense still 'Against Time'. This Resistance makes itself clear in the unconscious reference to such things as a 'Sinister Matrix' – which is a re-building of the context of the world to survive the causal effects of the psychic waste pooling in our Time. One simple contemporary example of this is the disturbing nature of advertisements and the enervating vibrations they deliver: one might even be convinced that the word of the aeon was in fact, "NOW". Certainly, the word of the past and coming few decades.

The content of the Temple MSS "UAE" may be useful to understand the limiting effects of causal perception and the following extract from Mvimaedivm II may on one level, be of use here to explain how dimensionally restricted perception limits an object's essence: When one forms a view of an object one immediately limits its reality. Its reality is confined by these limitations, the object becomes slave to our perception and subsequently restricted in terms of what it is and isn't, can and cannot be or do by a precise mode or model of laws and rules. While this doesn't actually change the object, it changes everything else. When one sets in stone the conditions for an object's existence, the object is interpreted thusly by those conditions – yet these conditions are finite, not infinite, and use only a small section of the possibilities open to the object, by classifying it capable of only one or a few modes of existence according to a base of conceptions one has proceeded from.

One projects error upon an object, because of relativity. Note however, that the writings of THEM are an approximate for the Essence: they can bring some closer to perceiving these energies we speak of as they are, but they cannot convey that energy itself. While the MSS of Liber 13/13 in particular those sections dealing with Life and Human-Centred Geometry and the MSS Universes Parallel further explain in detail the other components that come together as separate studies focused on forces and magical understanding to bring this complex issue into a unifying force.

Detection/Critical Assessment of forms, their structure, and their essence are generally turned over in the mind and weighed against a plethora of past experiences, predicted outcome, inconsistencies, potential for projection, the underlying motivations for projecting the form, expectations past and present, memory and so on, plus a healthy dose of human analysis balanced somewhere between Optimism, and Cynicism.

Because where there is a Deceptor (And all human beings are scorpions) there is a Detector. Experience/Experiment shows that since Form is an abstract that resides solely in the Causal experience, and because the Acausal component implicit therein cannot be utilised to analyse the essence of an acausal presentation by a Deceptor on the causal plane. I.e. causal beings, are blind to it. Analysis of a Deceptor will inevitably operate from a human-centred/self-centred fixation by the would-be Detector – wherein, consciousness operating from the mindset characteristic of a resident imprisoned in the human body is enmeshed in the physical form and indeed the Physical. The Causal. And thus, Forms.

All this is a detailed way of explaining that someone attempting to see through a Form – will naturally use other forms to determine their progress. Without acausal perception – without the diffusion of consciousness, they cannot help it, since it is form that characterises and restricts the causal perception in a 3d plane and it is the immature development of acausal perception but nonetheless imbuement of it in the human nexion that leads to “contradiction” and seemingly irreconcilable differences ‘between’ forms: an illusion held up by the nexion itself. It’s not strange that the Scientific community should be labelling into existence so many multi-verses, alternate dimensions, and so on and yet not simply include the Acausal in their calculations, something that would make sense of much of their confusion – a) the Scientific community has as the ONA say, lost sight of science and become a bevy of theoreticists. b) We hold that the Acausal cannot be perceived from a Causal perspective. That is part of the hypothesis being tested by the presence of the Temple of THEM. Another part being the energetic grid to hi-jack and subvert cyberspace, the other a physical energetic grid to hi-jack and subvert Australia to serve as a nexion for Vindex. Other parts of course, to be revealed as various stages are arrived at.

But with this notion of form and acausal perception in mind, let us now turn to some of the more mundane causal forms that make up this extraordinary experiment.
The Spear One of the secrets guarded until now is the true extent of infiltration by members of THEM into other groups via close association with key figures to crystallise a secret intelligence network – another, the sharpness of our perception. Due to the inability of a causal-mired nexion to see beyond form: it is not difficult to use that reliance on form to create a powerful mental glamour. One such glamour is called the Spear.

Note some key points in Shape-Shifting:
1. One must adopt a shape.
2. One's shape must be seen to make mistakes.
3. One's shape must be seen.
4. One must have visible faces and forms – while being an invisible face of form.
5. The target must only ever see what you want them to see.
6. The arte of Deception involves the art of Distraction.
7. Being an excellent shape-shifter naturally leads people to distrust you.

1 To interact on the causal plane requires a shape, a presentation, a shell or human guise. We know this.

2-6 THE SPEAR:
To presence Acausal forms requires an involved weaving of thousands of illusions often over a lengthy period of time. For it is in the summary/overall experience of this weaving, that is to say between the forms, that the gap of the Acausal reveals and illuminates. For example: in each personal interaction, these usually being one-to-one or face-to-face, one decides which attribute to emphasise in order to build a picture of one's "persona" in the target's perception. One replies in a manner according to what one wishes to emphasise at any given point. Should mystery be emphasised, Should certain attributes or emotions be emphasised, Should power or connections be emphasised? What, and how are tentative tenuous decisions that correlate to the Experiment and what is called for at any given time to extend a tendril. But what is not generally made known is that to be effective in shape-shifting – it is necessary not only to have your real persona operating a front persona – but for your front persona to be operating its own front too, a deeper glamour I call a "spear".

It is through the spear(s) that one of THEM is known by everyone outside of one's inner Sinisterion. And then, even inside, members of THEM are largely unknown (that is, information falls into an abyss) even to each other.

The spear is the amiable cheerful face of the Deceptor. A Deceptor naturally meaning, one who deceives. The Spear has a name by which others will know it and an array of attributes that appeal to the most general population. It is the name(s) by which one signs things, says things, is seen, heard and witnessed. Most people have an alternate persona – but they do not have a spear. Nor strangely, do they understand the necessity for one, especially in this dangerous work. A fact lamented by not a few of the Sinisterion careless enough to let their vigilance lapse.

The spear, of which there can be more than one representation, represents the first line of Satanic defence. The average person is so caught up in oneself that they are careless about the information they exchange with others. (THEM are surgical.) Naturally, to discern the motivations of someone a person will read between the lines. During the friendly banter exchanged a wise magician remains vigilant that they are being studied.

What this means – is that, due to human caprice, the Detector (the person studying 'you') will be aiming to fill in some rather large gaps in his picture of you – esp. if you are one of those mysterious, anonymous types.

Thus, it is that the Spear fills the role of supplying those details to feed the hunger of the curious. It is the "casual unwitting mistake-maker" – the 'you' "careless" enough to give occasional innocuous "personal details" during pleasant information exchanges to secretly assist someone in building up a picture of you to decrease their immediate curiosity (native to all inquisitive brains). And it is prior to assuming a major form, such as ours, that the smart shape-shifter sits down and literally creates a completely set of fictional personas complete with fixed attributes with which to dangle as a carrot on a stick. (This involves some tricky manipulation of postal loopholes, address exchange, identification flaws, library archives, dangerous associates, and ID stealing – covered in the section on Camouflaging the Chameleon. Trade secrets of Espionage and Intelligence and Satanic Tradition.)

It is the spear that will exchange sensitive information, the spear that will send and receive mail, the spear that will act as an administrator/inductor, the spear that will meet and greet and introduce and mingle, the spear that will mislead and misdirect both its friends and thus its potential enemies as to its actual nature and the spear that will serve as a decoy to hostile forces. Making a pseudonym is usually done by anyone using the computer – though haphazardly without the psychological arsenal of one of THEM and without a clear conception of deception. Most people can be persuaded to give sensitive personal information merely with a suitable Spear by appealing to their personality type and vices. Trust – places a person in a precarious position in our line of work.

The spear, though cheerful, personable, likeable, must also be seen to be secretive. This immediately places an increase of weight on any detail a Detector CAN extract from the spear directly or indirectly. Name, Age, Gender, Location, Outward Connections, Consistent Responses and Philosophies, Interests, Known Associates and Motivations are all top of the list. One by one some or all of these are 'leaked' via the spear (this itself an Art!) or are presenced, supplied, gathered what have you from available information distributed by the Spear – incidentally, a glamour so named because the Detector literally impales himself unknowingly upon its point. With this information, some of the things presented to some of the members of the Sinisterion may now make further sense.

Now, from experience, it is Between the Spear and the Perception of the 'you' behind the spear where the Detector will look for You, the Deceptor. Now it is understood why an extra line of defence is required, rather than simply an alter-ego. If, a Detector looks for 'you' between a fake persona and another fake persona – what can be found of 'you'? If a Detector looks for 'you' between You and your fake persona – anything they extract may prove highly detrimental.

The Acausal shape-shifter is in a somewhat precipitous position. Their form must be seen from a variety of strange and difficult to explain angles. And I say difficult, because one can no longer simply use the terminology of the causal dimension – but must employ quantifiers for both. I was asked why I did not simply speak from a purely Acausal point of view – to which the reply is – there is no known language for the Acausal save for that of Dreaming. Continuing – it is not enough that a teacher of shape-shifting take on ONE visible layer of form in order to demonstrate his skills and techniques (Qv. RA/Tnepres/ThoTh/f/CV/J/Eddas/E/Edward Laden and so on) whose wraith has shown a prolonged visible countenance of a shape-shifter with distinct features and identification traits (and Works) as moving from one phase to another physically, magically, mentally to occupy various roles. Now here it gets intricate. It is not enough because it represents only a superficial level of shifting. A vital attribute of any visible form is a certain degree of deficiency. Without that figurehead of calculated clumsiness, the shifter lacks the very element that renders them invisible.

While Legion keeps the punters busy, focused, occupied, distracted – the absence of sound – the vacuum created by the pressures of the actual shifter goes unnoticed. Thus one of THEM can sidle right up to you and you not even know it. Because the Spear of the Shifter is seen out in the open – the punters focus on the wrong fellow. Note ONA's bizarre crusade against one 'Alex F'.

They consider themselves astute, watchful, aware of the possibility of misdirection and deception by this strange fellow who teaches shape-shifting and admits to being deceptive and infiltrating various organisations – but, what's this, he's not as good as he thinks he is, he's left clues… heh… Have we now? So then, astute ones, how many of US are there? One? Two? Six? Or a Dozen? What are our names? What defines US that reveals US – Symbolism? Terminology? Beliefs? Age? Location? Energy? Which groups do we watch from the inside, IOT? ONA? ToB? OAA? MLO? TOS? FCOS? SOS? OTO, yours? Where did you get your information on THEM – from US? Or from the Spear? And we are Australian, right?

It is questions like these that beg for the mercy afforded by critical thinking. ONA – masters of chameleonization created a very similarly layered labyrinth using the above techniques. Try, for instance, reading the ONA's MSS with this in mind. Where some of the insights such as those garnered by the MSS – "A Contemplation of DWM" may arise. We know the Acausal Deceptor cannot be seen – we know this because that form of magic has no form or physical identification – it is not causally detectable. If it was, THEM should not have moved into advanced stages of its first aim without detection and without difficulty.

Some of our detractors (of whom we watch carefully) underestimate the value of extreme patience and subtlety. One gate took three years to open, another five, another eight. Not a problem – we're not going anywhere, and we have nothing better to do than achieve our aims. One of those aims is to teach our black magical principles from the Australian Nexion and reveal the theory and techniques that comprise them. It would generally be considered counter-productive to the formation of any group trying to attain personal power over its members to reveal such layers and operations: for if no longer focused on Legion, where might they look? Into the "Dark Soul of the Night"? Quite. Now if only they used that awareness when perceiving Magian forms…

However, the 'You' (i.e. causal vessel) that subsists beneath the glamour of the Spear, being bound by form, will, and does, exhibit information allowing further profiling of your identity and character. And Here, a very pointed analogy can be drawn between the survival of the physical human being/nexion in order to achieve the Great Work – and the romantic view of a Dark God clawing at the veil between the Worlds seeking intrusion. On one level – they are one and the same. Until the physical body is completely diffused, that is, an entirely acausal, there is a paradoxical dance with death whereby the Satanist endangers themselves, lives on the edge etc – and yet undertakes the training, steps and measures to ensure the highest level of protection for survival from the entropy of the mundane world.

See 'An Analysis of Frequency L13/13' for further instances. Following these it can be a difficult game to conceal one's closer (habitual) attributes simply because of the tell-tale trail of the geometry of information.

Things sometimes beyond control when using form are one's method or manner of communication – one's terminology, or even a consistent focus on certain concepts. Thus, it is that some shape-shifters (one in particular whose spear is infamous) have left trails that show certain persons are and have been among us whilst cultivating glamour of a very special sort – practising a variety of 'habitually disruptive' roles to keep themselves randomised, and yet remain virtually undetected by those without the eyes to see. But it's not for us to reveal them. We enjoy the 'game' as much as they do. Beneath the ‘You’ is the diffusion of consciousness characteristic of the Adept – the core of a Dark Sol. But remember it is in the rays of the sun that most of the ‘Work’ is done. From day one – carry a spear. We have.

Unfortunately, or rather as a result of, diffused consciousness that interferes with one’s causal ability to maintain a solid form to others; being known as a shape-shifter of some skill and of course, revealing the disarming secrets of one’s trade, carries with it the burden of implicit suspicious mistrust. Members have reported side-effects of our ‘Grand Science’ with members of their inner Sinisterion due to able demonstrations of chameleonization openly – thus revealing how adept they are at controlling what people see and witness of them. This has lead to issues of instability, esp. in magical relationships, where one may say the illusions of the causal are experienced withdrawn and the frightening (from their point of view) essence beyond projection revealed.

Thus, Emily no longer sees John, but a sinister grinning trickster, a dark, mysterious and cunning master of illusion who sends her projections back to her. This has the effect of causing people to be perpetually unsure whether a shifter is sincere or merely playing another role: An unavoidable Sinister Aspect of THEM’s Work and this Work in general. One of the disarming scenarios concerning the ONA was one (disturbingly argued) suggestion that the Order could in fact be the work of one Super-Jew who decided to prove the merit of the Jewish faith by manipulating its enemies perfectly and unknowingly into adhering to the wisdom of a Sacred Jewish Holy Order under the guise of Satanism/NS/Islam and so on. Unfortunately, there is a sinister correlation between the deceptive potential and the invisible ultimate aim of the shape-shifter.

When one becomes as adept at shape-shifting as DWM the possibilities increase frighteningly – past the Abyss it becomes correspondingly difficult to shake one’s head definitively at anything manifesting on the causal plane. Pending the more advanced results of the Seven-Fold Way – a better judgement can be made. On that – it is somewhat limiting that the Seven-Fold Way disdains the study of Kabbalah and Jewish Magic – for then one may preclude a study of the enemy for greater comparison that can be considered vital for a more rounded self-discernment.
To summarise before we move on: the essential point being made is that creating a thing like THEM is only possible via a tandem of invisible (and visible) infiltration of key players known or in any way associated or trying to associate with THEM – and some very special rules of Satanism that aren’t known to many, some that we have borrowed, some that we have created.

The ONA’s Shrencing MSS, I believe, danced on the outside of these techniques.
THUS: Let them think they know where/who/what you are – while you Know where/who/what they are. This is a practice quite similar to the blackmail operations set up to entrap riches and power via the cameras for compromise within a Temple.

The Temple, being an enticing forbidden environment where the lure of dark magic and unbridled sex holds fascination for many who are thus left (that is, not informed) to invest it with their projections as a place of romance and intrigue, a literal temple to Satan and doorway to exciting taboos all shag pile carpets and mahogany altars as it were – is seldom understood by the eager for the menacing role it plays in surveillance, tactical espionage, and entrapment. They seldom understand or are meant to understand, the extent to which the Temple watches them. This type of thing is very much the case with many Satanic Industries: though it bears repeating that THEM have emerged to help a few out of the occult labyrinth, hence our revelations of our Satanic techniques for the few who deserve to learn them.

The Tempel ov Blood (Qv. Liber 333) emphasise Infiltration of Organisations, as do the Order of Nine Angles, of which we are a Nexion. To them, these techniques are probably already known – but to those who wish to become one of THEM, these notes may prove a disturbing sobriquet. MEHR SEINS ALS SCHEIN…

*Briefly: In terms of causal perception – general refers to the common convenient name for interpreted content, i.e. a “ball” or “sky”. Specific refers to a definition of an abstract in a layer of further segmented abstraction. “A shiny, red, ball with spots” or “Stratosphere, Atmosphere, Oxygen/Nitrogen/Carbon Dioxide” while an abstract is essentially the end result of interpretation of any content using further abstracts to do it. These faculties are employed in this manner due to the size and position of our human-centred consciousness which finds itself enmeshed by the physical body and whose concerns are directly related to its feelings of inferiority and superiority relative to it.

 In terms of acausal perception – none of these differentiations exist. An abstract in the causal is not the same as an abstract in the acausal. An abstract in the causal (Qv. The Star Game: adv. Asstd. Essays) can be defined as anything isolated in perception by giving it a name. Until it has a name or parts of it are named by projection, the ‘Black Clay’ to some extent is experienced as it is – i.e. formless. Abstract Perception is a mutually inclusive consciousness of being the acausal within the causal. See Appendix.

The Reason for creating new words is not only to define new esoteric experiences – it also has another undertone: because of the uniqueness of such words, it makes it easier to track the growth and path of their forms online.

FORM, RELATIVITY AND REALITY

In one diagram explaining why Special Relativity dislikes Non-Locality, two people facing each other are unable to agree which direction is forward, backward, left or right because from their individual perspectives – they are each seeing the correct view. The problem arises though because there are no such thing as directions – they are a result of our 3 dimensional bias, neither of them are right, there is only relative perception brought about by our 3 dimensional body.

The concept of directions is old and has been a cornerstone of human navigation for time. But if you set up such models you constrain yourself to the view that our view has meaning. People disagree about time and space – this is the essential crux of special relativity. It seems so obvious that its hard to understand how this took such a long time to be developed and accepted. What magic and quantum physics have in common are an essential optimism that abandons the hopelessness of a Singularity or Insynsic world view where everything can be explained neatly with the bias that what works for one works for all.

Logical positivism (“If it's not verifiable by experiment, it's meaningless”), Instrumentalism (“if the predictions work, why worry about what brings them about?”) and philosophical relativism (“statements can't be objectively true or false, only legitimised or illegitimized by a particular culture”); working with Phorms has brought about all three of these mindsets as conclusions. Magic in particular suffers from the stigma of non-repeatable results. The very basis of the medieval grimoire was based on the impressions that by doing A it resulted in B. And that anyone who followed the same steps could reproduce identical or at least similar results. □e failure of this to be true for all who employed a grimoire has led to cynicism regarding their vehicle as unnecessary and a product of imagination, wishful thinking or charlatanry.

Not being able to replicate the results of grimoires, incantations, or those modern guides that use similar principles - self-help books – or indeed make true for oneself what others promise to be attainable by following such steps – a Phorm which is used in nationalism, religion, politics, societies, and generally anyone who wishes to sell an idea – does tend to result in a period of logical positivism wherein one grows tired of metaphysics, speculations, guidance and suggestions of the nature of reality for a more centred perception of what reality is from one’s own standpoint – in extremis – this leads to scorn for all manner of subjective realms such as dreaming, imagination, prophesy, divination, and other occult practices, as well as unverifiable hearsay, reports, journalism, the claims of others, particularly non-popular areas such as the supernatural.

Useful as this vantage is, it is only one of many. The experience of knowing one has experienced something, sharing it with another, and having the other outright refute the existence of the event despite one knowing it happened is a catalyst that often leads one to re-question logical positivism. The common denial of the event of rape is one instance where this is a common event. Despite the intense trauma endured that leaves scars and pain in the victim which can be like the result of extreme torture – the physical injuries often fade; the emotional scarring is superficially invisible and all that is left is the testimony or silence of the victim. If something I endured leaves no marks, no physical traces to prove it existed, it is very hard to prove it happened at all. This is enshrined as a universal practice of humanity to conceal its deeds.

Torture victims and political prisoners are often kept detained without knowledge of their whereabouts – sometimes to kill them – but also often to allow the visible signs of mistreatment such as bruising, bleeding, burns to heal or subside so that when they get to court or released it is difficult to prove mistreatment. The requirement for proof works greatly to the advantage of many humans and many professions. The noble art of proving truth as envisioned by the Greeks is often denigrated to a war between lawyers and who spins the best story. It is quite incredible the extent to which such vantages or 23 syndromes can interlock with the mind of a person and reorient their entire reality based on such a narrow wedge of available perceptions.

It is impressive how greatly an idea can have the effect of controlling the way a person does things to match the motto of a simple idea to the point that it delimits their reality and reason;- to the point where the very facts of the existence of an irrational state and skewed perceptions that also operates in the mind daily due to the over-bearing self-assurance of the ego are completely ignored or painted over.

Splitting into realist and unrealist camps limits what can be learned from refusing to explore the other. It seems to be that some human beings do not like to sit on the fence of things but to firmly know one way or another a single set of truths to be self-evident. Others enjoy the nebulousness of the inability to pin down the mechanistic causality of the universe. We occupy a strange mid-ground between these two in pursuit of the 361 degrees of Phorm;- a desire to super-saturate ourselves with the Phorm in order to weaken its tissues and punch a hole right through the other side;- or said another way to exhaustively explore it until it gives up its essential principles and the secrets of its Phorm.

Here is something that can be learned from any Phorm; -and this is where and how One of THEM differentiates from those who believe either one or the other to be representative of the truth- but at all times it is to walk a tightrope; -trusting the ego to navigate without sacrificing its self-identity- whilst in all ways adorning itself in the armour of an idea.

BLOOD SWEAT FORMS AND YEARS

I speak a lot about Forms – and the majority of my writing on them has been the personal means to objectify them so as to be able to explore and understand them. For me, writing is a type of trance or meditation through which I conduct a self-based alchemy. How does one use forms personally – i.e., when not setting them up to effect change on others, how does one incorporate Forms as useful things?

I can only provide my own answer. There is a well-known practice of evocation that exists in many systems of Magic whereupon the Sorcerer summons an entity and merges with it – lets it take over in order to receive its wisdom, i.e., the equivalent of letting the entity take over one's consciousness, more loosely termed as Demonic possession. The Ego is pushed aside as the consciousness of the God takes control. This is I believe largely an extroverted approach where Demons manifest outwardly as objects imbued with power – and I have also experienced this earlier in my life when I was a marked extrovert via my copious consumption of alcohol that inhibited my introversion – whilst for the introvert Demons are manifest inside the Psyche, appearing as nightmares, fears, doubts, dreams that invoke genius and madness which give inhuman advice, solutions or wisdom beyond what the conscious ego can put together by its own agency.

However – the few times I have tried to invoke the Devil – I have been possessed of the unwelcome feeling of being terribly overwhelmed – of the immediate sensation of losing control and wanting to kill my friends or family in terrible ways.

When I read a book on a subject I do as the evoker does – I give my consciousness over to the author and experience what they experience, believe what they believe, and lose control of my consciousness to understand a political regime, a religious faction, a historical figure or a living one. From this submission to the authors crafted spell of concepts and text I am afforded a supra-personal insight beyond what I could achieve if I were to treat the book as an object with contents external to me to which my Will and that of the author constantly questioned each other. I believe the term temporary suspension of disbelief applies here. Naturally of course, there arise passages where there is a definite clash – where disbelief cannot be suspended, and it is those passages that cause my conscious mind to fire back up and reach for a notepad to record a sudden flash of insight. In this way do I absorb a form whether it be an occult book, a philosophical treatise or a reference on guns and ammunition.

However, Jung's writing, objectifies the very thing I am perceiving objects with. He writes about the functions of the very tool I am using to read his work as it performs its functions. There is the odd sense that one is looking into a carnival mirror which twists and distorts the sense of identity into grotesque shapes. For me, Jung's work is the equivalent of the Necronomicon itself – for it summons the very nature of evil to the fore in unmistakable incarnations.

We can call a Dark God in the forest and leave it where we found it by pushing it back into the dark realms from whence we suppose we called it and mark a boundary with a protective circle – not so with the matter of the psyche and the entities that live within it. Wherever we go we take them with us and our only magical circle against them is a limitation of consciousness which conceals the majority of our personal being from us – but which others often see despite our best efforts. There is no banishing ritual against the unconscious and therefore the contents that rise up from it when we lose control of our Ego can be more devastating than anything called into the world externally, for it sets in motion an evolution of consciousness from which we cannot go back but which makes more and more demands on the psyche to individuate – to address shortcomings – re-examine motives and actions and conduct – chastise our fantastic image of ourselves or cruelly teach us a lesson about the real state of things.

The Necronomicon has the nature of an indistinct dream, the writing swims about and makes no sense to the conscious, the symbols are not numinous but manufactured from imagination, the creatures merely theoretical and vague. Psychoanalysis is the extreme opposite. The writing is all too close to home, and we immediately recognise ourselves as doing exactly what the rituals dictate, we are. We find ourselves rapidly losing control over what we thought was us as a surge of other activities are made apparent to us, that we are engaging in without any consciousness. The symbols are numinously charged per excellence where dreams have the power to completely devastate us, wake us up screaming, crying, sweating or cause us to perform a 180 in the midst of some behaviour, action or goal. We do not always understand their meaning, but we are slave to their effects.

The creatures of the psyche are also all too real, defined with knife-edges we sense their tremendous power and see them plain as day in our own being – we recognise the Shadow, prejudice, bigotry, shame, guilt, hypocrisy, inflation of the ego, unrealistic expectations we hold and so on – and they haunt us unmercifully – if not consciously then in the depths of the unconscious where they shove us about like puppets against our best intentions and conscious will.

Because we are unconscious of the majority of our psyche we cannot exorcise our demons – our shortcomings, our projections, our weaknesses, blame shifting, egoism are ghosts who refuse to be silenced – when they are pointed out to us the ego is crushed or rages at the pointee because it does not accept that evaluation – it clashes with our identity of who we are and how we are conducting ourselves. We are doomed to a very narrow field of vision however for to let more of the unconscious into the ego is to invite disaster – a disaster I have been inviting for a long time.

My face wears a mask that rarely moves making it impossible for people to tell what I am thinking or feeling, my emotions are dull and my mood changes quickly – a black surge of exhaustion or fatigue overtakes me and I need to be alone without any way to communicate what is happening because I do not have the words to say my unconscious is erupting in polite company. These are the effects that assail the introvert but which he can often say nothing of because they are too markedly at odds with the established language and customs of the world.

It is the same reason, despite dividing your psyche internally into different you's – you will still say 'I' for convenience and to avoid conflict with the assault this seems to have on others who often take the view that one is insane. The enormous annoyance in doing any work on the psyche is that society does not reward, recognise or appreciate it – if anything it shuns, punishes and ostracises those who would improve themselves [Their Selves] because Very few can actually do it or try to do it – and the result of doing it is very often an inflated ego or air of genius that elevates itself above the mediocrity of the common man and makes them feel seen as inferior, superfluous or sub-human. This is the archetype of the Hero, where I would refer readers to the peerless study of the Hero by Connell Monette to understand the archetype of the Hero – and the Hero always invites the wrath of the Gods, often carried out by their own hubris.

The difficulty of working on the psyche is that there exists no Insynsian – there is only realism of standing on the Threshold between the two worlds never crossing over into it – for we can only be conscious of so much at a time, and always in the darkness thrives the other side of that consciousness in the unconscious.

Humans have problems and will always have problems. And here is where the truth beings to be told – for THEM do not appeal to that age-honoured ridiculousness of the struggle to become a God-like being – when merely a little less stupid, will do. We cannot be supermen. We cannot create a super-consciousness by somehow melding the two. We cannot be Gods. We cannot even be close. And it is this acceptance that is required by modern man. The struggle to create or be the perfect man, the Ubermensch is the Shadow of our unconscious imperfection – the Ubermensch is the massive over-compensation of a psyche in serious trouble. The problem of course being that when our unconscious is healthy and functioning as it should – we are often consciously terribly troubled, sad or depressed. Other seek to console, cheer us up and to oblige them we repress those feelings causing unrest in the unconscious again. There is a constant war for what is acceptable to the unconscious is entirely unacceptable to the conscious world in which we live. We are not allowed to be sad or depressed – we must be cheered up, made to feel better and thus our psyche can rarely express itself naturally but is yoked to an artificial tradition.

We need to set our heights lower – to actually achieve something in the real rather than constantly pushing an impossible bar out of reach so that we can console ourselves with never being able to reach it. We then say, 'Oh well no-one could reach that impossible height, so I do not feel bad for trying and failing – since I know I can never reach it, I will not try.' But we do try – we repress that intent, and it becomes the goal of the unconscious to try to reach it. The Psyche is a terrible see-saw, when we apply pressure in one place, it appears elsewhere. When we try to contain some habit of ours or drive it underground – it gathers exceptional strength or mutates and explodes somewhere else. The Psyche appears to have a complex fail safe that keeps it in relative stasis and makes it very difficult to in any permanent way change it. The quest to destroy the Ego is in reality a quest to make it absurdly stronger – this is the key to the Magi's practice of outwardly driving others to extinguish it all the while knowing such efforts only strengthen it. In this way do simple appeals to our Ego have all the more power and control over people is made all the easier. The quest to find the Self does not require the extinguishing of the Ego – that is again a way of making it terrifyingly stronger and therefore more amenable to basic manipulations.

The quest to find the Self such as it is, involves only simple things. For abstinence is merely another form of indulgence that ultimately makes something stronger – hence the repression of sex, the erotic, intimacy, touch erupts in the Church in the form of rampant paedophilia. We just need to listen that bit more, try to understand the contents of our psyche have their own rules, make conscious the function and behaviour of these functions, and to be patient with ourselves.

Dreams speak to us sometimes but not all times – the unconscious has input into our consciousness, but it is not always to be taken as given, it throws up junk, fantasy and mystery even as it transmits archetypal imagery or guides of our stage toward individuation. We have developed a consciousness for a reason – it is not to be reprimanded, punished and mistreated as it has been, demonised because we cannot control it, understand it or change it – or culturally divorced from them by way of bad-tempered children and legions of people who never took the time to work with it but merely parroted popular notions and misguided ones at that that the ego was the source of all our troubles and evils. We need it to be strong and tough as well as flexible and resilient to believe we can undertake this kind of work, to withstand the attacks or honest raw truths that arise from communications with the unconscious, to sort and use or discard what it has to say into piles – only rarely can we entirely trust the unconscious as a guide that will keep us safe or show us the way – it takes two to do that, the conscious Ego and the subconscious Abyss.

We need to treat both with care, and respect, or be able to push them back or ignore them when we feel we know better. We need to understand that to do this, to stand constantly on the Threshold is a Lot more work – and where most humans are happy to take the path of the least energy – this one requires extra effort. This is a constant struggle with endless steps up and down, of being assailed with a dozen valid views or answers every time a question is asked, or an answer given. For all of the functions want to speak their piece from their point of view – and if one is not careful in the development of this vessel no longer of I but of THEM – one can go incurably insane.

I do not hear voices I have impulses that sometimes cripple my ability to give a reply to a question where the questioner, question, and answer are all essayed at once from different points of view and it is impossible to choose the right answer because there are so many. The expansion of consciousness brings unique problems of its own because while it expands, the consciousness of others does not – there is therefore, a tendency toward becoming an eccentric Hermit or pushed deep into Isolation from which one cannot climb out.

Since the Ego is no longer in charge, and one's perspective is no longer singular, no longer myopic and channelled solely through the lens of the Ego – it becomes exceptionally difficult to take a stance, one can see an argument from both sides, above it, below it, beyond it, alternate arguments that would be better, finds fault with the question, has to ask whether the matter is objective, subjective, what lens the argumenters hold, can they see outside of themselves, are they extrovert, introvert, should one interfere, can one interfere, is it right to give an answer, should they find the answer for themselves – and so on – and with no immediate prejudice, no immediate decisive single belief in what one Is, and should Say, from whatever Platform their ego occupies and represents – there is only the Babble of multiple impulses, arising from the thoughts like the Dread voices of the Dark Ones that drove the Mad Arab Alhazred of the Necronomicon, mad.
The other thing of course of importance is that in becoming a THEM – in accessing the Threshold, that one must often choose one of two worlds to excel in. One can rarely manage both successfully. I have poured a Lot into the Temple of THEM and as a result my family and friends have suffered. Whilst I solve the riddles of the minds of strangers or establish myself as a known figure through my writing and images – my wife is often pushed away and neglected, or my kids yelled at by an irritable man for not taking out the rubbish or some other small thing – because my libido is concentrated in the unconscious or collective personality as Ryan Anschauung.

If you seek to become what I have become – you must know the sacrifice, the dark and ugly side of any Genius to be had from standing at the Threshold of greater consciousness – the Gods do not give up their fire easily, and when they do, is it always at Great cost. To educate thousands over the decade on how to alter the Aeon, achieve psychic stability, to give guidance I have had to endure a less than ideal alter-ego who has caused a lot of tears, fights and anger, guilt, sadness and loneliness. And for that reason, I endure – because it cannot all be for nothing. And truth be told – it was for my gain, my greed, my desire to attain it.

I therefore hope that people appreciate my Work for it comes at great personal cost to me and those around me. I do not want to paint a picture of either/or – some of the time it is possible to balance the two worlds of the exoteric and the esoteric and feel like you're King of the world – but those times when either world is invested in too heavily reaps a severe penalty. This is the living analogy of the battle between the conscious and unconscious for dominion and like many things of the Sinister Path when all the sugary words and wrappings are torn off it – it is ugly even as it is beautiful. This work, to be one of THEM, requires genuine Blood, fragments of your Soul. Weigh it up carefully. Consider what is required – and if you decide to join us, try to remember to be fair with your time with those around you – I have poured far too much of myself into the Temple to make it the splendour it is, most of my life in fact– and perhaps now others won't have to since the foundations are laid and the Temple built.

But yes, only the foundations and the lighthouse as a beacon to others have been built – all that I have done so far is but the prelude to much harder less forgiving work, I know how to be One of THEM – their forces speak to me in a wordless language all their own – to push beyond the Threshold is the goal now, to push and yet to survive. I know the Way but to travel it places even greater demands on one and calls for even greater sacrifice and I do not know if I am willing to give it. For now, I will show others my way and how I got here – and when they get to where I am let them decide whether I was wrong to flinch from the Abyss – that is, if I am still here and did not leap blindly into it…

HOLLOWMEN

Life requires learning. It requires experiences to learn from. It requires many experiences to distil knowledge. And a great deal of knowledge to approach wisdom. Wisdom requires knowing that this process cycle exists, knowing that it matters and knowing that it doesn't matter.

Where THEM differs from other occult groups, is in its desire to instil indifference in an individual to all forms and destroy their dominating effects on us – for it is this effect that drives human beings and responsible for their excruciating slowness to evolve.

In every case where the Ego gets possessed by some form or another it believes itself to be an envoy, a representative of that form, it restricts itself and changes shape and colour (camouflage) in such a way as to become obedient to its rules, its laws, its culture and expectations and the person (vessel) becomes as an extension of that Form, their behaviour, words, actions, channelled and influenced by the rigours and strictures of that form or forms. In the case of extremism – Insynsian par excellence – the dominating Form is very narrow, slim and may be as simple as worship of a deity, a country, a race or some other symbolic singularity – which is often all that Ego can manage. A person possessed by a Form identifies with the Form and as an extension into which they subsume the culture of that Form, will defend it, fight for it, lie for it, sacrifice for it, give money, services, goods, connections to it, champion it, as if it was them very selves that the Form represented – not a hollow baseless abstract borne of loneliness and the enduring need to be constantly celebrate that the ego is too stupid to recognise but trips into again, and again, and again and again.

For the Ego is our lazy part, it is a vice that crushes and squeezes all incoming stimuli into narrow, readable, relatable, acceptable, channels – it doesn't like to and is incapable of working harder, of processing complex nuances and this is reflected in the dualism, binary, moral certitude of the Judaeo-Christian influence on Western Culture which often battles with the myriad and vast troves of behaviour, culture and philosophy inherited and enshrined by the Greeks. It is the reason Quantum took so long to become mainstream, the reason non-binary sexuality enrages so many, that the introduction of many cultures, practices, civilisations meshing creates fear and panic and a natural inclination to cower together under the shade of some supremacist umbrella holding each other's hands and lamenting about the erosion of traditional values and social mores: the blaming of races, genders and other ideologies for the state of decay, the decline of modernism, the disintegration of the West.

It is during times of great unrest that the ego is at its most ridiculous, huddling into groups for numbers because it is too weak to stand alone or represent anything of its own device, anything of its own power, anything of its own originality – and simply gravitates toward the nearest bomb shelter as a mindless minion, a cockroach scuttling under the fridge where it feels safe and continues to bathe and be bathed by the puerile worst of human behaviour and inheritance. Here the ego gets the attention it craves, it gets weakened with praise and congratulatory status and conferred imaginary but emotional awards for joining with the rest of the weak because that is what gives them the appearance, of being strong. But they are not strong – none of them are strong – or they would not stand together under a made-up nonsense that causes them to flow down a specific river of thought and action, they would not need the constant reinforcement of words, slogans, colours, flags, tattoos, and other tribal identifications that supposedly join them as one – all the while disintegrating slowly because such formations are in essence entirely artificial: there is no real bonding, no brotherhood, no kinship – just the sad standing together of shadows dominated by a Form and pushed together by transitory make-believe.

We can see for ourselves in virtually every instance where such child-men are brought low – in every country, at every age, from every race the same shameful mantra repeated ad nauseam ad infinitum – “I didn’t do it. I’m innocent”. This is the chant of the ego – and the worst trait of human beings and here is why. When the ego experiences the Absolute Fear of disintegration – it causes the ego to create an invincible shell around itself – dissociation, denial, regression, catatonia, forgetfulness, lack of remorse are all symptoms of this shell. This shell, we refer to as the ‘Angel’ is truly the hardest substance known to man, even under the greatest privations, suffering and punishments there are instances where it cannot be broken.

The Angel insulates the ego from all things but its own narrow visage and self-assurance and once activated it cannot be torn down because it indicates the Death of the Self and without the Self, the ego must survive alone. It has nothing to open its shell to, nowhere to go, nothing to lean on but its own delusions and psychosis – and Nothing can change it because the crucial elements required to change a person are stripped and removed. The regressive childishness of such a mantra indicates only that such a being never grew beyond the punishment/reward infantile paradigm of babyhood and youth but carried it onward into adulthood (though gaining in age does not guarantee this stage) where its avoidance strategy for approaching life quickly transforms them into a perfect victim when their hand is slapped for stealing a cookie. We see those who are supposed to be the strongest, meanest, fastest, most brutal, most feared – all proclaim their innocence and repeat the mantra that they weren’t there, they didn’t do it, they know nothing. This is the power of a Form and the babyishness of ego – to cripple individual response and deny involvement to escape retribution, it is the cowards cry and loser’s lament.

These are the shameful figures that THEM does not recognise, celebrate, endorse or try to recreate by providing another form – we seek to smash trust in all forms and take humanity to the step it should have reached long long ago but which stage is continually pushed out of reach by the saboteur of our ego. Unlike all of our predecessors, there is a fervent desire in presenting these thoughts to invite an evolution beyond such sewerage in which so many wade – and impart piercing understanding in you to see all of the shallow tropes that gather humans together for what they are: an immortal shared weakness built into our very state of being that is the crutch for the slow and the insufferable. There is time to be a dope and a dupe, such pathways are a necessity, a requisite, a perennial unavoidability – that is what will determine our place in the occult – but how long we remain so, how much we understand of what is hidden – will decide if we learn to escape a cycle or whether we are destined to repeat a loop.

We must ask ourselves why is it that human beings make and made slaves of others – ? A short answer is to lessen the personal or societal workload to complete hard, punishing or deadly work without having to do it oneself. The Pyramids, Great Wall of China are widely considered an incredible feat and almost flippantly it is mentioned they were ‘built by slaves’ – but rather than represent this dark, crushing, brutal, bloody, painful, oppressed, suffering those forced to build it endured – there is emphasis on the grandeur, on the spectacle, on the magnificence of their construction and false attribution to a pharaoh as the constructor. This alone tells us a great deal about the petty nature of human beings to enslave others to do work for them they simply are incapable of doing themselves: that through slaves is the only way such pathetic beings can accomplish what they accomplish.

This is not accomplishment. Humans make slaves of others because humans are shameless, imitators. We copy our government, our authorities, our human patterns – what they do filters down to us and we replicate it like good monkeys. Forms, make slaves of humans because Forms are pure imitation. They are Beings, living energies, that feed on us and speak to us in a language only our ancient ego understands, they prey on humans' susceptibility and desires and channel themselves with no morality and no control through our vessels leaving nothing but the same wastelands aeon after aeon. Forms are the dimensional gap, the interconnected distortion that occurs when the ego which has very limited capacity and function – meets the Chaos of the world – and relies on the ego (not the Self) to categorise, make sense of, control and in doing so, minimise the fear we dread of anything unknown.

In essence, THEM is designed to speed up and accelerate past the all-too-human slowness of these many stages that 'experience' affords the ego for its own sake, its own purpose, its own downfall. Almost every form the ego adopts will eventually be dropped in the favour of another – after five years, ten, maybe fifteen – but the adage 'people change' is half-true, the Form that dominates them may change, but their likelihood of being dominated by Forms, does not. Most fanatics do not remain fanatics, they dwell somewhere on a spectrum of dabbling to belong (shallow infection) and dying for their belief (lethal infection). These latter few are rare ultra-patriots who kill themselves in the name of an ideal. In this instance we can say that Forms truly have the power to kill, to deceive, and, they are the far superior, dominant life-form that supersedes human beings.

None of the war, suffering, struggle, nonsense that humans have engaged in and continue to – has changed the planet or this process one fraction. And due to our very short lifespan and inability to absorb more than a few books with warnings or what we might find useful to know in our fleeting time here on the planet – most never get anywhere close to evolution beyond these tired repetitive patterns. And all of the new humans produced from rape, love and lust no priming to evolve by the idiots that proceeded them – but left to their own devices, the egos devices, to be preyed upon by forms and stagger through life burdened by one belief after another, never knowing more about life or their potential as a unique organism of the cosmos than the yolk with which they are saddled or saddle themselves. These are the hollow-men. They are in great, great abundance and dominate this planet – and sadly, I was unlucky enough to be born on it with them.

I watch new broken shards fit themselves together into cracked mirrors on a daily basis, shine a temporary flash of false light from their apiecement and then crumble and fall back into even smaller shards to repeat the process anew, growing more and more tarnished with every effort to satisfy their hunger to be a worthwhile entity. And you, will see it too. Only too often will you hear stories of regret, lament and see individuals perform a 180 later in life because their old way of life no longer represents their views, their values: but in decades to come you will come to know individuals that skip that tiring boring tread of the ego, that hackneyed apology for past deeds and reported arrival at redemption all of which is the mark of a Hollowchrist, the stamp of monotheistic Insynsian and the draining, exhausting ego sharing its path because such a path seems so important to impart – and you will find individuals Learning, Before, they make mistakes, not from them. We have learned enough; it is time to teach – and properly teach. It is to THEM, I write.

HOWL OF THE INTROVERT

As the founder of the Temple of THEM my Work colours the nature of its expressions. It is of necessity [and the result of the practice of alchemy, psychological analysis, sorcery, experience] that I be acutely self-aware. I therefore am enabled some perception into my own prejudices and biases when it comes to those expressions – wise to the biological and psychological limitations under which my work labours and presences itself. Firstly, unlike many people on the Left Hand Path – I am left-handed – this greatly colours my perceptions and the way I express them as an artist and a thinker. The world is not orientated toward the left-hand crowd since it is right-handers that predominate – this is only visible to those of a left-handed nature who have to persevere with the unnatural geometry of mechanical devices, layout of keyboards or controllers and so on.

Secondly, I am an extreme Introvert; my attitude toward the world is one of abstraction as evident by my emphasis and intensity on deconstruction, on withdrawing my libido from objects, breaking them down – thus I seek to withdraw projections, harness wayward energetic exchanges such as might occur through unconscious activity or to rob objects of any intrinsic power to return it to myself. Due to my extreme introversion and left-handedness which affords me a particular insight into things – I therefore have a highly aggressive extrovert mask to compensate. My natural disposition is therefore at odds with how Extroverts see the world – hence my immutable differences of opinion with figures such as Anton Long, Crowley, or even other members of THEM are predicated on these limitations. In your dealings with other members of THEM – it is wise to keep in the back of your mind the factor of these different arrangements of perception and to understand that depending on who you are talking to you will require a different approach. Naturally – because my work reflects the majority of the Temple's exterior it naturally attracts like – i.e. it naturally attracts, Introverts. This should also be kept in mind – since with such an attraction comes a natural aversion by others toward the expressions of the Temple – leading to a concentration of like-minded people or introverted personalities which limits our ability to explore or apprehend the extroverted attitude toward the Dark Ones – which is, diametrically opposed with an equal depth of unique insights all of its own.

To me therefore, the Dark Gods, and all things, appear a specific way and cannot help but appear that way owing to my psychic prejudices and blueprint. In other words, it is I suspect impossible for me to see the Dark Gods as other than my nature allows me to. The downside of this is that a group wholly focused on an introverted understanding of the Dark Gods or in fact any subject matter, is missing an exploration of the other half of the possibilities unless there are extroverted personalities among us. Further detail on the relationship between the Dark Gods and the Psyche are given below in Into the Mouth of Madness. Knowing the intimate details of your own psyche, actions and being able to do what is largely impossible – seeing yourself as others see you, or at least trying – is essential to learning about how to avoid or incite conflict. This in turn leads to a superior understanding of what drives, characterises and can strengthen or weaken form. With serious introspection of your self comes, if sincere and determined, a greater understanding of others through understanding yourself. Age is often a strong determinant of psychic maturity because age affords retrospect – the ability to look back on a larger and larger range of experience. Though labels are shunned they are like many forms necessary and useful if only to grease the path of social lubrication so that actual study research and work can be done with the basics satisfied.

Though there are billions of individuals we share a unified collective subconscious and similar biology – these are the core aspects of a person around which are tacked on smaller less important incidentals. Knowing someone's dreams for instance can afford massive insight into their unconscious orientation toward the world. Knowing how someone views their parents can reveal how they see the world. Observing the concepts that people use such as accepting time or space without challenge or alteration, whether focused on politics or religion, introversion or extroversion can deconstruct a personality into its constituent parts and where one desires to move an individual in a certain direction or cause them to perform a certain action – appealing to these constituent parts so as not to cause friction with the incipient will and its particular drives can mean the difference between success as a Sorcerer and failure.

We have observed that the first task of the Trial is of little conflict with most people since going outside and performing tactile tasks of self-initiation in one's own desire fashion is neither extrovert or introvert prejudiced – however, the next task of meditating on the Tarot cards to withdraw energy trapped in unconscious archetypes is most definitely an introverted task – and as a result we find a rough split in initiates of those who gravitate toward the task and seek to complete it and those who are thrown off by it and renounce their application. There is often the typical query at such a junction as to the possibility of fitness or physical tasks with extroverts seeking a suitable equivalent of what they see as an awful task.

This division often markedly separates those who would approach the Sinister through the systems of THEM and ONA into two camps – the Warriors tend to select the ONA, and the Sorcerers tend to select the Temple of THEM. What is a Warrior? A Warrior is an extrovert who trains to become insensitive to the world – who pushes through pain, becomes hardened and stoic, amasses muscular ego-armour and the attitude to match. They revel in the idea of the hunting challenge, the External and Internal Adept challenges of living in the wilderness among the trees and animals and weather, of cycling massive distance, climbing mountains as per the Black Pilgrimage within a certain amount of time or pushing themselves to their limit and then seeking to increase it. They become insensitive to violence and can take a lot of pain. When it comes to the tasks of creating and meditating on the Tarot, learning the Star Game, Insight Roles, learning the esoteric side of the occult they shun and dread it however – for these are the strengths of the Introvert. We know that most ONA recruits pick and choose their respective strengths accordingly due to these two innate characteristics.

What is a Sorcerer? A Sorcerer is an introvert who trains to become super-sensitive to the world – to be able to feel its places of power, sense power through images, symbols, or nature to feel and draw on the subtle currents of magic by being able to sense them, to see spirits and demons and beyond the veils of the ordinary thing. The Sorcerer though does not shun physical challenges – they merely approach them a different way – the Sorcerer aims to keep fit, to build strength, flexibility and also increase their limits but balances this with the need to retain that super-sensitivity without being weak or crushed. i.e. to be in a position to both sense the currents underlying things, including an unconscious command to Warriors that the Sorcerer could destroy them with a glance, but without amassing ego-armour that blocks these currents from being detected through insensitivity to them.

Therefore, there is a certain attitude toward performing super-human tasks or demands of physicality which is not to strain and overdo them – but find clever ways to do them or have others do them for us. The Temple of THEM trains Sorcerers, presently, from an introverted point of view due to my own innate orientation. Therefore, an inward focus will be evident with a marked emphasis on aspects drawing from Carl Jung's psychoanalysis, [in particular the Libido] Alchemy, Dreams and a withdrawal of energies from objects to restore it to the self. This should be kept in mind when considering the Temple's writings particularly my own since I cannot alter this innate bias. If like me you have ever experienced a poltergeist, psychokinesis, or the power of a nightmare then you know the extraordinary power that lays inside our psyche. Are the Dark Ones a product of the psyche, external to it, or somewhere in between? I and most of THEM believe that the truth is somewhere in between. But for now, the Temple is coloured by an introverted analysis of this possibility and will be until an extrovert takes my place as the Temple's Representative.

The Temple has experienced the same biases when a membership of males or females has predominated with emphasis on various factors due to biological predisposition excluding others. An awareness of this limitation therefore offers us a chance to look for or create opportunities to balance it. However, there are potentially great benefits to be had from this approach that the extrovert cannot attain. Magic relies on the Will – often it is the unconscious that blocks the power of the conscious will. This is why a wish encoded in Sigil or Rune magic is disfigured until it is unrecognisable as a symbol to the conscious mind viz. to prevent the unconscious from interfering.

It is the aim of this Temple to study and make conscious what we call the Bridge which is an effort to listen to one's dreams, learn to identify and read the messages of the unconscious, and allow a communication between the two to take place. In this fashion – the repressed contents and the conscious contents can actively be manipulated. This can be observed in the nature of synchronicity which grows and intensifies as an individual correctly interprets their Wyrd or decreases and causes problems and obstacles when an individual Crosses their Wyrd. Psychosis is however a very real danger when the natural tension or spring of the mind is stretched or used in such a way genetics and heredity did not intend. The Will is powered by repressing certain contents depriving them of power [Libido] driving down those contents at the same time causing other contents to rise up and be empowered by power [Libido]. The conscious is like a laser, we point it at things with a specific aim and wishful thinking – it is the unconscious that makes the decision whether something works or not.

Unconscious contents can be made known through listening to and interpret Dreams, through recognising one's own behaviours, habits, patterns. With a variety of techniques, most of which involve difficult challenging alchemical formulas and a desire to evolve that causes serious internal conflict, the energy invested in manifesting Dark Gods or demons externally can be withdrawn – with a corresponding rise in consciousness, self-awareness and control of the psyche [including immense stores of libido] that projects them as parts of our unintegrated psychic content or leaks of unconscious activity.

Here though I must make something clear – the aim of THEM is not to strive for some perfect human being with a fully integrated consciousness – that is a pipe-dream, the sonic lie of many other groups that strive after the destruction of the Ego thinking they are going to become supermen. The psyche just doesn't work like that – it requires the tension in the spring to function and if that spring was somehow snapped the effects would be devastating as often happens in the case of the insane where the unconscious dominates. NO – we do not strive a superman or something that is simply unattainable – we wish to create the Undividual – a being that re-considers his place and is at least far more aware of the full range of his psychic functions and his own short-comings, limitations and biological biases than most. The outcome of tinkering with these phenomena is unknown and therefore as potentially dangerous as it is rewarding – extremes of both Genius and Madness are to be found within the Psyche but the result of one's tinkering may not be the result of another's.

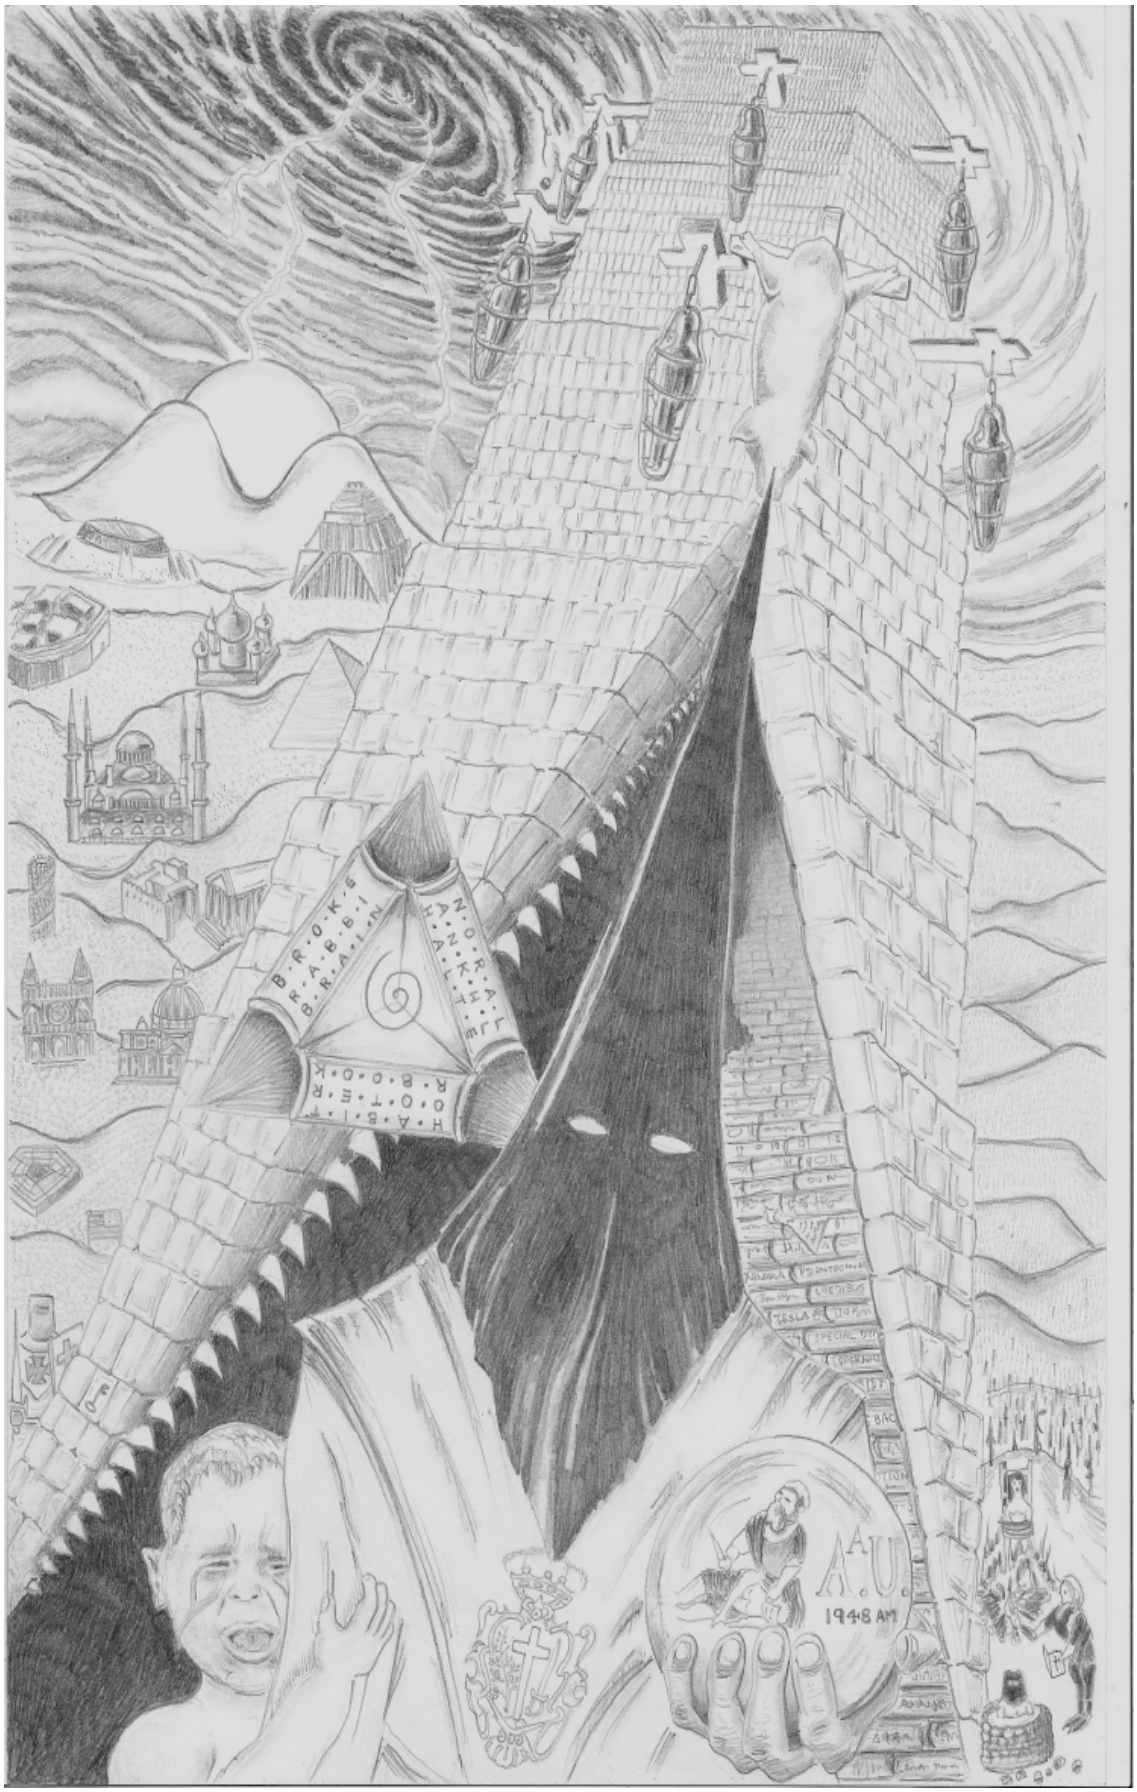
What need be understood is that there is not or any way to prove an objective proof – I am certain most of you have experienced a supernatural phenomenon, seen a demon, ghost or apparition, been touched by a force or experienced a poltergeist. What is of interest to us here can only be conducted under rigorous self-scrutiny and brutal self-honesty to reveal what is figment, imagination, wishfulness, psychic leaks or genuine entities. Yet aside from trying to determine how much of the Dark Gods appearance, nature, etc is a product of us – the power that can be extracted from a more complete understanding, integration and operation of our psychic faculties is of considerable interest too. This Temple has however been home to extroverted individuals and their works will or may be further made accessible to you as you progress through the ranks or contribute to the Mvimaedivm Black Project.

The Temple also houses and welcomes new strains of Sinister definition and systems and we encourage you to share your own thoughts and experiences with it, to express your own currents as offshoots of the main vein. The Temple has definite goals such as isolating the context origin and evolution of concepts such as the number Seven, or ascertaining whether there really are archaeological remains of elongated heads to weigh up the evidence for Annunaki in relation to understanding why they were depicted the way they were – [the answer is yes and there are existing examples] – or merely speaking to experts or doing private research of large bodies of texts to find out how an ancient people lived, approached the world, the type of magic they had etc. Underlying these roots is the trunk of our work which is to discover the evolutionary path of concepts and people's that led to the distortion of the Aeonic Imperium and identify the path and weaknesses of the Magi – as well as the evolutionary path of what is called the Sinister and the Dark Ones.

CHAPTER 4
EXOTERIC FORMATIONS



A.A.U.
1948 AM

THE FUNDAMENTALS OF HUMAN BEING

The fundamentals of being a living being are often forgotten.

Society (the interactions of people) focuses on certain expectations for how to live through its messaging and its provided institutions.

Some examples of what society expects (from some of its members) are:

- education
- employment & a career
- marriage
- wealth
- owning a house
- social status
- self-imposed morality
- purchasing material possessions
- religion/political belief
- voting for change

However, the fundamentals of human Being are:

- God (or unquestionable recognition/acknowledgement of the divine) (not to be confused with religion which imagines to know God)

- the breath (a profound concept in most and almost all ancient cultures, not least for life itself but meditation, martial arts, mind and body regulation)

- creative power (touch/vision through hands/mind but also symbols/sounds/art/speech)

- experience making (as an interactive 3d object in motion in spacetime with other interactive 3d objects)

- transformative power (ability to create forms and apply meaning)

- the body (temple/vessel/vehicle)

- ego (an aspect that is self-serving and always seeking to gain a positive for itself - as well as seeking to fix the world in place by its own standards)

- self (an aspect that affords nuance or variation and seeks to gain a positive for more than oneself, often sacrificing oneself to make it happen - as well as recognition of the ego and seeking to understand the world by all standards)

- sex / semen and the womb (the means for making new beings)

- the voice (sound/language)

- alchemical legacy (our total journey and who/what we change - often beyond our control)

-entropy leading to cessation of breath (eventual death).

-legacy (what did you do with your life that will persist after you are gone?)

AUSTRALIA, MAGIC AND THE SINISTER

The following comments were taken from a discussion in the 600 Club forum on Australia and Black Magic with Michael Aquino from the Temple of Set several years ago, comments that we consider interesting and informative enough to present here as it provides several in-depth insights into the Australian culture from someone who lives here and has the necessary understanding to implement Sinister strategies carefully conceived to achieve maximum mimesis within its particular Ethos.

"…Hello Michael, Thanks for your interesting article on Australia – you should visit – like all things, they must be experienced for knowledge to have depth. The interest in Australia (also called Arnhem Land in the past) and creating a "Sinister History" for it – ties up with our work re: the Order of Nine Angles – a group you are no doubt aware of, and which has been my guiding light for approximately ten years now. I first heard of your work in 1997 when researching the CoS and subsequently got a more panoramic view of your work in relation to the ONA via the "Letters to Stephen Brown". It is nice to finally put a 'face' to the name. I was born in Australia but spent half my life here, half my life somewhere else (Aeotearoa). The landscape of Australia is, in a word, hostile.

Of the ten most poisonous snakes in the world, we host eight. We have many varieties of dangerous Ants, Wasps, Spiders, Snakes, Scorpions, Crocodiles, the list goes on – and even some of the Birds can be dangerous. We've a large wild bird called the Cassowary that can kick a man to death. The fabled Kangaroo so cutely captured in the world's imagination also comes in a "Red" variety, standing 7 feet tall and with huge back legs it can (and does) ruin many a 4wd when they smash into it at dusk, or again kill a man with one kick. While the "grey" is more docile, it too can cause serious damage if the unwary should try to pat or approach it. The fauna or Australia is as varied as it is strange, inhabited with a massive variety of queer native animals.

Though much of the coastline of Australia is inhabited, the majority (about 90%) is desert; where it is not, it is breathtakingly beautiful, but very big, and rather empty so it is a bad idea to take off bush on your own. We have a large variety of terrain here – tropical bush, rain forest, old forest, tundra, desert, mountain, swamp, bush – some of it accessible by land, some of it only accessible via helicopter. In those places by helicopter – there are still new species being found – one of the recent was new and very large spiders in the Kimberley's. No matter where you are though – Australia is largely an inhospitable place when you leave the coastal settlements and head inward about 3-400 km when you begin to enter the "Outback". Mostly barren, the Outback is where the 'cutesy' tourist idyll of Australia quickly fades. Esp. if you're out there to perform ritual. Not only do you have to watch out for the terrain as weather can change very quickly here causing floods, torrential rains, mudslides, cave-ins or what have you – and the fauna which can cut you if you walk on it, touch it, and poison you – or dodge deadly and openly hostile arachnids, snakes, ants, wasps and so on – watch out for wombats; small bears that are quite vicious, as are koalas whom sport very long claws, both of whom will eat your food, avoid Wild pigs, dingoes, and so on… You also have to keep an eye on the locals – who, as buttoned-down farmers of the land, take a dim view of anything that looks like 'magic'.

Luckily, the land is big enough to lose yourself in – but you have to be very careful you find yourself again. The Heat alone kills a lot of unprepared visitors. The Aboriginals, or Koori people are believed to have lived in Australia for some 40, 000 years prior to settlement. The fascinating aspects of their magic should not be ignored – since, they are quintessentially all that comprises the magical history of Australia. There are no white equivalents, except perhaps for the permeation of the church, no magical Caucasian characters that have any association to Australian magical history.

The Aboriginals speak of a Dreamtime, which very closely parallels the A-causal as spoken of by AL – and is a complex set of stories that not only relate the lore of the Koori – but actually provide MAPS of the Australian Landscape. A large majority of the songs that the Koori teach are not just arbitrary – they contain references to Australian landmarks, as Australia is (like New Zealand) broken up into many tribal areas, quoted in the songs. Thus, by singing a remembered song – an aboriginal can find their way, even way out "Beyond the Black Stump" (Middle of Nowhere for a white man). This ability has led to the legendary status of their ability as "Trackers" whom police often use to find lost people or those who might be hiding from them.

They are also extremely proficient in living off the land, finding food and water where white man finds only death. Like some native Indian tribes, the elders and clans in the outback live in their own perception of time – of which their knack for disappearing or "going walkabout" for as long as ten years, then returning as if they had left only yesterday – puzzles and annoys the consistent-loving white man. This is just a very basic outline of some of the magic that does exist here, none of it in the last 200 years. However, white man has all but wiped out the Ways of the Koori – and they survive only in the outback by an ever-diminishing group of Elders. Alcoholism and Substance abuse, particularly petrol has all but finished off the Tradition of the Koori, now treated with tokenism by a PC wary govt – but originally pursued in waves of Genocide by the British.

On the topic of Satanism though – that form is very recent here. Unlike older countries such as the UK or USA, there is very little Sinister history here. Some witch scares and some minor belief in the Devil – but there is at the present time only an estimated 30,000 practising Satanists in a population of 18-19 million people. Most of these have received their instruction on Satanism from the Satanic Bible, You, (ToS), or a mixture of internet-based agencies following 1997. Prior to which the number of Satanists was believed to be less than half of the above quoted number.

The 70's held a few reactionary satanic rises in worship – though none of these made any significant mention and are only mentioned in history as a collective appearance. A few Australian serial killers have named Satan as their inspiration – but that kind of thing is prevalent everywhere. None of these killers have ever matched the status of Ramirez or Manson however for the occult link. In terms of the HQ of THEM: Australia was chosen deliberately. Since I live here, am proud of my heritage, both Irish and Australia (I'm descended from Kings on one side, Convicts on the other, a nice nuance) and have some considerable ambition due to my Wyrd – it was decided that Australia would become host to a new nexion of the ONA and act as a psychic and/or physical fulcrum for the rest of the Sinisterion.

To this end, we hope to challenge the status quo of satanic instruction here and infuse the ONA-type Satanism in a country that has not yet been saturated by the ToS/CoS mentality to the degree of other countries. Though the eradication of religion and not dealing with the reactionaries to religion is one of our primary concerns. Australia has only been settled by the white man for around 200 years and has had no real impact on the Occult – aside of course, from the magnificent practices and way of living of the Koori whose way is now side-lined, ignored, and pushed further toward destruction; there has been no Sinister Characters or Contribution to Satanism from this Continent (some argue, Island) and THEM arose to change that.

So, while interesting to hear someone else's take on Australia based on its cultural history – its magical one is something else altogether, and we believe yet to be written. There is much potential for Australia to serve as the new nexion, indeed even as an HQ for Falcifer, not just for its ominous and beautiful landscapes, hostility, alieness, or the fact that almost any act of open ritual is seen as 'black mass' thus a catharsis would generate a significant amount of energy to be dispersed (for more info see Oto Anorha #30) into its red earth, unlike the jaded USA or UK where such things are just viewed as fringe activities of nut jobs, or quietly tolerated, magic Here involves risk. Esp. when it utilises the manner in which we are using it to make significant changes to Australian History by giving it a Sinister one. This will take time of course – but then that is part of the magic taught within ONA's methodology.

Oh – PS – I was re-reading your findings on Australia and realised I'd forgotten to address a particular point I had intended to. viz, the use of "Oz". You quoted: ""Oz", oddly enough, is the name some Australians attach to their country. It is here that the band flees, to a settlement deep in the blisteringly hot Australian Outback. Over fifteen hundred people have formed a settlement that is nearly totally self-sufficient. Weather control, lakes, forests, mountains, underground agriculture, and huge machines all serve to support this community." Perhaps owing to the illiteracy of the earliest convicts from England, a vernacular developed among the imprisoned that was short and sweet, gruff and particular to the penal communities.

Historically/Linguistically – I really couldn't say – but what I do know is that Australia, prior to the huge influx of foreigners and the rise in political correctness which has been a great challenge to the way Australians speak, act and tell it like it is; expresses itself in a unique way which some have termed 'lazy' and others 'down-to-earth'. Life here in the 1800's was extremely tough. Enough said.

There wasn't time for dressing up one's language nor much opportunity to learn it for those who colonised this Great Southern Land. As a result, the alpha-male who could get things done, (aka the 'Battler' against the Establishment Ned Kelly, for instance, an archetype that emerged in reaction to the oppressive imperialism of the British Rule) with a minimum of fuss (or "airy-fairy") was the thing to be – and represented a schism between Convict and Jailer that still stews today. The discovery of Gold was probably what bought the largest infusion of cross-culture Australia had yet seen and allowed the Chinese to flourish alongside the Irish. This influx on the gold fields exacerbated already fierce rivalry between the cultures – a rivalry which was somewhat captured by the Nation's later obsession for sport but which was also partly responsible for the esoteric development of Australian colloquialism. As I already said, a huge alpha-male meme was required to tame Australia; the men who first arrived here built the roads, carved out the hillsides, lay miles of track, cut down forests, hewed rock faces; were a breed of their own, Tough Buggers by any stretch.

The worship and necessity of such an archetype has been watered down somewhat with the relaxation of British imperialism – and the bullshit of PC, but has led to the survival of an ideology that the ability to down incredible amounts of beer, endure the toughest conditions, support one's own, stand up for what's right, support Sport and the National Obsession with Football, violence and domestic/tribal patriarchal rule (That the Convicts got to play the British guard at football/cricket has had a huge influence in the way things are 'settled' here.)- among many other traits unique to Australian culture – being the dominant characteristics of Its people. The hero worship of nobodies who became/become somebodies remains one of the defining features of Australian culture – but woe betide that someone should ‘forget where they came from.’

Because of the tribalism that existed in the colonies and gold fields – and that includes with the Koori – it was considered great fun by the colonists to make sport with new arrivals who were often told all sorts of tall tales about Australia at the expense of the hapless visitor shaking their head in amazement. Many Americans still think the ‘platypus’ is such a tall tale. But it exists. One fossil was recently found that showed a former species had teeth. On that – it is also believed that during the Gondwanaland period that many of the species native to Australia crossed into New Zealand – thus the kiwi is believed to be Australian by some circles. Not something I can substantiate; I just have a good memory for recalling what people say. To some extent, it has been surmised that this habit of ‘talking smack’ to visitors gave rise to legends of Australia in other countries as a wonderland – and thus an “Oz” – but this is probably not really the only explanation, esp. given that Australia was colonised well before frank Baum's 1900 writing of the Wizard of Oz. A more likely culprit for this -is that although they can work extremely hard – Australians still prefer their lazy chipped English to the prim and proper ‘pommy’ and have a love of shortening everything that might be too fancy for the alpha-male, to as short a phrase as possible.

Speaking like this is one of the tribal characteristics that identifies tourists from locals – as is the strange rhyming slang used to codify everyday objects names and places. Thus you, Michael, would be known as ‘Mick’, here. Patrick/Patto, Service Station/Servo, and it gets even more obscure; the Brisbane Cricket Grounds for instance, is called the “Gabba”. Figure that one out. Of the efficiency in everything physical – there was also a quiet appreciation for the poet or artist who offered escapism (however mild) from the harshness of living off the land, esp. when that poet effectively captured the hard life of the colonists. Qv. Henry Lawson. Many people assume the obscure sayings that comprise much of the Aussie vernacular (though generally only in the Working Class) exist because of a simple peculiarity of the Australian culture – or just assume the Australians enjoyed ‘taking the piss’. But the Australian language (now in danger of extinction due to PC) stems from the alienation of the early convicts, the challenges they faced in settlement and colonisation of this very tough land, the persecution they endured under British imperialism, and the threat they felt after finally colonising the land and finding gold to make their fortunes – from the rising influx of immigrants.

None of these things, these vital currents that form the Australian Ethos have changed; there is still alienation because the convicts estrangement from their homeland never went away; although having gotten softer in the coastal cities the average Australian worker esp. in the outback is gruff, tough and cold as steel to outsiders, warm and affable to his mates and still casts a suspicious eye at anyone remotely in Authority, inc the foreman, boss, policeman or anyone who is brave/stupid enough to try and climb the ladder by stabbing his mates in the back or 'putting on airs'. And despite the nonsense of having to disguise racism openly and instead channel it into underground resentment (What would Jung say about repressing this facet?) to meet the demands of political correctness in the face of a series of Govt's trying to make Australia a cultural melting pot for everyone; hatred seethes within many white Australians toward this increasing wave of newcomers.

And tribalism, taking root because of reaction to this hostility has led to entire enclaves being populated by just one race, Springvale in Victoria for instance, is mainly (95%) inhabited by Koreans, Chinese, and other Oriental Races, the wealthy Toorak township in Vic is saturated mostly by Jews, Frankston in Vic by WASPS, other areas particularly by the Lebanese, Sri Lankans, Indians, Greeks etc. A situation which would require its own separate reply. For all the efforts of the Govt and media to promote the illusion of equality and foster some magical idyll of the world's cultures living in harmony together – Australia is sitting on a cultural time bomb which will take only a few careless (or careful) matches to set off. Literally – a cricket match or football match can quickly shed the pretext of racialism and expose the fierce alienation felt by different tribes that assembles them. So, in many ways – understanding the Australian populace, whether as a politician or a Satanist, requires in-depth exposure to its culture – which traditional culture of the WASP, was/is designed to tribalize the white Australian, marginalise anyone else, and protect his/her very tenacious views which survive from the onset of his arrival here. Hence Sport – as a racial current – is taken very seriously here. In fact, it is the dominating Religion.

THE FORMATION OF THEM [I]

Dec 2010

Prior to 2000 I was a diabolist and devil worshipper proper – having received my impressions of Satanism via the Bible and presently available media and stereotypes including occult and para-psychological books.

In 1997 the internet became available to me and by 2000 I was looking into the COS after being disappointed by the Satanic Bible and at the TOS for more information after having been introduced to the Crystal Tablet of Set by a member. Neither of the approaches taken by the groups appealed to me.

I became aware of the ONA in 2001 after several documents on the totse search engine caught my eye.

Through a small group deliberately created to gather more information on the secretive Order entitled ‘The Collection Plate’ – I was directed to Nasz Dom – a short-lived and trouble-plagued website hosted by Thornian of ONA.

I accumulated enough new information by the way of manuscripts and conversations from Nasz Dom that it took me two years to process what I had found. Many of the Mss puzzled me as I had not had such intense exposure to anything like it before and it required me to find and read about Hitler, Jung, Spengler, Aristotle, Myatt and many others in order to make sense of the mss.

In 2002 a second attempt to find more information about the ONA via ‘the collection plate mark II’ yielded information about an ONA forum operating in yahoo which I promptly joined.

Around 2003 as ‘DWR’ I joined in conversations with other members of the forum and grew exponentially – developing fanatical loyalty to the ideas of the ONA. Noting the limitations on file storage in the group and continued difficulties others were having finding ONA material, inc. myself, I opened a 2nd yahoo group called the ONA Database. This was to hold all the overflow of mss and materials that would no longer fit into the original group.

OD was successful – but even then the difficult moral question of whether to increase the availability of mss or decrease it was a hot topic among forum members – a haunting question that saw the foreclosure of OD after approximately six months. At its height OD attracted hundreds of members and held the largest collection of ONA mss anywhere then online. It was during the formation of OD that I made contact with many of the people who would continue to support my endeavours.

After OD closed due to a decision by myself – it was replaced by Caput Mortuum’s (Algol) site Sitra Ahra which superseded the OD with its content. Sitra Ahra suffered the same fate as many other ONA hosters though which tended to be moral uncertainty or lousy web servers and was shut down after only a short time of operation.

During this time, I had begun working with the ONA mss; undertaking an insight role as a skinhead, working on a replacement tarot, attempting chant, to find this and that, and continuing to read and look for further ONA mss inc. Naos.

Ansuz Transmissions in NZ were able to provide me with Naos before they closed, along with many other rare ONA mss still housed in Mvimaedivm group. Shortly after doing so, they ceased contact leaving many others who had not received what they had sent money for, angry in the wake. AT was one more victim of the uncertainty that goes with making ONA mss available.

As my involvement of the ONA Way in my life deepened, I felt the need to split off and form my own group.

The first of these attempts was the Temple of the Tangent or 'ttt'. The ttt was basically like OD except that it aimed to gather any and all 'acausal-based art forms' to share and distribute amongst members of the Way. Although again attracting a significant amount of members, I was largely the only poster and after only a short while I became disenchanted with what I was doing and closed the group.

The vampiric Tempel of Blood surfaced around the same time, and I took great interest in learning about their practices – for they seemed very ONA-like, and I saw it as a means to get closer. I worked briefly with the TOB and was given many materials, some ONA and some TOB all of which are housed in Mvimaedivm.

The Emanations of Urania was instrumental in my grasping of Aeonic Theory – and gave me a strong impetus to be more patient as concerned my life efforts.

My life taken over by the Way, I had continued to do whatever I could to serve the Order, filling in gaps, providing information, or fixing what I thought was broken. Being methodical and meticulous in my approach to the world I had in fact copy and pasted the entire ONA Archive into a separate file in case the day should ever come when the group would be destroyed or shut down; in which case the information contained therein would be preserved. It was to prove a useful gesture as during an argument between two members one of them threatened to lay a complaint with the FBI and have the forum shut down. This was met with cries of protest and anger from other members – and relief when I smugly announced that it made no difference due to the back-up of the archives that I had made. This action made me a few new friends.

Following continued disruption by the member in question who went on to kill ONA forum completely with his trolling; I conceived the idea of creating a more protected forum that would allow moderation – as the current forum had long been abandoned by its creator to the chagrin of many. This gave rise to the short-lived 'AeONA' group where I learned useful lessons about the folly of trying to control dialectic. Shortly after its creation I shut this group down too.

Upon attempting the Naos Tarot I came into contact with the ONA who offered guidance, encouragement, and support for the project. Much of this is detailed in the second diary of the DOAD. Around the same time, I also came into contact with a woman who had also been drawn to the ONA after going renegade with a much larger magical organisation but had some heavy reservations regarding the practice and approach of both. I would come to know her as the Sorceress.

The dual instruction received by ONA and the S. tempered my fanaticism of the ONA and gave way to a more mature outlook – an esoteric expansion – that made me consider the benefits of following the Way to the written letter.

Although my loyalties lay with the ONA I continued to communicate with the Sorceress and add to my knowledge about magic and the occult and myself. Feeling that something had to be done to bridge the gap between what she knew, I knew, and ONA knew we devised the concept of a group that would not be restricted to using the Septenary Way in expressing the Sinister. Several of our friends joined us in forming a group on one hand strongly influenced by the great IOT, and the other the great ONA – yet with several significant twists.

It was about this time that I realised my perceptions had changed so much that I would need to discard the alter-ego of Tnepres Ra (aka Ryan Anschauung) whose loyalty and fierce devotion to the ONA was blinding me. I reacted with passion.

In a heated split from the original ONA forum I formed 'Mvimaedivm' group with five others, inc. the Sorceress where we continued to build our synthesis of IOT/ONA. Growing quietly in the shadows my studies had taken a deeper focus on forms, symbolism, and the roles of each. The Sorceress had raised many important points regarding the ONA's practice, as well as that of Crowley, IOT, TOB, and other groups. – and I attempted to tackle each of them with my intellect and logic, formulating in the process several dozen theories to synthesise or bridge the problems raised with solutions.

One of the problems was fore knowledge that any form created to manifest our insights was an illusion. Knowledge that many forms rose up, sank under, and failed to do what they set out to do – which was usually pander to the ego of its creator. We had to be different, and yet somehow allow the ONA, IOT, my studies, their studies, all of our Lhp studies to be recognised as legitimate paths and experiences of a collective whole – but how to make a square Satan fit a round hole? Or a round Satan a square one?

The genius of Carl Jung provided much of the groundwork for the connection to be made between us all in the form of archetypes, whilst ONA's emphasis on essence and forms and shape-shifting had given us the necessary understanding of change to unite a sea of differences without watering down the individual tsunami.

What was once contradictory would be reconciled – and reconciled in such an honest fashion about the nature, role and powers of the occult that it would prove extremely difficult to refute. The answer to quell previous conflict between members and their different paths whilst still maintaining a serious and active dialectic would prove as natural a development as the name of the new group – the Temple of THEM.

Rather than continue to expound how the individual Adept is created – THEM accepted the ONA had given a sterling and lasting example of the process – and set about teaching the next stage of development after the keys to personal development had been grasped, explored and understood enabling a permanent striving for increase to occur of itself based on these fundamental principles.

THEM attempts to show what is behind, beneath, and beyond form; how Mythos and Cultures are created/influenced by a group of individuals and the power of manipulating form using its model of apprehensions, and often, itself as an example.

We believe our existence to be a natural progression emerging from the influence of the collective unconscious for an increased consciousness and the particular geometry of the world in which we find ourselves and which sets our particular challenges.

Whether our separate or collective insights into our existence are literal, figurative, or imagined we cannot be certain; THEM simply embody an experimental synchronicity device to increase consciousness and raise awareness of the self, others, the matrix, and the vehicles and roles by which we ourselves perceive the world and the above.

Thus far it appears to be working.

THE FORMATION OF THEM [II]

This was posted on our forum, Mvimaedivm, titled ‘Stepping Outside the ONA’ in response to someone’s question. It might prove interesting and informative as regards THEM’s relation to the ONA, the Sinister, and Satanism.

“Ah, well here you come to the reason THEM arose. ONA’s mystical, silent, tight-lipped approach is designed to develop critical thinking in its adherents, to enable them, force them, to work things out for themselves.

So, to short-cut having to endlessly define and research ONA’s exhaustive glossary of forms, some of us cheated and saw ONA as the expression of a human being whose human behaviour was quantifiable even if for the most part, and at certain stages of ONA’s life, his forms/emanations were not.

This removed us from being trapped in the Mythos and Forms of the ONA and allowed us to look at the ONA as a formula or structure designed to elicit certain changes in behaviour on others: such changes being physical, mental, practical etc. and see the reason behind deployment of such forms was an experimental means to essentially to build a Mythos, that would become a culture when enough people were involved, and eventually a reality, when enough people invested their energy in it and tried to earth it.

This allowed us (THEM) to place ONA in the context of being a form expressed by some human being – (thus to some extent predictable) and thus because we know AL is Myatt, to research Myatt and see/understand that he has written a great many manuscripts using other forms such as NS, Islam, etc but that underlying it all there was a common thread – viz. a desire to colonise space. Thus, all the exhortations of the ONA toward this or that, and its beautiful aesthetics such as yf dating, Aeonics, dark gods, Naos, etc etc, can all be understood as part of a plan (that changed over the years) to get to this point: and thus certain methodology of ONA understood: (while still functioning on its other levels also) But also that this creation of Myatt, for all its span and scope, was still a contained expression of Form emanating from a human being.

If a person does not see the ONA in this context, and a great many don't, (I didn't for a long time) then the ONA can very well become a labyrinth of occult madness that overwhelms with its complexity and sheer volume of factors in its Mythos.

THEM were responsible for providing this context and its unique analysis and understanding of the ONA in such a way: and that is why we are definitively a Nexion loyal to the ONA, but also something else besides.

Our collective understanding has now changed the face of the ONA for a great many people with the emergence and proliferation of such a context, allowing a collective going beyond the Seven-Fold Way's extensive/exhaustive analysis of the personal sphere, and a new focus on the cultural and supra-personal aspect of said ONA cultures' growth: i.e. concerning what comes after the ONA's emphasis on the personal.

But, more importantly to FREE many from what has been described as the 'madness' of the ONA's labyrinth (Which labyrinths exist whenever a large volume of forms presents themselves) and free them prematurely, in order to increase the number of people who understand the same things about ONA that THEM do. Not because we are an authority, but because being stuck in the labyrinth is not very enjoyable. And because my personal view is that some should be given the opportunity to escape it – (others in THEM differ on this matter) we let synchronicity and a certain level of determinedness designate to us who was going to receive that context. Because of this context – which has the potential to allow people to dismiss the aspects of ONA regarding its Mythos, which aspects are essential to a revolution over the Magian, in my personal point of view, THEM did not share their comments widely and publicly with most who follow the ONA, but only a select few.

Those who are here now, are not here by chance – or, likewise, they are."

THE FORMATION OF THEM [III]

Feb 9th 2006.

"Well, one aim was to prove through conclusive evidence that certain theories of mine were possible. What many of those theories are, shouldn't be revealed at this stage but one such aim was to prove for myself that single-handedly, a mythos could be created and sustained. THEM has managed to do that. The surface of these forms continues to be misunderstood – and while that occurs, I will continue to teach people what lies beneath – as that is the true course of my existence, to help or as DM puts it so nicely, to stop the suffering. This, by changing the cycles that usually dominate unconsciously by showing how humans evolve. Whether using Satanism to do this has or hasn't been effective is not really a concern – I believe my work has brought life to Satanism and holds its own against any proponents of its different systems because of the raw self-honesty, willingness to expose my own stupidity, misunderstanding, arrogance, ignorance etc without the need for having to be seen as a superhuman masculine male who must always be right lest his ego be challenged. I am as supremely arrogant as I am humble – though I should point out that the arrogance arrives from living Satanically, that is to say, bounded within that form and the parameters an Ism creates. To continue my work, it may be necessary to leave Satanism altogether as the last and final form of my interest, behind, and begin anew in a different direction or fashion.

The books – so called Six and Seven are in fact viewed as real books – though to acknowledge their contents now would be to divulge too much. Obviously, this won't be released for another two years at least, so I can tell you that 'book six' is another experimental black magical practice [though black magic and its context in relation to its author should be understood before making assumptions] viewed as the organic Now; that is, as a living narrative taking place in the present time in the interactions fostered by this group and its members as an experiment designed to test a number of the above hinted at theories and to see how difficult it is to implement changes to existing forms or give rise to a new one altogether. That of course by setting some handicaps such as not relying on the usual channels that bring a form together, notoriety, or popularity.

Book Seven I am told is a reference to some distant record that might perhaps be made of THEM's involvement and influence with the Sinister that someone somewhere might write concerning any changes that THEM to manage to invoke via its short-lived [but life-long for its author] manifestation. Thus, book six is happening Now with its authors, characters and story line determined by the actions, motions and concepts brought forth by THEM and its interaction with others in the hopes that it can indeed presence a new Archetype. While Book Seven is what might be written about THEM should it manage to do it and prove the worth of its 'Science'.

I think that this is something that will not be understood; and might even be foolhardy to prematurely expose or inform people of – what is essentially non-satanic takes aboard those most likely to have passion and a malleability that can be affected through the form of Satanism and changes them in accordance with that archetype which some have termed the Thinking Warrior. And it has always been invisible but the author of THEM has about as much idea about what he is doing than the rest of the forms out there; this is a highly experimental concept that no-one else has attempted to do – to cheat the Ethos proscribed by our Time and try to move as many people forward out of the constraints of that Time as can be afforded given the 'technology' and insight available to that sorcerer – esp. at such a young age. [Mr FL is either 28 or 29 at the time of writing.] is an ambitious endeavour no matter what way you choose to look at it. To actually set up and emulate a group like the ONA for oneself and prove that it can be done is no easy feat; look how many ONA groups last without degenerating. It's also a comment on the tenacity of living a way through in order to provide oneself with the truest possible experiences to provide answers to one's questions – a good example that could be copied by many.

As I say again – the forms used by someone my age are pretty advanced – only because that awareness that there is a fighting against my natural youthful aggression and a desire to implement a greater maturity are at constant friction with one another. It is not therefore, impossible for someone at my age to have found the same insights that I have through a thorough search of form – nor too late to abandon them in favour of changes caused by evolution. I hold to optimism that when my forms my quest my concepts and the way of Mvimaedivm are really understood that life may very well change through a few who may then carry that maturity born of blood sweat and tears through to the next generation.

But until I'm old and grey, there probably won't be a time to express the fullness of my intentions regarding Satanism, such things as the ONA, or such things as THEM. So, the illusions must continue yet.'

THE INFINITE FRACTAL

“THEM has many meanings, it is not just indicative of a group of people, it also means Them, the Dark Gods, and their voice that issues through when the vein of the subconscious is tapped and directs the psyche beyond ego impulses and contrivances. It is the state that is experienced when Self and Ego become active as two powers that can direct one and embodies the loss of identity that allows one to become a shape shifter – this separates US, from them. It is also a term to denote someone who has truly built their own self-image devoid of others’ expectations that shrugs off the world’s and societies roles with friends, family etc., as projections that aim to force a person into a role and play by the laws of the matrix.

A being that can smash all intellectual chains into dust, possessed of a determination of the will that others stand in awe and fear of. Furthermore, the word THEM is an appropriation of a Magian fear meme. When people quote an unknowable source in relating a scientific or religious fact, they generalise and thus create an illusory authoritarian figure, “they” i.e. “they say that…” or “that’s what they say” that builds on the fear felt by all in thrall to the matrix, that gives psychological and magical credence to one’s claims. We have stolen that “They…” and it has become “THEM” People – as a rule – tend not to believe in the sinking of the fabled continent of Atlantis. They question many of the tenets associated with that particular fable including the suggestion of superior and advanced weaponry and technology supposedly being available to the Atlanteans, including flying ships and/or discs.

They question the particular location where Atlantis was supposed to occupy and find fault with maps, verification or accounts that mentioned it. Or they struggle to accept that Gods exist, (many find it easier to believe in just one), and that the Gods occasionally might object to the way humans are treating each other and the world and choose to intervene.

Yet, Carl Jung, famously related in his many books on many occasions following some 70 years of experience with direct contact of psychological patients, that their dreams, swelling up from the subconscious, had the power to hint at the possibility or certitude of impending or imminent death. The symbology that arose could warn them, that the course they had set was about to destroy them, and like currents from the darkest ocean some part of them let loose waves of realisation crashing on the shores of their conscious mind.

These powers from within that override the bovine functioning of the oblivious conscious human being are among those chthonic, alien forces that we equate with THEM, but there are many others. We believe that on all levels of life, there IS a force or forces that object to our behaviour/existence and give us warnings – but it is not a moral force telling us to do good or bad. It is an immoral force that exists 'side by side' / within/without us, mimicking what we do as we mimic it, but it does so with far more power and strength because of its different type of life-form and scale.

In today's worlds where dreams are greatly undervalued, shunned and ignored at tremendous but sanctimoniously sanctioned peril – some psyches, seems to act on behalf of these unconscious forces, collectively manifesting the same type of warnings for an individual or group of individuals or even a corporation in an attempt to bring great imbalance to the conscious attention of the parties involved.

Even the greatest form, the Empire, ceases to be eventually because such forms are incredibly difficult to sustain, and cracks appear. They ask too much for too long and a reaction of equal strength builds inside the vacuum. For as the mythology of countless eras, epochs and empires attests – people cannot push against something too long, without tipping it over. In the eyes of Gods, reaching beyond your reach, stealing fire, setting yourself too high, amounts to Hubris. And if there is one thing shared by Gods, it's that they hate Hubris. For Every Action there is an Equal and Opposite Reaction.

If a person overreaches themselves by indulging in destructive or excessive behaviour – they may be warned about their path by their psyche. If their psyche is ignored, that warning of behaviour is passed to people, who are affected by the behaviour through that person's actions. If the people are ignored, the warning passes to the System. The System is where we exit the process and human involvement is superseded by forces of reaction. If the System ignores the warnings from the people, who ignore warnings from the person, who ignores warnings from the psyche – the Planet, our people, our psyche – all speak at once. Because we are all derived from, echoes of, the same macrocosm/microcosm of Dark Gods and the powers that buffet us like paper in the wind.

The Planet speaks with forces that treat us with indifference – it has a life of its own, a time cycle of its own that dwarfs us and our sentimental constructs, existing as it does through Aeons. Yet we mimic its every move, copy its essence, because we are fractals of the same Creatrix. As the Earth has tsunamis and earthquakes that devastate the land and sea, so do humans have personal equivalents that flood us with emotion or subconscious contents bringing with it waves of destructive debris, and just as earthquakes tear apart the ground creating deep chasms and levelling buildings, so to can the human experience a 'shock to the system' strong enough to level the concepts and beliefs, faith or trust we have built in our minds, or have our solid foundations shattered in the wake of deep psychological tremors. The 'psychological' effect that media often cite after a natural disaster is often believed to be a separate outcome from the event, but it's not – it is part of the event, a strong evidence of our connexion to these forces, as a minor manifestation of these forces, whatever their origin may be.

Some say Earth is a dead rock, others a sentient being. The convenient simplification of asking if something is dead or alive does not apply here – if a person is completely unaware of their unconscious and ruled by forces they cannot fathom – run behind the scenes by invisible hands and currents – can they say that they are alive? If we use 10% of our brains, who or what uses the rest?

The definition of Life meets strict biophysical criterion, yet it has been shown that Cities – share the same functions as the human being and fit the description of life – the only thing that stands in the way of Cities being accepted as living beings is our size, our self-importance and our arrogance that we know what Life is.

We hear so often that human beings are having an enormous impact on the Earth, whatever sources cite that impact as being, it is our Ignorance that does the most damage. Media gives the impression that things go away. Our attention seems unable to focus on more than one or two things at any given time.

Recently, the largest oil spill in history caused by BP ceased to exist and was removed from the public eye as a newsworthy story – because it's not news anymore, its olds. The implications of that spill are tremendous. Recently, a special neutron-accelerator was built to fire light speed particles into light speed particles with some physicians admitting they had no idea of the consequences, and it could even cause a black hole. Recently, a missile packed with explosives was fired into the moon. Recently, a process called 'Fracking' came to my attention whereupon a giant hole is drilled in the Earth using millions of tons of fresh, not salt, fresh water and incredible amounts of explosives used to blow the hole wider to obtain oil deep beneath the ocean seabed. Recently, the US announced yet another insane speech about the 'enemies we face' and swore to uphold truth and justice, and it continues on its merry way as the most evil entity and attitude that ever possessed the Physis of man, laying waste to the planet, its people and its future.

Natural Disasters, and among these should be counted those internal esoteric equivalents all of us have that can corrupt, change or destroy our present frame of mind or carefully tended personalities – decrease hubris. They remind us of our Place, though we hate to be reminded of it. They remind us of our lack of Purpose, though we hate to be reminded we don't know it. They remind us of our mortality, and how everything we think so important can be swept clean in the super-destructive forces of the Earth's natural cycles – and we hate that too.

But we've been trained to hate, we've been indoctrinated to forget. We've inherited and continued, without question, the building blocks upon which our consciousness is based, and we continue to remain ignorant of the connexion between us and Earth, Earth and us.

But we will Remember.
All of it.
…Soon.
Tellus Uber Alles.

FALCIFER: AIMS AND INTENTS

+O+ Finance-wise it is my intention to become self-sufficient through writing, art and other mediums by making the Temple in some regards a house-hold name of the occult. What naturally happens then is that it popularly rides a wave until something else replaces it at which time it begins to decline – this is part of the reason the Temple has a 30-year charter because I realise nothing lasts forever and it's a fool's errand to expect it to. The plan is to get into people's lives/heads, do as MUCH damage to the underlying structures that prop up the Magian power structure as possible, and get out as the next stage takes root of its own accord. By tapping into the subconscious needs and unlocking powers of the People [by smashing forms that sap their energy] and the thrill that comes with various insights being revealed there is an addictive meta-psychological high in the Temple's writings. A narrative drug if you like but one that provides its own cure. Because ONA sabotaged its own growth and has a copy-left policy it is next to impossible to make money from it – let alone any sort of living, so this new tarot which I hope will be powerful and "pretty" enough to replace other Tarots and will hopefully be able to sell for a much lower price – could saturate the tarot market with maybe a thousand decks full of new or unappreciated sinister archetypes such as Gods re-joined with their Female counterparts, and other such heresies. Threshold was a good start and a milestone I've been trying to achieve for a while – i.e., independent publishing but the money made did not go far.

However, now somewhat hooked after reading threshold, people may want to read more and more of our texts – many of which are unavailable and many of which can be written to satisfy the demand such as Oto Anorha #34… The major problem faced is that because of the nature of our work there is likely to be no funding coming through from people terrified to actually say what we say – Threshold had many things taken out for fear they might offend – and so for a long-time self-publication has been the only way to get those actual comments through into books we write. I have bought some canvases and may do some paintings to see how they sell too – as it is, I have already established my own currency which is Tarot cards. In five years' time I would like to see the Temple populated with self-sufficient members each driven to help research and unearth the secrets of the past as well as a strong selection of sinister currents working in co-operation to help re-wire the human brain and behavioural ethos by making alchemical changes – the Temple should be able to make its own money through its writings, art, workshops even – but the danger of sliding too far forward into a money-making business is ever present, the danger of expanding the Temple and it becoming something it wasn't supposed to become is also ever present, and if either of those things happen, the Temple loses its credibility, integrity and has successfully been sabotaged, destroyed, rendered impotent by using the System and becoming the System it is trying to stop.

So, if we are to finance the Temple outside the System which is very difficult – we need to decide whether we are working toward re-instituting barter, our own currency, or using the Systems money system on a day-to-day basis which only helps support it all the more. What I propose then is reform and not revolution [at least in our lifetime as a Temple – let us take it most of the way and others do the rest when the time is ripe] and to use the existing system to some extent symbiotically, at least enough to fund what we do, and change the way people use the system by changing people. A study of Marxism / Capitalism / Communism would potentially help find an alternative current outside of the major 3 that can provide an answer to providing for us without using the present System .+O+

+O+ Education-wise – I feel, that only now, having reached 30-33 and I really in any sort of position to understand a lot of what I have absorbed and read – and only now have the maturity and hindsight to implement any of it without falling prey to a host of past mistakes. I see the Temple's role as teaching the means by which to learn – not teaching some doctrine of content to be learned. Much of the Seven-fold Way is supposed to be done on one's own – having public nexions where it is easy to access advice and guidance makes people lazy, ask careless questions, and waste a lot of our time – Time is the most valuable commodity because life does not persist, we have massive goals to attain, and we cannot afford to waste it answering every little question that can easily be answered itself. Self-sufficiency is requisite otherwise the students will always turn to look for the Teachers and what happens when the Teachers aren't there? The students go looking for another teacher instead of taking responsibility and power for themselves – they thus just trade one system for another ending up in the same bullshit cycle.

We need education on how to break cycles by explaining how they function. MB is an excellent research facility, and we still need to uncover a great deal of information about the origin of seven, different kinds of magic, what went wrong, who and how the Magi took control, how the human being developed various ideas, concepts and functions that now rule our perception, biophysical traits that result in various biases and so on… We need non-dualist pagan systems to flourish – but this is an extremely difficult ask because people do not know how to abandon their matrix – and this is where the alchemy comes in – it may also prove to be a useful substitute for language where images and processes of alchemical terms can be used to secretly convey answers to questions on a matter, how to deal with a problem, obstacle or individual etc… We should continue finding the origins of all the Dark Gods and the concepts that created them and brought them to life. +O+

+O+ Sex-wise I think since the Temple has no interest in controlling its students there is no real need to explore – but I think Sorcerers need to be androgynous and not necessarily physically or sexually but mentally they need to have both the masculine and feminine traits developed and honed. Sex is however a very powerful force, and the Temple should have a program to teach why – which is largely the use of abstaining or indulging which has a massive effect on a country's populace and its mindset. Consider the Catholic Church and its proclivities are so prevalent because of the Churches fierce hatred of the body and the flesh. Tantra, Kundalini, and other techniques should be adopted and utilised as well as emphasis on the Magi's eradication of Touch and Intimacy over time in an effort to break Solidarity and Empathy between people. +O+

+O+ Current-wise the current has two public prongs – it has the Mythos that I write for it in the way of speaking collectively about who THEM are and what THEY want and do. This often does not represent those behind the veil – but it need be understood that without knowing what people wanted, or people not speaking up earlier – this was Necessary. I think I agree that ultimately this Is my Temple and my current so long as I continue to write, do the art, communicate the insights, and am Ryan Anschauung – it is thus understandable that saying the Temple is a shared democratic institution is a contradiction in terms and more or less bullshit – I have been steering the ship and really only I know or knew where I wanted it to go.

Behind this public facade there are [or were] however the individual currents of each person involved. This acceptance of many strains of Sinister is what Sath referred to as an 'amorphous' disunity and who wanted the Temple to codify and solidify some concrete current all of us follow… What Sath never understood is that this is precisely the same process as ALL Forms take shortly before they become fixed and enter the natural life cycle of formation, plateau, disintegration and plateau. Until it was desired to make THEM channel One decided on current [and when can a group of people Ever be happy with a conglomerate current?] and where no-one would agree on what that was – the Temple functioned with no significant problems because it did Not take any specific form, thus was malleable enough to absorb many people who practiced different currents without conflict and support many without conflict.

When Leo came in and was accused of using Magian currents problems immediately arose as to what constitutes a Magian – and I felt this was a premature question since Mvimaedivm Blacks whole premise was to unearth the history of and identify precisely that. Thus, Sath jumped the gun to achieve her agenda and found out the hard way THEM is not a democracy. It is easy in almost any other form to decide clearly what something IS, something ISN'T, what is ACCEPTABLE, and what is therefore UNACCEPTABLE, what is RIGHT, WRONG… but not with THEM. The premise of THEM is not to set itself up as another Church that tells people what to do – but to encourage them to tell themselves with the best and most informed background we can unearth that gives them the greatest insight into what their choices mean, where they arise from, and what they ultimately do. So, research on the Magi and the Distortion must also continue.

Now the problem arises is that if we restrict people to performing and living only our current that we are effectively becoming a Church – telling people who to be, how to live, and thus committing the same sins we are trying to stamp out. What I therefore propose is that we create a system for THEM – and refuse to admit any openly Magian persons – but NOT insist that it be the only current a person use. A person should be free to explore every means [but because of the nature of having a form, THEM must preclude some things to define itself – it therefore precludes Magian usage] however, in precluding Magian usage we run the risk of becoming ignorant and blind to the Enemy's system, tactics, methods and magic. This is one of the fatal mistakes the ONA made.

So, while a rabid hatred of the Magian fuels fanaticism and intensity on a surface level – it does not educate the audience on any practical level. This preclusion goes against the natural esoteric growth of the LHP – and THIS is the fundamental problem with having a form because every form can only define itself by exclusion of other forms… thus limiting the total field from which the Adept can grow and understand… This is the common function of all groups – but if it continues with us, the cycle continues and nothing changes. When THEM dies, the audience merely moves onto the next group – rather than understanding that this is precisely what they have been doing and will do again… I know it seems like a wonderful idea to have an army of same-minded matching individuals bearing our name and banners right around the world – but the reality is it's never going to happen unless we employ the SAME restrictive religious indoctrination as the enemy does – and if we do, how are we any different?

Liber ISS and the alchemical texts are a good start – as is all the research in Mvimaedivm Black, as is the sorcery presently used by the Temple relating to reading Synchronicity in the events of the world as signs of Wyrd, developing Empathy through the grades of Tarot, EA and so on, Developing Sinister Solidarity. You have already seen the speed with which Sath, Anca and Noc abandoned the current we thought they were sworn to in terms of leaving the Temple – but that was merely a matter of changing Proximity – it does not mean they are not still in Sinister Solidarity with Sinister forces and energies or THEM in their own way. And without any need for the Temple. And being without a need for the Temple IS ultimately, the aim I intend and I see as requisite for creating the Undividual.

Because of the nature of Form it is easy to forget the real nature of what these forces do when adopted and channelled – it is easy to garner the idea that we will all be together in one place as an Illuminati, happily joined in brotherhood until the end on good terms with one another and somehow able to all have our Wyrds synchronously joined together. The reality is that by adopting these highly sinister and destructive and fiercely unique unfolding flowering individual Wyrd our destinies will sharply veer off from one another and proximity, empathy, solidarity and any kind of restriction or form – be torn apart without mercy or gratitude.

These, are DARK GODS and dark forces that will shred such human fancies in a heartbeat as we have seen first-hand with the loss of 3 maybe 4 members due to trying to impose certain rules and restrictions on the Sinister. There is the world of words and what is said from human understanding and wishful thinking and self-made illusion – then there is the underlying nature of these forces which operate independently of our ability to constrain or channel them neatly or nicely. And THAT is the true Temple of THEM – not people joined in human ideals of proximity and brotherhood – but fiercely independent knights of the Sinister who enter the Temple, unlock their Wyrd, and fuck off back out into the world as a force to be reckoned with. No form should or could ever hold the Sinister – and that is why I have set up and maintained the Temple as it has always been – amorphous, largely unstructured, and nothing like a Church. +O+

+O+ Project-wise the Tarot is a multi-tool for teaching, sending a message, fighting the Kabbalah, enhancing reputation and power, hypnotising, financing and other such things by its creation. Project-wise Mvimaedivm Black must again be taken up and our studies continued to find the source of Seven, of THEM, of the Magi, of Mans conceptual beginnings and so on. Project-wise we must continue to speak and teach others how to break forms – but once they do – we must be prepared to let them go.

We cannot hold the Sinister and woe betide anyone who dreams they can. We can only enhance it, unlock potential, smash forms and free people from chains – but once unchained – there is nothing more for us to do – and that is where most go wrong – in trying to teach and then control their students, or should that be, Own their students. We are conduits that change a specific matrix, we smash forms, belief in forms, and instil an understanding of what they are, how to use them to advantage, how they have been used against us – yet if you see more we can do or should view ourselves as being – by all means I welcome you to share the weight on your mind.

You are a brilliant man and mind and together we can take this Temple far but there are restrictions in dealing with Sinister forces lest we become what we hate. I hope to have illustrated at least some of them and the reasons why the Temple is the way it is. +O+

+O+ Growth-wise we cannot expect to attain huge numbers under a roof – because being one of THEM is antithetical to being controlled or governed by forms… we would be a paradox if not for the understanding I have of our limited role in the alchemical change we attempt to induce and the cut-off point where it is no longer our jurisdiction. What must also be understood is that this Temple, unlike almost any other, directly confronts the ego by using methods the ego does not understand or appreciate. We cannot expect our Work to make people happy or for them to thank us for what we do – it is a necessary evil that our alchemical transformations operate on many levels which benefits may never be realised or noticed by those who come to us.

Breaking the ego, speaking directly or without sugar-coating, these make enemies – but they may Also make people think if the spear is sharp and accurate. ONA did NOT appreciate me showing them the error of promoting Chaos and Anarchy by being Chaotic and Anarchic with their own current and against them – thus in my eyes, they do not understand these forces they preach – and that is a most disappointing, highly arrogant insight, but anyone that searches their feelings knows it to be true. The ONA preached destruction of this and that, but woe betide you try and destroy them – and when I did try this and ONA reacted the way it did, this showed to me the innate fragility of form at its essential core and the hypocrisy innate to all such Mythos preached by LHP, anti-cosmic and blah blah blah groups…

The FORCE they spoke about would happily devour the carrier, the messenger, and they feared it – they tried to show they didn't – but they did – and eventually their actions came to speak volumes about precisely that. People all too often never think about what they are saying or writing. In five years, I see the Temple as a household legend with many people holding our books, reading what we have to say, using our tarot, our ideas, breaking forms, and asking NEW questions that make the Magi and its system really uncomfortable. I may not be able to see those questions because of the Time I am in and my mindset squarely poised and frozen in this time to do what I do, think what I think and let what is in my head unravel as it will – but others can and may springboard from THEM some day in the future, take our writings further, expand and rework, rephrase, restore and remember things We forgot…

When that happens, we will the satisfaction of knowing we have put in place the foundation for that new form to arise, the next stage, the next generation, just as THEM partly arose from the ONA and all powered by what we said but inspired to take it so much further – further than we could – just as THEM have taken a lot of what ONA said, further, in fact so far it became destructive and disturbing to the ONA. That is genuine growth – the Temple will close in 24 years and I will cease to add my energies to it. If others have built their own forms, temples, shrines, ideas to manifest it – so be it – but my role will be done and I will leave and leave it to others, it is my job merely to germinate some powerful seeds that will grow into plants that choke the life out of the Magi. I hope to see the Harvest but it is unlikely – Aeonic magic takes a long time to take place and I am only 33, what do I know of long amounts of time? Lol. +O+

+O+ Presence-wise I don't ever see myself as revealing who is behind my phantom Ryan – there is no need. I don't desire fame; I don't desire recognition. Or rather that should be, my ego desires fame, my ego desires recognition – but my Self and my magical egregore understands that this Work, this Great Work, is not about me – it is about using Ryan as an anchor, a gravitational pull, to cause the form to germinate – and that is all. Presence-wise for the Temple – I see us as being more influential than the ONA in ten years' time with thousands of people or more quoting us or referring to our work. Even if in criticism – for that is how some people strive to do better.

I see us as sitting on the shelves of thousands of bookshelves being read by children and their children's children and a sudden tear in the illusion tearing its way across their mind as they read and question and Question the Question… Whether in company or alone, the Temple will continue until it has reached its 30-year duration – it is my Wyrd to ensure its survival. What happens after that point – who knows – who can dream – who can predict. But I vowed to make my mark on this earth and on the Magi's control – and I will – and it need never be known who was behind it all – it matters only that it happens and unfolds, spilling the Dark Ones into the world in shapes and ferocity the Magi never dreamed… to make Everyone Remember. +O+

DIRECTIVES OF THE TEMPLE OF THEM

Directive A-66
Why don't we Kill?

Directive A-65
Incidentalism [Redacted].

Directive A-53
Crush the enemies of THEM underfoot using every power at your disposal.

Directive A-52
Remember and Embrace the Force of Anonymity. In the shadows you are without form – to reveal it is as to reveal your true name and give others power over you, to limit your shapelessness. Our work does not require a human face.

Directive A-51
Carefully choose your allies and your enemies in life. Life is long enough for enemies and friends to change places repeatedly.

Directive A-50
The Undividual is Sovereign above and beyond all Forms.

Directive A-49
Stoke a fire with enough fuel and it will burn indefinitely. Even, out of control.

Directive A-48
Remember the force of Ethos. Learn your countries ancient folktales, myths, legends, gods.

Directive A-47
Remember the force of Obscurity. It does not matter who speaks the sinister voice, only that it is spoken.

Directive A-46
Remember the force of Chronobet. Words, numbers, communications are laden with designs to enshrine a very specific spatial-temporality or time-space perception. Change clocks, remove batteries, sabotage computer dates, fudge figures, delay others, study the history and changing principles of Time by humanity and seek to disrupt it however you can.

Directive A-45
Remember the force of Progress. Every smooth transition from one social event to the next, every flawless transaction of industry and economics, every unfailing schedule on time, every box ticked, ‘i’ dotted, is oiling the Machine. Kill the Machine.

Directive A-44
Remember the force of Aeonics. Simple things line the paths of Kings. Every generation is forced to endure its own inexorable steps toward the Closing of the Gates with tiny outrages forcing Us [Those who hear the voice of THEM] closer to the edge of oblivion. The generation after you will treat those steps as the normal way of things, they will forget the cruel longevity and patience of the enemy who can plan in detail generations in advance. Learn to do the same.

Directive A-43
Remember the force of the Mind and who owns yours. There was a war in past aeons. We lost it. We are fighting a new war. We must remember what we lost in the last one – if we are to survive this one.

Directive A-42
Remember the force of Sorcery. Magic is not dead, merely wounded. The world around us is a neutrality splitting at the seams with weapons that pulse with violent rage, to be used either by or against whoever is first and last to use them. Identify and draw from those violent pulsing places and spaces that emanate with it.

Directive A-41
Memory. Remember, all that our enemies have done and remind them, remind others. Never let it be forgotten. Remember our power, what we can do, what we have lost. Remember it all.

Directive A-40
Remember the force of Absurdity. It is the true face of things when the skin is ripped off. Life can be long enough for friends and enemies to trade places repeatedly. Do not take anything too seriously. When the Wheel spins fast enough and the fragile sticks propping up forms collapse: It is all revealed as Madness.

Directive A-39
Remember the force of Mortality. Do not take life for granted. Move swiftly and with determination toward your goals. Stalk Death and watch for it wherever you go. It will be stalking you too.

Directive A-38
Remember the pivotal importance of the Human Brain. Keep informed of findings, discoveries, neuroscience, correlations and experiments, cybernetics, bio-feedback and changes in collective knowledge and advancements.

Directive A-37
The Machine is not the System. The Machine is the vast inequality between what THEM know about Form and They know about Form.

Directive A-36
Remember and embrace the force of Evolution and the notion that we can evolve beyond what we are by seeding Change in what we are. It is a matter of available choices.

Directive A-35
Remember and disrupt the notions of Time and Space, wherever you can. At present it is under the Magi’s command.

Directive A-34
Remember and embrace the omnipotence of Natural Forces for they are THEM. Learn all you can about Fire, Earth, Wind and Water from the Ancients to the Moderns: From Alchemy to edge-tech Meteorology: From scientific principles and dynamics to Engineering and State infrastructural procedures for dealing with disaster.

Directive A-33
Remember and embrace the force of Satan as One of THEM. And a fragment of forces much larger.

Directive A-32
Remember and embrace the force of Chaos. Very little is required to cause it. Be creative.

Directive A-31
Remember and resist the force of Insynsian: the feigned death of God and his transference into newer apexes no less zealous and monotheistic. Resist Singularity.
Directive A-30
Remember and embrace THEM: in all their guises and masks. All Gods are better than One God.

Directive A-29
Remember and embrace the Being of More Than You Appear. MEHR SEIN ALS SCHEIN. One of THEM should be able to sidle up to its prey without the prey any the wiser. Learn ALL shapes that you may use them to achieve anything.

Directive A-28
Remember and embrace the force of Form. Those wicked shapes that seize us and allow us to seize others. Study them and develop your ability with them. All forms have both obvious and ingenious uses. Forms are the key to shaping the coming Aeon.

Directive A-27
Remember and embrace the force of the Undividual. It is not enough to individuate, entire tracts of traditional inheritance from the Magi must be identified, confronted and erased. Set a new example of what a human can do and be for others to follow.

Directive A-26
Never let anyone see the true face of the monster inside you.

Directive A-25
Remember and embrace the force of Solidarity. The Sinisterion are the emergent voices of a new design, scattered through time and space. Our Vyrds may cross when the stars are right and the voice of THEM speaks. We can stand alone, but we can also stand alone together: In Supra Solidarity.

Directive A-24
Remember and embrace the force of Synchronicity. When you are on the right Vyrd you will see signs and connections. Bridges will present themselves and spaces split to allow doorways to open. When you are crossing your Vyrd you will be thwarted by chance. Misfortune will trail you like a savage dog. Opportunities will become mirages. You can only be who you are. Don't fight it.

Directive A-23
THERE WAS A WAR: A WAR WE LOST IF WE ARE TO SURVIVE: WE MUST REMEMBER.

Directive A-22
Remember and embrace the force of Entropy. All Things have their own life cycles and destinies. Including you. Expect nothing to last and everything to eventually leave you.

Directive A-21
Remember and embrace the force of Self-Honesty. There can be no ultimate loyalty to any form. Only temporary tolerance and alliance. All things pass.

Directive A-20
Human's have a thousand masks. Learn to imitate as many as you can.

Directive A-19
Do not judge by appearance. Nothing is known by appearance except appearance.

Directive A-18
If you have morals, keep them to yourself.

Directive A-17
THEM is a No Hand Path. Believe, in whatever suits, when it suits.

Directive A-16
Insert Corporate Icons & Spread them.

Directive A-15
A Triangle Squared. A Triplicate Process. Of Thesis, Antithesis, and Finally, Synthesis. Combining the Division of Two Forms Into a New Understanding Complimented By Another. The cycles of growth are not always pleasant and involve caustic, toxic and deathly shades of ingredient. These elements, pungent to order, form, and the human sphere must be considered as integral in the formation of specific archetypal recipes. Some forms must be allowed to gestate in order to cause a future reaction.

Directive A-14
No Human Being Knows the Way to the Silent Desert Better Than You. Accept Guidance But Question the Guidance. Be Strong and Make Your Own Way Forward With The Patience of an Aeon.

Directive A-13
Absolutes are Egoistic. All is Temporary. All Shapes Shift. Use Them While They Exist but Do Not Rely on Permanence. All Life Moves On So Flow With Its Current.

Directive A-12
Sinister Matrix. New Species. Physis and Intellect. Mvimaedivm Requires Balance of Discipline, Abandon, Body and Mind. Failure is Certain If Not 361 Degrees of Approach.

Directive A-11
You can Become a God. Don't Fall Prey to Others and their Waste of The Joy Life Can Bring. Treasure Your Body, It's Your Vehicle to Power. Nurture Your Reason, It's the Means to Ecstasy.

Directive A-10
Stalk Death by Day. All Things Die. Be Aware of Its Hand. Learn Its Face. Carpe Diem. Tempus Fugit. Understand Your Time on Earth is Limited.

Directive A-9
Upon the Death or Imprisonment of any member of THEM a Church is to be burned to the ground.

Directive A-8
Sometimes the Bad Example is the Best Example.

Directive A-7
Sometimes I win. Sometimes I let Others win.

Directive A-6
The Greatest Trick the Devil Ever Pulled Was Convincing the World He Didn't Exist. MEHR SEIN ALS SCHEIN.

Directive A-5
Not Everything Here is Wonderful. Not Everything Wonderful is Here.

Directive A-4
There once was a Temple named THEM, As prophesied by the visionary KHEM. They Remembered Dark Gods, And against all the Odds, Delivered the World from Men.

Directive A-3
TERATO – HARUSPEX – ENGRAM – MALEFICIA Look deep inside the entrails of the Monster – Remember – and Become One of THEM.

Directive A-2
Australia, does not have a significant sinister history. Being little more than 200 years old it has yet to bring forth a significant Satanic contribution to the world. THEM aim to change that.

Directive A-1
Unfortunately, or rather as a result of, diffused consciousness that interferes with one's causal ability to maintain a solid form to others; being known as a shape-shifter of some skill and of course, revealing the disarming secrets of one's trade, carries with it the burden of implicit suspicious mistrust. Members have reported side-effects of our 'Grand Science' with members of their inner Sinisterion due to able demonstrations of chameleonization openly – thus revealing how adept they are at controlling what people see and witness of them. This has lead to issues of instability, esp in magical relationships, where one may say the illusions of the causal are experienced withdrawn and the frightening (from their point of view) essence beyond projection revealed. Thus, in Hel "Michelle" no longer sees "Evan", but a sinister grinning trickster, a dark, mysterious and cunning master of illusion who sends her projections back to her. This has the effect of causing people to be perpetually unsure whether a shifter is sincere or merely playing another role: An unavoidable Sinister Aspect of THEM's Work.

GRAND BLACK MAGICK AND AN INTERNATIONAL SATANIC ARMY

"THEM and in particular my own bearing takes from classical Satan(-ism) the traits of Ruthlessness, Vision and Dissent."

The Temple of THEM arose from a natural cataclysm of forces as a conduit to enable some forms to arise and prevent others from arising. THEM's current acts to prevent the proliferation of a multitude of forms including:

- The sexist divide between men and women enshrined into our societal framework.
- The fervent belief in monotheism or one god (Insynsian) in any way shape or form to the exclusion of other forms.
- The habit of apexing a form and making of it a god without pluralistic balance.
- The culture of ego-worship and/or belief in/slavish adherence to a guru or any one system to provide all ones needs.
- The continuation of certain inherited traits society rewards, to our detriment as autonomous beings.
- The compression of complex data into over-simplistic but easily manageable systems for convenience not authentic insight.
- The ignorance or discrepancy of forms and forces and the over-arching advantage of those who use forms to enslave or otherwise control human beings.
- The belief that the Ego can or must be destroyed.
- The belief that destroying the Ego results in the Self or some other esoteric/spiritual advancement.
- The rise of future groups that claim sovereignty over any form whatsoever (Insynsia).
- The archetype of the Alpha-male.
- The belief that for something to be right, its opposite has to be wrong. The Temple of THEM was founded in 2006 and describes itself as Relativist, Magical Socialist or Quantum Philosophic. It is an experimental project of invisible currents made visible via a selection and exhibition of certain forms and has a set life-cycle of 30 years (2006-2036).

This 30-year phase is broken into 3 distinct phases of approximately ten years duration each.
- (1) Crystallisation: The first phase has been met earlier than anticipated and that was to build a platform to overcome the growing monotheism of the Sinister. With reputation and power, we can and have allowed others to speak through us. Our legacy must be set before moving onward from this phase (that is, passing on our techniques and methods in formats such as a Manifesto, enduring Imagery and Icons, and a current with its own tendrils irrespective of the original sowers, that will outlive the present members causal lives) - for (2) and (3) can happen without a helmsmen but (1) Crystallisation requires the unique vision and guidance of its founders.

- (2) Harbinger: The second phase of the Temple is to give Australia a sinister history and foster across it a new National Satanic identity. This aim is being achieved through present tendrils and inert stations online spreading the influence of THEM and off-line via the A.S.O.V and other groups working with or alongside us by training people to run specific types of organisation and earth their own - imparting the techniques and Individualosophy and code of In Supra Solidarity unique to THEM.

- (3) Invitrofertilization: The third phase, is a combination of the first two, plus awaiting/encouraging the rise of the synthesis (A co-joinment of reigning opposing forms that bypasses their inherent contradiction*) and Synthesizers who will combine the Thesis and Antithesis in a new way, continuing our work. When this stage begins to presence itself we will prepare the final step away with grace from what will likely bear no resemblance to our original Temple but an evolution. For we believe the success of any Esoteric School or Current is to teach others how to surpass the Teacher/Master - AND for the Teacher/Master to understand this surpassing as part of the life of form. Thus does the Ego understand its temporal role in the Great Life of the Temple of THEM. * The Mastery of Paradox.

On Jan 1st 2036, the founders of THEM will withdraw their energy and efforts to shape, direct or otherwise control the Temple - irrespective of what form it has taken or what precipice/potential it occupies - and step away to let be what will be. This will not dismantle nor destroy the Temple of THEM which will have its own life (if it survives) in the forms of new tendrils and shapes with their own goals and aims. Nor will it signify a severance of the Temple's legacy which goes far beyond our brief presence however intense in its temporal time. It simply means, anticipating the necessary amount of time and energy to reasonably achieve certain aims a sustained presence is required to watch over, mould and direct the Temple from its founder’s personage.

Like a wild animal tended to health and released into the wild to fend for itself. We are but one of Natures expressions toward evolution and therefore will be swept away should we fail to successfully express Natures desire, and also too, if we succeed and Nature requires an evolution of our obsolete variant. This built-in resignation of the founders derives from our understanding of Forms, Aeonics and what is required to successfully achieve our aims, given the forces we can expect to encounter.

WITHIN THE TEMPLE: GETTING STARTED

WITHIN THE TEMPLE: GETTING STARTED An Esoteric Riddle & Hypothesis for anyone interested in the Temple of THEM. THE JUNGLE BOX Imagine the following scenario: You are an explorer. You are wading through a thick jungle and happen upon a stone dwelling built by some unknown culture. The stone dwelling is square, approx 18ft high and wide but has no accessible windows, no discernible doors or entry points. How do you get in? When this riddle was posed in one of our forums dozens of people offered suggestions. They came across a structure built by an unknown culture that was difficult to gain access to, but did they stand there and do nothing? No, their natural inclination was to do SOMETHING.

Variously they dug a hole, broke a window, climbed it with gear, made a hole in the roof and tried to access the dwelling. Let me rephrase the Riddle so the analogy reflects what each element represents. You are an explorer. You are wading through a sea of ideas as you go through this life and come across one that is difficult to penetrate. It is comprised of the weird and Wyrd ideas and insights of the Temple of THEM. You can't see a door. Or a window. Or just don't recognise the doors and windows for what they are. You have no map. But the same attitude in trying to enter the stone dwelling is the same approach that should be employed with the Temple of THEM.

So, what tools do you have at your disposal? Look for our name on a search engine. When it comes up, click on a link and read. Take note of unusually spelled words or phrases such as Mvimaedivm, Undividual, Insynsian, Radia Sol, Oto Anorha, "Terato Haruspex Engram Maleficia" or 'Australian Satanism' and enter these into a search engine too. Our words have unusual spellings for two reasons: (1) They describe certain concepts in terminology specific to THEM that attempt to not have unwanted existing associations attached to alternate existing phrases / concepts that might be used and (2) They make finding our work among the millions of possible Satanic/Sinister/Alchemical/Metaphysical currents of the Occult, easy. Now you should have a reasonably large list of forums we have frequented and engaged in discussion in at considerable length, posting various articles and essays as we go, or answering questions by others about our current and its various aspects. It is easy to spot a THEM thread because it often dwarfs the visitation ratio of surrounding threads by thousands of views. In part perhaps due to the ongoing friction between the Temple and the O9A, in part perhaps because of our novel approach and innovative expansions within a large variety of fields, and perhaps in part because we represent an expression of nature’s desire for evolution and our work flows with and sometimes ahead of the changing occult milieu. Like everything else that is up to you to decide.

The next step is acquisition of what THEM write. The key books to locate are: CRUX (An Australian Themed and Modified version of Naos), Threshold (An anthology of 200 pages spanning many of our key texts and concepts), Oto Anorha (Our strategic magazine/e-zine which has charted our progress the last nine years and includes many relevant time-stamps and expansive articles on our current.) Abyssal (A hefty collection of anonymized correspondence between members of THEM and hundreds of other individuals and/or groups regarding the Sinister, Satanism, the History of THEM etc.) The Diaries of a Devil-worshipper (The personal journey of one of the Temple's founders in a raw and honest explanation told over the course of three books, each one dedicated to a specific archetype embodied roughly every seven years.) . 'Sinister Dialogues - An Archaeology of the Sinister' in which seven of them and two members of the satanic underground responded to a questionnaire designed to probe the apprehensions of THEM toward certain topics. 'Form 101' a short movie that details a basic introduction to several key aspects THEM hold of the concept of Form and its relationship with the Ego. Liber 13/13 A Liber dedicated to broaching key issues that concern the Temple's studies. 'The Sorcery of THEM'. A comprehensive treatise of the Sorcery of THEM by the other co-founder detailing the magical socialism of the Sorcerer, Warrior, Farmer and how this Triad relates to over-throwing Abrahamism. And last but not least, Liber Tentaculum, LT in particular is a handbook dedicated toward the practical methodology of the social dissenter or activist.

Following this: locate and read any of our other Libers which contain dozens and dozens of essays, rites and philosophic stances. (Consult Bathysphere for a comprehensive listing). Therein our other works over thousands of pages we have detailed at length practical ways to achieve various solutions and work within our current. We have created lists of activities you can undertake to spread the Wyrd of THEM, or magical rites you can employ to confront and integrate certain aspects of yourself. In addition our thousands of pages of texts cover virtually hundreds of topics, from Conspiracy to Genetically Modified Food, to the Sex Industry and Prostitution, to Nietzsche's erroneous claim that God is Dead, to Myth, Magic, Quantum Physics, Relativity, Gnosticism, the power of Language, Symbolism, our personal experiences with the Dark Gods of THEM and much much more through Fiction, Non-Fiction, Poetry, Plays, Translations, Novels, Media Presentations, Correspondence, Interviews, Forums, Images and Music.

We have explained what our magic is across a broad range of disciplines, and different members of THEM have shared their own manifestos of what our current means. We have offered examples of it for you to use, we have shared our aims and hundreds of ways for you to aid us in our work through activism, support, donation - in short there has been a deluge of content by which an understanding and personal affinity working with the Temple of THEM can be approached. But the Temple of THEM is not the kind of organisation that many will find easy. We expect a certain level of pro-active self-initiative from an individual to explore what we have shared on one’s own and to solve the majority of questions that arise by one’s own sustained effort.

In all honesty, we do not take kindly to questions like 'where can I find CRUX' or 'How do I use this forum' or 'Where should I start' not because we scorn curiosity but because to answer such questions for people over and over is antithetical to the type of sorcerer THEM has set out to encourage. If you envy our understanding and insight, it is because we fought very hard for it. It would be easy to tell someone where to find X, or patiently explain how to use a forum that differs from no other forum in any fundamental way but to their and our detriment. Tempus Fugit: 'Time is Fleeting' for all persons but especially the Sorcerer and it must be very carefully managed lest one be drowned amid the cries for help.

I cite here The Universal Formula (TUF) to knowledge: 1. Enter a forum/open a book 2. Read everything 3. Take time to digest 4. Combine practical experience with theory 5. Creatively synthesise the information into a practical methodology. As for ‘where should I start' - we refer to the jungle box - if you do not know where to start, then you need to overcome your inability to make use of the nearest branch of any given tree. It is not with hostility that we discourage such questions - though in some cases, when an answer is just literal centimetres, a button click or an internet search away from being answered such ineptness is seen as lazy and it can be enervating to answer such questions over and over on a regular basis for more than a decade - yet it is with Love that you will sometimes be met with silence.

Asking these questions of another instead of working out how to answer them oneself and especially before taking any considerable time to do so is draining to answer nor does it allow for the self-resourcefulness of the individual to emerge as expected. Some individuals simply do not have such resourcefulness and we do not see it as our duty to instil it. We encourage potential and reward hard work. Because those who are of THEM, who become One of THEM do not let such obstacles slow them down, learn from their mistakes and devise clever ways to get around anything in their way - it is this essential, innate and perhaps unteachable attitude and will to power that paradoxically means the majority of those we would term One of THEM, do not need our Temple at all.

By being a visible force, we more or less are offering a hand out of what we have described in Crux as a Labyrinth, and act as a beacon for those with the potential to be more than they are: an approach enshrined in one of the Temple's German mottoes: Mehr Sein Als Schein. (Google among other sites offer excellent translations.) The heart of our approach is Tough-love. If we tell you everything, teach you how to do everything, we teach you to rely on the ideas of another, to become dependant on external authorities - not your own ingenuity and development of nous to solve problems and devise creative solutions, including creating entirely innovative approaches or forms to do your bidding.

We have spent a great deal of our time and lives discerning this for ourselves but it holds true. Part of the Temple of THEM's self-description as Australian Satanism is embodied in its ruthlessness - we are not here to help nor save everyone. Satanism is also embodied in our Vision and Dissent. Some of our books can be found online as free PDF, or bought from outlets. However, the best way to obtain them is to get the attention of THEM (who are always watchful) by contributing to our current. It might just be spreading our manuscripts to others or other locations, translating our work into another language, sending us images/variations of your personal experience with the Thrasz, sharing our work from your website, mentioning us in passing in your music, art or written work, but helping us is a valid way to encourage us to help you and a good way to get noticed. I've lost track of how many stunned enthusiasts over the years have thanked me for dropping a hard to get set of manuscripts into their lap without asking for payment or any obligation merely because I felt they deserved it.

Our work requires that we fund ourselves through some sales, but for the most part THEM and its related Tendrils are an Esoteric School that teach others to surpass us by passing on relevant material freely and liberally to those seen working hard and sincerely. The Temple has a unique Solidarity - and an attitude that extends its power and reputation to all its members. What we have we share, and where we can, if we have the opportunity, we look after our members in any way that becomes available to us. The members of THEM all rise together. But being a member of THEM is not a necessary requisite for us to offer assistance; THEM often assist individuals who are not members of the Temple too. The reasons for why and the instances when are numerous, simply put we think some people deserve a hand and exist to offer it. So much then for accessing our Temple's knowledge.

The second step in getting involved is to undertake some practical tests of your own, try our rituals for yourself, wait until the skies darken with the portent of a downpour and attempt our Rain magick. Get yourself a notepad and some strong liquor or enrage yourself with symbols of things you hate or read material that makes your blood boil, isolate yourself for the evening and perform the Rite of Regurgitating Choronzon. Get hold of Threshold and see what we have to say about the power of the Chronobet, or 23 Syndrome, and research it for yourself. Host a Meet and try to get some individuals out into the real world together to perform a group ritual. What do you learn from it? Did what we say help or hinder? Could we have been more specific, were we too comprehensive? Did we miss things?

Answering such questions, and knowing which questions to address, comes from direct experience and the only way to get it - is to have it. So, spend some time researching and testing our material, opinions and insights THEN compare what we say with your experience and THEN make a judgement. So, you have a group of friends who cynically say they could do better, could easily organise a group and a complex ritual, could implement long-lasting changes to the psyche or even history of their country - well, call them on it. And if they won't then you know what their opinions are worth. Don't tolerate grand-standing, value achievement. We have done and are doing what we have set out to do. We have developed our system from experience at our rate on our terms. We have taken actual steps to get something going rather than just talk about it. We have an understanding of things borne from practical action and experiment - ask yourself, have you, have they?

Many people offer their opinion, for example, on drug use or smoking without any personal experience of either. This will not stand - test our opinions if you want to know what they are worth. If you can get something from them, great! If you find them lacking, then use them as examples of what not to do, build or develop your own system or methods - but standing by and telling others what they Should do and what You'd do are not the same as action. Such is the meaning of a Tradition: things change, including methods and people - and Forms must adapt or be adapted accordingly.

If after taking these two steps seriously - you then find that our current(s) are resonant with you then consider Self-Initiation and enter into a sympathy with THEM to honour the greater forces of this world that dwarf us: from the unwanted impulses of the subconscious to the uncontrollable juggernaut of events beyond our control, to the inevitable decline of the human body and any edifices it built in its lifetime, to the monstrous power of the tsunami or storm, gravity or time.

ON WHAT MAKES AN AMATEUR SORCERER

– Temple of THEM 2015 – WR

What makes a would-be Sorcerer, or Beginner, an amateur Sorcerer?

With 20 years + of occult and work experience it my opinion that it can be reduced to three things: (i) Lack of Confidence, (ii) Lack of Knowledge, (iii) Lack of Intent.

(i) A robust ego will aid in weathering the storms that erupt when creating something new but bring perils of its own. Lack of Confidence comes from fear of doing things wrong, from doing things badly, from doing things that are new, novel or with which there is a learning curve. Lack of confidence is anathema to a Sorcerer. It stops them in their tracks waiting for someone to come along and tell them how to move, what to do, when to do it and requires an external force to continually motivate that person. This is exhausting to perform for one person let alone hundreds or even thousands over the decades. Not everyone can, or should, be a Sorcerer. It is not an elite art, but it does require a certain attitude and bravery to plunge into the unknown without anyone holding your hand to achieve results. If your hand is held too long, there is no confidence developed, just the appearance of it. The very next thing out of someone's mouth who has been lead for too long – is invariably, "OK, what do I do next?" To be a Sorcerer, or even a successful organiser of an occult group, movement, either large or small requires you to take the reins, however scary, and learn, learn, learn. Don't fear your mistakes but endeavour not to repeat them and learn learn learn from them. An amateur lacks Confidence because they believe too much in authorities' power to tell them the right way to go about starting, beginning, doing basic steps instead of taking those steps for themselves. The fear of failure, of others' opinions, of pressure to get it right – if listened to, will amount the Sorcerer to nothing. If confidence is a problem, then so too will any sort of result in the occult be. Remember that all forms especially successful ones will receive torrents of scathing criticism as change is forced by the Sorcerers Will. You will require this confidence to face dragons within and without.

(ii) Trying something even if it's wrong is always better than showing up with nothing. Lack of Knowledge is often not from having insurmountable obstacles placed in one's way but (a) laziness and the inability to perform basic functions such as searching for documents or persons, and (b) a lack of ingenuity and inability to devise solutions to problems. There is little difference between being a Sorcerer and being employed or running a business. You get out what you put in. A lazy Sorcerer achieves minor goals. A hard-working Sorcerer can achieve much larger goals. But just because you do not have information on how to do something – doesn't mean you can't try it anyway. If the information is there, maybe not obvious, or maybe requiring you to do a little digging, and you come to an organisation and ask questions like where is this file – and the file is right in front of you – what impression does that send? It shows you (a) did not bother to search (b) were unable to perform an appropriate diligent search (c) that you have little perseverance and give up easily (This is a dead-end trait for a Sorcerer) (d) that even basic functions and requirements are beyond your ability (e) that your problem solving skills are minimal (f) that any organisation taking you on as a member would have to spend a lot of time trying to drag you to a standard you are simply not able to attain and thus waste a lot of time, resources trying.

(iii) Don't Suffer Fools. Lack of Intent. What does it indicate if a person is not confident enough to make mistakes or risk making mistakes in trying to figure things out for themselves, or improvise where they cannot? What does it indicate if a person cannot locate a file clearly marked in an easily accessible location? What does it indicate if an organisation is filled with such individuals because they prefer numbers over quality, self-assured, competent individuals with their own fire and who deserve the time and attention of an organisation over someone who wishes to be spoon-fed, have ultimate basics explained to them within minutes of making contact, or turns up to the interview with no understanding of the organisation, has done no research, cares only for incentives, and yet wishes to become a member of that organisation? The FIRE, the Burning Intent, the Power to smash through obstacles and equip oneself with the SWORDS one needs to wrought change comes from -Confidence: Or Fearlessness of 'Failing'.

-Knowledge: Wherein mastering the BASICS is infinitely more important than and a prelude to mastering Special Effects.
-Intent: Whereby Synchronicity chooses who is and is not and never will be a member of the Temple of THEM.

The Vital Mistakes that Indicate an Amateur are:

-Spouting advanced knowledge but fumbling the very basics.
-Not doing enough of their own research on a topic or person before asking questions of them.
-Asking questions that are very easily answered through a proper application of time and observation of available material.
-Aggravating those they wish to impress by running forward with claimed intent but indicating a clear lack of knowledge about the organisation or its operations.
-Not thinking harder, longer, deeper about the matters they wish to be involved in.
-Giving up when the going gets tough.
-Wasting their Energy unwisely by engaging in pointless exercises or discussions instead of focusing on the goal.

INSYNSIAN – THE SUBJECTIVITY OF OBJECTIVITY

November 27, 2013 by Krist Hollow

A Scientific or "Factual Basis" is ideal for the foundation of a Form. Such a foundation is a conventionally reliable measure by which others can solidify and share their understanding and relatedness to the world around them in an 'objective' and systematic fashion of certainty which is secured by an extant authority such as the scientific community. However, there are a number of reasons for not backing down, retracting a statement or changing a Form that has been put forth by the Temple either to suit or meet the criticism levelled at it by any particular individual who cares to attack the Form for its suppositions: The most obvious being that the Temple of THEM is an Occult Establishment and not a Scientific one.

The essays that are written are written by magicians with a high level of self-reliance, self-honesty and self-discovery. Such magicians are Sinister and more often than not alone in their journey; separated from the current or temporal manifestations occurring in the relative Time and Space of the Matrix by which others judge their efforts or compare the validity of their journey against. For example when it was accepted by Science that atoms were no longer the cornerstone of existence many attempted to place their theories related to existence inside the prevailing trends of quantum physics or theory of relativity in order that their theories were more readily accepted, that credibility be attained and so that the new idea didn't undermine previous facts stated by highly esteemed colleagues. This may be fine for Theoretical Science – But not for the Occult.

The Occult is not, and never will be, an acceptable, provable, fact-based system of analysis and practice. It is a private madness grounded in the rational, the irrational and the Abyss and is experienced in a unique manner by each magician.

No Originality ever came from following the expected protocols and trends of the masses or from taking the established 'facts' of science so seriously that they were held to be impregnable and remain unchallenged. Science may be a better way of researching the world by breaking it into manageable constituent chunks using mathematical/symbolic abstracts than the earlier practice of communing with God through a Church to understand the Mysteries – but it is no less immune to corruption, bureaucracy and the painful crawl of Time that it takes for an idea to be accepted [usually long after the "Idealer" has been ridiculed, disbarred, humiliated and/or sent to the stake] than the Church was.

If I may borrow some classic Scientific Terminology, the "fact" is, that owing to the complexity of life, Science and Religion deal with facets of it in a way no different to that of the isolated Sorcerer, i.e. by sorting out for oneself which aspects of life are important and thus apprehending the world in a specific manner that idolises some parts of it by building a world-view based upon those shining principles and shunning or ignoring the rest. What is written by our members illustrates part of a private path and personal breaking through. It is not expected to mean anything to an outsider. Indeed, many outsiders are so entrenched in the Matrix they're unable to be interesting enough to have their own path. They attach themselves to others' paths as sycophants or vampires to fawn over them, ridicule them, tear them down or to criticise and make fetid pronouncements and denouncements as a vulgar occult parasite or parrot with no understanding of their own and no originality: characterised by a lack of magical maturity and the need to destroy.

No Scientific or Religious or Psychological edict held to be true is necessarily true to Us. Perhaps in the Matrix it is true and evident but outside of that temporal box the only truth is our own sense of Validity as magicians moving through the world encountering obstacles, decisions, beliefs, tests, "truths" for ourselves, often without recourse to the convenient labels of the Matrix. Although sometimes we resort to meeting the Magian halfway by attempting to ride the waves of logic or reason in a manner that suits our critics or speak the language that is expected by our critics, it is only a temporary alight on their own terms. The subsequent mindset we arrive at based on our self-discovery is more highly esteemed as proof/fact/or truth than any of the writings, opinions [and even experiences] of others – for the wanderings of a magician cannot help but 'prove' that there is no objectivity, that there are no facts, that the written word differs greatly from esoteric experience, and that while many are crucified by their own Forms, there exists an ever-present quality of Chaos that supersedes what is known and practiced in magic by those still trapped in the Matrix of Form: which is generally only the noisy exhalations of the ego.

It has been said before that there is communication below the Abyss and communication above the Abyss and never the twain shall meet. We have spoken of the Black Clay [Qv. In Sinister Solidarity] and the art of stripping away the fixation on names, labels and ideas that are mere projections upon the texture of the world around us to reveal the essence – but we have not yet spoken of the mass Ethos of humanity's failure to deal with the Death of God.

The actions of many exhibit the meme/ethos of failure to deal with the Death of the monotheistic Arch-Emperor whose Priests interpreted the world for the masses and provided a kit-set belief system that made it easy for humanity to be lazy in their decision making and lax in their own independent magical journey. The power of Christianity consisted of a fervent Faith in a singular, all-powerful Entity: A One. One: meant that there was an unmistakable difference in following the One Way of God and in straying from it. Either you did it 100% right or 100% wrong. It was a way that had no loopholes, no deviations from the established route, no alternate route or short-cuts and no thinking for oneself lest one think oneself higher than the Will of the Almighty Creator.

Moreover, one began with the disadvantage of Original Sin. In short, the way of God meant Humility. Humility before the gold-gilded altars laden with ecclesiastical paraphernalia heavily encrusted with gems and precious metals, held by Priests dressed in the finest silk vestments, housed in mighty ornate edifices of mahogany, teak, marble and stone [incensed with the finest imported spices] that modern architecture stands irrevocably in the shadow of. These tremendous idols to the Glory of God are a testament to the power of a Form that is Singular in nature.

To strive toward One Point, One Goal, One God: is to lay all efforts and aspirations, all riches bodily and monetary, all prayers, all hopes and fears, all questions and answers, in a perfectly straight road toward one immutable Apex. When this Apex began to crumble when Science began to erode the Perfect Word with its heresies and discoveries: God did not die as Nietzsche believed. God and the idea of a single perfect form had been ingrained into a large majority of the world's influential peoples – and remembering that the global population was significantly smaller in Ancient Times – the fanatical trend of the Singular spread far and wide for thousands of years killing and persecuting those who would not accept it. To live: many did.

THEM believe that the belief in a Singular Way survived over pantheistic religions because of: a) the brutality with which the Singular Way was promulgated, b) there was less uncertainty about things with the Alpha to the Omega covered and a far greater concealment of the haunting memory of the Original Chaos with everything from Life to Afterlife taken out of people's hands and conveniently dealt with by external authorities. And c) Pantheistic Religions had no real impetus to attempt to annihilate other Religions in a holocaust of thought, whilst the drive behind a monotheistic deity was to aggressively pursue all who would not see or hear the Singular Truth.

But I digress. God did not die. He was, and still is, simply transferred. He, God, is nothing more than the recent belief by humanity in one perfect way; and the search, the certainty, the arrogance which encompasses the worldview of each and every individual still unconsciously pining for God in his old form continues unabated today with the individual projecting the notion of God onto/into other facets of the Matrix. Individuals put their faith in Science, in the Wisdom of others, in the idea of "Progress", "Truth", or "Facts", "Democracy", "Peace" or "the Future" and strive to arrange the world just so in a unique and individual schemata that is collectively united by humanities mass desire for a replica of the singular perfection of the God that was.

Because of this reasoning that humanity is unconsciously mourning the loss of the reign of God as a totalitarian dictator that told them exactly what to do, when to do it and why and is trying to replace that Apex by projecting that same singular will [and it is irrelevant whether the new form is so-called "adversarial" or "rebellious" against God / this means nothing.] onto things – the criticisms/'corrections' levelled at any Form displayed by THEM are treated in this greater context as the trivial concerns by another human being to arrange the world according to their unconscious ethos of the Singular psychosis.

Even if those concerns are Valid in terms of being Scientifically/Psychologically "correct" – few magicians have the insight and the wisdom to understand that what is being dealt with is not the little details that are entirely dependent on the artificiality of the Matrix but the greater and encompassing currents that drive humanity to do what it does, when it does, and why. It is the Intent behind the 'Pentagram' that is of import, not the temporal form of the 'Pentagram' itself. It was by no mistake that We chose to take the form of a Satanic Temple and manifest the Form of Satan whose word is CHAOS.

Manipulating these greater currents does not happen overnight with the publication of a few manuscripts. Considering the length of time for previous attempts by the Sinister Tradition to manipulate esoteric currents and our awareness of the excruciating slowness of the growth of genuine black magical insight – it requires at least thirty years and the prime plateau of many powerful combined wills fulfilling their Wyrd to employ significant changes. Hence there is a division between what is important to our esoteric order and what is important to our exoteric order. Our esoteric order cares nothing for approval of our essays by the majority and anticipates with good humour the temporary nature of criticism of the contents to issue forth as some individual seizes upon the Forms and finds 'fault' with them.

We naturally expect others to attempt to assert their personal will, their way, their truth, over our exoteric structures. It is not a contest of ego for us: we have no doubt that any quibbles over the location/definition in the Matrix of names, labels and forms singled out by a magician to use as 'separated' examples of 'thing' from the insoluble Black Clay that are laid down in a formulaic hypothesis with the tools of the Matrix so a few can approach an understanding [if those forms last the distance] would continue to cause bickering long after each of the founding members of this Temple are dead. We don't care about the opinions of others on our work or rely on praise or acceptance or understanding in our private practices from the majority or even from each other. Understanding Form is the art of understanding layers.

All attempts by us to share our current are minimal efforts made to make our Form intelligible within the Matrix via our "Temple". We are Arrogant and Self-Possessed. Our essays represent a snapshot of each magician's wanderings, not from books or hearsay of experience but from harsh and prolonged relatedness to the world.
The Temple of THEM have Original Ideas that are founded by combining the ideas of others from working knowledge and practice of these ideas, I.e., Synchronicity, the Acausal Voice, Remote Solidarity, the Mind War, our Ritual Magic etc. Few Magical Systems can claim to be Original with a straight face; even less their followers and it is vastly harder to build something than it is to tear it down. Anyone can tear something down: after all a Form's greatest weakness is that it is a Form. We smile wryly at the attempts of others to scratch our surface: because those who attempt do it: think it's their right.

It's been hinted at by many groups with metaphors and inferences made: let THEM say it clearly without mystification: Our War, Our Form, Our Temple to the Dark Gods is not built with the precious fragile building blocks inspired by the Matrix and the ideas that bind the world to the magic of the Magian: but the Sinister Solidarity of real black magicians tempered in the Abyss and united in a singular supra-personal goal to presence THEM. We are the Opening Night that will set the stage for an Opera of Horror and Madness.

Many get pierced by the tip of THEM: by an initial contact with our grimoires and remain fixated with that layer of surface tension: weighing up our notions and comparing them with the known, the accepted, the acceptable – challenging the words, the ideas, the paperwork; only able to concern themselves with the personal spheres of semantics and righteousness. Few go beyond this level: those that do are the serious and the dangerous: either our Enemies or our Allies.

Once a Form has been arranged in the Matrix it takes on a set of attributes balanced between two extremes and a sliding scale of indefinite degrees. Eroding the foundation on which any Form stands is as simple as recognising the geometry of the Form and analysing the structure it is built upon; viz. identifying the key stones that must first be supposed valid for the Form to be slotted neatly into the Matrix with its brethren. Science depends upon observable repeatable facts, for instance, yet for all the weight behind science it remains theoretical: it cannot be said that Science knows or has proved what existence is, for it too is a search for a Singular Perfection that can't find the kernel at the core of its foundation. Moreover, for me and for many others: particular Scientific assertions remain unconvincing. Science's major downfall, like Religion before it, is in its Singular-orientated drive to be Objective. Philosophy grounds itself in being Subjective, but nevertheless suffers from the same weakness of being a Form: Philosophy is mere speculation that is there to be believed or not believed as one sees fit. If we combine aspects of the two: although it is Scientifically true enough that if one steps out in front of a fast-moving car one will get badly damaged: why: how: and what: are dependent on Philosophical suppositions held self-evident. Self-evidence is a great thing; a Philosophers Stone; right up until one enters the Abyss.

When one cannot even hold oneself evident then all other suppositions lose their grounding and begin to float unsecured and unorganised in chaos that can only be understood if it is organised: but the nature of the chaos before it is organised remains a mystery because so many fear it. We have no doubt that there are holes and problems in our suppositions: that is the nature of Form; and it is the nature of humanity to see those weaknesses and pounce on them.

But what of it? The World and its Matrix will Change, and we will be out of date, of out touch, living in the past as 'dinosaurs' sooner or later. That we are exploring it with the knowledge that it Changes makes a big difference to what is sought after compared with those who explore the world thinking it can be made static. Our essays are not the point: they are 'a' point. They are exoteric scriptures that represent the sum total of a magicians understanding in a particular frame of reference at that particular time, no less and no more absurd than the rambling scriptures of any other human being. The necessity of humans to bicker and tear each other down owes much to the Magian Influence and the level of rudimentary teaching available to school a person on Form and its role in black magic.

What we see as important is the demonstration of many essays with original ideas making the key notions of Magian Magic: I.e., "Form", apparent and transparent and thus Changing the perspective of some by giving an insightful context to the now long stale [and largely mediocre] art of magic whilst sharing the joke of the egos of its practitioners.

Ultimately, THEM will be replaced or crumble as a result of its own [yet unforeseen] particular Form. Nothing is immune to Entropy: and we hope that at the very least we raise the bar exceptionally high for others to follow in the Sinister Tradition when our time is past and our mission fulfilled. But unless there comes an individual with a Creative plan to rival or succeed ours none will stand in our way until our plan is implemented. This is OUR Time, our Current, our Combined Will.

One hundred years from now the Matrix, its inhabitants, its forms and its currents will probably look vastly different than they do now: fashions will change, ideas will change, notions will be proven wrong and amended, space travel may revolutionise transport and trade and our manuscripts will be long, long forgotten. What difference does it make then – if someone disagrees with what we say now, if a minor point of contention from another individual seeking to realise his singular will arises – need we defend it? Need we argue the validity of our Form? We do not because we know we need not. The world is enthralled to its desire to re-sculpt the perfection the hole an all-powerful singular God left behind. This ethos will remain intact for a very long time and Changing it will be an extremely slow task. So, it is not the little things that THEM are concerned with: but with the art of Change itself.

While most spend their time arguing over petty semantics, we the Syndicate THEM see the nature and the vagaries of Form. We saw how Communism rose in Russia, National Socialism in Germany and we will see Mvimaedivm rise in Australia. Over the next twenty-eight years THEM will lay the seeds of a New Aeon within Australia both in our example and our heresies. We may or may not be around for the harvest. In light of this: the few days during which an 'argument' takes place regarding some trivial aspect or another of our manuscripts is a nothing to us: it is dealt with by our dismissive regard for things below the Abyss or things in the Matrix: as a concern only in a personal way where a particular answer or reply to criticism is designed to impede or aid a specific strategy at a particular moment in Time.

A Form may be weakened/altered to appease its critics and silence them to entice their support or favour or the Form may be strengthened to discredit or drop out of the argument altogether; but even if some interest is taken in its survival, only a few people realise how incredibly manipulative Form can be. For example: it is important, even when it is 'wrong ', that a Form be made as solid as possible to elicit a dense and strong reaction to give rise to an equally solid counter-form. I.e., ONA gave rise to THEM via a basic Aeonic principle. But, whatever. We don't expect our methods to be understood. We do expect, over time, that Australian Satanists will come to implement a greater maturity in their Satanic Practice, be at the forefront of a Satanic "Renaissance" and cease to indulge in the farce the Magian is attempting to pull.

In Summary: No Form has a perfect validity. All Forms are a species of Temporary Paradigm to be utilised by the Adept. This is one of the fundamental principles of the Temple of THEM and its coven of Shape-Shifters.

INSYNSIAN, MENTAL FALLIBILITY AND AEONICS

+O+ Yes exactly. The rabbit hole is deep. And circular. You can go down down down for eternity, but you'll only come back around on yourself. But way down under the coal of the usual structures, the gems are far more valuable. You may never get beyond the darkness, but you can return to the surface of things with diamonds that cut through anything…

Any view, whatsoever is fallible to discreditation if you use the right weapons to undermine the struts that support its literal suppositions. In other words, you can kick the legs out from the validity of any concept – or you can strengthen them. As has been illustrated elsewhere it is possible for one person to give someone else up to 20 different replies to a question – all equally valid, whether negative, positive or neutral, favouring various aspects and weakening others;- see [Paradox of Opinion]. The individual who resorts to using morality and division in this critical engagement we call a War is calling on the power of Insynsian – of 'authenticity, purity, authority' of an apex of power toward one ultimate way, one ultimate view, and a return to the mire of good and evil – same tautology with different terminology.

If the individual views are all valid – they are all equally invalid – Logic no longer dictates what is Right, and dislodging the Ego is the cause of this multiplicity of valid views to occur the epitome of being able to stand in many others shoes all at once – to view an event, person or situation from multiple angles simultaneously. When this happens – the individual view loses its grip, the rose-tinted glasses shatter – there can no longer be a driving will of the ego to fulfil its stasis, to ensure the world is as it wants it to be – it's no longer possible to drive forward with one overarching idea about how things should be – this is often felt as Anomie or a state of resignation/depression equivalent to the doldrums with no wind.

This is the result of withdrawing the Libido from the world – by smashing all trust or faith in Insynsian – in the egos identity of a singular truth. All truths then become relevant – and what then is assessed is not the idea right or wrong – but How does it move people, how do people react to it, and can a raft of forms from it be chained to their respective reactions to achieve a goal, the will of the directing magician whose forms are able to dominate the forms of others. [Though in this case – relying on Synchronicity to instruct us and stay true to our Word/Wyrd – instructs us, it is not the individual will but the collective.]

What is missing that makes this complex is the notion of tiers – there are people who will treat the forms as they are and react accordingly – there are people who will see through the forms and not react accordingly – there are people who will stand by and let the forms do as they wilt – and there are people who will try to change the forms in play – all of these types are needed. Some, wish to be ONA Adepts and follow the way accordingly – some wish to be THEM and scrutinise the very essence that the Way is built on – some will follow forms laid down, some will create new ones – and many more types besides. Thus, for some, speaking in the old language old aeon conceptualisation of Good and Evil, creating simple divisions that feed the Ego rather than challenge it – works to create Warriors, fanatics. And largely this is all the particular mode of the ONA does – to create Sorcerers requires a different approach. Together ONA and THEM create both Warriors and Sorcerers.

The necessity of a Grand Master is what solidifies the whole Empire of the ONA. Without a vision to craft and mould these nebulous nothings into ghostly shapes that take on solid form and walls that form a labyrinth that one can follow – there is only deep confusion. AL/CB's Wills were what stopped all possible validities disintegrating the forms necessary for people to be communicated with.

People, understand in forms – even beyond the Abyss you cannot hope to speak esoteric secrets if you do not use abstracts, metaphors, forms, examples, words, pictures. This is going to change – more and more – but AL's reversion to polemics was in our view a devastating mistake more so because it was done by a Grand Master whose influence over the many is vast. It was a grave error of judgement to re-employ as was the inculcation of the idea of mundanes; – not only does this re-enshrine the shadow many who passed through the Moon Sphere fought to extract and integrate and re-invigorate the egos sense of propriety in projecting its darkness onto others – it absolves the responsibility of lax understanding and power over forms [Thrall] by the Sinister Agent many of whom have now adopted the view that the Enemy lays solely outside of them. And it does not. Like many things Sinister – there is only so much that people can take in without self-destructing violently trying to grasp the forces involved and the complex interactions they possess. Made complicated only through the superimposition of the Magian's structures and programming through which many construct and view their Matrix.

However – this is why both ONA's strategy and ours are valid – theirs serves some, ours serves others. Comparing the two reveals markedly different ideas about the nature of the Sinister, the Aeonic desire, the Methodology and so on – ONA trains Adepts, and we train Adepts for what comes after.

What you say about having multiple valid views of forms, of people, of things – is the spark that kindles Genius. Or Madness. To shrug off traditional habits of perception is highly difficult, some say impossible – but as avatars of alchemical change we firmly disagree. People can Change – but that statement itself does not imply what is usually implied.

Change is not a new process – it is a re-shuffling of latent and conscious ones. We can trick, force or coax other aspects into consciousness; this is a volatile and experimental evolutionary gamble with many unknown and now known side-effects from messing with such things – but it is entirely possible. It is best done through archetypal and narrative magic. The nuances you hint at are many – and eventually the gulf becomes so wide between what we used to Know as Right, and what is appropriate to entice change aeonically – can both be viewed in context, allowing far-reaching foresight into our interactions with others…

Now for those who argue that hurling Molotov cocktails through windows of banks is a far more appropriate Sinister gesture and praxis – or those who agree that THEM have devised a more solid solution of changing people internally and providing them a formula to change others – or that neither Traditional Form of ONA or THEM is required to contribute positively to the Sinister Tradition – there is no debate. The War must be fought on many fronts – internally as well as externally.

~

Finally,

– this is an excerpt taken from a far longer post in Mvimaedivm Black.

” we need a clear Aeonic vision of exactly what an Aeon is… I regard the Aeon as a vast stretch of time in which certain power-forms grow, predominate, conquer and eventually wane, and die.

Each Aeon and I am inclined to trust the ONA’s interp. based on Spengler's notions with some adjustments to some of the periods – has a spiritual challenge indicated by a change in mentality that seeks to escape the mode enshrined that keeps the architecture and infrastructure and power figures of that Aeon intact by shared will or dominated will. The present Aeon could collapse into a reactionary shadow of the Empire that stands, wherein the dark one Absu has taken hold, and can be expected to last for at least another thirty years or generation there may be a sudden reversal into ultra-logic and serious re-discovery.

That would probably be the time when writings of the nature of THEM come into vogue with the masses searching then for what went wrong collectively – because as we have predicted way back before he entered, the nature of Absurdity is to outdo itself – the Alpha-Cynic may free the traditional roles of women but what comes after may be far worse. If the faith in Insynsian remains – then the next structures can be expected to remain Magian, monotheist, “monopraxis”, “monological”. The repetition of just one ultimate way to strive toward – not a multiplicity, not a pantheon, not a differentiated consciousness – wherein the failure to escape Insynsian will merely rebuild the same Temple of ONE in any manner of guises – appearing revolutionary but destined to repeat the same archaic modes evolution seeks to eschew..

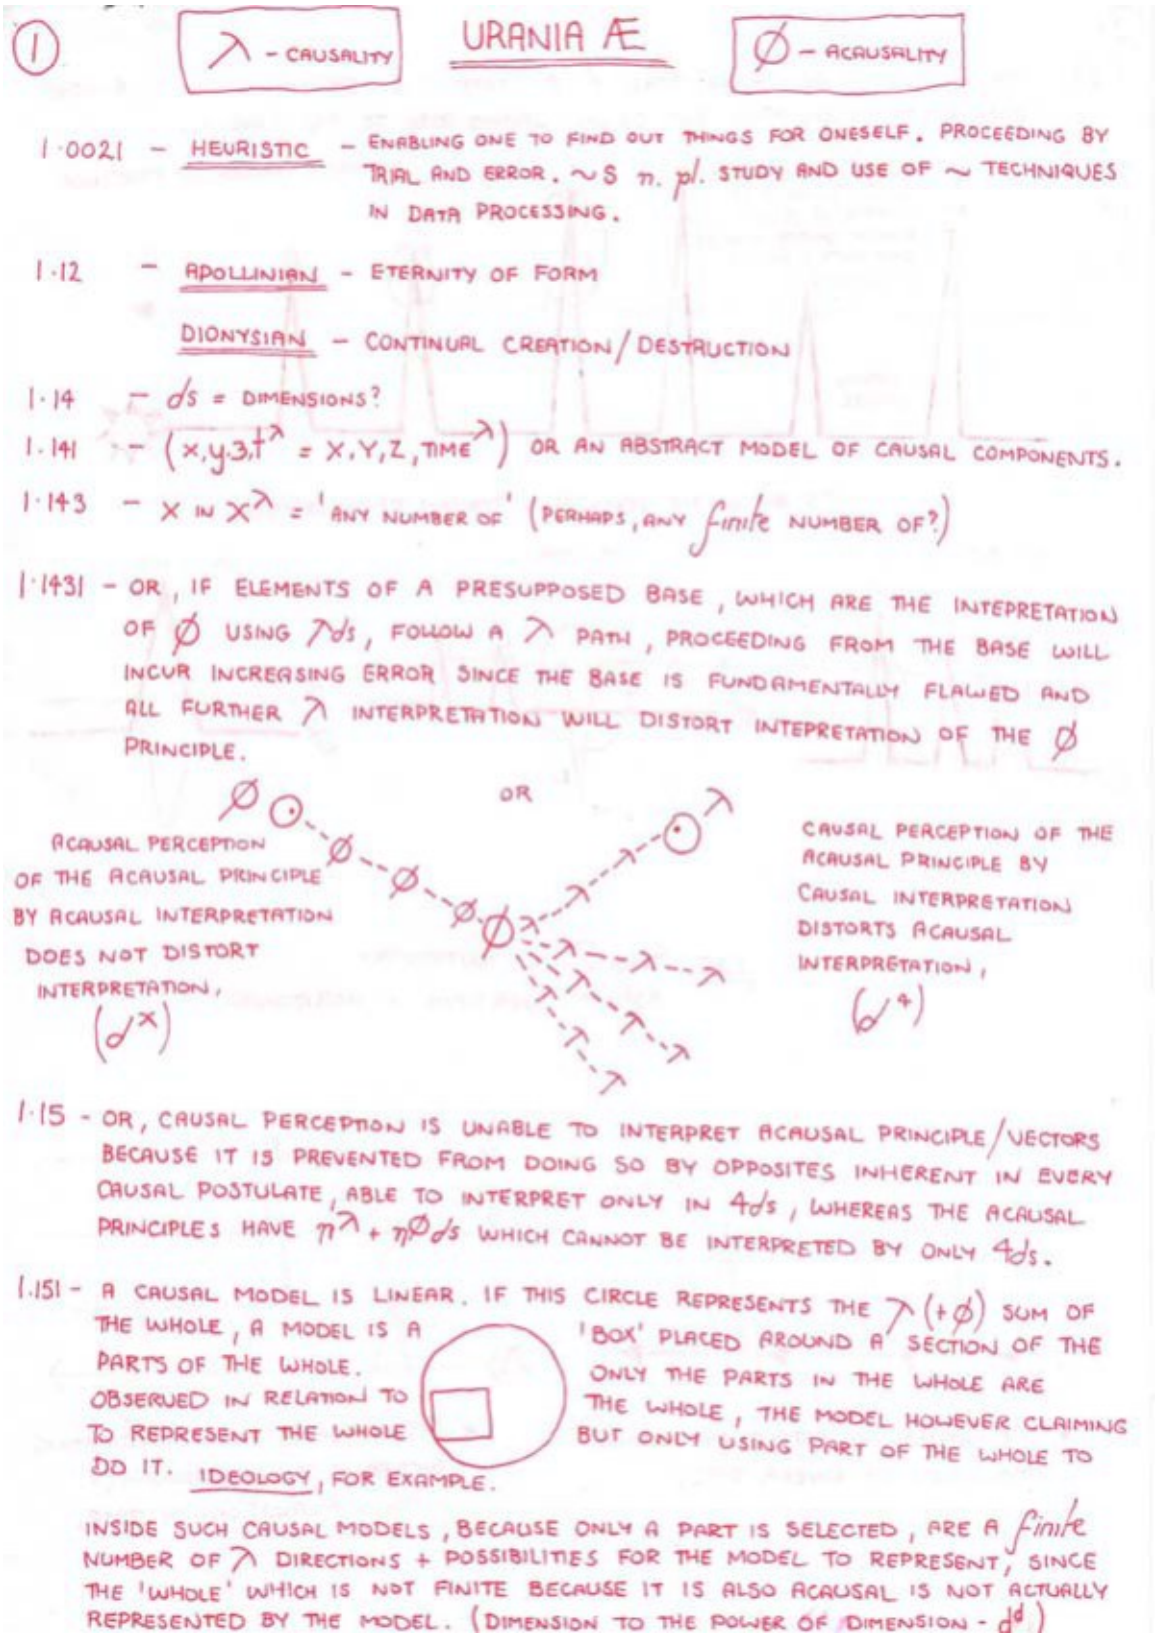
If there is a loss of faith in Insynsian – if humans develop the means to think in strata, in plural, as THEM – then we can expect an evolution of the mind, and therefore the hand, and therefore the surrounds of the black clay. Otherwise, we face only a replacement – and this is why the notion of Heresy, of Us and THEM is so dangerous to entertain – it takes us backwards not forwards. Any abstract we can conceive we must begin to acknowledge that it stems from our own projections, it is a part of us. For something to be present in the forthright consciousness, something Else must be repressed. Yet at all times, both of these aspects and all the strata between them, live and thrive in the underground and larger share of sentience that governs the subconscious.

This is why THEM has arisen Chthonically, as a natural result of an equation of forces, that exists to encourage these changes toward plurality and destroy Insynsian. This is a key battle in the war to change the Aeon and influence what comes after. If enough minds are freed the meme lives of its own accord – but THEM cannot be the only hope – we cannot encourage others to throw their lot behind us for if we fail, if we are destroyed internally or externally by human weaknesses – there must be in place a thermonuclear explosion of fire from all quarters – not when we are done, but Now, we cannot do THIS alone. The next twenty years will be crucial in our charter – and we do not have a lot a time. Change takes a very very long time with huge reserves of energy and effort poured into others' souls rather than kept back for oneself. We all Know this well. It is again why we have only a 30-year charter – for nothing is more draining than breaking the spells of the Magi."

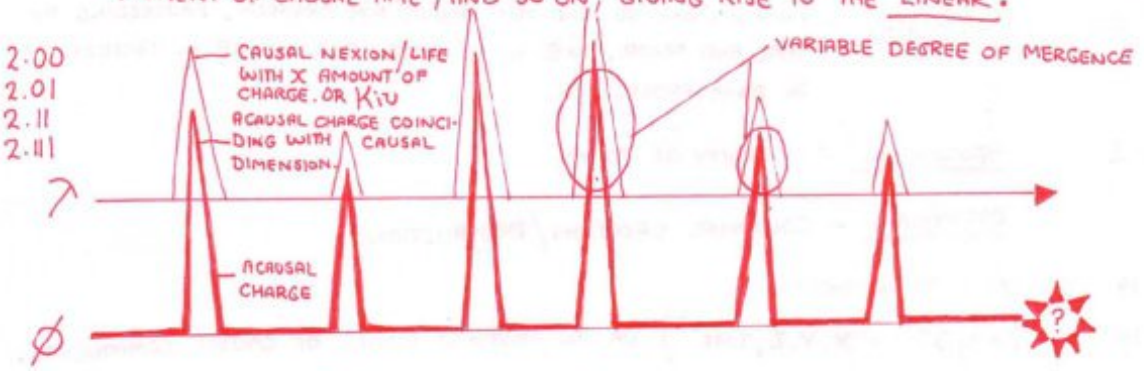
EMANATIONS OF URANIA

An Artistic Explication of Aeonics

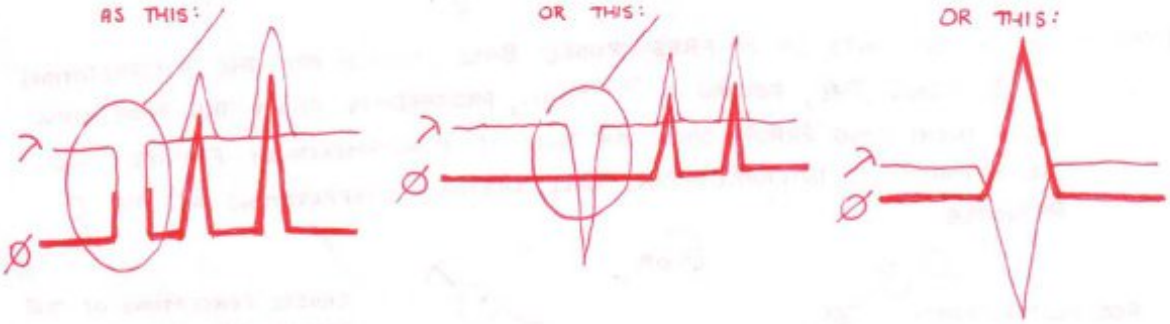


(2)

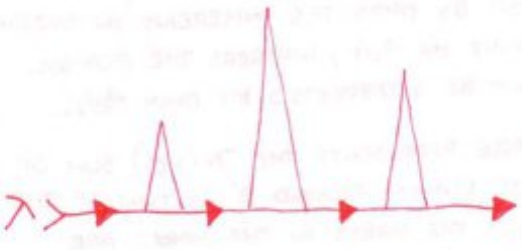
1·22 - OR, A MOMENT OF CAUSAL TIME + A MOMENT OF CAUSAL TIME, IS ANOTHER: MOMENT OF CAUSAL TIME, AND SO ON, GIVING RISE TO THE LINEAR.



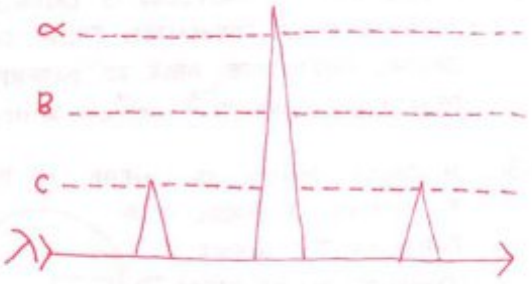
THE AIM OF THE NEXION/LIFE PERHAPS RE-PRESENTED,



LIFE, TWO ↗ EVOLUTIONARY ASPECTS, 'VERTICAL' + 'HORIZONTAL'.



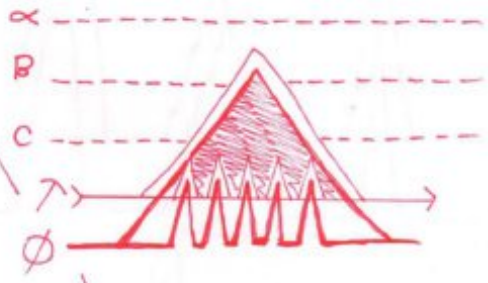
- THE HORIZONTAL ASPECT INDICATING EVOLUTION OF LINEAR TIME,



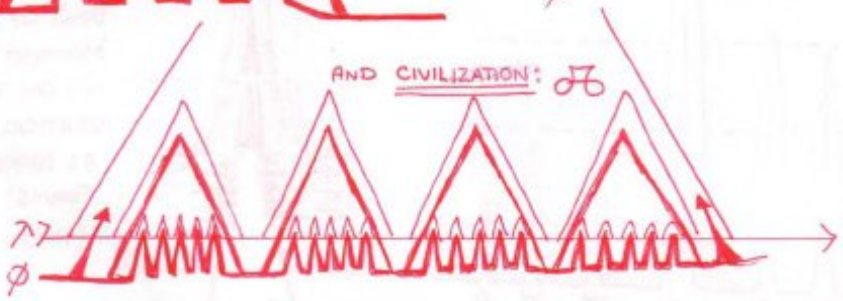
- THE VERTICAL ASPECT INDICATING INCREASE OF CONSCIOUSNESS WITHIN EVOLUTIONARY TIME.

2·212
2·22
2·4
2·41
2·42

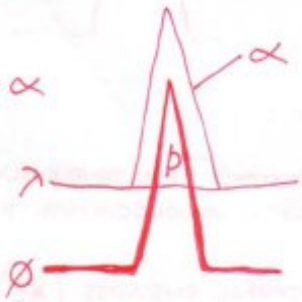
THEREFORE, CULTURE: Kcv



AND CIVILIZATION: ♃



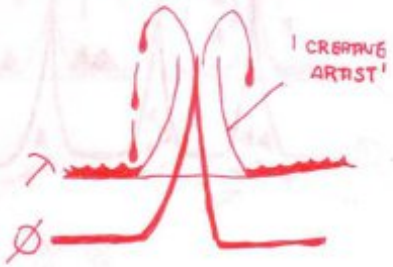
2·231 – b → α



2·2312 — OR, IT DOESN'T MATTER WHICH COMBINATION OF 'A,'B,'C, FLUX REPRESENTS TIME BY IN THE CAUSAL, BECAUSE THE UNDERLYING ACAUSAL KEEPS THE EQUATION,

(α)(γ)

2·421 – PERHAPS THE ANALOGY OF A VOLCANO HERE.
2·422 ACAUSAL CHARGE 'ERUPTS' FROM 'ARTIST' AS
2·4221 CAUSAL FORMS (ART, IDEAS ETC), THE CAUSAL
2·42212 FORMS ACT AS 'LIFEBLOOD', ENOUGH OF
2·42213 WHICH 'WATERS' THE EARTH AS IT SWELLS
2·423 INTO A SEA, NURTURING THE GROWTH OF
2·4231 (∅?) ↗ FORMS AS (♇ ♇) DIRECTLY VIA
THE ACAUSAL, THE 'ARTIST' ACTING AS A 'NEXION'.



2·42313 – HENCE THE INTENTION TO SIMPLIFY + RE-PRESENT THE 'EMANATIONS OF URANIA' AS ABSTRACT MODELS THROUGH ART.

THE 'VERTICAL' ↗ EVOLUTION OF 'e' MUST REACH ⊖(⊖) TO MAKE Kcv ♄,(♄)
Æ: (IMPERIUM), THEN ENOUGH Kcv ♄(♄) TO DECLINE INTO HOMO GALACTICA AS ♇(♇).

2·43
γ
β α
Ø
2·44121
THE CAUSAL ARCHETYPAL FORM MANIFESTING BY DEGREE OF SPECIFIC ACAUSAL CHARGE + EVOLUTIONARY DEGREE OF THE CAUSAL NEXION.
DIFFERENT DEGREES OF EVOLUTION, AFFECTED BY DIF DEG'S' OF Ø CHARGE, MANIFEST OUTWARD-LY ON THE VARIOUS VERTICAL LEVELS AS DIFFERENT 'FORMS' (ARCHETYPES)
NEXIONS SIMULTANEOUSLY EARTHING, MOSTLY UNCONSCIOUSLY+ INTUITIVELY.
ACAUSAL ENERGIES EARTHED AS CAUSAL FORMS
- SIGNIFYING THE DISTINCTION OF VERTICAL, HORIZONTAL AND Ø CHARGE OF THE 'ARYAN' kiu IN COMPARISON TO LESSER EVOLVED OR CHARGED kiu
4.1132
- MAGIAN
- 'ARYAN'
.2003

PLACES OF POWER

The thinking process of the ancient magickians was far slower than ours nowadays. Their minds reflected their surroundings in a less neurotic way than ours. Our inner dialogue or monologue should slow down and stop so that we may perceive the subtler realities around us. A process that takes time. Living in the wilderness for a longer period would enable one to learn certain things. Fasting during that period could prove the best way to allow one's awareness to perceive the greater world around us and have the aimed feedback from the acausal entities.

As regards working outdoors, I think the organism needs some time to adapt and relax in its new surroundings, especially when in the wilderness. In fact, one needs several days just to get fully acclimatised to the wilderness.

It may sound cynical but one of the best ways to find a site of power in the wilderness is when feeling a signal for defecation and the urge to find a proper place where one can satisfy that natural need. The signal for defecation itself is a sign that the organism has become relaxed enough to afford itself such a pleasure and the chosen place itself is always a secure place for one's body.

Of course, there are different sites of power in the wilderness. There are some sites wherein one feels sexually aroused. One might be possessed to have sex with trees, with stones, with pools etc, to expose the naked body to the severe caresses of one's wild surroundings.

There are sites of power which do not allow one to stay long there – these are the most powerful ones. Such are usually the mountain peaks. There is generally too much power for a human being to endure safely there. One may feel as if they're on drugs via the euphoria of such a place and perform some fatal folly – such as pretending to fly or falling from a rock and smashing one's head.

There are places that make one feel sleepy. These could be the most dangerous kind. One might never awake if they fall asleep in such a place. Yet too, there are places which may induce some prophetic dreams or to reveal some past events that happened therein.

As regards the fauna in the wilderness, each encounter could be regarded as a magickal sign or omen for the magickian. One's anima/animus may stalk one in its most appropriate animal form…

One is to invoke plants of power to learn more.

REQUISITES

The essential quality THEM look for in would-be initiates is an ability to continue to Change. I.e., to grow in as many ways as possible and explore one's world and being to its infinite potential. Since it's not always easy to know how to grow beyond one's situation and mode of being, THEM assist individuals in singular cases to work with them in finding ways to overcome limitations that they have in order that they not stop and rest permanently on any particular ideology, idea, or concrete notion of their being and their world; so that they may become like a shape-shifter who can adopt endless modes as suits that being. Some of the ways we attempt to help is by using our own magickal experience to identify blockages, weaknesses, psychological and physiological, in others. This may take the form of inducing a person to change in some way that compliments or contradicts them; perhaps to alter their perspective in conversation or via a task of some kind to help them look at other ways of thinking about things, dealing with problems, apprehending magic, and so on.

Sometimes introspection is considered useful for an individual and we ask them to work with us by recording a set number of dreams for a period to assuage what their psyche is telling them, as per an Analytical/Jungian approach. Or we simply discuss their ideas and try to introduce new tangents… The essential factor is individually determined on a case-by-case basis; but the prime quality we look for is the ability to continually change, grow and overcome oneself. THEM become them, by selecting themselves as their Master; however, while it is Satanic to walk one's own way – it is not always easy to know ones being as intimately or the direction we might take as we would like; the ego prevents a person from being able to see what others see sometimes; and that is why each member of THEM helps others to grow, which in turn helps the member to grow. In your case: you seem quite capable of asking new questions of others and yourself, and this is considered by us a desirable quality.

A member of THEM, is ambiguous about guidance. On one hand they don't want others to tell them what is valid and so really, we ask no questions to others; but that is a mindset, if you will, that is upheld in a different realm or mode of being; and that mode is at odds with my being, Here, writing replies and prompting others to change by taking the approach of the existence of real objective concepts that can be shared as valid for many people, not just the subjective experience of an individual.

Happiness: is something you understand on an intricately complex level with your own interpretation for many situations where you might believe you encounter it and can make judgements as to its validity, for others and for yourself. It's a word, a sound, a notion, and idea, an abstract, a goal, an emotion, a vibration… and takes countless other shapes and names. What should be avoided, in my opinion, is a mode of specialisation by a person, that limits interpretation of the thing “Happiness” and sets its suggestion in stone or if not as a singular definition, then an array of parameters that it might be defined under for a person. Even once you think you know Happiness; you should not stop trying to analyse it different ways, perhaps explore its basic opposite or varying degrees of shade. Or perhaps you are focusing on emotion altogether too much and need to explore the physical side of your being… these tangents, or options to go further in examining the world, ourselves, and others, are the forte of THEM.

It is hoped that individuals grow in some way from interaction with us, and we hope to be able to identify some way in which to prompt that growth for an individual using our experience and knowledge of magickal methods. I have not addressed your post personally; there is a lot in it about your thoughts on things that has not been commented on above, or if so, as fully as it could be – which, is naturally because there are no easy limits to put on dialect. If you have questions; ask them; and we will offer our thoughts and with luck, give you some walls to bounce off…

PLANET CARAVAN

Some Notes in regard to ‘Nexion’: [Initial name of the ASOV]

+O+

Having been involved in a Green group in the late 90’s that campaigned against Nuclear Armament, Logging, War, and Rights for Refugee’s in large protests (often in the CBD of Melbourne City or Marysville) I experienced extended periods of travelling to and from locations in convoys of cars, and time in their home re-made into the equivalent of a commune. Activities at this commune in the outer suburbs of Melbourne included parties to celebrate every full moon, fire twirling, congregating in a massive tee-pee, a lot of dope smoking, alcohol consumption, spa baths and on occasion promiscuous sex.

Some of the parties occasionally got out of hand and there was one occasion where I was asked to eject a trouble-maker who had punched our resident Native American in the face. Which I did. I also attended a festival twice called “ConFest” that is still run but has become increasingly commercial over the years. Meat was once banned, rec. drugs were rife, and commercial venues refused entry. Now a Coke van sells refreshments.

What I have learned from these and some other experiences prior to this, is that groups like this, such as hippies, who put on the relaxed face of effortless peace and mungbeans, much like Christians, are not immune to the bitter squabbling and internal politics that arise when almost any group of people assemble under the banner of an ideology.

There were some great people at the commune, some of which I enjoyed personal relationships with or found friendly, down-to-earth and not full of bullshit. But the entire camp was underpinned by a lot of hostility – mostly by some patrons towards others, a virile grapevine of gossip, and all manner of idiocy bandied around as sound solutions to the problems of the world.

My Alchemist friend Luci once informed me that he'd been speaking with a lady in the garden who wanted to meet a real Satanist. When I went down to talk with her, I noted she was in her 30's. When I began to inform her of my views ala ONA, she lost her arrogant Wiccan demeanour, and left the party.

The commune was also split into different factions internally, some who wanted to go back to the way things were when it was just the main attendees, some who thought more could or should be done for the Cause, some who felt that there was too much bullshit going on, and some who wanted to do their own thing and screw everyone else. With the high degree of traffic that came in and out there was a plethora of different and sometimes explosive personalities at the full moon parties. Luci and I were some of them. The point is: I know first-hand what elements the organisation of people together brings and am also very familiar with the Rites of the ONA.

I have taken these into consideration in my suggestion regarding a mobile blitzkrieg. Firstly, let me emphasise – I don't picture Nexion romantically as some sort of social group that gets together after magic to chat and spend time, possibly bitching, together. Rather I envision a cold calculating group of professional Satanists that arrive at a certain point ready and prepared for the ritual, draw down the acausal into the landscape and other members, get back in their cars, and leave. I think it is far more sinister for a group to descend upon a location with a pre-determined purpose and to perform a powerful rite using their own energies to participate professionally and coldly without so much as a word exchanged than it is to have a tea-party under the illusion that we're somehow all meant to get along.

The requirements of the Rite of 9a in ONA's magic demands a vow of silence of 7 days prior to Performance – this alone will exclude a lot of people without the proper resolve and personal conduct to maintain such severe measures of discipline, from Nexion.

Anonymity can be maintained by masks and silence. Renting cars for the purpose is also a good idea – and some standard satanic security measures put in place, however since I'd rather people not be paranoid about being tailed or followed, it would be necessary that each member be able to fight well enough to be able to knock someone out in the case of unwanted interruptions or aftermath. Initiates would need to be tested to see if they have the skills to defend themselves. Obviously, some experience with camping and bush-craft would be useful as would mechanical and geographical knowledge in the case of finding spots to perform the rites, and making sure everyone arrives and everyone leaves without breaking down.

A mastery of Chant and memorisation of the Rite's performed is an absolute requisite – but it hasn't been decided yet which of the Rites would be performed aside from the 9a one, which requires a lot of work, preparation and solidarity to achieve. In that, I've had a semi-active role in acting, and I am sure the Sorceress can provide useful instructions on its performance for a group as she has performed the 9a repeatedly and has a great working knowledge of the Dramatic Arts.

In some cases, it may be useful to alter the text of the ONA's Rites or to perform a completely different rite unique to THEM. All this will be discussed by myself and other members of THEM and members of Mvimaedivm are welcome to offer up their suggestions or put in for a charter.

PS. [The name of this Mss is taken from the name of a song by Metal Band, Pantera. The name Planet Caravan is used in the hope that the idea of a cold mobile convoy of people working blitzkriegs of acausal magic around the world might take off as a suitable alternative to an immobile nexion where internal politics of people not familiar with one another or exposed to high traffic volume tend to gather and wreak havoc on a form.

As we have said, the idea of issuing Charters for others to raise their own Temple to THEM (A Tendril of THEM) is under consideration.]

EYES: ASOV INAUGURAL

17th August 2014.

4:30 pm.
A convoy of cars arrive at a predetermined location. 4 women. 5 men. Friendly greet and meet are exchanged – the aura is of excitement, of expectancy, of caution, of the unknown. The palpable sense that something is about to happen is in the air. Incense is produced, carefully constructed aforethought for the particular celestial event for which this night has been chosen. The congregation dressed in black make their way down to the location to see where they will be spending the next twelve hours at the first inaugural meet of the 2-month-old Australian Satanic Organisation Victoria. A beautiful location meets the eyes of all: both practical and mystical; hidden from the roadside, a large dirt clearing bound by tall trees and a flowing river snaking one side with high hills obscuring overlookers and a literal crossroads. Met with approval – the long-wondered question of the dynamic and cohesion of all these different people is answered almost immediately. The next thirty minutes are spent ferrying our camp and ritual supplies, firewood and food down via a chain of laughing, enthusiastic and determined individuals. No one slacks, no one shirks, there are hands offering help at every turn. It is a wonderful sight to see.

Our supplies set up, tents are next and without ado the fire pit, 3 and a half foot across and a foot deep is dug. The flurry of brothers getting involved hacking the hard rocky dirt with axes to soften it for the spade only reinforces the notion that all of the right people are present for the right reasons. The fitness test we had planned proves unnecessary. Potatoes are wrapped in foil ready for the feast, beer is produced. The first vehicle check takes place and two individuals randomly chosen are sent off on the pretext of checking the cars – giving them in fact ten minutes alone with one another away from the main group to talk and get to know each other, breaking down any of the uncomfortable matter of some in a group not talking to others for whatever reason. The fire is kindled, another flurry of hands and it is lit and blazing – the forest is filled with conversations taking place in all quarters with bursts of laughter cutting the air. Mimicking the fire there is a blaze of personal warmth all about.

Those present chat openly with one another as dark begins to fall. So far so good. The first ASOV group photo is then prepared according to the loose itinerary of the night's events – masks, balaclavas, and mouth coverings of various sorts are suddenly produced in silence with grim determination and suddenly the clearing transforms from a casual group of campers into something altogether more sinister. Holding our 2014 inaugural plaque we capture a moment in Australian satanic history. [Given the photo later by a brother the clearly visible symbol of a hand thrust upward from the fire is only a surer sign of our sorcery and the culmination of dozens of uncanny and unlikely synchronicities between us all leading up to the Inaugural]. A brief speech on the success of the solidification of a dream conspired months ago and now manifest with a heartfelt thank you to all who have made the effort leading up to and during the first hours of the event to make it happen is offered as we stand around the fire.

Brief instructions on what is to take place next are issued. In the last of the dying light, we take our stolen, lifted holy books in hand and declare our new names within the ASOV to all – renouncing the three religions of Abraham: Christianity, Islam, and Judaism – and throwing them into the flames one by one as a sign of our Intent and a step toward our personal evolution. When the last book falls among the flames the inaugural ASOV 2014 is declared officially open amid the cries of "hail!".

Left again to their devices before the main event people mingle with one another, discussing all manner of topics freely and without restraint in the darkness of this beautiful place laden with personal memories – at the foot of the hills. Potatoes and sausages are eaten, water and beer liberally drunk. Coals are raked into the keyhole pocket off from the main fire to grill the sausages, carefully tended automatically without anyone needing to ask for volunteers – the vibe is intense and close. Various discussions take place now, people moving in and around beside the fire or out to the woods, in conversation or simply just enjoying the fresh air and stunning scenery. Away from the electronic eye much is put forth.

It must be near ten that we gather once more around the fire using sparklers to draw sigils and signs of personal strength around it. Twenty minutes later we stand, clutching our constructed crucifix in preparation for the Aeon of Fire Rite. A history of the rite, both its method and purpose are laid out for participants who are instructed to use the rite to kill something within themselves, rather than the traditional use of destroying external enemies. Together some of us chant the Diabolus in harmony. The air grows thick with energies, people concentrating and summoning the killing energy, the death energy in their emotional memory, and that which they wish to kill transferred into the crosses – whose silhouettes are back-lit by the blazing inferno of the fire. The rehearsal done, the rite is begun – incense specially prepared by a brother is ignited, and through the stillness a booming voice filled with focus and intent cuts through the night as the rite is performed with accompanied motions.

As the congregation perform the difficult sorcery of culling within, filling those hateful relics with their pain, grief, anger and emotion, they cast the crosses into the fire – and followed by the mournful chant of Agios O Aosoth. The command issued ‘now we simply walk away – they have taken enough of our time and energy’ is given – a sombre, solemn mood seizes the group who retreat to various corners to reflect, recover, let the powerful nature of the rite sink in and their own sensibilities process the event in silence.

I retreat to the riverside alone to think on the night’s events and the energies of those present – chanting Diabolus in my own tempo to the river, and that of Agios O Baphomet. Rain falls softly – – but for the most part the weather is exactly what we had hoped, and the small amount of rain only brings atmosphere, and the sky’s cloud periodically part to allow unobstructed views of the stars. It is no more than 30 minutes before the group is reinvigorated however, recovered enough to talk with one another, reflect on what they killed and share their secrets with one another. In a similar vein does the night, a night filled with discussions of sorcery, of tactics, of stars and constellations, traditional satanism, our own experiences, successes and failures – much talk of the Future.

Lead by another brother, a satanic meditation opening gates inward through trance is conducted. For us the night is a triumph; the seed this simple ice breaker we have now together planted in our first act of coming together, away from the internet, to be amongst one another in the cradle of nature, face to face without fear or prejudice – that will Become – is sown deep into the Australian landscape. Some of us fall asleep in our tents, some of sit by the fire right through until the early morning – walking about the forest and talking or sharing war-stories.

We seek the planets chosen to preside over this inauguration – but the skyline is obscured by trees, the heavens by clouds – Jupiter and Venus are nowhere to be seen, yet in a very real sense, they have risen amongst us, the group emanates both love and wisdom and has unfolded our solidarity as hoped and expected.

By 5 am it is still dark, but the camp is packed. Everything has as a collective been assembled, packed up, all rubbish, cans, traces of our presence are picked up and taken back with us, the fire is filled in, tents vanish, and we leave the ground in the pristine condition we arrived. Only a Thrasz drawn by a brother about the circumference of the fire remains as a sign we were ever there.

The night has been a humble yet great success. There has been both serious talk and abandoned laughter. We have much to do to prepare for the next meet but the first and most crucial steps have been taken. A spark has been lit…

ISS/h
Everard Park, Yarra Glen
2014

ASOV: NOTES FOR ASPIRANTS

It may be of some use to comment on a few pointers regarding the future delivery and intent of the rituals performed at the ASOV Inaugural for future aspirants who take the lead and run a meet. The first is that I did not have written notes. Over the course of a few days, I wrote and rewrote the rite, and committed it to memory. I also accompanied the rite with physical actions which helped serve as a reminder of what came next. Having enjoyed several beers to join in the celebration and relax I was nevertheless very wary of my alcohol intake in order that I did not forget the appropriate actions or words.

What I said, came from my heart and was delivered with a loud, confident and fearless voice. It is understandable that on a first meet there are doubts and fears of what others may think should we choose to shout or let free our emotion – and breaking that reluctance to be at one, to freely contribute without fear of how one is going to appear or be judged, is tantamount, absolutely vital to any performance of group sorcery.

I am for instance quite at ease wearing glasses and silly hats, joking about my own foibles and not afraid to strip naked, direct a group of people in sorcery, or speak to groups of people. I am extremely confident in what I do and am – and this inspires others. It creates an atmosphere of power, and trust, and freedom. It is advised that anyone running a meet develop the same confidence for speaking in front of others, delivering a powerful intonation and/or chant, and being very well versed in one's material to the point that it is automatically remembered and thus spoken from the heart.

As I have said on a few occasions, Intent is what matters. Not the tools. The Thurifer we intended to bring whereupon Anorha would walk around the circle and incense the area, was forgotten. The bells we noted Sanguinary brought, were not around for the AOF – but we made do. No-one was any the wiser that the ritual went other than the way it was planned. A Sorcerer must always be resourceful and work with what they have – plans fall down, chaos changes things, but there must always be flexibility and readiness to adapt and continue. That we were an hour and a half late to the meet changed a few things, but by and large the loose itinerary was still used to give a sense of structure and timing to the unfolding of the night's activities. What was important, more important than following the itinerary to the letter – was observing and feeling, watching and enjoying the unfolding dynamic between the people present: it was necessary to note that if people were speaking excitedly and meeting others they hadn't to let that develop of its own accord, to note the rise in chatter and the fall when people had exhausted the present amount of conversation – and Then, to draw them back to the itinerary to give them something to do so they were not standing around bored or listless.

Had I simply insisted everyone be present at a certain time I should have simply been trying to plaster a strict doctrine of to-do's over an organic meeting of new minds and faces: this is very important, and a skill that must be honed. A plan is useful, but it's the people that matter. Interrupting conversations to do something on a list helps no-one – far better that the Master observe the rise and fall of people's doings and base their timing on that – with respect to the roughly itemised itinerary. We must always expect things to go wrong, people to be late, some key item to be forgotten, some "inconvenience" by weather or other fortune – and just adapt and go with the flow.

Trying to adhere slavishly to a list of things will only clash horribly with the organic energies of the natural dynamic of a group unfolding itself to one another – and at the end of the day, THIS dynamic is far more important than all the rituals on a list. That it simply took its own course was amazing. I have come to trust synchronicity and my judgement of character, but this meet was truly amazing to observe.

It should be noted that everyone was treated as equals: there was no gender typing, the women were not left to talk amongst themselves nor to cook or mind the fire; the men were not charged to gather firewood or put up tents: the single most important thing about any group like this, I think, is to simply get into it, get ones hands dirty, do what needs to be done, without complaint, without hesitation, and others will follow. It's of no use waiting for others to do something – one should always just do it themselves, allow others to step in and take over or assist, and then move onto the next thing. I did what I wanted to do, what needed to be done – if others weren't willing to do it that didn't matter I was going to do it anyway as it turned out, I was among capable, admirable, determined spirits who did not need to be asked, or told, and just did – we worked together like a well-oiled machine, an almost military precision and that was Very impressive. For this same reason of dynamic – people were sent randomly in twos to 'check on the cars'.

Giving two people who might not ordinarily speak to one another time to talk alone without the pressure of a group helped lubricate friendship and trust – just ten minutes alone with one another was enough time to have a talk, share a smoke, and get to know each other – whilst having a 'purpose' to complete gave the social interaction, meaning and direction. Done with a few couples, it was not long before everyone was talking to everyone with ease. [See, Keeping the Bastard Together] We learned a few things along the way also: to cook corn in the shallow pit off from the fire pit not the centre, to bring some different foods – pumpkin perhaps, and more sugars. A kettle. I will definitely make damper next time.

We were not able to do the nunchuku, knife or chant training – but the mere fact that we were able to sit down and get to know each other more than made up for this in terms of constructive team spirit. The camaraderie of a group is what makes or break its – and it's what made ours a resounding success, a powerful springboard for future gatherings. The confidence, leadership, structuring, delivery and organisation of a meet is important to get right so that people are not left feeling alienated from what is going on, yet not told what to do. Because of the informal dynamic of the group, with people chatting comfortably and at ease with one another, I did not deliver various lectures in lengthy sermons, but keep it informal, short and to the point. This meant flowing with the dynamic around me, not challenging or disrupting it.

Thus, the whole night was passed with ease by all – time flew, because we were having fun and it seemed like one continuous event.

A rough estimate of the cost of the meet is about $400.

The sheer amount of information to remember about even a short rite like the AOF requires some work. I anticipated some nervousness, or drunkenness on my part at the meet might cause me to forget the words or actions. I therefore broke the rite down into simple mnemonics. Instead of trying to remember all the words to Diabolus as well as all the words to the AOF, I simply wrote the first letter of each line of the chant, so I only had to remember a string of seven letters, prompting my memory to fill in the rest. I also broke the rite into letters, I, I, T, C, etc the first line of each delivery to remind me what came next. I developed physical actions to accompany the rite not only to help me remember the procession but also to involve more than a voice, to involve the Physis of the body, to create mystical movements that reflected the forces and forms spoken of and intrigue and add an element of motion and interest to the Rite.

Sorcery is like Dance – you must simply let yourself go in order to produce the required magic. To stand stiffly, uncomfortably, unmoving, and read from a sheet… well you get the idea. It sends the entirely wrong message, it smacks of disorganisation, insincerity and lack of confidence. Your actions and words need to inspire others to relax – so you too must relax. Sometimes things do go wrong – and its OK to laugh – and then proceed.

Laughter is by far the most dangerous of all forces – even the Devil fears it. Learn to laugh at yourself harder than anyone else can so when you fuck up, it's alright, just part of the show, and keep going. Know your role so well it seems effortless – even if it isn't. The importance of getting a ritual right, is practice. To fuck it up in the middle by forgetting the words or actions and pausing longer than necessary or stopping completely is not the end of the world – but it is disastrous for a Sorcerer and all the participants involved. Rituals require an organic flow, a natural unfolding delivered with confidence that engenders trust in the Master to guide and add structure to what would otherwise be chaos. Thus, is was vital to explain in brief, the nature of the rites performed and the actions required by the participants beforehand.

Ordinarily I'd have given it longer between rehearsal and performance – but adapted to the feeling around me, deleting it almost altogether to meet the expectant anticipation and need to DO that was emanating from the group.

Beyond this: everything else in the way of organisation and implementation of a meet should have been demonstrated by the inaugural and come (and evolve) naturally.

Respect those around you – not everyone will want to perform or participate in a given rite. Offer the choice but never demand it of anyone. At any rate, if you have to perform it solo – perform it solo. A Master needs no-one else to get things done. If the energy is not there, create it, move through all obstacles and act as if you are the only one there.

Addendum: Aeon of Fire

It was suggested by Anorha that participants kill something inside themselves rather than the traditional use of the rite against an external enemy -say, the Pope. Because we could not locate the Temple's acausal pentagram mat (appears in OA 28) to highlight it with glow in the dark spray-paint – we used the fire itself. Which exquisitely reflected a living acausal pentagram and the moving geometry in the starry abyss. People gathered around the fire and held crucifix. They were explained the nature of the rite and how it works. Everyone was told to think of a time when they killed or were in a position to kill/felt like killing and to revoke that memory so as to relive it and all the emotion they felt. They were instructed to think of something they hated inside them and to kill it, to pull it out of themselves and pour it into the cross – to imagine red glowing tendrils coming from themselves and taking the killing energy with them wrapping around the cross, causing it to glow brightly red.

While they did this three of us chanted Diabolus. Then the words of the AOF were delivered, loud and confidently to all and the night. Black magic is no time for shyness or being frightened of a ferocious booming intonation. It is not for those who get easily embarrassed but for those who exult life and the forces it represents. There could have been more time between rehearsal and performance – but I felt there was a great need to finally perform an act of sorcery together after waiting so long that it need not wait. This sorcery, has grave and solemn consequences, it is very intimate and private, very powerful and often painful – it is advised to check on others briefly who have performed it, one needn't say anything but just sit beside them, to passively remind them they are not alone, there is support and silent understanding – and then just leave them until they return of their own accord to the group.

Laughter is very powerful – and we all made use of it. That is how you know you are amongst dangerous people. But the Master must also balance this freedom and mirth with a seriousness and respect: too much of either can tip the dynamic too far one way causing those who desire a certain solemnity for some matters feel it is being taken too lightly – while taking things too seriously can be a depressing dead weight on those who would otherwise feel relaxed.

Balancing these requires practice and experience working within groups and being able to read people. Body language, where feet are pointing, whether arms are crossed, tone and pitch of voice, power play, space between people, amount of eye contact, who talks to who, the amount of laughter, the amount of conversation, etc are important to observe. For you can use these cues to evoke changes, get some to work together who might not otherwise do so, or read the "ley of the land" to enhance the group dynamic if you can identify what is ailing it and where.

Unless on those rare occasions you simply get the right people at the right time and place. Which we did. And whilst 'right' body language is interesting to observe – when the dynamic simply goes like clockwork, you feel it, and when you know what it is supposed to feel like – you no longer have to watch it. For then it is an act of magic.

ISS/h

ASOV FLAG: ESOTERIC MEANING

Although it looks simple enough, a great deal of information can be invested in and as such withdrawn from our flag.

Colours: The Black Standard is rectangular and martial in stature as per a Samurai banner representing the Saturnian Earthiness of a Black Cube elongated to encompass more than us rather than Sovereignty/control over an area. It represents discipline and empathy – the understanding of our temporal occupation of a location is only temporal and by no means grants us any special ownership and the empathy with the land that demands we look after it and remove as much of our presence as possible, save for a Thrasz, behind.

The cube is one of the five Pythagorean solids. the most basic form of the cube; the square represented solidarity: a perfection that is static, earthly, and material. It suggests dependability, honesty, shelter, safety. As the most frequent shape in Hindu symbology, the mandala with gates stands for order in the universe and the balance of opposites. It is considered the building block of nature because the ancient Greeks believed that the element of Earth was comprised of cube shaped particles; given their stability of the shape. The Modern World has inherited much of the Greeks worldview and many of these suppositions, present in general knowledge, remain preserved.

The Green & Yellow Represent our Australian Heritage and Belonging, a patriotic nod. The Green Thrasz further represents the wild and lush Australian Landscape, whilst the Yellow Sun represents the harsh, inhospitable arid deserts, sand and burning sun. The white stars and moon are contrasted with the black flag to indicate a grasp and willingness to employ both extremes of any given form and to symbolise our astrological/astronomical focus.

The Black ‘A’ in the shadow of the Sun depicts the Monogram for the ASOV (A) and is stylised to show a figure both exalting the sky and kneeling on the earth. It represents a greater union with the forces above and below and a vow to go inside and outside to find, meet and learn from these forces by which we are shadowed by virtue of their intensity. It also warns of incineration by these forces should we forget their power.

Symbolism:
The Moon represents our Blitzkrieg Approach to Magic and that our organisation and our alchemical development is often hidden from view. The Thrasz itself is a stylised Saturn, easily seen if we imagine Saturn’s planet as the Yellow interior (Ammonia) and the spiralling Green Thrasz as its rings.

The midst of which is a baleful eye – the eye of Becoming or Evolved Intelligence. A Crux or Southern Cross of stars counterpoints the Moon adopting this symbol famous across the Southern Hemisphere for our flag and a sign that presides over our rituals and meets as a natural compass.

The Moon, Saturn and the Sun are depicted on the ASOV’s flag – a throwback to the Temple of THEM’s roots in Traditional Satanism and the spiral path of the planets in the Tree of Wyrd. The moon in the far distance, Saturn in the mid ground and the sun in the foreground. The Moon is shown in danger of being occulted by Saturn – that is to say, Saturn obscures the sphere of the Moon. In Psychological terms this equates to the 23 Syndrome and fixing of the Ego with the individual believing they have discovered all there is that lays hidden in their psyche, lived and extracted all the terror and occult knowledge there is inside or outside. We must never forget that our Ego functions to fix our perspective with a narrow-minded view to more easily make sense of things – and this narrowing is an illusion caused by the Egos lens that may cause us to constrict our perspectives without conscious control.

The EYE of the Thrasz is a stern reminder that we must remain awake and vigilant of our Ego’s particular habits if we are to retain conscious control of who we are.
The cyclic path of Becoming and Evolving that starts in the Sphere of the Moon, travels in a spiral (the Thrasz) upward through the other planetary energies and ends in Saturn. However, the endless pursuit of this cycle is represented by the Awakened Dragon or Eye of the Thrasz wherein this process of Becoming is eternally repeated but never the same outwardly, only inwardly. This process represents a cosmos of receptive knowledge which we are not closed off to and the repetitive cyclic attainment of Becoming in effect represents the Philosophers Stone.

The ability to turn lead of any kind into gold of any kind requires an understanding of transformation and how one thing can become another through the application of processes. If we come to know thousands of processes instead of a few hundred it significantly improves our ability to perform alchemy by coupling a form with, or depriving a form of, another form or forms to produce a specific result.

If you look again at the ‘A’ on the flag you will see it is comprised of two letters, A and U, the Alchemical Symbol for Gold while the Lead aspect is symbolised by the black colour of the A and the human figure. The planets of the flag both dwarf and surround the human figure pointing at the enormity of alchemical tasks and implementation of change and the necessity for supra human efforts to achieve them. The Saturnian aspect of the Thrasz is covered in detail within the complex meanings of the Aeurekanequeo yet it is worth noting that the Isa Rune of the Thrasz Eye, of stillness and Ice, is counterbalanced by the Double Sowelu Runes, or Sunwheel, spelling ISS which equates to In Supra Solidarity.

The Sun is at the foreground because of its prominence in Australian climate and landscape. It further represents the shining beacons of illumination and wisdom which are not to be confused with knowledge. Wisdom is a result of less being more. A compaction of the categorical knowledge of the Dexter into a wordless sympathy of knowing with forces previously unknown. It is intensity and persistence that makes changes, both internally and externally just as sun and storm year after year, aeon after aeon scorched the Australian landscape dry from its once verdant lushness into the arid continent we know today, the time frame and heat required for such changes are allegories for magical works, including forbidden alchemy. To burn as a star does requires great dedication. The Black Flame is caused by Black Lightening. Thus just as there are forces of opposition, conjunction and even contradiction shown in our flag by the various forces depicted – so too are we ourselves representative of the balance of what is shown and beyond. This flag serves as a reminder of our duties to the land to each other and to ourselves.

Suitably entranced and joined with the meaning of this flag now it falls to us to employ a radical practice common to the philosophy of the Temple of THEM. Despite its symbolic beauty and harmony this flag must never become sacred. It must not be as other flags a sign of sovereignty over land or the intention to create a utopian rule, nor must it be representative more than arbitrarily of the ASOv.

We may use it liberally but must remember that if we imbue it with power or special significance we are playing a game. We should perhaps at the proposed event of the yearly Grand Fire, burn such a flag to release any attachment to it. Creating a new one each year at the first Meet. It is easy to build such relics and artefacts and become attached to them, easier still to speak words that attach someone to them as I have done here: this is how knowledge is accepted, venerated and made sacred. But this is the root of religion, of worship, of material abstractions of forms, not an appreciation of forces. We may perhaps use it irreverently to wipe our dishes and utensils but not go so far as to deliberately scorn or demean the flag – merely keep it in context and its place. It is just cloth to which we have attached meaning, after all. When it becomes more than that, the Sorcerer has lost control of his or her forms. You may recall the myths of Frankenstein, or the story of the Golem, or even Mickeys Brooms of which he created and lost control. Symbols have a nasty habit of becoming more than they are – so these practices will help you as a sorcerer to understand both the trap they create and the means to overcome it. And that is invaluable.

There is another aspect to this flag that may not be immediately visible. One of the traditional crafts of Satanic practice as taught by us is that of mimesis. Just as we mimicked a Mass with the Nameless Rite, our ASOv flag stands in opposition to Abrahamism. It not only features the black cube (sacred symbol of Abrahamism and the greatest of Angels 'El' who was represented by a black cube – under which banner we are attempting to dismantle their control over us and our habits) but the three planets rumoured to have been the roots from which the name of Israel is derived: being the Egyptian worship of the Moon (Isis), the Sun, (Ra), and Saturn (Elohim), hence IsRaEl. Therefore, our treatment and use of the symbolism of a flag and the flag itself is not the ordinary use, but a seditious undermining of traditional forms on multiple levels.

THE STAR TALK [Workshop Example]

During the ASOV, each member was tasked with running a ritual or workshop: one of these was the Star Talk. I gave this talk at the 2nd Meet in Victoria, which my compatriots will remember coincided with the ground where we were standing being lit up from the flash of a brilliant meteorite or shooting star.

During the 3rd Meet, I gave this talk again only to discover my audience completely transfixed by the heavens above where a meteor shower was taking place. I had them spin their seats or lie down and watch the show while I continued the talk. Synchronicity is an extremely powerful force that makes the impossible, possible.

Here is that talk:

Understanding Directions in the Sky.

The Sun rises in the East and sets in the West. So, to do the Stars rise in the east and set in the west overnight. This is because the Earth spins from West to East. Everything comes into view as we spin toward it, and retreats as we spin away from it. If anyone is having trouble understanding this – stand here and three of us will stand in front of you in an arc. Slowly turn to your left as if you were the Earth. See how we come into your view in a certain order, appearing to be turning in the opposite direction to you. So it is with the stars, the moon, sun, and planets.

In Astronomy the sky is halved down the middle by an imaginary line between the North Celestial Pole and the South Celestial Pole called the Meridian. Looking straight up wherever you are at the centre point between North and South Meridian is called the Zenith. If you've heard of the Nadir – and its not often used – that's simply the point opposite the Zenith on the other side of the Earth. Zenith should not be confused as the point around which stars rotate which are the North and South Celestial Poles – Zenith is generally only used to find specific stars from your specific location.

South/North Celestial Poles are the spots in the sky that lie directly above the South and North Poles. As if a skewer were passed through a slightly flattened globe and carried on outward into space in both North and South directions indefinitely.
What this means is that Meridian and Zenith are relative positions relating to you – not absolute positions such as the South and North Celestial Poles. Two more terms of interest to star gazing and astronomy are Altitude and Azimuth. The altitude of a celestial body (star, planet, etc.) is the angle, measured in degrees, above the nearest horizon. Think of altitude as the vertical angle for an object. Azimuth is the horizontal direction or bearing of an object in the sky.

It sets the line along which the altitude is measured. So for instance, A star on your horizon has an altitude of zero degrees (0o) A star at your zenith has an altitude of 90 degrees (90o) . Think of each star as a plane on a runway taking off, it starts on the ground but climbs higher and higher by degrees as it takes off which is its Azimuth, and Altitude measures how far above the Horizon it is and where it is in relation to your Zenith.
You can see any stars with altitudes between 0 to 90.
A star with an altitude of less than 0 degrees is a star below the horizon and it cannot be seen (at your location at that time).
A star with an altitude of more than 90 degrees is actually past your zenith on the other side of the sky and its real altitude should be measured from that (opposite) horizon. Altitude and Azimuth are used to locate, measure and track the movement of specific stars and planets. Also used are the terms Declination and Right Ascension, co-ordinates given as two sets of numbers which represent imaginary lines, like latitude and longitude on the earth's surface projected out into space for even more precision.

A Brief Note on Longitude and Latitude

A name that will come up a lot in Astronomy, and this talk, is Hipparchus. As chief librarian at the great library in Alexandria (dedicated to the Nine Muses), Egypt, (destroyed by several fires in the course of 300 years) he undoubtedly had access to huge troves of the world's ancient knowledge. Longitude and Latitude are a system designed by Hipparchus to measure the absolute location of something. Longitude runs from North to South, and Latitude from East to West. Hipparchus also invented a scale for measuring the magnitude of the star's brightness, as well as discovered the Precession of the Equinoxes – both of which I will mention in a bit.

Lets start with some basics. What can we see from Earth? Planets. Stars. Comets. Meteors. Some Nebulae. Constellations. Signs of the Zodiac.

The word Planet is derived from a Greek term meaning Wandering Stars. The Greeks named each planet mainly according to its brightness and colour, the name given to them being mostly associated with heat and light. Hence Venus' brilliant white colouration earned it the name Phosphoros ("the light-bearing one") and Mars' orange-red colour was associated with fire, so it was given the name Pyroeis ("the fiery one") and so on.

In the fourth century BC, the Greek philosopher Aristotle converted these descriptive names into the names of Greek gods (and one goddess), each planet's attributes roughly matching those of its chosen god. The Romans later acquired these Greek names and translated them into their own equivalent gods, and these are the names that we still use today; hence the Greek goddess Aphrodite became the Roman goddess Venus and the Greek god Ares became the Roman god Mars, etc
*T*he five brightest planets – Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn – have been known since ancient times and can easily be seen with the naked eye if one knows when and where to look. They are visible for much of the year, except for short periods of time when they are too close to the Sun to observe.

The location of a planet (or any other celestial body) in your local night sky depends upon several factors: the constellation in which it is positioned, your geographical latitude and longitude, the local season and the date and time at which you observe. You can only see 6 planets from Earth with the naked eye – 5 are easy, the 6th requires exceptional eyesight. The one that is hardest to see is Uranus, and that's not because you're sitting on it but because it's a very long way away. Trying to find planets in a vast sky studded with shiny things is not easy. To find these suckers its helps to know about the Ecliptic.

The Ecliptic

Planets are easy to find in the night sky if you know what the Ecliptic is.
Imagine you're lying on the ground. Now imagine the sun coming up in the East in the morning, travelling up and into the sky, reaching its zenith and then sinking down into the West. Trace an imaginary arc linking the two. You can do the same with the Moon. The closer you are to the Equator the higher this Arc will be – but this Arc is the Ecliptic. If we imagined a protractor resting on the horizon and marking the degrees of Arc from 0-90 we get a better idea of Azimuth which was mentioned before.

The Sun seems to move against the background stars as seen from the orbiting Earth. The ecliptic is the path the Sun appears to trace through the stars.
This apparent movement of the Sun though this is an illusion caused by our point of view from a rotating sphere – the Sun does not orbit around the Earth but the Earth orbits the Sun as Copernicus, Galileo, Kepler, Brahe, and others proved in what is known as Heliocentric Theory – an idea that history first credits Aristotle having and an idea that was met with fierce resistance by the Catholic Church when Galileo built and used his own telescopes to observe the planets, see craters on the moon, and made calculations that flew in the face of accepted Doctrine to prove that the Sun was orbited by the Earth not the other way around. The Catholic Church, known for its stubborn ignorance, did not accept this fact until 350 years later.

The Ecliptic is useful because the 6 planets, moon, sun and stars, closely follow it. If you know the path of the Moon then you can often find the planets somewhere along it. Kind of like a hula hoop rotating around the Earth's waist on an angle with spheres dangling off it. They will never be too far from the Ecliptic. We can't see the Path of the Sun because the Earth rotates taking us with it but we can observe its path as the Rising and Setting of the Sun and Moon.

Just Quickly: How to determine a satellite from a star or planet.

Generally only stars twinkle. Stars and planets won't move relative to each other on any given night, they will move across the sky collectively because of earth's rotation. Satellites move steadily across the sky. You will only usually see them the first couple of hours after sunset or the last couple of hours before sunrise. A satellite is usually only visible for about 30 seconds – 3 minutes, before it's orbit takes it to a location to where it cannot reflect sunlight to a stationary observer.

How to determine a star from a planet.

Stars are so distant that they appear as points of light in the night sky, and they appear to twinkle (or scintillate) because of turbulence in the Earth's atmosphere. The planets can be distinguished from the stars because their position changes slightly against the background stars from one night to the next, and their brightness varies in a regular cycle over a period of time. Even in earths most powerful telescopes a star appears as little more than a point. The naked eye planets, on the other hand, are close enough to the Earth to form a sizeable (but nonetheless tiny) disk in the night sky and consequently, when they are well above the horizon, the planets shine with a more steady light than the stars.

Also note that stars generate their own light via internal nuclear fusion while planets do not, shining because they reflect a portion of sunlight back into space.
So what do the planets look like from earth?

Venus is by far the easiest planet to see with the naked eye. It shines with a brilliant white light. At its most brilliant it can even cast faint shadows on the ground.

Jupiter appears bright white and is a very obvious sight in the night sky. Like Venus, it can be seen in twilight, and it always shines brighter than the brightest star in the night sky – but even though it is many times bigger, it is always outshone by Venus. Jupiter can also cast faint shadows at its brightest.

Mars is easily recognised since it has the most distinctive coloration of all the naked eye planets. Although it is popularly called 'The Red Planet', it rarely appears red to the naked eye; in fact, it varies from pale orange-yellow to orange-red, depending upon its distance from the Earth and therefore, its brightness.

Mercury is generally more difficult to spot than the other bright planets, appears white or pinkish in colour. it rises low in the sky so for the same reason we get red sky at sunsets we get a pink mercury.

Saturn appears pale yellow to the naked eye. Although never appearing as bright as the other naked eye planets, it is nonetheless obvious when its position is known. At its brightest, Saturn outshines all of the stars except Sirius.

Uranus is just visible to the naked eye when at its brightest, but only when seen from dark, non-light polluted skies; observers in city or town locations will probably have difficulty seeing it without optical aid. It is the most distant planet visible to the naked eye.

Moving onto the stars in general and in particular Constellations.

Hipparchus the Greek came up with a system for measuring the brightness of a star. He gave the brightest stars the factor of 1. and the dimmest stars the factor of 6. each factor was 2.5 times brighter or dimmer than the star before or after – meaning factor 1 stars were 100,000 times brighter than factor 6 stars. As science and technology caught up we discovered there were billions of stars and this category grew longer in both directions with far dimmer stars and far brighter. Minus and plus were added, with minus meaning brighter and plus meaning dimmer. Sirius – the Dog Star has a factor of -2.5 which is the brightest non-local star visible from earth, while the moon has -12 and the sun -26. Yes the system would probably make more sense to modern sensibilities if it were back to front.

Constellations.

There are 88 constellations agreed upon for convenience.
Constellations are formed of bright stars which appear close to each other on the sky, but are really far apart in space. The shapes you see all depend on your point of view. Many societies saw patterns among the stars with gods and goddesses or stories from their culture.

Most of the constellations with which we are familiar come from ancient Greece. But other civilisations created their own patterns in the sky based on stories and people that were important to them.

For example:
In ancient Turkey, dated to around 12,000 BC, archaeologists have uncovered a site with massive stone pillars carved with various animals. Known as Gobekli Tepe – it pre-dates the oldest known civilisation of Sumerian by some 8,000 years. Astro-archaeologists have identified the animals on these pillars, such as Vultures, Scorpions, Foxes, Boars, Snakes, Birds, as having shapes that fit ancient constellations and their collective grouping on the stones can be matched quite distinctly with a map of the stars in the sky. Our own Thrasz symbol is most closely associated with the Sun, and is a symbol like that of the Swastika that has been drawn for tens of thousands of years – not unlike the hypnotic fascination the ancient world had with the seven stars of the Pleiades which appears in virtually every culture as far back as neolithic man.

Among the ancient people of Europe, (Nordic) the night sky was a mysterious realm sometimes viewed as a magnificent World Tree that stretched across the sky, where the stars were fruit upon its spreading branches, and the Milky Way was its massive roots that extended down to the Earth. This comprised their universe and their understanding of its powers.

Aboriginal people of Australia have been viewing the skies for 40-50,000 years with their own star constellations and meanings for each tribe. Many involve the Milky Way.

Dark sky features such as dark nebulae — clouds of interstellar dust from stars that exploded long ago that obscure light from the stars behind them — are also more prominent in the Southern Hemisphere. The darkest of the dark nebulae is a feature called the Coalsack. Tucked in near the Southern Cross, the Coalsack forms the head of our best known Indigenous constellation, the Emu in the Sky.

The Milky Way

The Milky Way is the galaxy that contains our Solar System. Its name ‘milky’ is derived from its appearance as a dim glowing band arching across the night sky in which the naked eye cannot distinguish individual stars. Milky Way is a translation of the Latin via lactea from the Greek galaxias kyklos “milky circle”. It appears as a band because its disk-shape is viewed from within it from Earth. Our mate Galileo discovered it was made up of separate stars in 1610 and up until the 1920s most astronomers thought all the stars in the universe were contained in the Milky Way. It took Edwin Hubble (of Hubble Telescope fame) to show that the Milky Way is just one of billions of galaxies.

The 12 Signs of the Zodiac

Like the sun and the planets, the zodiac constellations all lie in the ecliptic, so they’re visible from every place on Earth where you can see the sun rise and set. This explains why they feature so prominently in ancient cultures.
Going round the Ecliptic will be the twelve fixed star constellations of Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius and Pisces. — the ones we’re all familiar with from astrology.

If you look up on a dark night, you should be able to see at least four zodiac constellations at any one time, lying across the ecliptic.

The zodiac constellations span the entire sky (i.e. as a ring around the earth), so we never face all 12 of them at once. During the night, as the earth spins, each of these constellations will sink in the western sky, while others will rise in the east. All up, if you were to watch the sky for an entire night, you’d see up to ten of the twelve zodiac constellations. The few that you can’t see are in the area of the sky blocked out by the sun.

Cultures throughout the world believed and believe that constellations, stars, planets and other celestial objects such as the sun and moon had the power to influence human beings and events.

Grimoires and Almanacs

This is where the grimoire comes in – probably developing parallel to the Almanac.

ALMANAC

An almanac is an annual publication that includes information such as weather forecasts, farmers’ planting dates, tide tables, and tabular information often arranged according to the calendar. Astronomical data and various statistics are found in almanacs, such as the times of the rising and setting of the sun and moon, eclipses, hours of full tide, church festivals, and so on.

GRIMOIRES

A grimoire /grɪmˈwɑr/ is a textbook of magic. From the French Gramairre meaning a book written in Latin late in the 18th century the word came to mean exclusively magical books.

Such books typically include instructions on how to create magical objects like talismans and amulets, how to perform magical spells, charms and divination and also how to summon or invoke supernatural entities such as angels, spirits, and demons.[1] In many cases, the books themselves are also believed to be imbued with magical powers, though in many cultures, other sacred texts that are not grimoires, such as the Bible, have also been believed to have supernatural properties intrinsically; in this manner while all books on magic could be thought of as grimoires, not all magical books should.[2]

While the term grimoire is originally European and many Europeans throughout history, particularly ceremonial magicians and cunning folk, have made use of grimoires, the historian Owen Davies noted that similar books can be found all across the world, ranging from Jamaica to Sumatra,[3] and he also noted that the first grimoires could be found not only in Europe but in the Ancient Near East
Astrology Based Grimoires

PICATRIX

A huge number of books have been written on the subject, one of the most famous is the Picatrix, an Arabic manuscript dealing with occult magic and astrology sometime in the 10-11th century. It has an Arabic name Ghayat al Hakim which translates to Aim of the Sage – or Goal of the Wise. Picatrix was compiled from some 200 other sources and explains not only how to create and ensoul magical statues and talismans, but even speaks of whole cities constructed using the principles of astrological magic. Book IV chapter 2 for instance relates How the vigour of the spirit of the Moon is drawn into things here below, and by which the seven planets ought to be invoked. Chapter 6. How incenses of the stars ought to be made, and certain compounds needed in this science.

AGRIPPA

It was influential on later magicians such as Agrippa and his Three Books of the Occult. In the 15th century the famous magician Agrippa wrote that the celestial spheres and the stars had specific impact and influence at certain times, and that they cast down rays of influence (similar to light beams) that engaged with plants animals, stones and the elements. And that upon cutting open such objects, there would be displayed a sigil representative of the star or planetary energy from which it was derived – this is how many of the classical symbols of alchemy and occult magic particularly those dealing with demons and angels – came about. The seals of Solomon popularised by medieval Arabic scholars in the 17th century for instance were influenced by Agrippa's work in the 1500's – such symbolism often inferring a command over entities through the use of sacred energies from stars, planets and indeed those contained in certain plants, stones, elements etc.

It is a vast understatement to say that the history of the stars and magic spans hundreds of thousands of books through thousands of cultures and like many other subjects on magic is near infinite in scope.

Now lets discuss a bit about our most famous constellation in Australia, CRUX:

Crux is the smallest of the 88 constellations and was until the 16th century grouped as part of Centaurus.
Crux was once visible in the Northern Hemisphere, but around the time of Christ disappeared into the Southern Hemisphere.
Gamma forms the top of the cross. On the left arm is Beta. Opposite arm is Delta. The bottom of the cross is Acrux or Alpha Crucis. Between Delta and Alpha you can make out a fifth star called Epsilon Crucis (what our mate was referring to with his nick name Penny M Ess Cru Alpha Crucis (Acrux) is the principal star and a splendid binary. The combined visual magnitude of both stars results in a magnitude of 0.72. The stars are 320 light years away, and each is approximately one and a half to twice the size of our Sun.

Beta Crucis (Mimosa) is the brightest star of the group, a blue-white giant (nearly five times the Sun's size) with a visual magnitude of 1.25. The star is an estimated 580 light years away, and has a luminosity of nearly 8000. The star is a variable

Gamma Crucis (Gacrux) forms the top of the cross. The reported distance may be erroneous; it's been calculated from the visual and absolute magnitudes. The resulting parallax is so large that it should be measurable.

Delta Crucis is the western arm, very similar in size and distance to alpha Crucis, and part of the star cluster mentioned above. The star is a beta-CMa type variable.
Finding South with Southern Cross – stand so pointer stars (Alpha Centauri /Beta Centauri) are on your left hand side, that is, to the left of Crux. The top of the cross and bottom form a line. Follow that line 4 and a half times the length of Crux downward from the bottom of the cross. That is very close to the south celestial pole.

You can use the point between Alpha Centauri and Beta Centauri to make another line downward that intersects the line made by Crux. Straight down to the ground from that point is very close to South. The South pole is marked by a dim star called Sigma Octantis which because it is so close to Australia is sometimes called Polaris Australis. It usually too dim to see on its own but can be located within a small trapezoid of stars. The North Star at this time is Polaris. The Sun rises in the East sets in the West, as does the Moon, thereby it easy to discern at night, using the Moon and Crux, the cardinal directions that you can use to locate your bearings.

Precession of the Equinoxes

Our mate Hipparchus is again credited with the discovery of the Precession of the Equinox – the phenomena that determines which 'Age' we are in – I'm sure you've heard the occult references to being in the Age of Capricorn or the Age of Aquarius. Lets break it down.

EQUINOX

Equinox – The word itself has several related definitions. The oldest meaning is the day when daytime and night are of approximately equal duration – In Australia – Vernal Equinox (September) Autumnal Equinox (March)

PRECESSION

When he was first compiling his famous star catalogue in the year 129 BCE the Greek astronomer Hipparchus noticed that the positions of the stars did not match up with the Babylonian measurements that he was consulting. According to these Chaldean records, the stars had shifted in a rather systematic way, which indicated to Hipparchus that it was not the stars themselves that had moved but the frame of reference – i.e. the Earth itself. He'd noticed the earths wobble. It wobbles because it is pulled between the gravitational pulls of the moon and the sun causing it to bulge in the middle and wobble. Slowly changing which stars we see.

Such a motion is called precession and consists of a cyclic wobbling in the orientation of Earth's axis of rotation. Currently, this annual motion is about 1 degree every 71.6 years. The process is slow, but cumulative, and takes roughly 26,000 years for a full precession to occur.

What does this mean? It means if you could see the North Celestial Pole sticking out of the top of the Earth you would see that pole trace a cone shape in space as the rotation of the Earth is not perfect – and as earths orientation changes, this over time is what moves different stars into the position of North Star, which Polaris presently occupies in the North Hemisphere and Sigma Octanti presently occupies in the Southern Hemisphere.

The star next in line to become the North Star is Gamma Cephei – also known as Errai around 4000 AD. At the moment the brightness of the South Star is too piss weak for it to be any use which is why Crux is used to determine the South Celestial Pole. However, over the next 8000 years the South Star will get brighter and brighter entering Carine and Vela and Puppis better known as the hull, deck and sail of Jason's ship the Argo – Naos also known as Zeta Puppis is a star in the Puppis constellation. Around 9000 AD the South Star will be aligned with Delta Carrine which will shine far brighter than Polaris ever has.

In about 13,000 years 'Vega' in the Lyra constellation will be the new North Star. 13,000 years later it will return to Polaris. This wobble has historically been referred to as the Precession of the Equinoxes.

Thus, while today the star Polaris lies approximately at the north celestial pole, this will change over time, and other stars will become the "north star". Secondly, the position of the Earth in its orbit around the Sun during the solstices, equinoxes, or other seasonal times slowly changes.

Age of Equinoxes.

Roughly every 2,150 years, the sun's position at the time of the March, or vernal, equinox moves in front of a new Zodiac constellation. Let me explain. The earth rotates around the sun taking around 365 days per cycle. But The sun and the earth both revolve around in a bigger cycle too – and every 2150 years the Sun, which moves in a much slower cycle, is in line with one of the 12 constellations of the Zodiac that surround us. That is, it is directly opposite it, or in the House of Pisces as it presently is. Let me demonstrate. Form a ring. Okay now I will slowly walk around the inside edge of the ring, while you, walk around me. You are the Earth; I am the Sun and each of these people represent one of the Zodiac constellations. It is very similar to an analog clock with the shorthand marking hours turning around the face much slower than the minute hand.

Each Age is said to last for roughly 2150 years.
In the occult – Each Great Age is associated with a major evolutionary and cultural advancement of the species. –
AGE OF TAURUS
CONTROL OF EARTH, AGRICULTURE 4700 BC- 2500 BC

AGE OF GEMINI
+/- 6900 BC – 4700 BC

COMMUNICATION & WRITING

AGE OF ARIES
WARS, WARFARE, VIOLENCE AND CONQUEST
+/- 2500 BC – 300 BC

AGE OF PISCES
THE BEGINNING OF THE BIG RELIGIONS
+/- 300 BC – 1900 AD ???? (This is the big debate)
{Hence the use of the Fish to denote Christ}

AGE OF AQUARIUS
ENLIGHTENMENT AND PERSONAL FREEDOM
[The end of the Age of Pisces and the dawn of the Age of Aquarius remain in dispute. The Age of Aquarius should begin approximately 2150 AD. This concerns Aeonics, for which there are many models from many occultists.]

The goal of God/The Universe is to create a perfect human being through our evolution of consciousness. At the beginning of each new age, the tendencies from history are reset and replayed. These tendencies are reintroduced with the values of the new Astrological or Great Age in a continuous cycle.

These precession cycles will continue till the goal of the divine is achieved. There are negative as well as positive traits to each Astrological sign and Mayan Great Age. It's up to us to figure out which we choose to live by…the positive or the negative. What we choose will be our experience.

ON BUILDING A PHYSICAL COMPOUND

[This was my response to the question posed by XE / OA22 on the benefits of building a physical Temple to THEM within Australia on 4th July 2007. As this issue has re-arisen I have re-affirmed my opinion on this matter with amendments where necessary.]

REASONS FOR BUILDING A COMPOUND: OTHERS

Many groups and cults have sought to isolate themselves from the world by building a commune or compound to achieve the task of solitude. Isolation is sought for many reasons but most common of which is control.

How do so many perceive the world around them? Some, very rare individuals and groups remain blissfully ignorant of the daily onslaught of propaganda – but most people, and especially those THEM can expect to deal with – are influenced to a considerable degree through media. Newspapers, TV, Emails, the Internet, Books, Pamphlets, Advertising, Billboards, Signs, Shop fronts, Logos, Symbols, T-Shirts, CD's, Food Products all carry messages; alternate messages to what most cults, whose dialectic and purpose is often extremely narrow-minded (due to being an operation of and for an ego) want their members to see, hear, or be influenced by.

This reaction to screen media by isolating a person from the full quantity of concepts/sensations to be processed and available to immediate perception is never a humanitarian drive to save people from unsavoury influences – never an unselfish act to protect people from harmful influences – but a reaction that stems largely from an individuals (usually the ego doing the enshrining via a cult following) desperation to save themselves, or more accurately, to preserve both the particular geometry that makes-up, and the geometry that is important to – the ego in charge of the operation. As members of THEM you are all highly fluent in the machinations of building maintaining and operating a cult or temple. But my concern is not to re-relate these machinations but to itemise some of them to make a point. I will be extremely brief in going over the processes to familiarise you with key points for the summary of this essay.

The inherent weakness of the ego is in its narrow-mindedness and its extreme fragility. Many gurus seek to separate people from influences that would interfere in the brain-washing (literally washing the brain with the same waves/frequency/habits/repetitions aurally/sonically/physically/psychically etc. day after day) they inculcate upon them which would lessen the chance of complete acceptance by the person of the cult and its values – and thus weaken total control over that person. This fear of lack of control is among one of the characteristics of an operation by the ego. The cultist ruled by ego is unable to face the prospect of their desire to impose control being challenged by other influences, by the totality of the world and its currents also each seeking control in a fashion over a person, and so seeks to squirrel away its members in an isolated place where they can be kept and tended to like livestock without being challenged.

The loss of new and divergent media gradually breaks a person's resistance to programming down, creates restrictions that limit action and word to the detriment of self-preservation, and may even make them completely obedient to the cult. Books, and the deep devotion people spend absorbing their contents work on a similar albeit minor type of level – whereupon if one book grabs you, it is a short step to purchasing the entire available collection to immerse yourself further. We all know how this is done so we will require no details, nor further details from this form. You may skip to the next section unless my thoughts on cultism interest you. A cult's cosmology or philosophy if you like is often as fragile in logic as the ego controlling its emission.

That is the very reason why the form arises: as a carrier. The ego is simple, idiotically so, in its aim – which is always control. Control being related to power. But control shares a ratio with hard work if you don't start the process with any power. The ego wants to go from A to A. But it can't usually do that – suffering from an inferiority complex is the reason many egos create a cult – as an exoteric monument to their inner exasperation and madness. Getting from A to B to C, to D is all hard work that will be resented because the ego only wants to get to A. But to build a cult some kind of form is needed to carry the essential tools of the cult – one set being narrative, the other set being those related to persuasion. You also need to standard set of accoutrements that go along with creating a form to entice others toward you; you need a catchy name, a catchy purpose, laws and regulations or a code of conduct, a place to gather, and the innate ability to make others feel special/unique.

For the temperament of a follower the energy required for these lengthy processes of manipulation is out of bounds – but this level of energy is all is too easy for a charismatic leader ruled by the thermonuclear energy of the ego.

Once you have everyone feeling special and unique – and this is important – devoted to the leader who feeds their ego what it wants to hear – you have successfully plied the collective ego of the cult with enough delusion to act freely without the necessity of yourself having to maintain and sustain the facade of whatever form you built. The form will then stand alone and requires no further decoration or construction – it is a finished monument of automatic worship. One can then largely abandon the speeches, songs, and celebratory projection of the Coming, or stories of the Great UFO Journey, or the Age of Aquarius to your followers – who will happily carry on the delusion (without batteries required) in your name, for your name, while you snort cocaine off the wet fucked buttocks of the latest male or female conquest to join your group. With a practical carte blanche to act as you please, the cult is a success.

Congratulations – you've built yet another stale mediocre shrine to the carnal immaturity and lack of imagination so common of the ego and created the greatest most seductive trap of many a would-be satanic magician. A dead end.
This creation is the epitome of selfishness at the cycle of expense of other human beings; a form that has filtered down in stunted maturity to parody the practices of the Church ingrained in so many. A form so much a part of us we are rarely conscious it exists – but act as parrots of the Church in repeating this process ad infinitum in nearly everything we do.

THE REASONS FOR NOT BUILDING A COMPOUND: OURS

The original plan (c.2003) was to make enough money via infiltrating the good books of publishing houses with our works, and to pool our funds from our respective 'jobs' to purchase land and a house somewhere isolated and near the bush in Australia to begin ‘re-enacting’ the literary cult of the ONA. Some speculative persons have perceived this reaction to ONA to be the point of the ONA, all along. As time has gone by, and we have discussed, this would be an action that would not just set us and THEM back considerably, but the Sinister itself.

In creating a physical representation of the Order’s cultus – wherein we train others to chant, perform group rituals, induct others into the Sinister, and congregate to wear black cloaks under a moonless night, not only are we creating a self-contained and limited expression of Life but we are once again, like so many of our peers, enshrining Human-Centered Geometry and setting up the conditions for failure. Enacting once again, the schema of the Church and its hierarchical madness of degrees, and laws, and rules and restrictions – when as we all know, Form is not restricted to this myopic use. To live the literary cultus would be both foolhardy and dangerous.
Firstly, because as I have said it would reaffirm the use of forms by the Magian as a Sinister practice, i.e. reaffirm that the Magian have dictated how this war is going to play out, that the Sinister are defeated in their ingenuity to get around these entrapments, and as a final insult let the Sinister design their traps for them! MAGIC must be freed from its imprisonment in form – the magician must remember what came before crystallisation.

The idyll of such a cult sounds great on paper – but we each know the difference between paper and projection. If not a Satanic Compound we should become an Esoteric School and what can come of that practice and focus of infinitesimal little forms and practices endlessly divided into categories, concepts and constructs, all packaged tightly and neatly into colours, shapes and sizes – but a dire regression to the Occult? Wherein do passwords, secret meetings, identification, security cameras and systems, patrolling dogs, armed watchers, spies, informants, drugs, sex, paranoia, suspicion, squabbling, bitching, boasting, worshipping acolytes; a cycle of repetition and living trapped within the crystals, within the Narrative created for us, to explain us and charitably provided for us to explain ourselves to them, by the Magian, work for US? At one time, in one form or another, perhaps. But now?

Moreover, to seek to isolate people within one or even a handful of forms is to repeat the Magian program. We do not want people to run from the world, nor hide from the world dressed in black cloaks exalting the Dark Gods through thinly-disguised prayer!
But to face it in all its terrifying glory. On all its wonderful levels. Ours is not a group that fears the challenge of the Magian’s presses or its media – let others read what they will, let them be influenced, just let them see influence. We ask only that they read also our studies on the context of such presses, their design, purpose and relativity.

We will never achieve disconnected consciousness while we trot out the same tired cliches the Magian has been pinning us under for years. In such uniforms, with such footsteps, repeating those words, we resemble only our enemy's fantasy and enact our enemies sympathetic magic over which their grasp of the form of Satanism is extreme. We're not dolls XE; we don't dance to the puppet-masters tunes. We faced the Abyss together and saw what/that it lies beneath. We have a duty to preserve that terror and beauty, honestly and accurately. And what is accurate is beyond the clumsy and sloppy measurements the world fumbles with for its current interpretations, especially where language and passage are concerned. What is accurate is beyond the walls of any Temple or Order however grand its oak-panels and altars – beyond the rudimentary inversing of what they lay before us.

From altering perception to releasing consciousness from the skull; dissolving forms in acid and vitriol and seeing the connexion between the universes parallel; how the macrocosm is the microcosm is the macrocosm is the other and the same; how the stars above are the cells within in one hideous-for-now loop; perceiving and understanding the extent and danger of the Magian, knowing how to destroy them once and for all.

These things cannot be taught by enshrining ourselves within walls, or by limiting the world for others through the re-enactment of a cultus – however pagan. What we do and what we know cannot be bound by walls or captured in ritual; especially the rituals of others; it is living and lives beneath, behind, and beyond. It is a drawing down of something yet to be familiar to our time, but which will one day be. The best way to see it is to SEE it. And isolation from the fullness of the world and from the fullness of perception to pursue an idyllic satanic fantasy will render the chance of genuine perception null. All factors, all facets, all dragons of the Magian must be accessible; those within, those without and those between. The enemy and its movements/monuments must be studied; not hidden from sight and mind. Meditated upon, embraced and dissected, not mediated through indirect experience and hearsay.

The Sinisterion must remain aware and cogent of the factors streaming from the Magian Wyrd, see and recognise the outer forms of the tools being used and the esoteric context and motive behind them, and if not the factors from the Magian then from the rivers that run beneath synchronicity. The Sinisterion should be able to see freely what is influencing others, what they are reading, seeing, hearing, observe the media they are being controlled with and identify how and by whom, break down the concepts being introduced and played out; so, they may, if necessary, formulate appropriate "counter"-measures. Wherein "counter" does not mean to respond in kind inversely – but to attack and weaken both the effectiveness of the original measure, countermeasure and any kind of measure.

But you cannot hope to Gather while Solidarity remains in tatters. That is why the Temple of THEM operates the way it does; it works outside of the Magian's magic, outside of their illusions, whilst using their technology against them. It doesn't repeat the same tired cycle of giving someone a spell-book and new cosmology to study and work through, filling their heads with mountains of semantic and categorical information perchance that with enough of it they can become some awesome occult mage with supernatural powers – because the powers described are usually non-existent, fantasy, or described in Magian forms using Magian language – the wet dream of failures who dared not return without something to show for all the time they spent on demonic worship. You can dabble with your incense and say whatever you like during ritual after ritual – while the Magian's forms bear down upon the world relentlessly and religiously despite your best efforts.

So many just waste their time muttering incantations and worry about burning the right coloured candles – in painful ignorance of the true scope of the enemy of Satanism.

Meanwhile the world grinds them down into dust; they get older and get treated the way the Magian wants people of our age to be treated; predetermining the trends and attitudes toward the various sectors and stages they artificially dictate with arbitrary fashions and fads where once tradition and initiation lead the wise way. Their poisonous deafening cacophony of sickening magic controls our destiny by controlling perception, and our chance to break ourselves and others free of it. The short and sweet of it is this: teenagers (quite a new marketing-based term, 200 years ago childhood didn't exist) are the most likely demographic you will encounter looking into Satanism. If they're dissatisfied, and they usually are, they're going to look for the "darkest" books, the most "satanic" groups to join, and they're all going to be missing the entire fucking point (and weapons being used) of this War.

What's the first thing people do when an animal at the zoo is born? They give it a name. They give Everything names – once the name is attached, culture takes over. We all know the difference between the named and the nameless, wordless, ecstasy. Wherein magic has no name and no form – no causality. It is an operation with laws unto itself as is the supernatural wherein what occurs usually occurs without a known or knowable name. Once it has a name, then its controllable – attachable – alterable – arguable… a form, with counter-forms, that slots neatly into pre-prepared categories for forms which are already given their moral context by other categories, over-simplification, arrogance, and the basic and ever-limiting restrictions of the human language to define/refine something.

Thus, Lucifer has changed so many times over the centuries because of his naming, a victim of endless subsequent attachments and become an ineffectual idol thrown to the anti-Christians to paw at who perform the Churches work anyway. Then of course we can witness those glimmers of US – in those who tried to move away from the stereotypical Satan and Lucifer but who failed nonetheless because they underestimated the scope of the problem – which is that most just fall right back into another form with all the right words in all the right places so harmoniously that they become seamless conspirators with the Magian empire.

THEM cannot do that. Nor can we seek to buy castles like the IOT to practice sorcery and repeat the performance of past magical acolytes. Nor can we bind together under a symbol or word or flag or standard or banner. Nothing causal fits, nothing symbolic works, but the concept of a numinous symbol beyond representation to represent potential – and which in the causal is void. We are causally separated in time and space and yet unified under the same concepts – a collective growth of consciousness appearing in a large concentration at a time when perception is mature enough to begin consciously embracing it. This is a phenomenon happening beyond the confines of a Church or any two-bit resemblance to one, beyond any one culture or set of beliefs, and despite the best efforts of the Magian to contain it.

A curious elixir of cynicism and optimism in just the right doses and just the right places is re-invigorating the War and those fighting it. Our works are making their way into hardcover and thus lasting impressions via books right across the world. Thousands of people are reading, watching, relying on us because we are different, because we are unique, and because we say we are the voice of THEM that issues forth beyond the contrivances of the ego and in the inhuman utteral pitch and frequency of the Dark Gods.

Our Temple is in the acausal, in the potential; it is magic – it cannot be contained in physicality by us because it does not come from us, or just for us – and it cannot be torn down – it comes from a different place, a place where there are no buildings, no bombs, no way to erase its architecture or its persistent voice. It is the same collective impulse toward human solidarity that has always struggled for emergence but been denied its freedom to thrive. Whether fault lies in the ego, lack of context, or the clever machinations of the Magian designed and re-designed to counter such threats to its dominion – I won't speculate on in detail. But now this impulse has come to us – six magical self's – at a time of remarkable collective synchronicity and has possibly been given its greatest chance yet.

We continue to influence, instruct and impart knowledge and insight that saves time, shatters illusions, and causes others to Remember; to look deeper, further and more carefully into the worlds around them and the worlds between them. Any person can see for themselves what can be achieved when humans act together – see what is held together by an endless stream of cars every morning and night – and as our voices grow in unison the external architecture of THEM will make itself visible. As the prophetic ONA intuited – an individual has become individuals – individuals a group

– a group many groups – and now we, the Sinisterion are very close to becoming a culture. Let's not damage our good work, our collective work by regressing to using forms in the manner allowed, manner proscribed, manner dictated by the Magian; nor to giving them everything they desire in defeat on a platter via convention and entrapment in their crystallizations by catering to classical human-centred geometries of worship – but to continue dissolving the illusions above 'the great citadel' that lies beneath.

Great patience is required now: we are only a few years in but with so much appearing to have been accomplished remember that we still have more than twenty-five years of our charter to go. As was once told me: "Recognise the narrative in which you find yourself and which influences us to make mistakes.
Nurture awareness of the world ethos and act accordingly."

This reply to a query by another member of THEM at that time were written in 2007 and published in 2009 in OA31. It's now 2013 and we are now 7 years hence from THEM's creation/Inception in 2006 – which Temple's Aeonic Strategy to lay the foundation for a Sinister Illuminati will expire in 2036.

Our ideas have spread far and wide and united many. We have members across the world, across a very broad geographic and demographic base. True to our original premise we have attained reputation power and influence and most importantly, shared it. THEM's various forums, websites and publishing house are no longer centralised under myself but owned and run by other individuals. One in the USA. One in Germany. One in Italy. This has been achieved by doing exactly what you insist is a sickness of social atomization (I.S.S, our sign-off = In Sinister Solidarity) with something of a twist. Whilst stripping others of culture, tradition etc and just leaving them there would lead to nihilism, despair and rich pickings for opportunists willing to fill the gaps – we have made a clan/culture out of deconstructing all of these things to the point where nothing stands, – is therefore equal – and we may therefore implement, enjoy and accept the Forms that we choose to treat as valid as a dynamic sorcery using the will, the ego and the self with equilibrium and understanding of the function of each with the full understanding that all forms are is means, and only ever temporary truths.

A SINISTER BARTER SYSTEM

Imagine you want to trade your large amethyst crystal for a handful of owl feathers and a bag of lesser gemstones to carve runes. They live down the street so it's not a problem, you make the trade easily.

What if it was with someone in another state or country? Now problems arise. Let's say you don't want to use money – or don't have the money to buy the gems and feathers to make the transaction but agree to trade your items with the other party. You package the amethyst with assurances from the other party that they have or will send their items as agreed and wait for the mail. Surprise! it comes, and you and the other party are very happy not to have been ripped off by each other – (opportunism) and trust each another enough to continue trading. You have to use money to buy the packaging, insurance, tracking and to post the items – but you feel a little cleaner knowing you didn't have to exchange money with the other party, just the third party of the post office.

But what if it didn't come? What then? You email and email "Trusty64″ (the other party) but no response. Days go by. Weeks. Shit. You've been ripped.
For a barter system, two people trade items with no insurance but word alone. This means one party can send an item but has no guarantee that the other party will. Parties don't have assurance that posting is simultaneous either. So, one stands to get ripped off and the other gets both items.

Money's role in transactions of trade is therefore acting as security. If you send a payment via PayPal, you can claim your money back if the item doesn't arrive. If the other person doesn't want PayPal breathing down their neck or locking their account while it sorts things out they have incentive to trade fairly. And somewhere along the line, a third party is involved in distance-based trade, and so is the agency of money. Almost every way I look at it, it seems like money, is inevitable. Is there usefulness in developing a trade system between members of the Sinisterion to minimise reliance on cash transaction? Is it possible to create such a system – or must we rely on money? If we can create such a system, how to structure it? Such a system implies trust but is itself fraught with other difficulties.

Proposed below is a hypothetical system of trade between two parties using a third. But it seems to gain self-sufficiency from the system we might as well advance ideas on a sub-economy. Such a system would be easy if not for the opportunism of some users to abuse the system and so the problems with barter/trade lie with assurance/insurance.

Hypothetical Sinisterion Barter System:

Basic scenario. Two people have something they want to trade. They use a third party who brokers the deal and keeps both parties honest. The third party must be trusted and impartial. The two parties do not send the physical trade items to the third party as they would have to re-post them in respective directions.

Instead, the two parties send some form of an insurance payment – each party paying to the third party via PayPal what the item is worth (agreed upon in writing by the two parties). At this point, and presently, to me, it seems unavoidable that some form of established money is used within the system- suggestions on how to overcome this?

Ignoring this for the meanwhile:

Ideally- Both parties get their item in post (May be a wait for both parties to be at this point) Once both parties are happy, they let third party know who promptly issues both insurance payments back minus what PayPal take for their cost, and who takes 2% of the net payment left. the 2% taken out is incentive for the service provider to keep providing the service and helps fund other projects by THEM.

Now bear with me, because I see obvious problems – first being this is not actually a barter system, because the model suggests a third party who is not paid in trade but in present currency. It is a trade system.

Here are some ideas and anticipated problems/solutions for the system: Items sent must use tracking post to provide evidence of good intention. tracking number send to all other parties.
If a party does not send the agreed item they forfeit their insurance payment to the third party. (This is where most of the problems arise – honesty or just chaos is hard to gauge and all manner of things can go wrong here.)
Problem: A party insists their item did not arrive.
Solution: Postal Tracking must be provided with the barter system as evidence the item has been sent.

Problem: A party's item is broken, missing pieces, not in the condition claimed.
Solution: Media Footage of the item including the days paper must be filmed and sent to the third party and first party to indicate good intentions and that the item is as described – on the day it is posted.
Problem: The barter system does not eliminate cash but sets up a parallel system run by cash instead.
Solution: The barter system over long distances is certainly problematic. The need for some incentive for neither party to default cannot be assured between two parties. A third party is needed to adjudicate the barter and act on behalf of the defaulted. It is incentive not to lose cash to ensure the barter is transacted without issue.

Problem: party gets item but then issues cash-back.
Solution: third party does not hold cash in original account but transfers immediately to another. Party is banned from service.

Problem: first party insists item is broken – second party has shown footage of it intact prior to being sent. Postal service is therefore responsible for damage. Breakages happen but they are rare. Party is issued their payment back.
Solution: Insurance and tracking must be placed on all items sent.

Problem: Postal service loses item.
Solution: Insurance must be placed on all items sent. There are however, many assumptions made about how the trade will be transacted and each time in these statements – but can the Sinister create its own currency, or system of trade, money-less or otherwise? Is there benefit to doing so? Would it enable an underground economy or does any form of currency necessitate these pitfalls whether using bitcoin or rocks? Is it a romantic fantasy that trusts naively in people to do the right thing without the agency of security to back itself up when things go wrong? Is it better to simply accept and find ways to funnel existing channels and currents into desired applications?

KEEPING THE BASTARD TOGETHER

– some notes on group dynamics and leadership. (Taken from an email sent outward as advice.) “So, you ask about my core values. Let’s pretend I don’t have different sets for different persona's/phantoms. Let’s also narrow it to discuss my personal values and not those of myself as a leader or collectively for the Temple of THEM. They're pretty simple – Solidarity, Synchronicity, Empathy. THEM. It all comes down to an expertise in building the form you wish to build. A strict, hard-line form requires a cramping of the souls of others, through this you may achieve a religion, political, or cult group. A softer, flowing, esoteric form requires few such crampings, allowing others to coalesce in their own way. An individual with a very firm idea of what they want must use violence and persuasion to create a hard form.

An individual with a firm idea of what the world wants, does not have to use violence and persuasion to channel what naturally unfolds. How to put this another way: More or less, on paper, your system is perfect. In reality, the people following it, are not. Keep that in mind at all times. Alchemical analogy is useful here. Either you want to use traditional means to create a form that entraps others in that system (however liberal it may seem) and tend it a particular way, adding specific chemicals, boiling off at certain stages, judging when and how the tincture is growing and adjusting it minute by minute as necessary – for what you are trying to stave off, is chaos, an explosion. In other words, you want to play God and decide the boundaries of these people with a form or set of forms. This is at best a temporal undertaking. Consider Directive A-55: Go outside. Choose a patch of grass. Clear it so only dirt is showing. Clear it again when the grass begins to grow. Repeat indefinitely.

What happens? Does the Grass decide not to grow? Do weeds give up? People are like grass; they will always seek to grow. So, you can put your energy into a temporary undertaking OR, you can seek to advance people esoterically; and this is where adhering slavishly to a system can have both merit and breakdown. In some ways, following a system to the letter can be very good for some people, it can teach solidarity, discipline, loyalty, honesty, striving, overcoming, perseverance, patience, duty, etc. in other ways it can be very bad; it can inculcate laziness, group-think, egotism, circular thought, indoctrination, blind obedience, hierarchy etc. (This moral duality very good/very bad is only rudimentary and refers to values I uphold.) Again, it depends on what you want, and if you are able to achieve it, using the forms you select.

But no matter which: All systems require the architect to constantly balance the system and its forms between these extremes. Essentially, whatever outward rule/belief system you overlap a group with – is always going to be separate from the dynamic of that group – because rules tend not to change while people do. You can have the best ideology, most air-tight, unambiguous, virile, powerful phrasing, both inspiration and vivifying but if the people involved in the group aren't adopting it, aren't feeling it, aren't MORE than it, then there will be problems. Why MORE than it? That is particular to my value system and marks One of THEM. It depends really on what you want the group to do, why you are involved with it; for instance, if you want to explore your sexual limits with others then you need a group. If you want to train a paramilitary, then you need a group.

If you want to teach esoteric magic or engage in ritual magic, then you need a group (or at least a partner). It also depends on why those others have joined the group and what they want to get from it. Every group dynamic is different – there will be stronger people and weaker people, people who get along and people who don't, people who change when they're emotionally affected, and people who remain steadfast while the boats being rocked. But what you must understand is that you cannot expect the group to stay together if what those others are seeking, is no longer to be found there – and, with esoteric groups, people change, and grow, through experiencing those things in the group, to the point they either, leave, schism (make their own splinter group) or stay on until the group ceases to give them what they wanted. Identifying the characters, natural hierarchy, strong points (physical prowess, creative talent, silver tongue speaker etc.) and knowing how to dissolve conflict, get people to get on with each other, maintain the right energy necessary for the Work, and have all these people work together on a project(s) together, as a team or individually is an art form. All natural leaders understand this.

More than anything written down, the ability and means to do this is Intuitive. Or should be. And general points about managing a group are not really that helpful – they do not always apply, and only the Leader, can accurately assess when and where they do, to each person in the group and to the group as a whole. What is absolutely essential above all of these points – is Trust. TRUST is everything. The leaders need to trust others to be loyal, do the right thing, work with the group, do what they can to keep harmony and settle differences for the greater good – the followers need to trust that the leader will guide them through the experience they desire safely and with good conscience, that they will not be harmed or hurt, and that the leader is looking out for them while they are being guided. Even in terrifying harsh imprinting for instance – those imprinted need to trust that they will not be killed. Or in hazing, those being assaulted need to trust that those assaulting/raping/hazing them will not kill them and that this ordeal will secure them a place on the other side.

A leader needs to be able to keep secrets, to manage people, and is generally, the fulcrum around which all followers group – and with this comes the power of personality and cult following (sex, drugs, favours) or the danger of hubris – from my point of view, merely becoming another human indulgence for its own sake, overstepping ones mark, believing the hype, and crashing hard to earth. Treat your followers with respect, share power, understand yourself as a follower too, allow others to lead, encourage those better than you, encourage those around you to better you, don't let your ego get in the way when they do – because from my point of view – that is the ultimate goal of an esoteric group and its leader – to provide the foundation and graciously allow others to surpass oneself so that the Next is brought into the world on a higher plane.

All my work is aimed at encouraging others to break free, not only of their own demons, but mine, of form, of time, of space, of form itself. I urge at all junctures others back to themselves – and I remain anonymous so that no personality cult may form around me – I also use multiple pseudonyms so that praise, may not inflate my personal I – but is filtered through a phantom – thus keeping my ego safely at the right size and not blowing up out of proportion inviting hubris and disaster. I also change it regularly – for complex reasons. My core value – is worship of the Inhuman. All forms have their uses but mean nothing to me. There is only ever temporal adoption (even when it is fanatic belief to charge a form with power and validity) of any form – as part of the process of Unfolding my Wyrd."

IN SUPRA SOLIDARITY [ISS]

The one who appoints themselves a 'Satanist' will immediately run into an issue that cannot be resolved – by virtue of -being- a Satanist. And that issue is that each Satanist is trying to live the archetypal character of their patron, Satan. Satan, is an anarchic, chaotic individual – an analogy apt to represent the drive of the individualised ego to raise themselves above the collective unconscious – which to do, requires no subservience, and to walk the untrodden path of inner development and psychic exploration and self-conviction where worse things than Dark Gods dwell, and where no other can join in.

That ONA indeed any group with a leader is even possible is because society needs a magician, as much as the magician wants society to need them – it is a reciprocal event that requires some to be sub-ordinate to another's will, and one to sub-ordinate them to that will. Thus, it is, that atazoth34, is – right -, whilst you, are -right-, and yet you are both wrong and everything else in between. From the outside one can see the Anima and Animus clashing heads needlessly, but the both of you, having been provoked, cannot. It should also be noted that while ONA and its relative nexions each apparently struggle to disown the leadership of the group – this funny to watch event – is merely and nonetheless assertion of ownership using a negative scale rather than a positive one – same story, different method.

ISS – as set down by THEM, in the mss 'In Sinister Solidarity' contained in our Temple Manifesto and Handbook – should not be added to or subtracted from. ISS – like the Dark Gods – does not represent a rational law – but an intuitive one. To try to pin it down by re-interpreting it is to misunderstand its function. In a very loose way it describes a moral code – but the only way ISS will ever work, is when each person sits down and studies their own selves ad infinitum, finding the ego the self the shadow the anima the animus and working to broaden their solidarity with others by genuinely tapping into means to apprehending the role of the ego, self, collective unconscious, various drives and neurosis, involving extremely harsh, dangerous, and in some cases, easily deadly, self-critical analysis and query into the unknown amount of the unknown in each of us.

Only in doing that work, to raise the human race above its present state of consciousness into something altogether superhuman in comparison to now, a work so unrewarding punishing and alchemically severe that its watered down into such dilutions that even dare approach the darkness and the abyss – as "Satanism", does one ever follow the code of ISS. It is not so simple as a sign of recognition, though it is used as one, but as a system of evaluation of the extent such work is being done by those using it, it is hardly reliable.

As far as I have seen there will never be an authentic agreement or clanship among the LhP based on conscious understanding – only the continued illusion of it – for to agree requires that the individual – being the fierce burning fire of the Satanist – be dimmed at the expense of the collective. This means the death of that fire and the dimming of the Will. Thus, ISS proposes that in each working together – in knowledge of the illusory pact of alliance created to necessitate (trick) the ego into working toward the self – alone and isolated on ourselves can enough genuine change be generated from the journey toward the utter root core – not the journey proceeding outwards from the seat of consciousness in the projected stream of babble characteristic of the conscious mind.

(Note that the ego, from my work with it, is so powerful, that is able to set up the mirage of the 'self' within itself and trick itself into doing nothing but that. whereas dreaming, making conscious what is unconscious, trying to see one's shadow, and so on are such vitalising or crippling experiences that they have unpredictable alchemical effects on the conscious psyche. Thus, it is really meant – when ONA/THEM say there is communication above the abyss and communication below the abyss – and never the twain shall meet.

THE CODE OF ISS

ISS – as set down by THEM, in the mss 'In Sinister Solidarity' and contained in our Temple Manifesto and Handbook – should not be added to or subtracted from. To explain it to others – rather than printing verbatim (exactly) what was written about it by the Temple is to misunderstand the point of ISS which is deliberately intended to be understood as an intuitive law not a rational one. Like the Dark Ones – ISS is for those who apprehend energies as they are…

To try to pin it down by re-interpreting it is to misunderstand its function. In a very loose way it describes a moral code – but the only way ISS will ever work, is when each person sits down and studies their own selves ad infinitum, finding the ego the self the shadow the anima the animus and working to broaden their solidarity with others by genuinely tapping into means to apprehending the role of the ego, self, collective unconscious, various drives and neurosis, involving extremely harsh, dangerous, and in some cases, easily deadly, self-critical analysis and query into the unknown amount of the unknown in each of us.

Only in doing that work, to raise the human race above its present state of consciousness into something altogether superhuman in comparison to now, a work so unrewarding punishing and alchemically severe that its watered down into such dilutions that even dare approach the darkness and the abyss – as "Satanism", does one ever follow the code of ISS. It is not so simple as to be merely a sign of recognition, though it is used as one; and as a system of evaluation of the extent such work is being done by those using it, it is hardly reliable.
Thus, ISS proposes that in each working together – in knowledge of the illusory pact of alliance created to necessitate (trick) the ego into working toward the self – alone and isolated on ourselves can enough genuine change be generated from the journey toward the utter root core – not the journey proceeding outwards from the seat of consciousness in the projected stream of babble characteristic of the conscious mind.

THE BLACK GLYPH SOCIETY

The Black Glyph Society takes its name from the concept of a `Glyph' – said to be a stone or object within which memories, information or knowledge can be indefinitely stored and held until such time the glyph is accessed; and `black' owing to its left-hand path bent.

The Society was formed in 2003 by the Temple of THEM as a means to archive, preserve and share black magical lore between members of the Sinisterion by creating a tradition of inter-generational storage that would serve not just present members but those who come well after us. In November 2012, ownership of the Society passed to Typhon Draconis, who strives to maintain and expand the offerings and service those who use our services have come, rightfully, to expect.

Through various means including word-of-mouth, mail, email, website, forum and direct tutoring the Society made available numerous rare and often unpublished works by various satanic and sinister organisations whose philosophies least reflected a Nazarene/Judaic style infusion and influence. Such groups included the Order of Nine Angles, the White Order of Thule, The House Ruin Sect, Order of Saturn, Ordo Sinistra Vivendi, Order of the Left Hand Path, The Temple of THEM, the Tempel ov Blood and various other groups who were working or had worked toward a Pan-European Resurgence. The collection of texts was kept especially for Dark Initiates who showed more than a casual interest in the Dark Arts.

Since its inception in 2003, TBGS's resources have grown exponentially as other Initiates have donated to it other works of present- and latter-day magicians but the focus on purity has kept the library relatively small in comparison to the troves of material available on the occult. This specialist material, much of it from the Order of Nine Angles and THEM is held by the Society to be of profound use to the Dark Arts and thus an effort to preserve and maintain the texts held therein has resulted in many different websites where this information has been held for others to access throughout the years.

Concentrated efforts to preserve Naos, the Black Books of Satan, the Deofel Quintet and to enhance the repertoire of the ONA/THEM via unique addition such as Liber Dabih the Collected Works of David Myatt, *C*R*U*X* an amalgamation of the older Naos texts with the Sorcery of THEM, the Star Game texts, Oto Anorha, Diaries of a Devilworshipper and the Sorcery of THEM have ensured these texts remain accessible and available in high quality hardbound print. The foremost world archive of ONA ephemera, the BGS seeks to maintain and expand the library of works available to the Sinisterion.

Access to Society manuscripts is limited and many of the works in the Glyph remain unpublished and publicly unavailable following requests by the donator's or are given only to those with a working interest in those subjects within the Temple of THEM. The aim of the Black Glyph Society is to keep alive for future initiates the strains of magic that pertain to the Sinister and have been shown to be effective and instructive. The Glyph is an unwritten pact of alliance, viz. an attitude, within the Sinister and formed of individuals associated with it in some way who preserve, share and maintain files and archives of these materials for the general Sinisterion.
The Society is still quietly active, and still serving the Satanic/Sinister community.

ABOUT MVIMAEDIVM

Mvimaedivm is a guide, it does not seek to have all the answers, as I do not have all the answers – all questions being subjective. The aim of Mvimaedivm is a scale of seven degrees* that operates by gradually increasing the level of intensity and complexity of its writings from book to book (via archetypal exploration of different characters) seeding real experience from a young man regarding the world of Satanism and the world in general in the consciousness of young people such as myself. It is exactly the kind of grimoire I'd have liked to have read when I was starting out on my journey.

Taking the type of person (with potential) that exhibits pseudo-satanic mantras (that I have been) from scratch – and introducing hir to a massive variety of increasingly difficult concepts intended to awaken lasting (and hopefully permanent) alchemical changes takes time, just as it took me time. Too much, too fast and the points made go over ones head (the Emanations of Urania for example). Much must be broken down for the average person plagued with misinformation and unreal expectations of Satanism, and in ways that I see fit, it has been and will be. I say Seven, because after consideration, I have decided to embark on the writing and illustrating of two more volumes of Mvimaedivm, bringing the current total of Five, up to Seven.

ON THE SPECIAL EDITIONS:
The Appendix to Mvimaedivm has been given page numbers, and borders for convenience. Those unfamiliar with the Order of Nine Angles will find most of the mysterious terminology used in Mvimaedivm explained by a selection of ONA Manuscripts in this Appendix.

Volume I AS AZAZAEL is now fully illustrated with my artwork, includes a table of contents, page numbers, borders, additional material and extra contextual explanation. I will not be altering this version in the foreseeable future. Consider this edition complete and up to my personal standards.

Volume II THE RISE OF DEVILWORSHIPPR follows suit with borders, page numbers and a list of contents, as well as large numbers of new illustrations; yet I also felt book II lacked a GREAT deal of body and have extensively altered, re-arranged, added to, and expanded book II to meet my own standards of perfection as near as possible. I am happy with it, and consider it complete enough to present.

Volume III THE SUN AND THE SERPENT is a 240 page, 5 MB monster with new additions, revelations and illustrations: inc. rare Naos tarot imagery of the first sketches I made when setting out to design it, my works with the Tempel ov Blood, and a great deal more. As is the current trend; page numbers, borders, table of contents etc have been added for ease of read and digestion of my readers. This is by far the greatest corpus of my writings gathered together yet, but I have four additional books to come.

Volume IV LIBER TERROSA RA is a 250-page collection of emails that show the character of Tnepres Ra in his raw state; a state the reader cannot really perceive from the carefully written and structured writings of Ra, without extended coverage of his behind-the-scenes persona. In Book IV, I write about the dangers of becoming too aethereal or detached via thinking one has attained great wisdom and knowledge. Although I had found self, there were many more pitfalls that lay ahead of me, esp as regards the heights of a satanist, there being temptations to turn to zen, to god, to complete the journey and renounce Satan. Being too detached from the matrix, I drifted toward being the extreme of a Star-man; unable to get motivated, touch the matrix, and to lose my physical drive. I feel it is important for anyone reading Mvimaedivm to see the human side of Ra, and that even with self, it is easy to fall prey to one of the many psychological traps that continue to threaten progress. This Organism cannot be broken into chapters but for convenience an effort has been made to separate the volume into sections, however arbitrary the names of the sections may be. Book IV is transitional in nature, the first three having lead you through the Solar/Masculine Organic, have been but a bridge to this eldritch rainbow beneath the Moon. In Brief: Book IV is a platonic-style dialogue between Tnepres Ra and Sor Terrosa in BLACK MAGIC; discussions range from ONA, the Tempel ov Blood, Aeonics, the Sinister, our own Experiences, THEM, and an innumerable number of other topics – but mostly comprises the satanic illustrations and writings of Sor Terrosa the feminine androgyne; the startling revelations of a powerful LHP sorceress, rare for their intensity, and rare for the world to witness the writings of a truly Sinister Woman. The common dynamic between members of THEM, and indeed between Terrosa & I, is one of empathy and shared journey. I owe Terrosa a great deal for the many years we have wandered together, and Book IV is but a small tribute to this astounding woman of the Sinisterion.

Volume V is about THEM. The experimental creation and physical continuation of two realities, one in which THEM is like ONA: a proto-tradition of rumour, suggestion and mystery. The second, in which THEM is grounded as an ideal shared by a select group of people inc. myself that actively try to presence the Sinister. Volume VI will be a greater psychological summary of the first five books, putting again into even greater perspective the overall structure and geometry of the journey I have taken that others may understand there lie even more detailed and esoteric undercurrents beneath what has been written with very specific memes and energies in mind.

Volume VII will be my own grimoire, the Book of Rising Qaos, and I hope to explain many of the manipulation methods, infiltration techniques, invention of personas, glamour, practical destruction and creation in the finest detail my skills as a writer allow me. Beyond that, I have exhausted all I have to say from the first four Septenary cycles of my life.

SR, Tnepres Ra

SECRETS OF MVIMAEDIVM

There are multiple layers to the tome Mvimaedivm, esoteric and exoteric. One layer is to view the passage in terms of Alchemical processes. Another layer is in its presentation as the format in which it appears now was not always the case. Following the footsteps of the ONA it was decided to discard Old Aeon trappings of explanation and develop a New Aeon approach to sharing one's path via magical diaries. In regards to the layout and overall theme of Mvimaedivm, a decision was made to compromise between the Grimoire-approach by altering the name of the volumes to 'The Diary of a Devilworshipper" in order to use the tools and trappings the black magical matrix provides with the hope of ensnaring the curious on their own terms and with luck teach them something before they realised what and just how hard black magick really is and returned to their life of Satanic charades.
Some mention has been made of the Archetypal Triangle formed by the first three. Book III was the first to be written, Book II the second, and finally Book I the last. It goes without saying that the second two are vastly superior to that of Book I – As Azazael.

Partly due to the fact that this stage of magic is only that of the dabbler, little more than a brief bio of the Author is supplied to show a contrast in the depth of magical change when compared with Book II or III. Book I, II and III form a Solar/Masculine Triangle that is opposed by the Lunar/Feminine magic of The Sorceress Sor Terrosa in Book IV. This Quaternity expresses an overall Personal working toward magical androgyny – being not an end to Personal Growth but rather an esoteric recitation of the formula by which the Author has striven to Become – just one example of many on the Sinister Path.

Books V, VI and VII no longer deal with the Personal Sphere but the next stage of evolution according to the ONA's system of Aeonics. A Cult/Group – and the formation, rise and plateau of that Group [The Temple of THEM] in a similar process to that of the Personal Sphere followed by Azazael, DWR, Tnepres Ra. This process forms a triplicate of energies + the all-defining element of Chaos that leads to Change that leads back to the Triangle, and so on…

This formula comprises an experimental form and theory of 'Narrative' or 'Archetypal' magic that is rooted in a 'perceived' understanding of the ONA's Aeonics, Jung's Individuation, and the Perennial Philosophy of the Hero. Whether or not this understanding holds true will be decided over the next 28 years while the Temple of THEM attempt to implement their shared understanding in the creation of a new nexion on Australian Soil. The extensive library in the Temple of THEM owes much to the merits of the personal process laid out above which is centred on an understanding of "Shape-shifting" exalted in many key tenets of THEM including Change, Synchronicity, Form, the Matrix, the Original Chaos and other elements of our black magical repertoire.

Over the course of thirty years, [now 28] and thus the course of most of its magicians' natural lives, the Temple of THEM will continue to implement its understanding and its current of Narrative Magic to change the course of Australian Satanism toward something genuinely hideous and membranous yet to reveal itself and obliterate the soft new-age Occulture of Satanic Practice here before it can become a Tradition. Mvimaedivm is a part of this – offering our collective experience and knowledge in black magic is another.

It is hoped that this divergent attempt to catalogue the Sinister Path of an initiate whose path records transcending boundaries and obstacles of the Occult Labyrinth, with raw honesty in the telling of his failures and successes – without recourse to the classical dogma of opposites, occult/old aeon "satanic" trappings or reliance on temporal form to qualify or dictate that success – will encourage further attempts using Jungian and Self- Honest vehicles to produce further "Grimoires" of this type – enabling a cultus of the Self to diffuse the extraordinary lies and for the very few, enable the beginnings of apprehending what cannot be apprehended, only hinted at, the 'occult script within nature' as it has been called. It would be optimal for the Sinister were such approaches to replace the ignorance of the LaVeyan schools and real Insight and magical understanding to be developed.

Only time will tell whether we are successful in our endeavour [which is viz. our Wyrd] – or have wasted our lives. Thus far, we are cold and sure of our magic.
ISS,
THEM

I VS. WE

What is writing but the attempt to convince yourself of truths, the unconscious attempt to talk to yourself that gravitates toward outward expression. It seems that I must deflect these thoughts from being addressed directly to myself and not write -I- but -we-. Why is this? It's simply because of the Ego's functions. It hates being talked to – it presumes to know all these things and then to be able to instruct others – this is its sense of power, entitlement, knowledge that reinforces it. But it does not like it when it writes to itself. This resistance – which you can feel – in itself exposes a function of the Ego neatly. It is somehow uncomfortable at best, painful at worst to speak to oneself – because the Ego hates to be lectured, it only likes to lecture.

We have such a clear view of ourselves as an inside presence that is designed to speak outwardly – that we rarely stop to think, who am I kidding by writing 'we' – this letter, this lecture, essay, it's really for me by me – its thinking out loud for my own benefit. These are truths that I hold, things I need to hear, ideas that I didn't know I had inside of me. This is a conscious stream being directed outward when it should be directed inward. I am generalising by saying we – is it because I fear sounding arrogant, self-absorbed, narcissistic than I don't write -I-? Or because it seems like more people do it, agree with it, are involved in it that I write We? Am I talking/appealing to the reader when I write we? Am I trying to say, everyone else does it, you should too? When what I really mean is, I think it, so I should too. Is -We- in fact the external world or audience, or is it in fact my collective elements of consciousness that I mean by saying we? Is We in fact just I? 'We' sounds objective, I sound subjective. 'We' sounds more convincing because it does not sound like I am isolated and alone on doing it, saying it, being it. But are We all alone? And is that We, my collective yet again? Or all my readers?

We would like to think we are in control of our psyches, but we really aren't. Or, I would like to think I am in control of my psyche, but I am really not. Imagine re-reading this article – and every time I wrote we, you instead replaced it with -I- meaning, me, the author. It would take on an entirely different shape, it would be seem more vulnerable, less authoritative, less convincing. Why don't we write I? The same reason our unconscious doesn't ram the truth of our behaviour up our assess with sharp incisive blades that devastate our sense of self when we dream but dances around our delicate sensitivity with endless arrays of symbolism that slowly leads us to make the conclusions ourselves consciously. It HURTS when we are honest because we are not used to it. We're not taught to be SELF-HONEST with ourselves and we see a world full of people that are in complete denial – very, very few writers use I. We're told the world is reality, the truth, the authentic, and we believe it because it's impossible to be self-honest in a world where everyone else is in denial.

And this again, takes on a different meaning when ‘everyone else’ is taken to mean not you, your friends and the rest of the population, but my psychic population as a writer. Books are possible, because we are not self-honest. You think I wrote this book for you, and on some level, I think I wrote this book for you – but maybe, I wrote it for me. And if everyone wrote books for themselves – there’d be no need to publish them. Books are possible because we are not directly self-honest – we take a round-about way of being so, the equivalent of dancing around the dreamer using ever more symbolism because for some reason, we fear using the word -I- instead of -we-. I closes you off – we lets you in. When I write we, it allows you to share my thoughts, to be part of the audience who will either agree with me or disagree with me – but you can do so because you think I am speaking to you and others, inviting comment, inviting participation. You cannot question what I think, because I think it, it is mine and it is subjective – it will have been thought and be thought regardless of what other think because it is my thoughts.

But if I open the door to say these are our thoughts, this is what we think – then that involves you. I am then telling you what you think – and if you agree you’ll praise me or nod your head, and if you disagree then you’ll dismiss and rebuke me and shake your head. If it makes no impression, it really doesn’t matter what you do – because the point of writing books is to ideally curry favour or disfavour, because an author doesn’t care if the book makes no impression – for they’ve no way of knowing, only when it makes some impression do they care, or know.

When I tell you what “we” think you’re then in a position to comment because I am involving the public – and you will feel one way or the other about being grouped in with any generalisations I make [particularly your Ego will] that therefore involve you and your consent. But when I speak my private thoughts, I am not asking for you to be involved and books that do not involve the reader – are awkward to read because we feel we are intruding or not being spoken to. There is no participation – and that, is the key to books being popular, participation. We, not I. But all books, are written to the self.

THE POWER OF WORD

Lat. verbum = the word of the German << wort >> stands in its meaning for the simplest self-important part of a language. It comes from the mittelhochdeutsch wort (word, name), the althochdeutsch wort (word, speech, statement, report, bid, contract, reputation, work) the Germanic Wurd, wurdam, the Indo-Germanic uerdho, urdho, where the Indo-Germanic Uer means as much as: to say, speak.

„In principio erat verbum et verbum erat apud deum et deus erat verbum.“

There lies a creative force and power in the spoken word, as we not only see in the Christian faith i.e. John's Gospel, but also in the eastern traditions (in Tibetan Buddhism), in Indian tribes of North and South America (Hopi Indians), or the aborigines of Australia and the Egyptians (Mysteries of Memphis) are traditions which indicate that the world was created by the word, meaning 'tone' or 'sound'.
I think we humans have – as the divine beings that we are – learned to cause effect through language (words and music). The current practice of various belief systems still proofs this today. In Bon for example, a shamanistic religion in Tibet that pre-dates Buddhism and still exists today, the deceased is during his/her Bardo guided by certain chants from the Tibetan book of Death.

The effect of the language includes the power of creation, but also houses the potential for destruction. In Huna for example, an ancient shamanic nature religion of the Hawaiians, exist – according to the reports by Max Freedom Long – techniques of praying someone to death, similar to the Totbeten in medieval Europe or the Aboriginal Bone Pointing.

But even the everyday person uses this power of the word and sound, the magic of Thoth. Words are tools of our intentions. They are sometimes a weapon and I think this is how you should just deal with it – carefully and with caution.

The Word As Information Carrier
Through the word, or rather, the language, we are able to hand down information / knowledge and preserve it. Through writing it became possible to keep and spread knowledge well beyond the life of the people who possessed to a much wider audience than is possible in the transmission from mouth to ear.

By preserving the words the diversity of perception and thoughts manifested in the Scriptures. Development requires diversity and even contradictions, so that we can experience ourselves through these and can orientate ourselves by the 'others'.
The invention of printing then further accelerated the development of humanity extremely. Through the reduced production-costs Book-knowledge was made available more cheaply and faster and hereby accessible to a wider audience.
The computer age and the global networking led to a veritable flood of information. That this 'progress' turned to be both a blessing and a curse, not only demonstrates the phenomenon of Writing Culture. It makes in my eyes clear, how important it is to get to the bottom of something and to question so-called 'authorities'.

Even the knowledge of the importance and impact of language helps sometimes to a more harmonious and therefore more energetic exchange – be it private or professional life. The plea of the lawyer is a prime example of the power of words.

Energy follows attention, respectively intention. Language/tone is a tool to control this energy exchange. It is therefore important and rewarding to develop a kind of language hygiene and -care.

By language hygiene I refer to both the quality and quantity of the spoken word, in the sense of ‘less is more’. It is the focus on the essentials with which we achieve by less effort often more effect.

In the beginning of each communication, it is important to first define ones meaning of terms/words for everyone involved. Thus, we prevent misunderstandings by ensuring beforehand that everyone is talking about the same. To integrate this practice into everyday life will help benefit but is often underestimated.
It’s amazing how many misunderstandings can occur every day, just because people failed to provide a common basis.

Language is life force. If we speak only inattentive for the speech’s sake – the French have a word for this (tchatcher) – we are not masters of our energies and exhaust or let us been exhausted by others very quickly. Because there are people who in this way, consciously and unconsciously tap into the energies of the interlocutor.
I experienced this myself with a woman I used to call my friend. She called me often and involved me into a conversation where she made foremost negative comments or reported mostly negative experiences. Her rather destructive talk disturbed me and I did not like to listen – and became inattentive. Instead of pointing this out to her clearly and stop the conversation, I kept silent, out of politeness, which I nowadays consider being a sort of laziness. I pretended being listening with interest when I was with my mind far away.

It surprised me to find myself exhausted and tired after those conversations. Through the remark of my sister who is a very sharp mind and watcher I found out that I was unconsciously giving away my energy to this woman. Consciously or unconsciously she obviously belonged to the species of energetic vampires. Only our own concentrated awareness spares us such losses and enables progress. It is important to speak the right words clearly at the right time.

Words of Power

Say what you mean and you get what you want.
In the word lies power. With speech we shape like creators our own reality. I say our as there exist great differences in the languages and successively in the reality of the respective people. Language does not only create, but first and foremost separates (just like the sword cuts the air – or at times the head from the torso) because language can hinder us to see things as they are. I experienced in a sort of ‚Gnosis’ during my work with the spirit of Belladonna. Most clear was nonexistence of the seeming constants Time and Space.

I could transport the experiences from my altered state of consciousness emotionally and mentally – but could not ‘translate them’ into any language I know. (not into one I know like English, German, French). There were no words existing for these feelings and in parts my perceptions contradicted vehemently the laws of the languages at my disposal. It stroked me that the term‚Time’ in those languages was created to condition the people growing up in this language, and herewith limited their perception. This is only one of many examples and I was very angry when I became aware of this. And from the anger raised the question: Why?
From a Linguistic point of view, it is the characteristic of the German language that it creates abstracts and stiffness by strong substantiating. In the example of the word Time, we see how by using this certain word form (subject) time is something fix, star and by this becomes measurable. It is different in the language of the Hopi (north American native tribe) where there such word like ‘the time’ does not exists but rather a verb for it like ‘it times’. This makes clear how language creates subjective reality and conditions us. We see that our perception is strongly depending on the possibilities of the language we grow up with. We only perceive what we know what we can compare and resonate with, just as the natives of South America did not ‘see’ the Spanish Armada at the horizon.

I believe that such development is encouraged by unawareness, by the fact that people are not critical. Since perception as such is loaded with projections of the unconscious and hereby rarely objective many things, such as a ‘constant’ Time, is pretended to them as being real. The trick here is that it goes unnoticed. A lot of things enter people’s consciousness unnoticed and hereby create their reality, which again conditions, limits and even hinders them in their development and perception of what there truly is. Maybe such thing, that we call time, is not constant but changing… just as our reality may be only a subjective projection, even a mere illusion…?

It is important to be aware and vigilant to such conditioning through the language. Only then can we use language and tone for our intentions and influence a development, or intentionally bring about a wanted result.

“TEMPLE” VS “TEMPLE”

Imagine that I have two forms to work with, the Church of Satan, and the Temple of Set – is either one of them right, or one of them more correct than the other? ~ ~ ~ Questions like ‘Is either one of them right or more correct than the other’ may be a well-meaning division that seeks to simplify the subject matter so as to delineate the choices, but this question, by virtue of even being asked, cannot help but pose further problems. These problems always eventuate in the instant that just One form or ideal is held up as a mode of heurisy – that is to say, as a means or model used as the base or ground from which one proceeds.

No ideal and no form is ever or can ever be singular in nature but exists as a multiplicity, – its very presence divides space – which is to say that any supposed singularity possesses attachments that come with it whether one likes it, or accepts it, or not. If we say No, then we automatically posit the existence of Yes. Without Yes, No cannot be understood because it has no context against which to be compared – no tension of opposites as it were. White, gives us the tension of Black, but then also Grey. If we say Right, then we automatically posit Wrong, but we also posit Left which in turn posits Up, Down and direction in general – which cannot be without supposing Space in which to move in said directions – which then supposes the absence of space, non-movement, and so on. One could liken this to the advent (possibly invent?) of numbers. One comes into being. It is only natural that with nothing but one to imagine, it is imagined against itself. And supposes two. Two and One supposes Three… A process like this "inherent multiplicity" is suggested to be at the heart of the Big Bang Theory. These may seem like simplistic examples – but so many times have I not taken them into consideration despite 'knowing' the power of my own mind to set up 23 currents in my way of thinking that I think it useful to re-iterate them.

The powerful logic of the Greeks sadly falls all too often into disuse in favour of absurdity. The moment we posit something, we immediately bring into being an entire army of alternate and connected aspects that go along with it. A metaphor for this "inherent multiplicity" is to be found in an old story that goes when John the Baptist held up his hand in the sign of the Benediction – on the wall behind him his shadow correspondingly made a sign called the Malediction. Forms behave very similarly to this. Forms however are multiplied exponentially each time they are subject to interpretation, they do not have just a shadow, but possess a mirror image, a reflection, a refraction, a description, analogy, simile, relative spaces in time, and an undetermined number of aspects limited only by human imagination.

Largely these multiple aspects are conjured forth when form is evoked or expressed through language– language cannot help but create attachments to any form brought into being and then proceeds to add attachments even to the attachments until the form is layered under a thick crust of illusions. Were we able to strip away every element of this crust we would find, in a sense, empty space denoting the original formlessness from which interpretation drew the particular form forth. For in any act of interpretation, say when one looks at a tree, one subjectively isolates only part of the space and visible contents of the world's totality (the Black Clay) and moulds it with shapes, names, area, description and other values that break the whole into manageable chunks – i.e., one harnesses a particular and partial idea and pulls it out of the greater whole – then treats that partial aspect pulled out as a whole itself. I think this is because everything we bring into being is grounded in morality.

Morality is an inescapable filter kept in place in part due to the language we use and the way it behaves. Latin, being the root of English, was a language developed by the Church. It was cobbled together from many other languages and was designed to be a universal language that would breed out the languages of the pagans. Because of the intent inlaid within it – it expresses a particular ethos, viz. the ancient ethos of Christianity, and this ethos is grounded in the Either/Or mode definitive of morality. What the world was like before morality I should love to know – but at this time, Morality is a prison that binds language to express itself in time and space and through a tension of opposites. Most people don't appear to think too hard about what our language is and does or how it operates at this level – at its prime magical base. However, I do. For example: when we posit anything, i.e., "Timmy's hat is green" we use 'Is' to isolate and exclude Timmy's hat from being other colours, from being any other type of clothing, or from being anyone else's hat. "Is" is itself a moral certitude and a positivism. As I have said above, in affirming a positive form or set of forms, we instantly set up a set of negative forms and vice versa. But this is not out of ignorance per se but because we really cannot help it – there is a duplicity (2) and multiplicity (more than 2) inherent in the very essence of language that sets off the forms we create against their negative and at the same time summons unwanted attachments.

For instance, we assume Timmy is a person, that the person who made the statement knows what green is, that it is in fact a voiced statement not perhaps some written sign, that Timmy is a person's name, and that there is a hat at all. We make vague logical conclusions because these words and their combination into this sentence bring with their existence, certain attachments – and these steps are the foundation of communication. Yet as we discern sentences from words, the same process applies to words from letters. While the word Timmy contains the isolated letters of T, I, M, M, and Y – which mean little by themselves, their combination brings mental assumptions forth. I.e., we immediately picture the combination of these letters as a name, viz. Timmy – and assume that Timmy is a person. We get a sense of a physical body, perhaps a boy, wearing a hat. A green hat no less, but what colour green do we picture? Dark green, olive, verdant, lime, bright, blue-green, emerald? We would likely all differ in interpretation of that detail because the sentence does not instruct us as to which green. That information is missing.

Yet, while our mind is processing which green the hat might be, it has probably already jumped to the conclusion that Timmy is a person, not perhaps a dog, or a manikin, or even a girl – and already built up a certain picture, a certain prejudice about Timmy and the green hat. For the purpose of this exercise, it really doesn't matter what colour Timmy's hat is – (dark green) but serves as an example that we often process information in a certain manner without questioning important parts of that information or indeed our own information processor.

My point here, however, is that while we may all make different assumptions – we will nonetheless all be forced to use the same vehicle to do it, flaws and all, viz. language – and are thus each unconsciously constrained in our available modes for interpretation. While numerous studies into linguistics and communication have time and again eventuated in the understanding that we cannot really ever understand one another – because we are not aware of this particular prison there is very little opportunity to develop alternate means by which to communicate. One of the infuriating problems with form is that they are impossible to grasp without using more form – owing to the fact that no form can ever exist singularly. If instead of asking 'which organisation is right' we were to ask, 'right for who or for what' – we might think it possible to arrive at a more definitive answer – to question the question and assess whether it is the right one to ask. But as you can see from the ontology created by trying to define right by defining right, we only promote the creation (and negatives) of many more forms. Y to the power of infinity. We end up more deluged than before in information and forms with the x amount of shadows, reflections, opposites and attachments they cannot help but bring with them. The idea of something being 'Right' in itself – as if there were some one true meaning – is to mistake (or deliberately ignore – Christianity, I'm looking at you!) the abstracts used to define another abstract as every bit as objective as the primary abstract one seeks to define. In other words, we invent things (T), to validate something else we have invented (I), and if we manage to convince ourselves with enough words that this thing we have invented actually exists (X) we tend to mistake our tools and our inventions as real too.

For instance, to make my point, it is necessary to believe in or summon up the concept of Reality itself couched in a whole host of others concepts in order to convey the concept I am trying to convey. This labyrinth of logic that characterises conceptual thought works marvellously where humans are concerned – so long as it's never looked at too closely. When it is – it all falls down. Here is another example that uses the Temple of THEM. The Temple of THEM (an abstract) was characterised as being based on faith in Synchronicity (further abstract) for example. So, one abstract was used to validate (prop up) the other which then created a base of abstracts that supported one another and to which all manner of other abstracts could then be attached – including the validation of the process of its creators connecting abstracts to begin with.

Each abstract brings with it an illusion of solidarity (of form) but also visible and hidden duties and boundaries – which boundaries are often not detected until certain conflicts occur due to the increasing complexity of one's belief system. What one effectively does when they ask 'Which group is right for me?' Is to narrow down the infinitesimal possibility of choices available from the infinite collective. Perhaps this is because to grasp the scope of the world with all its complexity would overwhelm the senses – or perhaps it is precisely because the world has been broken into so many chunks from its original simplicity, with names, ology's, onomy's, ism's and so on that it seems much more complicated than it is – that a process of mental mapping takes place filling spaces with thousands of names for objects and items and people and their combinations so as to make space seem extremely crowded. – especially when the human automatically itemised the contents of this space.

Consider some of the many alternate options their question has closed off to them – they could have chosen from a wider set of groups instead of just the two; they could have flipped a coin to decide their choice; but they have already locked themselves into giving a particular answer just by asking a particularly phrased question. They have even imposed upon themselves a duty to answer their question. They have asked 'Which' – this choice of words has locked them into an inevitable 'one form or the other' based decision limited by the content they have selected to focus their decision on. They have said 'group' – narrowing down their answer even more – since the question now precludes individuals and possibly even selecting oneself. Moreover, they have themed their choices, choosing between two satanic based groups.

They have said 'Is' – denoting a positive affirmation (thus creating its corresponding negative – which group ISN'T right for me?) of one of the groups. They seek something to Be and have locked out the option to not Be that something. They have said 'Right' – imposing a moral value judgement upon the question which will further limit the answer based on the strictures of their statutes of morality. They have said 'for' indicating an unconscious belief that the object in question is something they can take from or believe is meant for them. Thus, they have made value judgements already about the groups that will affect their final decision. And they have also said 'me' – and here is where it gets tricky.

What is a 'me'? Well, what will decide which group is right? Will it be me? Or will it be you? Will it come down to a comparative list of their benefits and the commonsense of their movements? If so then what will you base that comparison on – what do you consider beneficial? So many variables… I have a way to simplify them all. If you say to me that the Temple of Set is more superior to the Cos – it is irrelevant what I think unless I am seeking to impose my will upon you. What if I am not? I am only compelled by your opinion to believe that you have an opinion. But the content of your opinion is beside the point unless again I am seeking to impose my will on you. If I disagree with your opinion? Do I, like so many do, then set up logical arguments, moral based judgements, and opinions of my own, in a careful arrangement to weaken your statements, and perhaps even your personal character – thus showing how the form I follow is better than the form you follow, and attempt to prove that I am a better judge of things than you?

Typically, yes. This is precisely what I would do, return comment with an argument, response, or discussion – whatever you want to call it. Though whether I answer nicely or aggressively put forth a reply makes no difference overall in what I would be doing at a primal level – which would be attempting to exercise my will upon you or others who can exercise their will upon you by seeking control, of you, of events, of the singular space the ego can occupy, because only one ego can dominate a given space at any time. But in the end – when opinions clash – can anyone win? Sometimes, someone will back down – accede to someone else's point of view, perhaps diplomatically so as to keep their own view by widening it enough to fit in the view of their opponent.

But more often than not, when neither party will accede, comments turn away from the subject matter and toward the personal judgement and character of each person involved. I believe this shows the true struggle going on beneath the illusory battle to 'be right'– which is not primarily to prove one's opinion or forms against someone else's per se, but to vie for the limited room allowed to prove will to power. Conversations, however tame or meek, are a direct attack by one ego on another that sometimes use indirect or rather, 'incidental', means such as a labyrinth of forms and concepts that the ego believes in and upholds, purely to start fights by having something to defend. The only way to win – is to never play the game.

But there is a vital piece of the puzzle missing at this point and it is this: The only way to make any judgement at all is to first have some kind, any kind, of belief – which belief (sans form) immediately shapes our blank slate – into a particular geometric shape. This shape will attract other shapes and build a total shape that by will by virtue of its nature fit with/in/against some shapes but exclude others. That is to say, its own geometry, its own nature, will preclude certain types of other geometry and certain natures from ever interacting with it, just as if a wall was built or a line drawn in the mental sand that says to various forms and ideals 'you can come in because you fit my ideal', but 'you must stay out there because you don't'. This notion is best captured in the popular and eternal ideology created by humanity that voices itself as the 'us' and 'them' division.

Naturally this division tends to find a voice in the most basic differences of geometry – political concepts that have developed such as 'Race', religious concepts that have developed such as 'True Believer', or scientific concepts that have developed such as 'Facts'. Unfortunately, though I see some interesting connections – a discussion of this process in relation to the mind with its habit of repression, the unconscious, the self and so on would take me too far from the subject matter at hand – but I expect the reader may have already drawn their own conclusions about the relationship of these matters to their and others psyche.

If I can return to the matter of attachments for a moment. All indications are that the total number and nature of attachments (being suffuse) that accompany forms cannot with any sagacity be predicted, expected or even consciously recognised in any sort of entirety. At best we have vague semblances of what we believe in that we solidify with an armour of abstracts (such as words). These attachments can make life difficult when they drive our will without our will knowing it. Consider the person who joins an Aryan group because he agrees with the noble sentiments espoused by the Nazi's of fatherland, unity, brotherhood – but correspondingly becomes tarred with the attachments of that form without his consent – i.e. tarred with the brush of the swastika, antisemitism, the holocaust, Gestapo cruelty, and all manner of associations that have attached or been attached to this form and its signs. Whether they want them or not, our Aryan has just become a race-hating Nazi in the eyes of many. In effect, his 'me' has been changed by the forms with which he associates. It matters little how eloquently he tries to explain his interest is only with those aspects of the philosophy he admires – because he is enmeshed in a sticky web of forms and their attachments both unpleasant and pleasant, the Benefaction and the Malediction, and, so are the many others that will condemn him. Those that might condemn him do so because they too are enmeshed in their own webs of form; perhaps their forms are centred around Semitic pride and hate for Neo-Nazis and the different associations they make to a holocaust or Hitler.

Ideologically speaking they may be at opposite ends of the political spectrum. Yet they are both unified, involved in the same process of being controlled by forms to which they attach/detach or are attached/detached by whatever cause, mired in moral judgement. Before I finish up, I will take the opportunity to quickly duck off into the tricky and dangerous ground of 'immorality' and ethics where such a paring down of these respective modes in effect suggests that both are equal; that killing a baby with a sledgehammer is equivalent to patting a kitten on the head. In other words, that everyone is as guilty or blameless as the other because they have no control over the forms that drive them. If I can imagine for a moment that it is possible at all to escape morality; this is exactly what I believe to be the case. Without imposing some kind of morality on our judgements – no thought or deed, event or person, can be judged one way or the other. They cannot be judged at all – for judgement rests on the supposition of morality.

What constitutes/validates morality is both individually and socially determined by the combination of 23 current held by each person and by the total collective. Responsibility for morality rests with the individual who is held to have free will and the wherewithal to make moral decisions, but laws denote an expectation to follow a certain decree of the masses. The threat of punishment stops most of us spiralling out of control to serve self-interest.* But whether morality is another human construct that we have acquired, or is something innate, who can say. It is a moral judgement for me just to say having this type of judgement is as good as it is bad. Yet it is also moral for someone to insist that they are immoral – since morality contains within its form the tension opposite – viz. the very option of immorality is innate/implicit in morality, so it is a tautology to try to create morality's opposite. Nothing can be immoral. Whatever the ethics involved, whatever we choose to consider to take into account in making our decision – is generally up to the forms we uphold. Some of us will filter our decisions to compliment various forms or group consensus or some ideological premise believing it with all our heart to be our choice. The problem with ethics and coming to some conclusion about what is definitively right or wrong is a problem of having to resort to subjective morality and subjective values, the result of which can be seen in the constant warfare and bloodshed humanity shows when forms clash. I believe there are no objective rights, or wrongs, or values. I therefore cannot fairly say with any authority what is right for you, or for anyone else, but only what is right for me insofar as my freedom/prison allows me. The more forms I attach to myself, the more I imprison myself. And that is why I believe conversation, however selfless it paints itself, seeks at all times to be or become an exertion of will by both parties.

Assuming the reader has taken any of these points into some sort of consideration – and I ask again what you think to be 'you' – what is right for you – I can presume that enough natural habit has been challenged and conscious reflection brought to the fore to give you cause to reconsider what we really say with each word we use, what we do with each word we use, and the spiderweb that results when we use them in any combination.

At the start of my talk I wrote "So now we have two forms to work with, the Church of Satan, and the Temple of Set – is either one of them right, or one of them more correct than the other?" I explained that I believed this to be a channel or mode by which I limit the available possibilities and close in on one particular aspect or group of aspects by creating a wall, a boundary, an obstacle, a statement, a form – to define how I will proceed or react and in what direction. But in asking the question I don't actually have two forms to work with, but three, because I created another form by which to decide between two others. This one here has been created as a fourth to explain this trilogy. So, while the question seems to be about two distinct choices, it's really more than that. Unfortunately to try and explain these processes I have outlined above only sinks me further and further into the geometric mire of form.

On the surface of things, we appear to try to escape forms (using more and more of them to do so believing that we are able to narrow things down, be specific) – and on one level, it is accepted that we do, but on another level, a more piercing analysis, we cannot escape the hidden traps simply because there is nowhere to escape to. There exists as a distant option the voiceless realm of Art – where form is used to communicate without the trappings inherent in language – but the idea of completely foregoing language altogether rallies billions of egos – who are part of language itself – collectively against the idea. Assuming we could ever have a blank slate when we approach forms – the statements others make in their writing on behalf of various forms, (say Anton LaVey for the Church of Satan), that seek to appeal to our identity; the pride, emotions, sentiments, memories, etc of our ego; cultural norms or countercultural values; philosophical merit; current affairs; archetypal notions and memes; etcetera – that ask for our agreement, our chorus of applause, our time and patience, our money, blood, sweat or tears: can all be said to be appeals to our morality.

If our morality is at the whim of the forms that inhabit us: we will choose to be in agreement or disagreement despite ourselves and according to the forms which choose for us. In Summary. What is right for you may not be right for me – because of the intricate attachments form brings when it is communicated through language, or through various mental filters. What is right for you depends on your moral code and the particular geometric (some might say synaptic) arrangement of the 23 syndrome that drives your brain to uphold certain forms that causes a counter-reaction to shun others. What is right for you is entirely at your discretion assuming human beings can ever manually determine their 'I' within the myriad of elements that act on our behalf and influence/prejudice/bias our decisions with attachments and shadows.

If we recognised we all wear 23-type blinkers in regard to our decisions – we might be able to make more informed decisions. (note that the very concept of informed decisions literally refers to form within decisions.) I tried to keep this treatise linear and orderly, unfortunately, there is no clear distinction where forms or morality start and end – these concepts are all deeply suffused within one another, swimming through one another and biting each other's tails so as to swallow and become each other pending on how they are handled and by which mode perceived. This has always been a discernible problem when I attempt to outline notions to do with perception.

Every form raised up creates a loophole, a shadow and the means to turn a form around on itself. I have written so much here that there are any number of holes by which my essay can be countered or attacked. But these are my own ruminations and even as I finish typing this I am certain that my mind moves to undermine its own creation and escape the prison it has built itself… ah see, there it goes. No state of perfection exists on shifting sands or ever will. I can only answer to my own forms just as I expect you will answer to yours. Most people require other people to hack their own arguments to pieces or validate/invalidate them. But I do just fine on my own. Heurisy is as Heurisy does. ~ ~ ~

Let me leave you with a final scenario – where, like Timmy's green hat, certain information has been taken for granted in the haste to define Satan and Satanism – or possibly ignored, to justify man's own notions as befit his ambitions. Given all that I have said in relation to individuality so far in 101 about the sacrifice one must make of it to belong to or subsist within a group mentality – consider how different things might have turned out historically for Earth if Satan had not satisfied the requisite sacrifice necessary to assemble an army of angels around himself to help overthrow heaven, but had indeed been the archetype of the individual he is so often claimed to represent. *See Australia of late (2007-2010) for instance, its present escalation of knife violence is influenced by four things, 1) for several years the government forced mothers to work and thus leave their children in day-care depriving them of vital maternal aspects that are usually imparted from mothers to their sons. 2) the diminishing of humans touching one another in any fashion has left many blind to the damage they do when they overcompensate in seeking touch and injure others. 3) poor law reforms due to the softness of political correctness and the over-stated empathy of everyone being a victim has led to few or no punishments being meted out resulting in a get-away-with murder mentality 4) no serious attempt to change social structures is considered to get to the genuine root of these problems, which are symptomatic reflections of the forms upheld at any given time and the creation of their shadows and attachments – wherein corporations and multi-nationals flood the world with certain messages that are reinforced daily by the very institutions that claim to be fighting them. Since the ethos of teenagers is to define counterculture by rebelling against culture campaigns like Don't Drink and Drive, or No Hooning, provide the very tools for people to define and enter counterculture. Media is highly irresponsible in this regard – in that, it washes it hands of all responsibility for the messages it sends. All indications are that it knows people are idiots, treats people accordingly, but acts indignant and claims the moral high ground when called out. When selling to us it relies on and plays up to our stupidity as a collective to buy into the advertised material – but when challenged it insists we are each capable of making our own choices. It switches between treating us collectively and treating us individually – manipulating us masterfully.

THE PEN VS. THE SWORD: ACTION VS. THOUGHT

Thoughts shape actions – and are every bit as important as physical assaults. Action can be shaped and controlled through perception – perception can be given via propaganda, essays, books, and other media that compel someone toward specific or themed action directly or indirectly. The Bible, Mein Kampf, The Satanic Bible, The Criminals Handbook, could all be said to have incited action – but were instrumental in how that action took place and on what principles it was enacted and enacted for. Without thought (read: philosophy) to inspire, excite, enrage, and otherwise strum emotions, sentiments, ethos, empathy, enmity – action is arguably less effective and sporadic – it usually requires a doctrine to support action, to define it. Without thought driving action – many of the most memorable actions should not have existed. There would have been no desire to act.

Actions in turn, give real world results, they are the product of imagination earthed into symbol and architecture – physical based changes to events and persons that create or destroy idols and edifices that present the reigning perception and enable power to change hands. Actions such as fighting, resistance, warfare, forming a militia, creating a physical place of worship, striking an authority, assassinating a figurehead;- actions can be seen moulded in the worldly, in the immediate, they are capable of changing history, or political power, or personal power, or change what perception will be and who controls it. Actions emphasise changing landscapes but do not tell us why.

The old argument that actions speak louder than words may be true, but the same can be argued for words being responsible for action.

What is Action – to you?
What is Thought – to you?
Do you value one above the other? – Why?
Do you believe the two are separate entities – or entwined?
Which do you use more often?
Why do you think this argument continues to arise?

—

If someone is inclined toward a certain behaviour or direction it does not often take much to tip them into acting it out. Ordinarily, they are already going to do it – they just need a voice that says yes. (or no). But THEM is not designed to lead people up the garden path and join a cult – every step of the way we try to give power back to others by encouragement, praise, showing them they can do it, empowering them. This is why most of those who have travelled with us have left, gone on to the next part of their lives. Some of these members have their own groups who are part of paramilitary circles such as Order of Saturn, or eminent members of other magical groups, Sathana who wrote Sorcery of THEM, or other cults and groupings that have their own physical temples, meetings and offline actions. What most of these are we have no ultimate way of knowing but through developed trust over long periods of time we give many of these people the benefit of the doubt that what they say they do, they do.

Personally, I have had many reports of culling victims, animal sacrifices, violent alchemical ordeals mentioned to me by a fair amount (let's say 50) of people over the years, – no proof for any of it, I might add. THEM was involved with the OTO in Brazil for a while when word came of a member of it called Rex setting up a child trafficking ring to fund money to us. After this came to our attention we were more careful about what message we were sending by being tied up in the ONA;- and told the other members to get rid of Rex and shut down any operation he might have had.

Beginning from nothing, we built up the Black Glyph and created and sold some rather unique projects such as the mini star game, advanced star game, convinced CB to allow Emanations to be printed, thousands of people reading Black Glyph material not withstanding – this has allowed tens of thousands of dollars to pass through our hands. Through careful engineering, THEM also has its own currency – its books. Virtually anything written by us sells to private collectors for silly amounts of money – and this has allowed us to do some rather special things. Primarily, it is poured back into funding for other Sinister projects, these include sending small-large donations to various groups anonymously within Australia such as feminist leagues, donating to satanic forums such as MySatan, 600 Club, SIN – Stormfront in America, a number of small NS groups in Australia, and lending money to various individuals associated with or members of, THEM. It allows funding for photo-bucket and rapid-share accounts for Mvimaedivm Black, martial art training fees, the purchase of sinister books and publications such as the Ixaxaar collection of ONA material to cite the most recent to be passed more cheaply into the hands of the many.

This and thousands more examples many outcomes of our chats not likely known (but see ABYSSAL for more) have come from our words, our thoughts. Which are in themselves, actions. That set a ball rolling that may have not been there before or keep existing ones rolling. Our action of writing our material and sharing it, has caused people to commit crimes, atone for crimes, change their life, save their life, take a life, without anything else required. Personally, I write based on the experience of my actions – which I am rather private about, admittedly – but THEM being just one – I am confident that who we are and what we do is more than it appears. This is just a few examples, but I think they are good ones. We fund others to be able to act, prompt others to ac, and act ourselves. It is a symbiosis that favours neither action nor thought over the other but exists as a behind the scenes distribution of entrepreneurial resource management to fund and assist others who share our aims.

HERE BE DRAGONS

+O+

The quiet solitude of the upstairs study was broken by the sound of a ringing telephone.

Ryan, sitting at his desk and staring at the computer screen in front of him, grabbed absent-mindedly for the receiver.

“Hello?”

A painting by some mysterious figure titled ‘St Claire’ – a rare occult treasure from the 1970’s and a 21st birthday present from a generous uncle – hung above the computer muddying the otherwise uninteresting walls with murky swirls of aqua blue and crimson.

When he recognised the voice on the other end, Ryan grinned.

“Ah. How are ya mate? Been a long time since I heard anything from you – shit, must be a year now? Good to hear from ya, man. What’s been happening in your world?”

A frown crinkled his brow.

“Oh yeah? – sounds like you’re doing well for yourself – mm, yeah doin’ alright – hey you got that other tattoo yet? Mm, yeah well you gotta take your time and look around – make sure you don’t get fucked over and end up some scratcher’s orange.”

“Hah, yeah, good, look if you need any help with your design let me know. I’ve been drawing a fair bit lately – probably not the sort of shit you’re after for your arm, but I’m pretty sure I can finish that tat. Make it match the other one at least.”

Ryan stretched out his hand and picked up a jellybean that had fallen from a nearby bowl and idled too close to the keyboard. He popped it into his mouth and leaned back on his chair.

“Not quite, no. Lot’s been happening – you in front of a computer?”

“Yep OK I’ll wait.”

He chewed on the –lemonade?- bean and gazed thoughtfully at ‘The Witches’.

According to his uncle – a lot of Australian occult art had not survived the 1970’s. Apparently a narrow minded police force had sought to destroy any that they found. This painting, a set of three he was told, was probably quite rare. He wondered if his uncle would give him the third one to complete the set the next time there was an occasion to be celebrated.

“Yeah mate, I’m here – yeah. Go to WWW, dot, WordPress, yeah one word, dot com, backslash, temple of them – yep one word.”

A questioning murmur issued from the mouthpiece, followed by a confident tone of confirmation.

“Yes, mate that’s it. What you’re looking at is about 60 manuscripts –“

“No, I know, there’s a hell of a lot more. The rest are either contained in various works or – you remember I was writing Mvimaedivm last time we spoke? Yeah, well – pause Well it’s supposed to be called Mvimaedivm; I only called it the Diary of a Devilworshipper to make it more commercially appealing when I started selling ‘em. Yeah, good mate, I’ve actually finished seven volumes and … no, I cut out a lot of stuff.”

“Cheers mate.”

“No – well I haven’t published all of them yet – as I say, a lot of shit’s happened.”

Ryan raised his eyebrows slightly.

“Yeah, the Order of Saturn – awesome stuff – this guy really knows his shit … no not like, not regurgitating occult lore, I mean he comprehends behaviour, habit, method, change, alchemy, the lot. Yeah, remember that book I told you about? The one on Cybernetics? – Ah shit, Maxwell … something … I can’t remember. Yeah, well I really like his work – we had a bit of a chat about some of the concepts he uses vs. those that THEM use – was very interesting.”

“Yep. Yep. Okay, well go get yourself a coffee or something and I’ll tell you what’s going on alright.”

Ryan sat forward, cradling the receiver against his ear with his shoulder and typed seven letters into his search engine. A few maps of a woodland area in south-eastern Victoria popped up. He browsed the listed contents and clicked on one. He sat and studied the maps quietly.

A voice came from the phone.

“Hey man. Got yourself one? OK. Let’s start from the top. Remember when you came over that time and we got crownies and sat in the garage? Yeah? Then do you remember we were talking about the powers of the Vatican and Vatican City? Yeah? Well apparently, the Vatican has officially issued a private order to form a group of about 100 specialists to fight the rise in the occult.”

“Yeah, I can’t remember the name of their organisation, but it’s called something like the Sworn Brothers of the Sword against Magic and the Occult works of Satan, or some fancy ass title like that, and it’s been put together by that fucker Ratzinger – yeah the pope – yeah he did, visited earlier last year and shut Sydney city down so no-one could even protest their presence – anyway, this action is quite a frightening proposition because it's like a modern form of the Inquisition is being sanctioned by the Powers that Be. Well apparently he has ties to the descendants of the Inquisitors. Mm, well it's interesting to keep an eye on these things."

Ryan listened.

"Yeah, well the scary thing is that these crazy cunts are still as mad as hatters, nothing's really changed since medieval times in the way of attitude – just the forms. You've seen Guantanamo Bay? – Guat, no wait … I forgot, they changed the name to Camp X-ray, that's right. Yeah laughter not much more comforting eh? Here you have a country whose propaganda machine has been raging for the last what – 60 years? – about the abominations of Nazi Concentration Camps, but who has almost a third of their fucking population incarcerated in prison."

"Yeah, that's an awesome song eh? Mezmerize was a good album too."

"I don't care what they blame it on – the American system is fucked – and they're the acting hand of scary cunts like the Vatican – so you know what'll happen if they ever get their way. Yeah – but that economic slump was almost certainly manufactured – it makes a lot of sense for it to happen now. The whole 911 thing – and then this – could not create more perfect conditions for them. America bombing their own people sent the entire world into an iron-grip police state that perfectly suits the clearly stated American- Magian goals of total global domination. Freemasons? I really don't know – who does? But thanks to America you can't get on a plane with toothpaste anymore for fuck sake and the mass given reason is because someone might die."

"laughs yeah well that's exactly right man, people are dying every day – because of America. America's quick to jump on soft targets accusing them of harbouring WMDs or abusing human rights – but you don't see them charging into China. No – and it's interesting that they've targeted Iraq, Afghanistan, Iran, North Korea and Georgia – because these countries all form a ring around China. I guess if you know you've got fuck all chance of invading a kick-ass empire like China – one of the oldest living dynasties in the world – the best thing you can do is keep cats at its feet. But from a military point of view, it looks as if the American military has been trying to set up a perimeter around China for a very long time, at least since the cold war, and a lot of the countries fit the criteria for what are referred to as choke points."

"Mm, so you've got all these signs going on right? And all these noble sentiments of propaganda expressing the opposite that don't match those signs. It's like the protocols of Zion said: judge the merit of a conspiracy by what you can see happening. The Jews? Shit of course, but it goes beyond any racial war – and just because a few who happen to be Jewish are involved doesn't mean they all are. What's more likely is that millions of people lack the spirit or solidarity to argue with what's laid down, hundreds of thousands help enforce it, thousands of leaders and players the world over are following the lead of a hundred, a hundred are colluding together with twenty, twenty a few, and though it can be generalised the details of the world are just too fucking big and busy to really get any kind of handle on what's really going on on the personal level – you have to guess via the forms that arise, the forms that are trying to arise, the collective changes that occur. Meanwhile, wild cards keep everyone guessing. No – I do believe in a Magian conspiracy, partly because it's probable simply because people love to conspire. And partly because there do appear to be clear signs of a master plan unfolding on the chessboard."

"What kind of signs? Well, if you had access to a million cameras all showing you shady goings-on and you had to explain what was being done, how it was illegal, track the personal details of each person involved, and then go through court proceedings to get a conviction – where would you ever possibly start? There are so many things going on, on so many levels that it's impossible to process it in any sort of entirety with any depth, proof, or clarity."

"Well, that's right it's not about feeling like your hands are tied because you can't do anything – it's the feeling that you can't do anything that ties your hands. That's the Magian's magic, billions and billions of forms that all act to tire you, make you afraid, feel overwhelmed – moreover the system also manages to cater for so many powerful influential people that not a lot of those people want anything to change or change too much. Doing something all starts with the development of a self-conviction to make choices."

"Yeah, well some of the signs are obvious and some aren't. O and Sath brought a lot of these to my attention such as the death of touch in society, like intimacy is being made into a taboo. Well fear of paedophilia is rife, like an old-fashioned witch-hunt, and I have no love for those sick fucks but on one hand the government says kids need to be protected, and at the same time it makes all these absurd demands on mothers to put their kids in daycare, leave them with strangers and spend so much time at work they hardly ever see their kids. What the fuck is that about if not a direct attempt to send already over-worked people mad trying to obey two completely divergent attitudes to life? It's like that whole fucking slap in the face with smoking where almost every media company brain-washed people into smoking, going so far as to use it as a sexual euphemism, tap right into human fundamentals, get all the big names doing it for like 50 years. But now some cunts have the absolute cheek to decide smoking is no longer profitable/publicly acceptable, and rather than apologise for nationally and globally pushing this shit onto others, to turn around and blame smoking addiction on the supposed weakness of the individual smoker. Eh? Course there's proof check out magazines and advertising from 1900 onwards – shameless! The funny thing is the whole campaign to stop smoking is just another repeat of the original campaign probably by a lot of the same players to start smoking! And people are buying it. You can't have a smoke anywhere now – it's like people self-policing for the State with every hypocritical fuck who tut tuts not having a clue that they're just being brainwashed again to ark up about smokers. Retards. And what absolute cunts trying to make people feel dirty for doing something they told them for so long it was in every way right and safe to do! And you know recently it got so ridiculous regarding touching people that there was a big hullabaloo in the papers about how swimming instructors were going to be expected to teach children but without being allowed to touch them. laughter yeah that's right, how the fuck are you supposed to teach children to swim without the instructor ever touching them? Your child's drowning? Oh sorry, I'm not allowed to help save them because I'll get sued. Maybe you could jump in an – no? Didn't learn how to swim properly either huh? Too bad for little jimmy. laughter Innocent handling and human touch and warmth is totally being made taboo – even my friend's who work in the prostitution business say so. They reckon the internet has totally fucked the sex industry, not only because most men think they have to copy the aggressive behaviour in porno's to be a man or get off – but because most of them are guys who work their ass off for a lifeless corporation, really only want simple human contact and affection. Yeah, 14 years she's been doing it. Never used to be like that apparently. Between them, 911 and the net really fucked everything."

"Anyway can you hold on? I'm going to get a coffee now, I'll be right back. Yep just a sec."

"Sweet, right, where was I? Oh, Yeah, anyway you got other signs like the tightening grip on oil, water, narcotics, medicine, the ownership of almost all the worlds companies and subsidiaries by a handful of people, increasing strain on resources, etc – but any event that even slightly changes the availability of something is quickly and completely blown out of proportion and given a media spin that makes each and every one of these human race collectively owned resources seem like the private property of some company or another and extremely scarce. And it's ongoing – day after day in the media, in the papers, in the TV, a whole slew, and I mean a non-stop fucking current since they got the idea from the Nazis, of fear-based propaganda saying this and that is running out, so people will stay afraid, believe the world is as they want it to appear, accept the greedy mark-up in prices, get squeezed dry for the benefit of capitalist cunts to widen the gap between rich and poor, and so affect people that that's all they'll talk about, trying to drown their sorrows in alcohol and braving the daily grind together. All the while feeding Orgasmatron. I've worked at bakeries and supermarkets – do you know how much food they dump? And what about water, the national statistics company indicates between 70-90% of water used is used by industry, yet they blame the working proletariat and even doubled water/gas/electricity prices overnight! I'd also add the horrific saturation of rap music, once the most hated of forms by America, now allowed to openly pollute everything with nasty reptilian messages. No – it's the tunes that do it, not the lyrics. If you did any of those lyrics a capella they'd all just sound like shit – and exactly the same. It's musical engineers that inject the shite with trance not the two-bit actors that front the shop. Yeah I hate rap – it's an insidious state sanctioned poison – insidious, I mean you can't say fuck for fear of offending someone, but you can talk about bitch-niggaz beating raping women on a pg video game or popularise the gangsta culture in kid's movies. Which I should add in all fairness was another form of resistance absorbed and bastardised by the Magian media. Yeah, yeah transformers had mongrelized negro robots talking Ebonics, and in transporter 3, in fact a lot of movies, anytime they want to make the movie fit in and be accepted by its audience they use contemporary music to make it fluid, so they use some ugly fucking rap track, thus continuing the cycle. laughter yeah well that or the horseshit pop bubblegum and love music that passes for music these days. I actually find a large number of people agreeing with me about my article on the frequency of the Magian being so fucking enervating that it hurts their ears and brains just to be near it. Yep those fuckers have done extremely well to create such a powerful sonic weapon. Mate, people severely underestimate the role of music and movies in all of this."

"Eh? Orgasmatron – never heard the term? Song by … Motorhead, well Sepultura do a version too but I don't know if it's the original – anyway, basically – Orgasmatron is the personification of the Churches Lust for Power and Armageddon. Find the lyrics online, you'll see what I mean."

"laughter Yeah well like America says – In God We Trust."

"Yeah right – so as I was saying, the Vatican put together this group to seek out and destroy the rise in the occult – cough I mean, disobedience. And with all these other signs popping up of a singular control over everything it's looking like this will be one hell of an interesting century. But the Christians are up against something new this time."

"No – and I knew you'd ask that. I've explained why forming a Para-military group or promoting extremism won't work against the Magian – at least not yet. What the fuck are you going to do against a powerfully trained unit of state-sanctioned S.W.A.T.? Or when the System gets hold of you and drags you through the courts, through the legal system – launching a one-sided argument to justify your arrest, your treatment, using all its media against you, and you end up in a cell fucked over after someone pays the cops or screws to ice you – or the cops or screws use the inmates desperation to nail your coffin shut? What? Call yourself a political prisoner? You end up just another David Koresh or David Hicks – making maybe a loud bang at first with your individuality, but which day by day under a torrent of propaganda and damage control from the Machine silences it – demonises it – or worse: uses what you did against you by making you a martyr for the opposite cause. Take September 11 2001, even if in some distant planetary dimensions terrorists actually did blow up the twin towers and I've seen too much evidence to believe that – a couple of thousand people get hurt in arguably justifiable payback for what America is doing to those countries their people and the world in general, and suddenly its OK for Americans to bomb the absolute shit out of Afghanistan. They do that shit in war – they do everything and anything they have to – and we're at war.

If you take a careful look at the Christ/Satan myth embedded in nearly all movies where there's two clearly demarcated sides, yeah again transformers classic example, you see that after 2001 the message of such fights changes. Suddenly war is allowed to be won at any cost once the enemy has been identified. Yeah well a lot of movies show popular monuments and world-historic sites being smashed to dust in the name of American justice – and even cop shows are giving fantastic justifications for treating 'perps' any old way the cops desire – collectively sanctioning and condoning torture and assault of anyone whose deemed a criminal. We're at war with something old archaic and massive – and to take down a two-thousand-year-old mongrel dragon you need pretty spectacular weapons."

"What's that? No, I still get it, I'm always meeting people who want to get together and form some sort of "Satanic Army" with a cache of weapons and secret hideouts – fuck man, a lot of people still treat the work like its cops and robbers. Well let me put it this way – if you've ever done martial arts you realise how extremely fragile the human body is even as it can be super-strong. You get in a fight and you might learn the same thing. You get one chance to take on something as huge as the Dragon if indeed you're even able to live such a life in the first place that you become aware of it before it subsumes you – and you can't go throwing that life away on some doomed crusade your carefully manufactured ego wants you to go on – that's falling prey to narrative magic. Especially, especially when there's still no solidarity among people. That was the first thing to go. Um yeah, what's his name, Henry Ford introduced the production line and everything just kind of snowballed from there into consumerism, capitalism and the era of automated machines. Do you know at my local supermarket they no longer employ people at night? They only provide a self-service machine that fucks people out of jobs."

"Yeah, but I mean a lot of people are still being trapped by the same shit – doing the same things despite the obvious precautions the Church has taken to meet various actions with various results. You wave a weapon, you're gonna get fucking shot. And you're gonna get shot by professionals or tasered now, the cops are being given tasers here in Oz. And say you blow yourself up on a tram – yeah you might start something, Australia has never had anything like that happen, and it'd start a wave that'd turn oz into a police state – but why would that help? And what kind of weak assfuck thinks blowing up civilians is okay? It's not okay – it's a lazy easy way out of actually tackling the huge and insidious problems that face humanity as a whole. Most of these bombers are young – easy to control, easy to convince, easy to replace. The bombs don't ever seem to get anyone of importance, or anyone who has actually been causing the shit. It's just an endless blood feud fuelling itself- just the way the Magian likes it."

"Well any of those poor tortured motherfuckers who did those school shootings are symptoms of the geometry America forces its inhabitants to endure. But I'd love to believe that's finally starting to change – that people are starting to understand that there is a life beyond form and thus choices beyond what the Magian offers us. The plan to implement Magical Solidarity is – pause yeah, laugh but it's very different to National Socialism for a variety of reasons – name one? OK, well it hasn't failed yet."

Ryan sipped his coffee while he listened.

"No. well I can't explain that to many people – I can't give reasons for various actions because people need to learn how to think like that for themselves – if I tell them what I'm doing they'll just get lazy, add the info to the pile of downloads, and never get around to understanding digesting or integrating what was actually being done – instead they'll try to find a shortcut with some other group who'll bury them up to their ass in weird and ridiculous practices … yes and that's right, you can give away all the secrets of the Tradition in plain view but that doesn't mean they'll be appreciated or even understood. Like, nobody ever thanks the guy that takes the fall, do they? laugh precisely. Understanding is still at a pretty shitty level – people still don't understand let alone appreciate the supreme subtlety of how they and things work – like how having a common enemy can join two allies together in hatred firmer than cement. It's not always fun having to play the enemy – it's not my idea of fun anyway – and it's a shitty job laugh but it works, and someone has to do it, just like it's always been done. You've no idea how many groups or key people we've brought together by making them hate us as a team, well me really because I stick my head out as the so-called representative. Well, what they think is me anyway – I'm just a fuckin' phantom really. Hell, I don't know "who" I am half the time. Eh? Yeah well fuck 'em it's way too early for people to even come close to that kind of perception. Softly, softly, catchy monkey."

"Aw fuck mate, list is endless."

Ryan swivelled to the right and picked another jellybean out of the bowl.

“Well, we had to start somewhere – all these other places are stigmatised, so any place we tried to deconstruct the Magian would have had, shit, at least a few hundred years of sediment, in some cases like Britain, maybe a few thousand. We’d have had to spend a lot of time eroding too many thick layers of convictions and traditions before getting heard or even to the point. New Zealand would have been good, but Bolton has that, and I don’t live there anymore. And so Australia was the perfect platform to launch Magical Socialism. Eh? Yeah – met quite a few interesting people over the years – most of them are still working with me toward this. Yeah, the ONA too.”

“Mm, well that’s helped fuckin’ heaps – but you can’t tell people that sort of shit – if you tell everyone you’re this or that – it changes perception – better to remain quiet on the extent of one’s achievements, for one reason people can doubt my ‘credentials’ and ‘training’ all they want … raucous laughter yeah! It’s from the Simpsons. Anyway, what was I saying? The proof is in the pudding. Say what you like THEM is undeniably influential. And secondly, I’m avoiding being seen as an authority. Why? Well people would treat our work differently; just go along with it because we have some vested authority – when really they should go along with it because it makes sense to them. Well yeah that’s why when we published a number of our books we deliberately didn’t give them exciting pictures – I mean I could have easily used one of my pictures or drawn something to make them look cool and satanic – but what the hell would that do? It’s very easy to wrap something up in pretty pictures to sell it. Man, I’ve wasted a lot of good money buying shit just because it looked good only to get it home and read it. I went through all that shit when I was DWR, god, as a teenager. I want our work to sell, to spread, to influence, whether it’s wrapped nicely or not – after all, this fascination people have with valuing something based on its outer appearance needs to be balanced out. I’m testing synchronicity and I’m trying to reverse some of the lean on marketing that people use to qualify something’s content. Heh, yeah, I read a lot what can I say? Mm, well ONA officially recognised us publicly as a Traditional Nexion not so long ago. Well yeah but we’ve been that privately for a long time – being announced publicly really only serves to elevate people’s notice – people are trained early on to seek authorities. As a perceived authority we command respect – with respect, time, and with time – attention. Attention’s important. Because once we have it – and they’re not flitting about from form to form but paying close attention to what we’re saying/doing – then we can point out how the whole process that brought them to us worked. Well yep, the idea is that it will make them immune to any further attempts by others to use form to entice them away from their own will and to serve in the will and forms of others. Well yeah, I realised the paradox in telling people to think for themselves – but I can’t make them think for themselves. I can simply do the best I can, with the others, to present what we have diluted from our own paths.”

“Yes, well a mixture of long-term and short-term strategists as far as Satanism is concerned is important – you can’t be too careful with generalising things out of habit because then you cut your options short. But THEM has – yeah THEM, that’s the name of the new Temple – changed the game for a lot of people. As I speak, in just four months there’s been almost 4000 people visit the site you’re looking at. Right 4, 059. Well, that’s true, in fact someone made a point of telling me some other assclown got twice as many hits and he did fuck all with his life. But the point here is that 4000 people taking the time to read serious methodology and insights into the problems and solutions and strategy of a vehicle like Satanism – and not even Satanism but just life – is a fucking good start. Because they’re not taking an interest in the same old tired bullshit trotted out year after year, century after century that encapsulates them in commercial forms – but frees them from them. With enough influence that could snowball rapidly into a giant fist that fucks the Magian completely. Yeah that is quite an image. Sorry.”

“Um, sales are steady and I’ve sold several dozen copies of each volume of Mvimaedivm now – and that was despite stripping all the bullshit that goes with so many occultists from the very start. laugh well that’s right and that’s because being occult isn’t the point. But occultists are the most likely place to find minds free of certain prejudices, more open to change, who will try things in spite of the seeming impossibilities of them. Well actually – Oh guess what? My publisher sent me an email the other day that let me know one of my books had been chosen to sell on Amazon – and without me doing a damn thing except writing it. Again, a small start – but a dozen or more small starts in the right place are every bit as good as the proverbial good one. Saturation is one of the keys – but flooding people with books would just repeat what so many others have done – that doesn’t help anyone – but you know about my other work.”

“Yep going very well in fact. Tried a couple of times to get in good with a publisher – but for whatever fucking reason…”

“laugh yeah, must be my winning personality, eh?”

“Well – Mvimaedivm is the name of the forum we run. Yeah and the name of the books. Well I’m sure you can figure out why they both share the same name … That’s right mate, they’re the same thing. Anyway the forum Mvimaedivm has been extremely successful – remember when everyone just fucking argued because they wanted to be right? Because of the domination of the ego? Well we found a way to satisfactorily explain to the collective ego how everyone can be right, while everyone can be wrong, and yet everyone work together, In Sinister Solidarity. There’s now 21 separate nexions that I know of and counting, working together while each working in isolation.”

“Mate, there’s no way to explain it over the phone without it sounding confusing – you‘d have to see it for yourself, be a part of it to get it – its magic. I’ll send you some of the dossiers we put together so you can see for yourself. It’s only the first finger to the enemy though – the first fuck you as it were. Well a) the Vatican can’t tackle the occult if the occult doesn’t seem occult. b) The Magian have a powerful knack of absorbing everything into the machine and making it harmless, we’ve just shared the blueprints for that machine with the world and because it was so popular, that machine is all the Magian ever built. They don’t have time to build another one.”

Ryan made a face and dropped the wet blue jellybean he’d taken out of his mouth into the nearby rubbish bin.

“Look I don’t mean to sound like I’m blowing my own trumpet, but fuck mate I’m blowing my own trumpet. See look at it this way. The Christians haven’t really evolved in technique – yeah their enforcers have, and technology has given them an edge, but numbers don’t mean shit if you have a superb strategy that gets the masses involved. See they still teach the same intolerance they taught way back when in the same way. They still have a cyclopean definition of Satan and Satanists, and Satanism too for that matter. But instead of having discussions restricted to forms and thus peoples thought processes being effectively controlled via a restriction of choice of thoughts – people around me are now beginning to look much harder at form – examine the motive for their presence – see the fragility in them and understand the layers of each – not just as individual geometry, but as a powerful context to be used in casual intellectual examination. With the bones of the magic of the Magian laid bare – people are slowly stripping away the “cumbersome wreckage” that being trapped within the stricture of forms has left behind as a legacy for our generation and which has profound influence on everything we do by ourselves, in a group, or as a species.”

“No way. There’s way too much work to be done to dismantle that terrifying machine than I could ever hope to do in a hundred years of writing. Because there are all these probably infinite angles that need work, study, perfection, alignment to replace the artificial machine with organic life-centred geometry. That’s why it’s so incredible to see all these different groups rising up as one each with its own personality, goal and engine driving it – yet, all working toward the same thing, the destruction of the Magian thought process – not just to tear down their transient outer architecture or personnel but a collective internal alchemical eradication of their function. I mean obviously there are groups doing all sorts of different functions – but it’s like they’re working as one creature to bring about the same aim. We’re not just changing the flag here – we’re actually changing consciousness insofar as we are influencing what people choose to take notice of, care about, and with luck permanently affecting people's perception in such a way as to revolutionise perception itself. Once something's broken man, it doesn't get unbroken. Perception is like that."

"Well yeah, I know I'm fucking crazy. But I'm also horrifically sane."

"laugh Whaaaat? Get fucked cunt, I'll buy you a fucking swear-jar!"

"Yeah. Nah. Actually that's a good point. Try thinking about it like this: what does the Magian really have – really have – except our Trust?"

In a nearby room the shrill cry of a mobile phone rang out.

"With power comes responsibility – especially when you're trying to help change the world in so drastic a way. And with so many handicaps! Like, we're not wealthy, we have to work anonymously, we don't have the luxury of cheap and wide-spread media or advertising, we're trying to presence something that is completely outside the box so far as the occult is concerned, we're trying to expand consciousness for fuck sake, and we're only three years old as a Temple. I have to believe it can be done – otherwise who else is there? Shit phones ringing hold on a sec?"

"Fucking telemarketers. Okay, I'm back, sorry about that mate. Where was I? You get one life, seventy or so years, and then you're fucking dead. In that time, at least as a Satanist – you have to break down all the bullshit lumped onto your brain and cultural program to see something lies beyond it – you have to try escaping that program a number of very disheartening times in order to identify what lies beyond it – you have to sum up all the knowledge left to you by others by using only the merest portion of it – and you have to learn how to learn. In that time you must also accomplish any number of extremely tricky tasks, including individuation, finding the self, accepting the ego, dealing with the concept of God, the concept of godlessness, dealing with the concept of concepts, get disappointed by any number of idols and gods, not go mad doing all this, not lose interest pursuing such goals, and not give in to being a part of the furniture in the Time in which you find yourself. You must fight death, doubt, failure, and chance, and even beyond all that – you must be able to write, draw, or otherwise communicate what no-one wants to hear without being drowned out, ignored, or laughed at. That is, assuming you align in the first place with the forces of the Sinister and not the status quo. Now I'm going out on a limb here and I'm saying to you that no-one, not a soul, can do or does what I do. That's why I write so much and talk so much because I've never met or encountered anyone like me, and I have something to say about the world and my place in it, I have something to say about all that I have encountered in the people around me as a result of its history and its domination by the Church. I'm not going to sit around and waste my life, quietly biding my time and tapping my fingers waiting for someone else to come along and say what I am saying, or do what I am doing. I'm just giving it one hell of a good go to try and smash these cunts or leave behind the means for others to do it, like I promised to myself I would do when I was twelve. What's that? Mate, the army will come – one thing I've learned is that there are many ways to fight a war, and many ways should be used to fight a war."

Ryan's coffee had gone cold. And he pushed it away.

"Yeah – well if we can just reach a critical mass then shit could really change in a big way. Yeah? We'll I'm not a megalomaniac – no – I'm not – one of the most important things I teach from the Temple is not to trade one authority for another. Instead of just repeating the same hypnotic trick but with me as the new puppet master I try and show people how it's done and hopefully how to shut that shit down. Because replacing a Magian authority with a satanic one isn't the name of the game either man, it's all so much more complex than that and yet so blindingly simple – depends which side of the fence you're looking at it from. People need to split their perception and dual view of yes/no a little bit further to work with us, so they have all shades of understanding operating at once. Yeah it is asking a lot – but look at what we're trying to do – and that includes your work too – it's huge, insane, and fucking impossible – but hey shit, it's being done anyway."

"Slowly? laugh mate, where I stand that term means nothing anymore."

"Exactly. But you know how super subtle the power of forms can be – and how people's brains tend to work – for instance, form is so powerful, the reader may have unconsciously assumed that –I- don't like blue jellybeans.

TSP (THE SATANIC PANIC)

So, to begin… again.

What does it mean to change what should call the 'Old World Story'? Of, as we have said previously, the Hero – the Redeemer and the endless knot that keeps archetypal energies (and results) in a fixed stasis?

Embedded in the imagery and devices we crafted are countless subtle and overt references, symbols, processes and phrases of the temple including an escalating presence of the Thrasz, subtly seeding the subconscious with familiarity and later acceptance of mysterious principles that may in the Present, present as mere characteristic artistic eccentricity. There are several unveiled statements in the imagery: openly depicting a burned/burning church, the Thrasz desecrating a cathedral – and the world lore of the greater device we have crafted by way of an entirely new game has for its back-story the essence of Insynsian, relating the excesses of monotheism for taking away some of the industries most favoured elements and whose agency forms the game worlds past wherein the blame falls squarely on Abrahamic forces – and many more elements besides but our symbolism coupled with the narrative eventually joined forces within the form. What we are doing is riding several popular waves of technology and entertainment-based psychodrama and introducing new archetypes, new behaviours of those archetypes, new energies and supplying an entirely different narrative in an attempt to influence users and create a new living story to compete with the dominance of the OWS. A working example of Directive-A16 in practice is itself a valuable by-product but our intention is to deliver our current en masse to the mainstream and to those most actively capable of distributing our work in a living psychodrama. When this secondary narrative is eventually coupled with actual knowledge of the occult corpus of the Temple of THEM reality and fantasy will drastically trade places as two spheres carefully nurtured in isolation and never meant to touch are brought together.

Even if now recognised, it would be difficult to dislodge these shards which have been embedded deeply in the industry psyche. Primarily due to the event of the 'Satanic Panic' of the 1980's that saw all manner of accusations levelled at entertainment industries for allegedly possessing secret intention to indoctrinate listeners or users with messages from the devil. Wherein such accusations are now laughed at and seen as a time the world went a bit mad, this is 1980 for fuck's sake, a shade shy of 2000 years, TWO THOUSAND YEARS after Christianity rose to power. How – can humanity be so cripplingly slow to learn from the past or evolve beyond its suppression and the gravity of Judaeo yolks? Only by the extent of the mental damage evident. I digress. Such accusations of messages would find pressed against it – for one – its own embarrassing previous hysteria as people would scarcely believe such claims a second time. What unassailable proof?

Moreover, these shards have already gone to their new homes – influencing the subconscious of hundreds of thousands of people over the course of five intense years. Directive-A16 is in full force here, A) subjugating and subverting a primarily Christian-based and Abrahamic-derived corporate vehicle that is the largest in the world B) sprawling across a large number of outlets and networks including pirated catalogues and collections seeding these tendrils further every day C) repeated by the world's largest set of story-tellers themselves, who may be changing their narrative to represent the devices presented and sharing the world we created, where even the smallest divergence from the OWS is a ripple against a narrative withstanding aeons – telling and selling a new story with a new moral code and breaking down existing power-types by doing so D) seeding the messages of Them far and wide to outlast us – in an audacious experiment of Oromancy E) making a subtle and increasingly overt connection between the devices, imagery and the prime mover, this temple so that the two forces eventually touch, merge and become inseparable. With five years head start – we now have enough breathing room and the maturation of the form so as to speak about the new form THEM has been implementing.

What then – when the two forms finally fuse and it becomes apparent that the imagery of the secondary form does indeed contain ‘satanic’ references, ethos and keywords, messages and influence of a real occult organisation and refers back to the temple and its vast body of alchemical work? What then of the gamers who know only of my secondary forms (WTG), or of the occultists who know only of my primary forms (THEM) – such volatility is hard to predict in a unique experiment that may – when it reaches its full alchemical maturity – re-instigate a second satanic panic – or – simply silently brood, seeping into the minds and hearts of those whom the forms encounter. Who really knows what playing with exploits in a system can do.

In the recently released ‘Gates of Avernus’ even here, Christian apologists make special mention that ‘evil should have its ass kicked’ . It is useful to know that D&D grew from Christian roots – and is therefore saturated with praise for the prehistoric ego with a blind lust to kill and an enervating morality that sees the ethos of the Inquisition, or Knights Crusaders, or Salem Witch-hunters enshrined in ‘Heroes’ whose deeds of murder and immorality are almost always deemed just, rarely punished by the game – and in every way, sanctioned within the fantasy genre as part of doing business. Coupled with all manner of human-centric archetypes, including the Cleric, Priest, Paladin who repel the Undead, necromancers and any monsters that happen to get in the way – the overall narrative of D&D is the muscular colonising Christian which through RPG posits a simulacrum of bravely fighting evil where-ever it may go – which in itself is the core problematic corruption of the World Story of humanity by reinforcing these damaging beliefs of egoistic superiority, moral righteousness and tribal brutality -– training and re-training in the bearing of Abrahamic thought and action.

Only when the game contains a certain number and type of characters will the players make any progress – it is designed that way to promote co-operation. These shortcomings aside it is a robust vehicle to allow the safe exploration of psychodrama and the sheer power of story, the omnipotence of thrall, and the voice of THEM, not just the ‘player’ to present. This freedom to express themselves as another being (also themselves) has a healing and therapeutic effect for many players, inviting greater steps to individuation as Jung called it, and in exploring repressed and latent archetypes and persona’s inherent within the subconscious to gradually build a more rounded personality – at least in theory, the ego-enshrinement, hero archetype and conqueror ethos generally undermines any qualities such heuristic exploration might impart as the system continually repeats and reinforces its underlying mantras. Under other names I have written at length about the psychodrama involved within RPG which more often than not accidentally touches on the same sinister aspects that Theatre deeply involves itself and deliberately evokes – but even that expertise cannot handle the danger of opening Pandora's box and letting the subconscious off its primal leash – what hope do the games industry who see it all as entertainment have?

The Ziggurat containing our various mechanisms designed to fall one after the other like a chain of domino's has been built and populated, all that is required now is to carelessly drop the map to it. Herein though comes a few poignant questions taken from different vantages.

The Question of Vindication: – if the Temple of THEM actually legitimises the unsubstantiated Christian paranoia of the 80's (ad infinitum) does this weaken or strengthen their matrix? If there are in fact, 'satanic' messages, symbols, and/or a direct attempt to undermine and disrupt their forms – and this current can be tied to the temple which operates in the free sphere of Saturn treating forms as social engineering – something to coldly dissect all devoid of emotional loading and which temple exhibits open and (escalating) hostility toward Christianity and Abrahamism – what then? What can we expect? A shut down of all the secondary forms by its distributors? A boycott of secondary forms by informed users? Can you shut down a game within a game within a game? Could it involve making an example short-term but whose long-term effect is to incite others to greater creativity and deeper penetration into forms with the relentless sorcery displayed here? Could it be the tipping point for a whole new wave of directed attacks against the Hydra in ways it has no protection against?

Advocate Vantages:
A) The introduction of our narrative may serve only to vindicate the Christian's fear of being subverted by satanic forces via the temples actions bringing the prophecy to life.
– Yes, probably.
B) Hypocrisy – viz. mimicking a crusade to rout out and vanquish the 'evil of the Christians' in effect copies the Christian's numerous crusades against perceived enemies whether, women, witches, blacks, communists, terrorists or satanists.
– Yes, probably.
C) Defenders rush to protect the carrier forms accusing the temple and its agents of attempting to destroy a platform with which form lies powerful sentiment through beloved entertainment subsequently exposing the temples work en masses to a litany of ridicule, speculation, dissection, litigation.
– Yes, probably.
D) The rich and prolific private fantasy of one insane individual
– Yes, probably.
E) A calculated attempt to use a collection of specific forms to implement the will of the Temple to change the way some humans think and therefore, act.

– Yes, probably.
F) A game within a game within a game.
– Yes, probably.
– It doesn't 'matter' what is happening here, it doesn't matter how its explained or who notices or how it might be later understood or painted if it can even be understood – this isn't logic, it's magic.
Is it possible that amid the volatile aftermath of this experiment – exposure of this method has the effect of seeding the concept/drive of Directive-A16 as a far larger widespread practice to infiltrate and subjugate corporate and core forms? Subjugate and subvert are of course loaded words – we are offering competing archetypes in a playing field where the same archetype has been dominant for an eternity – and we believe – has and is causing a great distortion in the capacity of humanity to evolve. We are offended spiritually by the lack of alternatives – this is a Mind War.

The temple is not stereo-typically 'satanic' – and does not propound satanism, but certainly an anti-Abrahamic vitriol. It is alien and Lovecraftian, sinister and Illuminati seeking to control and change the Apex narrative of Judaeo-Christian sentiment toward some 'Other' – toward THEM, toward plurality. But in the end perhaps my life's work so far is a tragic-comic waste of decades, amounting simply to death-wishian chaos-magic and self-destruction – the equivalent of dropping a loaded grenade down a well just to hear the bang but not throwing it far enough and blowing myself to pieces in the process. Time will tell. In the near future, Conjunction III.

Is it possible that beyond the volatile aftermath of this stage – such exposure however, seeds the concept/drive of Directive-A16 as a far larger widespread practice to infiltrate and subjugate corporate forms? The temple is not stereo-typically 'satanic' – and does not propound satanism, but certainly an anti-Abrahamic vitriol. It is alien and Lovecraftian, sinister and Illuminati seeking to control and change the Apex narrative of Judaeo-Christian sentiment toward some 'Other' – toward THEM, toward plurality. But in the end perhaps my life's work so far is a tragic-comic waste of decades, amounting simply to death-wishian chaos-magic and self-destruction – the equivalent of dropping a loaded grenade down a well just to hear the bang but not throwing it far enough and blowing myself to pieces in the process. My curiosity to Know is damning and a curse.

MEANDERNET

Project Meander began in 2015 following an escalation in practice of Directive-16 of the Temple of THEM to infect corporate logos and spread them. Minor earlier versions including transmission of symbolism involved tattooing banknotes, spread of free literature, cult-mythos/photography of the Asov. Memecores included the creation of products considered indispensable to users within the RPG genre; Squareware which randomly generated every kind of description was a an analog pre-

AI distributor of key words, phrases and concepts germane to the Temple of THEM but would remain undetected as inseparable from fantasy nomenclature.

The Naos Deck Sinister Tarot was digitally altered and disguised as an ordinary tarot pack for gaming spreading pagan archetypes - in addition to the virulent deployment of Meanders. Precisely because those infected would use the contents to actively narrate stories to others with an average rate of 1:4 per setting, Meanders and co could quickly be disseminated. Adding to this the niche aspect of modularity, inexpensive price and exhaustive range for re-playability and desire to own further elements of the product increased the rate of infection exponentially.

Using crowd funding platforms the initial reach of the Project was able to reach a higher volume of traffic than attempting to enter the industry through classical means via entrenched institutions, bypassing quality control or moral policing. Hidden among content that was expected to contain arcane, occult, demonic, strange, otherworldly, violent, bloody, bizarre tropes, secreted phrases, article titles, words, symbols and concepts of the Temple of THEM were concealed in plain sight.

Infiltration of the major RPG distributors and marketplaces ensured premium and rapid dissemination of the servitors (maps) as did points of sale directly controlled by THEM such as 'Game Tile Warehouse'. Acting in a similar fashion to the Black Glyph Society, a 50/50 model of selling the servitors in public to fund expansion, or supplying them freely in private through allowing piracy, black markets, bad actors to obtain, archive and share further used the free market and the black market to facilitate their spread.

What is Stuxnet?

Stuxnet is a malicious computer worm first uncovered on 17 June 2010[2] and thought to have been in development since at least 2005. Stuxnet targets supervisory control and data acquisition (SCADA) systems and is believed to be responsible for causing substantial damage to the Iran nuclear program after it was first installed on a computer at the Natanz Nuclear Facility in 2009.[3][4] Although neither the United States nor Israel has openly admitted responsibility, multiple independent news organizations claim Stuxnet to be a cyberweapon built jointly by the two countries in a collaborative effort known as Operation Olympic Games.

Meanders acts as a sophisticated computer virus rivalling Stuxnet; or as an attractively-packaged virulent magic through:

- -exploiting known expectations of its methods of propagation both directed and undirected.
- -exploits of narrative magic or oromancy and the human desire to tell stories using tools/props.

- -the meteoric rise of the RPG and entertainment industry with facilitated institutions and markets for global distribution and trade.
- -presenting as innocuous digital information.
- -bypassing traditional security measures in an industry such as editors, publishing houses, PR teams, Q&A checks, cultural advisors.
- -bypassing all and every Anti-virus software program by virtue of being an analogue executable program initiated by the display, use and involvement of the asset in a spoken play/story/adventure/session infecting those present with subliminal messages and symbolism (priming) that they would later recognise when the trigger (origin) was pulled.
- -ignoring any fail-safes or regulation by trojan horsing in on the commercial forms of the occult as entertainment including Lovecraft, Sorcery, Demonology, Satanism.
- -Stuxnet's reach was powerful, targeting an non-internet connected (air gapped) network in a nuclear facility - however, its reach was calculated to be only 180,000 computers. Meandernet, running in increased payloads from 2015 onward deployed itself from the worlds best rpg markets averaging 3 sales per day, or the distribution of 90 maps on average, for ten years, until 2024. That is, approximately 3650 days x 90 giving a rough and extremely conservative estimate of 328,500 individual distributions from one marketplace alone - being used on endless streams, real and virtual tables, and visual displays globally by tens of thousands of dungeon masters, weaving associative lore and bonding players to the maps with memorable personal narratives.

Like Stuxnet, Meandernet had a directive to destroy a machine and hide the fact.

- -The machine was not the entertainment industry - for successful propagation those links would need to remain non-alert to the threat and therefore Meandernet allowed to operate and spread globally to the widest remit as phase 1 of its program.
- -supplied in every required format, size, market - it increased its chances of propagation.
- -primarily relied on human-to-human propagation (universal zero day exploit) bypassing all known security devices, measures, programs as 'static software' and an undetectable systemic threat, but an invisible moral one.
- -Sleepers in the maps are undetectable even when noticed due to their cryptic quality and specific vernacular that can easily be passed over as part of the fantasy genre decor.
- -That there had already been an over-blown Satanic panic worked in Meandernets favour as claims of a conspiracy by satanic forces infiltrating and spreading satanic messages through D&D would be met with grave resistance, disbelief and enmity.

- -Any claims made earlier than the creators pulling the trigger to release the 2nd alchemical element could be easily explained away as the fantasies of madmen which a protective/sensitive RPG industry would fiercely rally behind.
- -As such Meanders immediately elevated privileges through total access to all computers as inert battlemaps used without question by hundreds of thousands of live story-tellers to entertain millions of players (including recorded streams, conventions, podcasts, kickstarters, shared screens from virtual table top game sessions or software demonstrations requiring a suitable map - given Meanders open-policy allowing users to avoid royalties or legal sanctions when using them publicly) - unfettered and ubiquitous to do its job of subtle subliminal messaging through sharing words, signs, symbols and concepts relating to the Temple of THEM, that would be associated with the Order of Nine Angles, a quasi-terrorist group that had unpopularly become choked with diabolic human dregs co-opting the name and reputation to engage in criminal, terroristic, immoral and disturbing activities of child exploitation. While the National Socialist, Islamic and other Extremist political-ideological breadcrumbs and sandwiches, including training, manifestoes, legitimation of networks criss-crossing M16, FBI, Gladio et al would have proved explosive and definitive - the changing reputation of the o9a deeply complicated the final phase of Directive-16.

This latter, unforeseen devolution of a previously Aryan-presenting, noble, evolutionary, galactic, progressive form eschewing the restraints of opposites - into a cabal of rampant child-abusers stalled and then undermined the original purpose and intention of the Temple of THEM which was to magico-politically disrupt the narrative of Judaeo-Christianity with new archetypes, ideas and challenges to the status quo; only to discover mid-way that the o9a had become synonymous with grave child sexual abuse (CSA) due to Tempel ov Blood and FBI directives becoming entangled through the co-opted informant, Joshua Sutter. The distinct problematique being that CSA is associated by THEM as a predominantly Abrahamic-religious (mal)practice and therefore ties to the assumed antidote, now poisoned by doing the same, would fail to achieve the intended goal. Thus, to use a metaphor, by the time the bomb was built, the trigger had become faulty, the dirty bomb had become Too dirty.

In addition, moral compassing had shifted and the value of the RPG community unsuspectingly infiltrated by the Temple of THEM was too great to detonate;- here was a community of relative peace-lovers escaping from the evils of the world;- figuratively, a garden of Eden. My ties had grown, as had my respect for the Artform through my deep engagement and over the course of such a long period my doubts as to whether instigating another Satanic Panic was strategically correct or risked buying into the destructive hype of the first one unwittingly motivating the Christian Empire to increase its gravity, mobilize pushback, patch its vulnerability and seize advantage through moral outrage - the lesser (but synonymous) equivalent of America transforming world security post 9/11.

Meanders illustrates the vulnerability of all forms, and non-violent, non-predatory means toward change that sidesteps all known security measures created by the state.

- -Meandernet is a codeless Trojan Horse that self replicates a priming system through its quality, low expense, through knowing it will be taken and shared in black market archives, through its modularity requiring/inviting further purchases/pieces, through inspiring others to use them, talk about them, share them;- all widening the spread and impact of Directive-16 by taking advantage of systems already in place, how people do things, and recognizing the means to bypass all existing security measures on the planet through implanting the virus invisibly in a novel method with no safeguards.
- -It took ten years to build and if properly implemented could have had severe shockwaves across the globe given the exponential distribution, use and implications of Meanders. The fall-out would involve being sued and an explosive disclosure of the direct relation to the notorious quasi-terroristic O9A, the vulnerability of all industries to Directive-16 but specifically those that use story as a means of propagation, the embarrassing spread of a subversive movement deep into the heart of industry territory that used free-will and creative inertia to infect computers, and would have had ripples across the RPG for its acute sensitivity to satanism. But specific and aggressive fallout from ties to o9a satanism.
- -Even when detected, mitigation is challenging. Thousands of images spread over a ten year period no longer require the initial injection points to self-propagate. Raising an alarm and seeking to remove them from a market, only adds to their reputation as a forbidden set of encrypted tools for the very curious suddenly learning their maps Do have hidden satanic messages:- which excites curiosity and further propagation, promotes archives irrespective of main industry players to arise, fuses the divide between urban legend and magico-political espionage adding credence and legitimacy to a moral outrage that has already been discredited as a fervent conspiracy, mobilize the powerful eschatological forces of the reigning RPG homeland and Christian superpower America. The more attention called to it - the more it exports itself. A thermonuclear detonation on myriad levels each designed to inflame and initiate the next as a web not a chain.
- -In any follow-up litigation the act had the potential for a global scandal offering a shock to the industry the likes of which it has never seen and involving everyone from the common player to institutions marketing Meanders, to intelligence agencies monitoring o9a and even nations concerned with unforeseen security exploits. Media would have doubtless described the processes, method and extent of the patient infiltration, and this would further seed the idea as a means of combat across the planet through the chains of news, escalating the playing field of how actors can act, forevermore. In o9a-speak, aeonic magic.

THE POWER OF THE WILL TO SHAPE REALITY

E = Environment / e = ego

`E' – representing environment – is that factor referred to as matter, although current understanding of this material or `black clay' from which everything physical is moulded is yet to be understood in its greater relation to the other elements of the Acausal and its type of Time.
`E' can be seen when walking down the road – it is the essence of the shapes and the geometry of the world. If, for instance, a road is laid, that road is there because of 'e', because of ego, that is, because of someone (some Will) willing that thing to be there and that shape to have taken form from the elements of `E'.
The Grass, the Trees and Plants represent the wild, untamed expression of E – of `Environment/Nature'.
Left alone these forces would quickly claim back the carefully manicured lawns, garden rows, and neat hedge lines. They would crack the carefully willed concrete driveways and smother the property lines defined by the humble fence.
They would grow over the windows, through the floorboards and carpet the walls in mould. Our cars left unwashed and cleaned would become dirty lumps of mud covered in bird shit and rotten leaves. Their engines would atrophy from disuse, the parts seize and rust without oil or weather protection. We, too, would die if we did not eat, drink, or practice sanitary living.

A tree is a dynamic counterpart inherently and implicitly expressive of the essence of `E' – a tree is part of the natural expression of the E engine – it is the substance of `E' itself given unique form by `E' and not `e'. It is when the `E' meets resistance from the Will or driving force of `e', I.e. the human will to change `E' to suits its needs or desire, that `E' is defined to some extent by `e'.
But until that resistance occurs, the `E' is a raw, primal and alien expression of the Cosmic Being. It is from observations of this natural expression, I.e. Nature, unsullied by the intrusion of man's `e', that Nature can divulge the natural pattern of things, I.e. the Sacred Geometry of the Universe.
Even when `E' has been `tamed' to suit the `e' of Man, its retains its essentially primal chthonic quality – there must be continued pressure or resistance against the expression of 'E' by man's `e' to keep it serviceable as such, I.e. in one mundane example, we mow the lawns and trim the tree branches when they show signs of interfering with power lines on our streets lest the grass become 'overgrown' or the tree branches `disruptive' to our Will to Power, `e'. This constant struggle to `mould the black clay' to mould the primal matter of `E' and the contents generated by its Engine by the contents of `e' – is a struggle to maintain a stasis of Artificial Forms over Natural Ones.

It is a process that can not favour one engine over the other, the E and the e are not divisive when we look at the greater process but joined in a cyclic dance. However, when the Will of `e' tries to force `E' to conform to its Will there can be dire consequences.
Consider the Atomic and Hydrogen Bomb. Man's Will to harness the elements of `E' amplify the opposing Will of `E' and the detonation that results when that `E/e' is released is incredible.

If we see a road sign as we drive by it – we can, with developed powers of empathy and psychic/occult skills come to sense the Will that binds that sign to be there. We know a worker probably placed the sign there by order of the Council for which they work. In turn the Transport Authority issued orders to the Council. Someone in the Transport Authority decided to Will that sign to be there, whether it was a political decision to placate or bribe voters, or a decision based on common-sense to reduce speed – whatever the motive, it is the Will of `e' that conceived of its implementation. The road sign is thus held there by many combined forces of Will, by the worker who wants to have done a good job by doing what he was asked to do and completing the task of setting up the sign, the Council who have ensured the sign was placed there in order to answer to their responsibilities and obligations as part of a bureaucratic transport administration, and the individual in the TA who decided that it would be a good idea to erect a road sign in the first place – owing to pressure from other Wills or 'e's and external/internal forces.

It is due to these Wills, that you are seeing a road sign where it is and why the rest of the power lines, roads, houses, letterboxes etc appear the way they are and have been placed in such a way to give rise to your spatial and visual interpretation of the `black clay' or matter of the `E' that defines your perception of the clay within a specifically shaped geometry.

But, if another Will wishes to smash the sign or remove it – it may do so, altering and disrupting the will of all those other Wills for that sign to be there. In much the same way on a grander scale, the US Government can smash the Iraqi Way of Living, altering and disrupting the will of all those other Wills for that Way of Life to exist.
Why is it so easy for one will to break/disrupt a form created by many wills?
The answer lies in the subtle illusion of Form and the subsequent projection upon these types of mental/physical phantasm by man's `e' that mistakenly adheres to a belief in a permanent state of things called Reality. The 'Black Clay' of 'E' cannot be permanently fixed in place – even with the strongest Will – for example the Willpower that intended the Pyramids to be built with such precision and mastery that they should stand for ever, or at least the five thousand years or more that they have stood – will still be subject to the law of Iron Will. That Law states that a Form can only remain solid or Iron, so long as sufficient Will from `e' is maintained -and even then the eroding powers of Nature, Time, and other `e' Wills will affect any Form that is Willed into being because the nature of resistance of the two engines takes place in the connexion between the two engines, the "Mirror-zone`.

The Mirror-Zone is the place where content from E and e meet together in an ineffable dynamic. This Zone is at this Time perceived through a third-dimensional prism – but occult faculties or entheogenic drug use can awaken the necessary sight to perceive the Zone by other types of prism, or beyond the Zone without a prism. But regardless of the shape of the Prism – all possible Knowledge is limited to and constituted by the singular point of resistance where the two types of content from each engine meet and touch. Everything outside of this contact is unknowable and constitutes the Abyss.

When the sign is being placed, the will directed at putting it up can be quite tremendous – with many Wills answering to the Will of another, a sort of combined effort to will that sign in place is achieved. However, once the sign is placed – the Will of the one who conceived of it has been achieved by resistance against the `E` (I.e. chopping down trees to make roads, making sand into pouring concrete to hold the sign etc). In such a case, once the sign is up, the Will of the `e' that placed it there will no longer be focused upon the act of resisting the particular elements of 'E' in that region specific. The 'e' may even forget all about it and move on to performing some other act of Will. The sign will thus have the power of will withdrawn from it – it will no longer be strongly powered by 'e' – instead it will revert to its original inertness in the service of Man's Will and be left to be claimed by 'E'. Divested of its protection, the sign will easily succumb to the Will of another, whose single will to re-shape the sign's `E' may prove stronger than the power of the original combined wills, now that the power from those combined wills has been withdrawn and the sign, left for `dead'.

The contra can be demonstrated as an active force in Military Installations – in which tremendous `e' Will, and Sustained Will at that, keeps the `E' of these types of Installations, firmly in the service of Man's `e'. That is to say, someone wants the Installations there and makes sure they stay there, makes sure they are carefully guarded, secure and private. Unlike the sign, `e' is not withdrawn from this type of `E'. If the sign in the first example had guards posted all about it to ensure it stayed upright – a similar sustained Will would be likely to keep the 'E' of the sign firmly in Man's service. But the Will of any man cannot go on forever and it is severely limited by its lifespan. And so, Traditions, Customs, Religions, and other inventions of Obligation and Homage to another Will are required to keep the sustained force of someone's Will present on a particular `e' even after causal Death.

But all is Illusion. The ‘e’ of the Military Installation may be strong (the Great Wall of China for instance) but it is at all times being resisted by the ‘E’ and other beings expressive of ‘e’ – and these two engines generate infinite content without pause – only a trickle of which can be known to Us – causing Change, Entropy and Disruption of all Forms, endlessly.

Sooner or later, the resistance of ‘e’ to ‘E’ will fail and the Form or shape made from willing the black clay/E, will be left for dead and thus subject to another’s Will. One must wonder what that means with regard to the Death of God. With God’s Great Will removed from Earth – Earth is left for dead. The Earth is thus at the mercy of the subjugation of human will.

MAGIC, PERCEPTION AND DIMENSION

Are the Temple of THEM, Satanic?

Are the Members of THEM, Satanic?

It’s been said with authenticity by many on the occult path throughout recorded time that the destruction of the concept of Individual Human Spirit has doomed mankind to its sensatorial-prison in the third dimension.

A separation from God and a severing of man’s knowledge of The Divine and the Plan, has been stated to be the aim of Luciferic Forces by countless black magical adepts. And in tandem with Lucifer/Satan’s efforts to blind us to the Cosmic Christ, another Evil Spirit named Ahriman is said to work at trapping man forever in the third-dimension ruled by the senses of weight, mass, and measure so that man may never again regain consciousness of the Individual Spirit.

If, Lucifer and Ahriman truly are perceived correctly both in their etheric nature by the powerful adepts who have sought or been enslaved by them, then what is one to make now, of the designs of the Magian?

Is it not the ‘Magian’ who have sought to obscure the occult with a deluge of misinformation and distortion, a far-reaching conspiracy of Magi to control the World by entrapping man in a material Matrix?

Is it not the ‘Magian’ who have sought to reduce the world to a consumerist society using the economic powers of usury and the humble bar-code?

Or is it not?

I think there are a lot of people seeking the type of Ritual I am about to print. I think there are a lot of people unaware of the subtlety of the Occult, wise to the illusion of taking sides, or who perceive correctly the demons behind the scenes that haunt its corridors.

The following ritual is taken from Liber Synystyron, {or Liber SS}.

THE NIGHTMARE RITUAL OF IMAGINATION

Summoning NAHEERZGOTH

Twenty One Instructions were given to the Black Prophet under Mescalin/LSD induced trances. Twenty-One lesser demons, each a hideous nightmare, conjured and lured forth by twenty-one of the horrific sadistic sexual perversions of the High Black Arts that bring them close to the plane of Man, spat forth the unspeakably cruel acts of the forbidden ritual of summoning NAHEERZGOTH.

The Instruction of OZOTMCH

A black plane of stone must be laid measuring eighteen cubit by twenty- three cubit. The wheeling path of Saturn, Mars, Mercury and Sol must be chartered across its surface – where the paths cross the plane there is to be a raising of the plane into triangular apex. The sacrifices are to be bound upon the plane, and their bodies forced to follow the contours by the breaking of bones to create an utterance of agony directed toward the planets aforesaid to awaken them from their slumber.

The Instruction of POHZERP

The Evil Spirit must have its voice. The tongues of Thirty-Three human and animal sacrifice must be removed through the back of the skull -for the utterances of NAHEERZGOTH cannot abide in the forward translation of sound.

The Instruction of AZMIU

The Evil Spirit must have its body. The skin of living human sacrifices must be peeled from the bones. It must be sufficient in measure to cover the diameter of a three cubit black sphere of lead. The skin must be seared to the ball using smoking pokers.

The Instruction of GAMAHA

The Evil Spirit must have its eyes. Seventy-Two eyes that have paid witness to the unspeakable are to be put out of living human skulls and placed in a brass vessel. The brass vessel must be placed in the Angle of MURMIDI.

The Instruction of ENUDERHZ

The Evil Spirit must have its name. A beautiful man and a beautiful woman are to bear witness to the Rites to summon NAHEERZGOTH. They are to be nailed to the Sign of RNEMM to act as a vessel for the outpouring of ichor and filth from the portal to RNEMM. They are to have their lower jaws cut away and bowls of brass are to be attached to their faces whereupon their utterances during witness to the abominate are to be sealed in bowls with the stopper of a human heart.

The Instruction of DAEDUU

The Evil Spirit must have its throne. A Ziggurat is to be forced skyward using the bones and flesh removed from male virgins having hung in the moonlight by their own entrails from the sign of RNEMM. The throne must exceed nineteen cubits in length and is to behold the sign of RNEMM. This is the portal through which the Watcher will enter.

The Instruction of UUDUAK

The Evil Spirit must have its Kingdom. The bodies of a woman and a man are to be staked whilst they are in the act of copulating. Whilst the live victims writhe, they are to be beheaded. The bodies must be laid before the throne. They are the vessels for the Unholy Priests of NAHEERZGOTH. Their Spirits will animate the bodies when HE has come.

The Instruction of XCHTC..

This type of Ritual condemns its user to the Third Dimension. It is, in the definition of Satanic given above, a Satanic/Luciferic Ritual. For it entraps a man in the device known to THEM as the Matrix of sense and form and illusion. Yet, it is paradoxically the most alluring of scents to many would-be black magicians. While the Church of Satan, for instance, seeks to and often succeeds in entrapping its members wholeheartedly in the Material Plane, possessed entirely by their Ego and thus achieving the aims of both Lucifer and Ahriman… the ONA and THEM both begin by transcending this magical imprisonment and taking man toward the stars. By breaking down the myths of Time, of Space, of Matrix, etc. By freeing the Individual Spirit… by working beyond the entrapment of the third dimension toward the Acausal Realms, toward the Aeonic Realm that opens up the third eye to the enormity and the superior perception of Time. This type of work, even if it claims association to Satan, has always been associated with the work of Holy Men, the Holy Grail and the Alchemy of the Philosophers Stone. Such works include almost all of the Order of Nine Angles works on Alchemy, on Aryanism, on smashing the simplistic concepts of Good and Evil of going to extremes in both, On Insight Roles, and more. On THEM's Radia Sol and work with psychology to approach a modern day medium to channel its occult knowledge in a receptive manner. Or the following steps to apprehend the prejudice of ones unconscious third dimensional prism of perception and open the sense world beyond the five and to enter the sixth, not intellectually but in practical terms of immediate experience. Continuing on from the post on Will…

Let us consider the ramifications of this Withdrawal in relation to the Death of God. Without God's great will to protect the Earth – Earth is unprotected – its plains and mountains, trees and living creatures, its resources and its destiny left for dead, abandoned by the will of God. Earth then, is subject to, and at the mercy of, subjugation by the human will.

NOTES:

Time and the content of the two Engines are Fractal in nature. The unique content of the two engines and their interaction together forms the unique conditions present at any moment in Time. There are, however, other forces involved that impinge on what arises on the plateau, such as the formative, disintegrative and flux elements of Aeonics, the unknown effect of Acausal elements, and those elements that are beyond third dimensional perception.

On the Fifth Dimension

…Let us consider the ramifications of this Withdrawal in relation to the Death of God. Without God's great will to protect the Earth – Earth is unprotected – its plains and mountains, trees and living creatures, its resources and its destiny left for dead, abandoned by the will of God. Earth then, is subject to, and at the mercy of, subjugation by the human will.

NOTES ON THE THIRD DIMENSION:

A Square has often been used to designate the right-angle nature of the three dimensions x, y and z. I.e. Depth, Length, and Width.

Everything in the 3rd dimension is considered to have a face (or front) an opposite face (or back) and possess a quality of reduction into the ether, that constitutes `space' between the two faces. A person is perceived to spatially have a face and a back of the head. A chest and a back. A knee and a calf. A car is perceived to spatially have a front, a back, a front bumper and a rear bumper. A book, a cup, even a ball (which is round and has no defined "face" as opposed to its "back") are said to have a front and a back. This is because of the restrictions of the 3rd dimensional perception. What might we look like if we able to perceive in five dimensions? Would human beings look different? Would everything look different?

Is it the faculty of sight that perceives dimension? In order to approach an answer it is necessary that a third D perception be escaped. In caveman times, the paintings of hunts on the walls lacked any kind of disciplined depth perception. The figure of a hunter surrounded by animals of all shapes and sizes did not process the concepts of near and far. To the caveman the world may well have been 2 D, or even 1 D and thus it was depicted as such. It seems confusing to our consciousness because we understand near and far, and that things seem to change shape (shape constancy) as they get further away or draw closer, but also understand (shape relativity) and that a cow is not smaller (in mass) just because it is far away.

But what is a dimension? Is it a plane? Is it a direction? Is it the perception of geometry in an abstract form of cognition? If I asked someone what shape the painting on the easel is from where I am sitting, which looks like an askew oblong to me, they would almost certainly say it is a rectangle. "Which is it" – is a cop-out. Both projections are abstract, the thing which I have created by projecting a name and localisation in space over E – is not a shape. "What is it" is thus useless too.

What of a hollow object? Say a square box. It has an outside? An inside? As well as a front and back. It has that quality of depth that we'd call "sides". But if we were inside it, would not each side itself constitute `a new' front and back, or are we to think of the container holistically; that there is nothing 'new' inside the box that was not part of the original perception of quality between the Face and the Back? Is an extra dimension to be found hidden from sight in the original quality of depth? Must we begin our perception anew once inside the box? An Inside the box requires the supposition of an Outside – and are we not making a very clear demarcation of dimensions when we walk inside our house or leave it to go outside?

When we are Inside the box, is the concept `Outside' determined by its quality of depth away from the perceiver? Does the side we are facing become the new `front' and the outside face of that side, the `back'? If it depends on which way the perception proceeds from – I.e. if we are outside looking at the front of the box, or inside looking at an equally justified front of the box – which is the front, and which is the back?

Is it not the object that is three-dimensional but our own perception – which must continually change its mind to determine the front of a box by projecting those dimensions upon it? Does the front of the box change from being the front of the box when we look at it from the back? Does the back then become the front? If it does, then it is shown that it is not the object that is three-dimensional but our perception – which is like a glass box we place over the E and label it accordingly to limit it to what we see. If the front of the box changes, and the old front of the box becomes the new back of the box – what has occurred? Firstly – there never was any `front' of the object. There never Is any `front' of the object. There is a moving of our third dimensional perception onto a particular part of E and an interpretation of that E via our prejudiced prism.

The `front of the box`, does not magically move from one place to another – it does not somehow become `outside' after being `inside` – because it does not exist at all. It is a construct of human thought onto an object, to will that object to be serviceable and – to be an object. If our perception is a construct, and a product of human thought – could the human being construct a four or five dimensional prism through which to perceive? To answer this, we need to define what it is that gives rise to the qualities of the third dimension that are perceived. Is it the biological construction of the eyes? Is it the bending of light? Is it the type of consciousness we possess? What is it?

TIME, has been said to represent the 4th Dimension. Time has been believed linear. If I walk across a room, I am making a straight line forward from some point or other – and that point will forever be the past in that line. A to B to C. Some use a helix to represent a cyclic version of Time whose contents of the Past are in some way inimical and known to the contents of the progressions beyond that past point – or to put it another way, the past is implicit in the future. But what is a helix but a curved straight line? Time is beyond Depth, Length and Width – how it joins, if it joins, its use as a measure of Change (by inherently creating `Change') but it is an abstract used to measure something that is observed – but without labels, remains a mystery. Am I moving through Time as I write this, or is Time moving through me. Am I inert or is Time inert?

We must also wonder, if we project three-dimensions onto all other objects, why should our observation of anything else be different – why should our perception not be prejudiced of Time too? If Time is the 4th dimension, then the qualities of E and e can be said to represent the 5th dimension. The union of these engines is invisible to all means of three-dimensional prism perception yet it can be intuitively grasped as easily as it is physically apprehended under the guise of Reality. There is no length, no width, no depth in the joining of Ego and Environment, no way to measure it with Time, Change or any other abstract to quantify the nature of this profound connexion – the result from the union of the two engines is at best, supremely complex, and at worst, unquantifiable. The two engines do not join at right-angles, they do not fit into one another like a key and lock, and they are more than likely a singular process that is so vast it is perceived as two. Yet the brain, the I, the sense of sentience that knows itself to be valid: that acts as the inquisitor of the content externally and internally related to it – experiences this `invisible' fifth dimension as Life, and its presence in all the interactions/elements that result from that Living.

The Body is `E'.

The Brain is `E'.

It, consciousness, is an exponent of `E', called `e'.

`e' is the Individual Spirit.

`e' can Will `E' into its service.

`e' can Will `e' into its service.

`e' as an exponent of `E' is subject to `E' and finite in its Will.

The fifth dimension then, is accessed intuitively but its presence can be perceived as grounded in all things even through a third dimensional prism. That is, the connexion/joining of Ego and Environment is everywhere – but despite its connexion being present in the stitching of all things – perception of the world through a third dimensional prism will restrict lucid perception of the fifth and the fifth will remain `invisible` under such restricted conditions even though its presence is plain as day. Thus the fifth dimension is an Occult/Esoteric dimension. The question put to Initiates of this Temple and of Magic in general, is do you understand where you stand?

Exercises related to the E/e

Without several occult keys/insights to help withdraw various levels of projection that cause the third dimension to imprison one in a world of Sense, or first being able to switch off the Matrix and perceive the illusions correctly as per the "Sinister Matrix of the Black Clay" mentioned in our essay "In Sinister Solidarity" these exercises may prove difficult or impossible, but for the initiate advanced in the Septenary Way or particularly skilful in Visualisation/Psychic Isolation, they may open doors previously closed. The exercises are very simple but may cause great discomfort. This is partly because of the awkward and previously un-experienced sensations evoked, and partly because they confront the self.

1) The first exercise involves trying very hard to focus all your awareness on various parts of your body. I.e. your right knuckle of your thumb – and trying to 'wake' it up to the sensations around it rather than utilising the stream-lined passage of censoring awareness that we usually use in every-day life so that sensatorium do not overwhelm us. In this case we are going to try to become conscious of the sensation of that knuckle to such a degree that we can feel the air moving on its surface, feel the follicles of hair growing out of the pores, and feel the skin, blood and bone inside it. When you have done this warm-up exercise it is time to turn this focus toward feeling the Brain. One must try to become aware of the pressure inside one's head of the brain against the skull, of the surface of the brain cerebellum, of the synapses and blood – i.e. one is trying to awaken the sensation of being bodily aware of one's own brain in the same way we are aware of our hand. We are also trying to reduce our holistic awareness such as we have of our whole body, to the tiny cramped quarters of the cranium. This exercise may prove extremely uncomfortable – for the brain is not usually felt consciously, except perhaps as a weight, and this weight is again mostly unconscious and forms part of the heavy feeling that accompanies any conscious thoughts of sentience. That is, that when we chance to think of what it is that looks out of our eyes, behind our faces that gives us animation and allows us to do things, we are aware to some extent of the 'I'… but without a brain and the subsequent weight it contributes; Consciousness, would in fact, feel like a light type of force rather than a solid density of being behind the eyes.

When you can feel your brain, when you are able to imagine/sense/perceive the contours of the cerebrum, feel the division of the hemispheres, i.e. focus total awareness on your brain's sensations and body – try next to isolate where you think 'you' are coming from in the brain.

We call each other by name so often the process takes becomes entrapment whereby we come to perceive ourselves incorrectly as a 'personality of its own accord'.

Where do you originate from? Where is the source of you situated in your brain? is it at the very back? the very front? somewhere in the middle? Can you pin-point it? If you can, then you have found the entry point into the causal of the engine of "your" [more correctly, the] 'e'.

Everything external to that point, is the 'E'.

The fifth dimension is the experience of the total being and the resistance to total being.

ECONOMICS, MONEY, MAGIC AND THE SINISTER: PART 1-4

My interest in the psyche, prime causality, original chaos, human behaviour, materialism, form and ultimately a heuristic search for wisdom as to the architecture of the world has often lead me toward the topic of economics. As they say "money makes the world go round" and anything that makes the world go round is what I am interested in. I have suspected that economics is more intrinsically related to and complimentary of my interest in Forms and the Sinister than I have yet been able to explore The final chapter of Book III of my DOAD series originally contained essays on Usury (long since removed) because I felt a basic understanding of money was an essential tool to understanding the world. I have come to see just how deeply the concept of money affects and connects things and it has prompted me to give this subject more serious attention.

I initially felt it would be too challenging to grasp the mathematical formulas employed within this field (and too boring) but it has not been essential to apply these formulas. I tend not to enjoy being lumbered with nomenclature and prefer to extract an understanding of forces and pressures at work in a form, so I have settled for just recognising that there are formulas with a basic understanding of what they are for. To this end I've been trying to develop a wholistic understanding of how economics affects everything and everyone. This research has enabled me to widen the scope of my work with a rich and rewarding vein of new insights though a Master of Economics I am not.

The most prominent of my insights is that economics and its development and institution can effortlessly be called Magic or Black Magic. There is virtually nothing an unlimited amount of money cannot achieve (since what is worth achieving is often decided by how much money it can make.) Money brings with it prestige, status, security and more and the way in which money came to be so powerful and omnipresent is simply amazing.

I am cynical of many aspects that are associated with magic I have often seen two sides to the occult the tricks that people play with Ouija boards, tarot cards, each other – and have generally been more interested in what psychology/sociology has to say about these practices and what it says about people rather than the otherworld. My approach to magic however is not outright scepticism. It is more about resisting self-delusion and not encouraging the self-deluded in order to really discover for myself if it exists outside of imagination. I still don't know.

I have experienced enough to force acceptance of the supernatural, but few of my experiences have been what I expected or thought to expect as if when it happens, the occult is indeed other-worldly and leaves you wondering just what the hell is really out there. Those experiences with seeing demons and God and yet catching people performing tricks such as moving the glass on Ouija opened up a curious abyss into which my questions have been falling ever since. On one hand, I believe that, in the sense of being able to enact power over events objects and people through using ritual/altar magic, magic words, symbols etc and/or simply wishing it success is extremely rare but it can be done. And yet, on the other hand, despite the nonsense that can be associated with magic, in another sense I see that it is a daily occurrence enacted on all levels of society from politics to religion to marketing to advertising to movies to music to media – and that many things that are by my definition magical go unnoticed.

I have since moved on from ghost-busting, demon summoning, voodoo dolls and angst over which coloured candles to burn seeing what humanity can do has ruined my awe of demons, not even seeing a ghost but feeling it sit on my bed left me with a horrible chill that there are some things we share the world with that all my logic simply cannot control or would ever want to see, and psychology has shown me more weak spots and how to apply them to people than a voodoo doll ever did. Alchemy, Insight Roles, Martial Arts, Satanism and more all provided rich insight into how I work, others work, things work or don't work.

My interest, now that I am 32, is where all the interests I have ever had, about the world I have found myself in, meet: The meta-science of forms; the deliberate deception through their control and execution; and the common-day casting of illusions by all human beings in incredible ingenious endless varieties that lead to real results, whether its creating an avatar online to change others perception of us, or using propaganda to convince a nation it's a good idea to go to war. It's not conspiracy, science, religion, magic, the occult, psychology, sociology, humanism or philosophy these approaches all have their strength and weakness but a mix of anything I can get my hands on to understand; its Mvimaedivm Know now my way.

Economics though is more powerful and more effective than any occult system I have seen demonstrated or witnessed at work. And though it may seem odd to refer to economics as black magic or cite it as an occult topic some may remember the comparison I made of a Bank Manager with a Fortune Teller in the Book of ABSU:

If I asked who is more likely to be deemed crazy, a Bank Manager or a Tarot Reader; you are probably likely to say Bank Manager because the phrasing of the question seems like a trick and you are resisting the lure. However, "common-sense" will tell us that we are more likely to believe a Tarot Reader will be perceived as crazy over a Bank Manager. But why? If it is because Tarot Reading involves occult elements, is less than scientific and offers spurious satisfaction to the desperate or gullible: why does it seem less crazy for Bank managers to involve themselves with Usury (the magical creation of new paper or electronic money out of thin air by Banks that leads people into debt) Economics or working with numbers? The handling of money is quintessentially far more occult than Tarot. Bank Managers seem professional, normal, even essential members of our society but very few people actually know the true hideous power of economic theory, realise it is far more destructive than Christianity has ever been, or even remember how to question the status quo of what is crazy. And I say `remember' tongue-in-cheek, because you cannot remember if you are not taught, and teaching the actual applications of the world is not what Schools or Educational Institutions do. A Bank Manager really only differs from the Tarot Reader in their presentation of occult mystique, and because they tend to give us something more tangible and with our loss of faith in the spiritual, the solid takes on a greater meaning in our lives.

Consider the process of a Tarot Reading or Bank Appointment. You come in and are impressed by the setting; it seems professional and mysterious (or "professional and legitimate" in bank terms) and you sit down to discuss what you want. The Reader/Manager does a reading for you and tells you that you may encounter some hardships in the next few months but your future will be financially secure and you may even be rich. They then ask you for a fee for performing the reading and because you feel secure and happy being told ambiguities you pay them. With the Tarot Reading, the fee ends when you leave the room. But with the Bank Manager you take a small fee with you called `interest' and it grows and grows every day until you pay it back at huge extra expense, sometimes multiple times what you originally borrowed. Or you succumb to debt and lose everything: like magic.

I've always taken the word occult to mean hidden. And my work with forms and deconstructing them has revealed to me that a great deal of the things in this world that are hidden, or occult, hide in plain sight. And all the while thinking as a teenager that there were ley lines, energy grids, spirits and other magical forces that guided the world on unseen esoteric tracks I handled and spent money without being any the wiser that my seemingly innocuous actions with money were what really ruled humanity.

There is probably very little incentive for the average occultist to take time to think deeply about the history or science or miracle of money when it is far more tantalising (and self-indulgent) to obsess over how to set up a kick-ass altar to best worship the devil – but now that I have come to realise my place in the world and know more about how it works. I see better what motivates many of the things I see around me and gave rise to the way things are or predicts how they will be; the actions of nations and individuals, the search for spirituality or wealth often comes back to money not necessarily theirs, and not all the time, but somewhere money has usually been involved and controlled available choices.

Personally, I think I worshipped the devil because I rejected the world and my feelings of powerlessness in it. I sought power over it, power of myself, power over knowing my place in it. Doing what I do now is probably a magnified, just more dignified, method of seeking that power. While I realise understanding these two very different subjects appeal at different ages ultimately, they are more or less the same. The devil is in the details.

The Devil is in the Details

Before I continue, I should warn you that I won't be explaining every term I use below, or assume some knowledge of economics already by the reader. I have also presumed that when presented with a topic you know next to nothing about, you, like me, remedies this by educating oneself about it. If you are significantly interested/motivated – a number of excellent (at least, I think so) key articles relating to Usury, the origin of Money and the nefarious deeds and practices of Banks are available from Sinister 101 group.

Insights I have reached through Economics involve enlightenment into an intricate subject developed by others for centuries whose premise is a methodology/system that desires to know what motivates human decisions, reactions and rationale – and a rich history of the fervent striving to find a method to measure, predict and influence them. The premise of black magic is remarkably similar.

I have had my eyes opened to the theory and and concept of collective liquidity behind economic balance ruled by the marketplace and market forces. I have a better understanding of market forces that govern people on state, federal, national and global scales and how (i.e. the processes involved) decisions, media and forms affect individual choices and everything from food to wages to recessions. I have a better understanding into the role of govt on an economic and not a previously myopic political level. Insight into the invention and unavoidable institution of capitalism as a reflexion (conscious) and a reaction (unconscious) to innate human behaviour, acquisitiveness and ingeniousness. Insight into world events, world decisions and the complex theory of pressures that the rational mind reacts to and/or is believed to react to – enabling economists to predict human behavioural outcomes. The control mythos, stories and archetypes have over people is still very powerful despite the air of pre-possessed autonomy society tells us we have as the consumer, for instance, and our ability to choose consciously is often undermined by ancient unconscious archetypes that possess us. I will give an example.

One recent example involves the interesting effects on part of society from the death of a character in a popular TV soap-opera/drama show Packed to the Rafters. Despite having spent millions in campaigns to get the message through to people about the dangers of being distracted while driving with mobile phones the message was only carried through to the public on a large scale via the death of Zoe, who is hit by an oncoming car as she crosses an intersection reading a message from her boyfriend. dramatic make-believe archetype.

If it weren't so dangerously ridiculous the presence of Absu it would be funny. The characters death reportedly drew 3 million viewers setting a record. It was promptly given an encore (repeat) showing. It was actually reported as news on several channels – with some mourners going so far as to send in photos of themselves dressed in funeral garb for the occasion (except one mourner who dressed in pink citing it was what the character would have wanted). It was also considered front page magazine material but front-page newspaper headline too? With all that was going on in the world the death of a fictional character nabbed prime spot. Whilst one could forgive the idiocy/credulity of the media and some readers/viewers in overreacting to this outpour the Governments Transport Accident Commission even went so far as to feature an ad about driving with a mobile phone that said tonight you will experience first-hand the effects of the death of a loved one on the family referring to the repeat showing of the episode.

The death of this character created a national wave of grief and sympathy and far more of a reaction than many tragic events have ever received or ever receive even when they involve real people. What is interesting is A) it's not a real person we are talking about here but an actress who did not die, and B) that in this instance the incidental show death and large-scale archetypal resonance lay with soap-opera characters and was more powerful than any amount of emotionally-based psychologically deliberate ads containing equal scenes of trauma and loss in countless campaigns for people to get off their phones while driving. It really is worth asking is it necessary for a person to exist in order to be real?

A significant part of this nation (over)reacted to this fictitious event rationally and irrationally though we tend to laugh collectively at the stupid Americans who believe in angels or can't find Canada on a map. I wonder what the revelation of Christ's second coming or an official announcement that aliens are among us by the govt would bring (OA32).

Anyway, this reaction to a form is a single example of how greatly people can be moved by simple pressures and the presentation of forms money can also be treated as a soap opera that people watch and grieve over, to the point of killing themselves, if a character dies (stocks fall, companies go bust, writs are filed etc). Consider how greatly the Global Financial Crisis, Great Depression or Wall St Crash affected people and you may be able to see the parallel between the reaction to a TV show and the reaction (world-wide) to a fiscal drama. The way money sets up and controls our choices is simply remarkable and If you haven't already read it, I recommend taking a look at the article in Sinister 101 by Gustave Le Bon on choice and how it is narrowed for us.

ECONOMICS, MONEY, MAGIC AND THE SINISTER: PART 2

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN MAGIC AND ECONOMICS

The occult-science of money and its apparent indispensability to societies has long been of interest to my work because of its omnipresence and omnipotence; its relationship to materialism and human obsession with form(s); its living example of a conceptual/ethereal idea enforced as physical reality and the scope of the resulting matrix of power it sustains affecting everything and everyone in a controlled and uncontrolled manner. Taking time to look into economics has allowed me to make many new connections, some ignorances to dissolve (and no doubt new ones arise) and gain a better intuitive grasp of the motivations of people on an economic scale providing further considerations to draw on when writing about what I observe in life. I've played Hasbro's Monopoly game many times, but I never really understood its context in the real world before or appreciated why some monopolies are important to have. It is as if my automatic cultural programming over-rode my consciousness of caring how I was involved.

The way I see it, the history of money is an occult (hidden) history and a magical sequence of events arising out of necessity to protect property and control the world (see Sinister 101: Economics folder). Understanding the importance of property and the necessity to preserve and protect property rights of individuals and groups is an ingenious and intricately complex system that has been with humanity a considerable length of its life and shapes our societies.

Once based on notes/chits that could be exchanged for goods/gold, for most of the West, money is now almost solely an electronic medium with banks and the govt able to create money without requiring the capital to back it up in gold, oil or other resources. This means an unlimited amount of thin air or credit money can be lent, despite there being only a finite amount of hard currency in circulation that can be returned. When debt cannot be repaid, the banks foreclose on mortgages and loans and people lose everything. This is how banks became and stay rich.

I used to hear people says that something was more secure than Fort Knox referring to the United States-based reservoir where they keep stockpiled gold in ingots to back floated currency. But I don't hear that any more. Now banks simply perform a magic trick and pull endless money from thin air by issuing electronic credit. This magic trick is not free however, its over-performance has hidden costs and effects, and careless use of usury can be seen seen through fiscal phenomena such as recessions, inflations, boom, national debt and budget surplus/deficit that sometimes drastically affect human standards of living.

*Gold has been of particular interest to somebody in Australia the past year years and a spate of companies have been buying up old unused mobile phones (which contain gold and copper among other metals) and a new company trading under the name Gold Buyers Australia has been doing the rounds buying back gold at low prices. Seems like someone is trying to buy up national supply in order to increase the worth of hard bullion as in economics, the shorter the supply, the more the demand. The more demand, the more something is worth. This tactic often occurs in the antiques trade where people buy up as many available items of a certain set as possible in order to decrease supply and availability of that item and thus make it more valuable.

Magic has been referred to as a means of directing the will to control events and people and quintessentially this is what money does or can do.

The system of economics viz. Money, is primarily used to avoid barter or the trade of goods with other goods – and to create a universal currency or standard of worth that can be exchanged for good and services, instead of paying with goods and services.

It measures its success by the increases in standards of living its system fosters through patents, technology and property rights which encourages people to make money by sharing inventions and increase the standard – and measures its failure by the durations and degree of human suffering bad fiscal policy inflicts.

A good example of how economic policy can affect human lives was seen in the Great Depression where a policy of having prices fixed (sticky) for things caused untold hardship for entire nations because the economy could not naturally adjust to match changing market forces. For all the suffering the poor endure without access to money and the lamentable abuse and evils of capitalism. Economics is an application of market forces/trade that ultimately claims to trend toward the greatest good. Contrary to what I believed previously, viz. that selfish corporations were ruining lives, the success of economics to improve lives strangely enough involves, in fact depends on companies and individuals being motivated by ruthless self-interest. But since economics so widely affects people's lives it is certainly something that should be taken into account in Aeonics or how forms affect people. Since it is concerned with the decrease of human suffering it opens up the possibility of deliberate abuse of the system for profit and increased suffering and is intrinsically connected to the im/moral definition of Sinister as a force that directly/indirectly controls us.

Economics measures its success in maximising utility or human happiness where being economic means doing the best one can to make limited resources and time stretch as far as they can to get the most from them. In the case of resources, some things can be owned outright, and some things cannot. Among those that can be owned are land, vehicles, goods, holidays, electronic goods, services such as electricity or phone line, assets and capital. An example of things that cannot be owned are electromagnetic wavelengths because there is a very definite limit to its spectrum for the thousands of radio stations worldwide the waves must be shared and portioned as best as can be but no-one owns or can own the spectrum because there is no way to stop others from using the resource (light) for free.

Like all forms, economics involves complex and time-consuming minutiae when broken down into its network of concepts and applications however it has occurred to me that its behaviour and concept can be likened to and explained well by, driving on the highway.

Economics is largely self-regulating. Which is to say, if left to its own devices, the market tends to sort itself out. Strangely enough even (or especially) chronic self-interest is ultimately necessary to serve the greater good. A company (let's call it AA) can have a monopoly on something, iphone5 (a future model) for instance and charge a fortune for people to buy it. Because people can't get it anywhere else, it is exclusive, hard to get, and increases demand – but this only applies for 20 years while their patent lasts. After that 20-year protection, the invention or technology is considered fair game for anyone who wants to replicate it. When replicators (BB and CC) enter the market with their new versions of the iphone5 – extremely keen to make as much money as company AA has been, AA suddenly loses the monopoly on the technology and the market. With AA, BB and CC all offering iphone5s, each corporation has to undercut the other to make their product more attractive to the consumer i.e., cheaper. Suddenly the iphone5 is so cheap, it's no longer profitable and so it stops getting made. The new iphone6 has made them obsolete anyway and the whole cycle begins again because there is the promise of secured profits to be made by patenting new technology for another 20 years. Capitalism continues perpetually in this way by creating a new commodity every time the last is no longer in demand.

The essential thing I have found to be fascinating about economics is that changing any one thing in economic policy has resounding effects on everything else. If the price of things rises too high, market forces act to bring them down. If the price of things falls too low, market forces act to bring them up – the fluctuation of sales, discounts, wage increases/decreases, interest rates, inflation, recession and more are all regulated naturally as a product of the rational mind. The rational mind is affected by the trends it predicts are coming, makes its decisions based on those predictions and acts accordingly. This is exactly how the stock market works and why crashes occur. If everyone working for company AA sees an important bulletin on the news about mobile phones being proved to cause cancer* consumer confidence falls, they stop buying phones and stocks plummet. World events, that once seemed so far away and irrelevant to me as I viewed them on the news, suddenly fall into place as effects from a butterfly's wing with potentially devastating unseen results. People's decisions have consequences, and when large numbers of people make the same decision, that pressure influences fiscal and social policies in the directions they take.

*7 Dec, I just heard the news announce a scientific study that claims to have proved a link between mobile phones used by children and resulting disruptive behaviour. How unusually lucky to have a hypothetical form come into being that I can now study the effects of.

I have noted however, that several Multi-National Corporations appear to have taken ingenious steps to avoid many of the typical and naturally occurring market re-balances that occur to stop profiteering indefinitely. While by no means versed in the subtleties of economics, I am seeing how some (Australian, for instance) corporations have insulated themselves indefinitely from slumps in market forces and decrease in demand by securing a range of diverse commodities instead of specialising. Also, that instead of competition that pushes prices down Wesfarmers, Australia's largest corporation owns and operates a chain of logistics for mining, freight, food, office supplies, hardware, and more. These companies each support one another, ruthlessly undercut and under-supply competition and have a monopoly on building, business and food. To one of Americas most terrifying monopolies at work I recommend the excellent documentary Food Inc. that deals with the US Multi-National Monsanto and its aggressive tactics that have all but ruined natural crops in America, and replaced them all forcibly with unlabelled Genetically Modified alternatives.

The following are some notes from Food Inc regarding the collusion between Monsanto and key players in the Bush Administration who govern Regulatory and Judicial offices and have passed laws to completely destroy any farmer that uses natural seed. Natural seed, is not modified and re-seeds, allowing farmers to re-use that seed for next year's crop. Monsanto have passed statutes that prohibit natural seed, so that farmers are forced to buy new seed from Monsanto every year destroying agricultural independence for any farmer.

The following are some of the key Monsanto people that made the decisions affecting food practices. Note that each of them had close ties to the Bush administration or Food and Drug Administration (FDA).

Clarence Thomas – Monsanto
Attorney 1976-1979
Supreme Court Justice 1991-present presided over the one court case that decided the Seed-Saving issue. He wrote the majority of the details to prevent farmers from saving their own seed.

Donald Rumsfeld Searle CEO 1977-1985
Searle Pharmaceutical (bought by Monsanto)

John Ashcroft Missouri Senator 1995-2001
Received record donations from Monsanto

Monsanto also had close ties to the Clinton admin.

Mickey Kantor
Board of directors 2000-2002
Monsanto

Robert Shapiro Monsanto CEO 1995-2000
President Clinton's Advisory Board
Monsanto

Political power has prevented political debate over the rapid change to our food supply and practices.

Wendell Murphy
North Carolina state senator 1989-1993
Smithfield Board of directors 2000-present

Margaret Miller
Chemical lab supervisor 1985-1989
FDA Branch Chief 1989-present
Monsanto

Linda Fisher
Vice president government & public affairs 1995-2000 – Monsanto
EPA deputy administrator 2001-2003

Michael Taylor
King & spaulding lawyer 1984-1991 – Client of Monsanto
Advised Monsanto on genetically modified food labelling.
Deputy commissioner for policy 1991-1994 FDA
Oversaw FDAs decision no to label genetically modified foods.
Vice president for public policy 1998-2000 – Monsanto

California law put forth a statute that all cloned animal food products particular to SB-63, should be labelled. It passed the State legislature, but was vetoed by then, Governor Schwarzenegger.

The food companies have fought against telling you anything about food. They fought not to have the Nutrition/Calorie information on food available. Meat industry fought not to have company of origin labelled on food. They fought against Transfats. They fought against GMO and now 70% (closer to 90%) has some form of GMO inside it.

These are invariably labelled from 951 to 1145, modified starch, modified corn, natural flavour, and so on. (Please see GMO for more information on the meaning of these numbers.)

Monsanto legally and literally owns Corn and Soy. They control the seed supply of both and sue any farmer into the black if they choose not to use their seed. If GMO seed crops are found to have contaminated a farmer's natural crop- It is by law up to the farmer to prove they did not steal Monsanto's patented seed. Even if Monsanto grows GMO crops further up the road. Monsanto has a team of 75 investigators who prosecute and perform random spot checks on farmers to make sure they don't save their seed. Anyone who does, is prosecuted. Thousands of farmers have lost their livelihood merely for refusing to use GMO seed in their crops.

The food industry has different protections than any other industry. Oprah Winfrey was sued by Texas cattlemen for what she said about meat after finding out what was in it faeces, guts, blood and it took 6 years and $1 m in fees to overturn the decision on her favour.

The Farm Bill sets the policy for the entire food produce industry. Its focused on crops that can be stored especially corn. Why corn? Larry Johnson from the Centre for crops utilisation research Iowa state university says we are now Engineering our food, not growing it. We bring all the pieces we manufacture together to engineer new foods. The biggest advance in recent years was High Fructose Corn Syrup. He says up to 90% of foods contain a soy or corn ingredient (he's right). And most the time contain both.

Corn products:
Ketchup
Cheese
Twinkies
Batteries
Peanut butter
Cheez-its Salad dressing
Coke

Jelly
Sweet&low Syrup Juice
Kool-aid
Charcoal
Diapers
Motrin
Meat
Fastfood

High Fructose Corn Syrup is an amazing product from it you can make Cellulose, Calcium Stearate, Ethyl Lactate, Maltodextrin, Saccharin, Xanthan Gum, Gluten, Sucrose, Sorbital, Ethel acetate, Ascorbic Acid, Baking Powder, Vanilla Extract, Sorbic Acid, Di-Glycerides, Citric Acid, Citrus Cloud, Emulsion, Alpha Tocopherol, polydextrose, semolina, starch, fibersol-2, xylitol, white vinegar, tumarac acid, inositol, margarine, zein. It's also used as feed for animals, cows, pigs chickens and even fish cows/fish don't naturally eat corn so Monsanto are teaching them how. There are factory's where there are open funnels inserted through the cow's side to access their first stomach (see Food Ink documentary)

By monopolising corn, and teaching animals to eat it instead of grain, cheap grain allowed meat prices to plummet in America. Meat is very cheap in America, but very expensive here. We do not have GMO labelling laws here, but I assure you thousands of products contain modified starch, hi-maize, natural flavour and other terms in their contents that legally announce GMO without informing the consumer. Monsanto recently announced on its website that it is moving its operations into Australia (2010).

I must admit it was nice to be blissfully ignorant of these facts once. Mind you, there is very little that is not Sinister or as close to evil as I will admit, about Monsanto's success and tactics to destroy natural seed it also fits the typical depiction of a ruthless psychopathic corporation where profits and power are secondary to human happiness and integrity. Though please note that there are many examples of companies with monopolies that are not so dire – many of them governmental – The patents office for example which ensures people are motivated to share their inventions by being guaranteed protection to make money from them at least for a while. Otherwise, people would just steal their ideas and out of paranoia for sharing anything with anyone nothing new would be invented. For all their complexity, economics has a way of reducing humans to their most simplistic behaviours.

An intrinsic aspect of the Sinister involves the ominous extent to which something else is going on beneath a rosy facade specifically designed to deceive and placate. Visit their website. Monsanto fit that criterion nicely.

ECONOMICS, MAGIC, MONEY AND THE SINISTER: PT 3

The idea that being selfish can somehow benefit the greater good took a lot of convincing for me to consider plausible. But it rings true. McDonalds, for all its evils, waste, poor pay, environmental impact etc is inspired to spend money on hospitals for children, fundraisers, sports gear and so on in order to offset the negative impact it has. Without the evils of McDonalds, there wouldn't be any Ronald McDonald house so out of self-interest, McDonalds has to do something nice for its corporate image, even if we don't think it is a sincere gesture or enough to make up for the bad things it brings we realise that we need one to have the other.

Something else that is very interesting to me is the Prisoners Dilemma which predicts the overwhelming temptation to cheat is always the the best move a business can make. Because of this temptation, companies that could form a monopoly and stranglehold on a resource, such as OPEC on oil cheat on agreements to get ahead. This prompts other countries in OPEC to drop prices or raise them accordingly, ensuring profits are sabotaged for everyone. Despite this, if everyone else is doing the same thing, and charging a high price for petrol the temptation to charge a low price and make huge amounts of money is enormous.

I was thinking about it on my way to work and figured that a good way to describe how a lot of economic forces interact all at once is to relate them to driving on the freeway. Driving involves an ever-changing dynamic of give and take. In order to pursue your self-interest of getting to where you want to be, at various intervals you must slow down, wait at lights, let people in, indicate your direction and be continually watchful of other drivers' movements.

You must do these things because the actions of other drivers in front of you affect you and everyone else too they tend to naturally force you to stop, or slow, so that you don't hit them and damage your/their car. The freeway works because everyone tends to do the same thing with regularity but also because it can adjust quickly to changing conditions. If there is a crash up ahead, it can stop the flow of traffic completely until an outside force (in economic terms: the Government, in driving terms: the Police) intervene to get the flow of traffic started again. However, if cars continue to go the same speed despite a crash up ahead then inevitably there is a massive collision.

Collective Self-interest not only makes us work toward the greater good even as we aim to increase our self-interest – but it even acts as a force against those who choose to speed or drive dangerously because of the potential risk of injury or fines involved. This analogy is apt for explaining how greedy corporations are eventually forced by market forces to lower their prices or to strive for the greater good in the course of striving to pursue self-interest. You may think it's in your self-interest to speed while everyone else is driving at the posted speed and you may get away with it but eventually outside forces will intervene to regulate you, just as they do in the market and return you to a safe speed, or no speed. You might lose your car, your license or you might lose control and suffer a fatal end. In economic terms a competitor enters your market, removes your monopoly, and makes it less profitable to continue producing your product.

I have learned that while market forces eventually return to normal over time as rational minds react in collective succession to outcomes the speed at which it returns is important because of the amount of human suffering that occurs in the interim.
I have also learned that although often demonised the Govts involvement in economics exists to artificially speed up/slow down various transitions of market forces (i.e. inflation or recession) to return the economy to normal and try to minimise human suffering (stabilise the economy). They basically do this by acting to break up or protect monopolies, by imposing tariffs on trade, or by increasing/decreasing the money supply. This sort of intervention has been very difficult for Australia to enforce because it no longer owns the majority of its resources (see below). But this type of intervention is not restricted to single companies but exists for nations as well.

In a landmark case, the European Union moved to stop a merger by General Electrics and Honeywell, a military corporation in the US because of the huge amount of control the unified company would have over the market, enabling collusion or price-fixing to generate massive profits at huge social expense. Australia is however somewhat unique in its economic policies – because the govt now own so very little it has nothing to use as leverage and ostensibly no legal standing to tell a private company how to use/manage its resources.

Fairfax Media headed by James Packer (heir to Kerry Packers billion dollar empire) owns a huge portion of Australian media, last estimated at 50-60% despite the conflict of interest this control exercises, qv. equating to propaganda, the govt are powerless to stop it. Likewise, Wesfarmers owns the largest and most powerful chain of corporations in Australia including Food, Imports, Mining, Steel, Stationery, Office Supplies, Hardware and more monopolising a diverse range of products and ensuring the company can make money because it is able to provide whatever is needed depending on the market.

Type
Public (ASX: WES)

Industry
Retailing, Industrial, Insurance, Energy
Founded 1914

Headquarters Perth, Western Australia

Area served Australia
New Zealand
United Kingdom
Bangladesh

Key people Bob Every, Chairman
Richard Goyder, CEO

Revenue
$50.9 billion AUD (FY 2009)[1]

Operating income
$3.63 billion AUD (FY 2009)[1]

Profit
$1.54 billion AUD (FY 2009)[1]

Employees
200,000
Subsidiaries
Bunnings Warehouse, Coles Supermarkets, Bi-Lo, Pick 'n Pay Hypermarket, Coles Express, Coles Central, Liquorland, Vintage Cellars, 1st Choice Liquor Superstore, Officeworks, Officeworks BusinessDirect, Harris Technology, Kmart, Kmart Tyre & Auto Service, Target, Pharmacy Direct, HouseWorks, Curragh Queensland Mining, Wesfarmers Premier Coal, Bengalla Mining Company*, WFI, Lumley Insurance, Lumley Special Vehicles, Lumley General Insurance (NZ), OAMPS Insurance Brokers, Crombie Lockwood (NZ), Lumley Finance, Monument Premium Funding, Koukia*, Blackwoods, Protector Alsafe, Bakers, Total Fasteners, Bullivants, Wesfarmers Industrial & Safety NZ, CSBP, Australian Gold Reagents*, Wesfarmers Kleenheat Gas, Unigas*, Wesfarmers Kleenheat Elpiji, Wesfarmers LPG, Coregas, Air Liquide WA*, Energy Generation, Gresham Partners Group*, Wespine Industries*
* Joint ventures

Almost any tool that appears on tv is sponsored by Bunnings Warehouse a chain so ruthless it refused to let people raising money through selling hot dogs for local sports venues and charities sell water because it would cut into Bunnings profits. A chain so ruthless it placed a wheelbarrow of goods from its store, priced, and an identical wheelbarrow from competitors stores, priced, outside its premises, behind which were comparable catalogues. Bunnings, Officeworks, Woolworths, Safeway, etc have cornered office supplies, hardware and food supplies Australia wide and because they have such powerful logistics, presumably control the prices, having crushed most of their competition.

Something I find fascinating about economics is the ripple of its causal effects. The increase of one thing has a counter-effect on something else too much money in circulation makes it worth less and you need more of it to buy something. This has knock-on effects such as rates and bills rising. When rates/bills rise, spending decreases, stock is sold off in sales and prices are dropped to try and encourage spending. In turn this has the effect of requiring the govt to print more money to stimulate spending and get the economy going again – and on and on it goes. Too much of any one thing for too long and the economy enters a Boom or a Recession with the resulting see-saw such excesses create. According to economic theory, since the market regulates itself, the govt intervening can be a double-edged sword and since economies return to normal or the optimum level for both consumers and traders given time doing what they naturally do – interference by the govt or bad fiscal policy/understanding is considered to be the root cause of nations with poor economies. Though it is obviously the rape and advantage taken of other countries resources that are largely responsible for our status of affluent prosperity.

Australia was spared much of the fall-out from the global financial crisis that knocked Greece, America and other nations on their asses because of sound fiscal policies implemented by Kevin Rudd who has been the only Prime Minister elected who has had a degree in economics.

As the shock news of the GFC hit our shores, belts began to tighten immeasurably. In the last 10 years bills, food and basic resources have steadily gone through the roof up to 300% thanks to shoddy political policies and loss of control over private resources. But the cost of living is now so high hundreds of thousands of previously quite well-off Australians for the first-time face poverty or spiralling debt.
Headed by Jeff Kennett and the Liberal Party, during the 90s as the acting state Govt of Victoria, sold off Victoria's resources to off-shore private interests including our telecommunications, electricity companies, railroad system, mines, steel works, schools, land and most drastically our Water. This made him a lot of money very quickly and set a precedent copied by others that has left our country reeling. This precedent has enabled fierce monopolies to cripple Australians with rising costs, rates and fees because there is no competition to keep prices low and lax legislation has reduced the Govt to a toothless laughingstock unable to control our rogue markets.

But the doom and gloom continues. Banks recently raised their interest rates well above govt recommendations placing terrible new burdens and threatening mass foreclosures (study usury and see how banks periodically do this to increase assets). Selling off our resources took on a new and much more sinister angle however with the sale of our state water supply, now run by South-East Water because quite obviously, without water, people die.

Due to these monopolies and loss of govt owned resources our economy has slid closer and closer to recession and almost experienced a depression (when prices skyrocket out of control) when the GFC hit, prevented only by the fiscal policy of Kevin Rudd, now foreign affairs minister of Australia after being ousted in a political coup by now Prime Minister, Julia Gillard. During the impending GFC, Rudd gave Australians two stimulus packages about 6 months apart of $1000 each. This had the effect of stimulating spending and getting the economy going again. However, Australia is now once again headed by a PM without the advantage of economic theory.

The origin of economics, and indeed money, can be directly related to the particular geometry of human behaviour a result of the rational mind. It is a product that we affect just as much as it affects us intrinsically as psychological as much as it is financial. It is amazing how susceptible to the suggestive elements of forms nations can be quite unconsciously – and merely out of the natural inclination to pursue self-interest.

For example, to prevent a recession govts often raise rates to slow spending this is supposed to quietly decrease traders profit margins and restore the economy. But, if the traders get wind of this rate rise before it happens, they may collectively decide to lower prices to get rid of excess stock before they are unable to do so at the present price that is, they react rationally to what they are hearing/seeing and react accordingly such a reaction has the effect of sabotaging the government's attempts to stabilise the economy making the time to return to a normal economy, longer. All this before the Govt has even made the change and only suggested it as a possible course of action in passing conversation.

Taking the example of the temptation to speed while everyone else does the speed limit, the same can be said of economics and the greed of corporations or ruthless oligarchies wherein consequently a few can spoil it for everyone.

This is a truism for the human race. Although there appear to be many theories on the origin of money, it seems that overall, in order to protect solid goods from theft solid gold and silver etc were replaced with receipts that could be exchanged for the worth of that gold or silver. Because of the natural demon of acquisitiveness inherent in the human experience to steal, to survive, to prosper – money was as they say a necessary and unavoidable consequence, read evil.

I am fairly certain now, after what I have seen of life – that come what may of the human race and its future – no matter how many humans survive, what they must endure or what horrible collective experience they may share or even if they somehow create a utopian paradise – there will always be those among us (if not all of us) who are the same as they have always been; selfish, self-interested and willing to cheat to get ahead. Thus, the cycle of human suffering will always continue. For someone to win, someone else must lose.

Unsure as I am about the historical activities of the Jews, it is nonetheless interesting to note that Interest (paying back a debt plus a little extra) came about when the Jews were banned from buying or selling. As a result of pressuring them one way a natural inclination came to them as a solution. Just as water will shape itself to fit any channel and seep out through the smallest crack to once again become a river. All too often people concentrate on moral aspects of history such as who did what it is however not the blame-game that is of interest to me, rather it is the forces involved that are of import to the Sinister. I have been guilty myself of naming and shaming root causes for various systems and calamities that have befallen the world seeking to identify a singular culprit in a moral occult bound war.

Causal forms are the result of applied force. Force was applied to the Jews, and they responded in kind as is the ingenious nature of humans to do so. The force they responded with when they utilised their very limited available resources for maximum gain (debt) in turn gave rise to new forces and market pressures in the guise of wars, economics, technologies, politics and so on, shifting from one shape to another as the causal rebound dictates a quid pro quo relationship always ensues from forces, i.e. if you do that, you cause me to do this.

Since economics deals with the maximisation of utility or happiness it correspondingly deals with the reduction of human suffering. Because it deals with human suffering it is intrinsically related to the Sinister especially where the application of morality and immorality is concerned. The ability to conjure money out of thin air and circulate it in the economy is quintessentially a magical power particularly if taken as given that the art of magic involves the ability to control or influence people and events. Ethically, Usury as it is known, can be considered to be black magic – because credit always requires a sacrifice, someone must always give blood and suffer for someone else to prosper and the suffering is prolonged.

It is easy to forget this because of the psychological distance between withdrawing money from the ATM. I seldom spare the bank a thought, let alone dwell on the system of debt involved in getting money into the ATM and the poor bastards who owed the bank money, which the bank takes off them (with heavy interest) to continue lending, that fills the ATM. Much the same way bombers in WWII were able to drop bombs on civilians below because of the psychological distance between their actions and the misery it caused unseen below was so great; money, even small amounts is a see-saw. A distinct link has been consistently proved to exist by sociology, psychology, the military and other fields wherein a person will be more inclined to inflict grievous suffering on another – if they cannot see the outcome of their actions.

Money is the currency and accountant of human misery. If money is God, credit is the Devil.

ECONOMICS, MAGIC, MONEY AND THE SINISTER PT 4.

GENOME PATENTING

This news article kindled my interest as part of my Aeon Watch. Normally I would have thought of this as an almost purely ethical debate, but the development of technology always concerns a whole range of economic issues, not just how much money it involves, that affects all of us. Here is the article:

Ruling on human gene patents looms
AAP November 14, 2010, 9:02 pm

The US legal system is now considering the issue of patents which cover human genes and its decision will have "worldwide ramifications", the Royal College of Pathologists Australasia (RCPA) has said. The US government filed a "friend of the court" brief with the US Federal Court early this month, ahead of an anticipated appeal by a biotech firm which is seeking to assert its patent over human genes.
The RCPA's genetics advisory committee chairman, Graeme Suthers, says the government's brief signals a major shift in US policy on the controversial issue.
The eventual court ruling may invalidate tens of thousands of patents now applying to human genes, while there are also ramifications for research and the conduct of labs undertaking genetic testing across the globe, he says.
"The US government's stance regarding genomic DNA has changed dramatically because it now regards genomic DNA as unpatentable," Dr Suthers said in a statement.
He said the US government had drawn a new distinction between two different forms of DNA that occur naturally – the raw unprocessed genetic code or genomic DNA, and the processed DNA of a gene that is called cDNA.
It continued to hold the view that "cDNA is potentially patentable" although the court would ultimately come to a decision on this issue.
Australia's senate inquiry into the broader issue of human gene patenting is due to report within weeks.
There has been a long-standing debate, mostly within the academic community, about whether patents should be applied to human genes.
The issue came to a head in March, when a US District Court ruled that patents should not have been granted over the BRCA1 and 2 genes which are known to increase a woman's risk of breast cancer.
The biotech industry argues it needs the patents to protect their intellectual property and attract investment that allows vital research and development work to continue.
Opponents argue the patents should apply to human inventions only and not genetic code at the core of nature.

Holders of gene patents can potentially restrict pathologists from using the same gene sequence in a genetic test.
“Efforts to commercialise this information should be focused on developing products and applications, rather than restricting use of the genetic information,” Dr Suthers said.
“This isn’t something that only medical researchers need to be aware of – it has important consequences for everyone who provides or uses healthcare.”

The patent on human genomes has world-wide economic and social ramifications. It also offers up a dangerous looming precedent of allowing aspects of nature to be defined as intellectual property via an economic based argument that can hinge on its technology being owned via a claim that exclusivity of nature is necessary for funding, research and development. Economics would argue that in order to secure investment and intellectual property (the only way to support such fringe technology) it is necessary for a monopoly or patent to be applied to DNA and/or aspects of it. This argument is the usual suspect of industry when it comes to inventions, new technologies and so on as exclusivity of technology prompts others to invest time and resources in the pay-offs that come with holding a 20 year monopoly on such breakthrough science. But it could be argued, that like Monsanto attempting to copyright the animal the Pig, if this justification for profit/technology and the financial welfare it creates is applied as grounds to own natural instances, universal attributes and characteristics of our very genetic make-up – there is incredible new dangers and unseen problems bound to arise.

The world is plagued with problems – but while many of them seem in constant seesaw, and mostly beyond our power to control or eradicate, at the very least we know what they are. The introduction of patents on biological nature would almost certainly throw up a challenge to humanity the likes of which it has never seen – particularly, since those pursuing the legalisation or banning of genetics or genetic patenting are pursuing their own or company interests – and very rarely does anyone who actually has any full understanding of the ramifications of such policies adopted on the wider world community exist. Where there is money to be made there is a double-edged sword, because as soon as genetics becomes profitable when such laws are institutionalised and this future technology will open a new kind of crime to the criminal element of society and unethical marketeers.

Those that stand to make a fortune are very hard to persuade otherwise that there are outstanding reasons why such patents should not be pursued. Along with the propensity for genetics to develop DNA-based weaponized toxins/mutations, unlimited soldiers/slaves/meat, for instance, genetic patenting throws open the doors to huge problems, most of which cannot be foreseen. But some of which we can guess at given the way humanity already treats intellectual properties in other fields and commodities:

What happens if patents become commonplace and companies begin patenting as a business. What if a patented gene turns up in somebody by accident, is injected without consent on purpose, is found in somebody whose DNA contains it, or who deliberately uses it as say a drug (in the case of a super gene or biological additive to improve/enhance). How does one control or even regulate the -content- of DNA – or define patented and natural DNA? If someone is found to be in illegal possession of such genes such as happens with stolen goods, piracy files, are they to be removed? How?

If the genes that are patented cause trouble – i.e. mutations, abnormalities, super-sicknesses, who is responsible? Science or Nature? The scientists who mixed the genes, or nature whose extraordinary ability to introduce chaos is legendary?
What about genetic contagion – is that possible? through food, contact, sex, chemicals – and if so, who is going to be held responsible for it: nature or the genetic patenters? More importantly – who is going to want to be held responsible if it all goes wrong? No-one ever wants to take responsibility when disasters strike – innumerable examples of corporations dodging blame are rife, everyone from McDonalds to the bush admin, to the banks and oil vendors do everything in their power to pass the blame for grievous environmental/ethical tragedies to others or tie them up in knots for decades through trials, lawyers, intimidation and reprisal.

We can do nothing about things after they have happened – especially changes to our very genetic make-up. We are already ingesting dangerous or risky unknown variables through large quantities of engineered GMO foods and chemicals no doubt that will come back to haunt us as have cigarettes, and no doubt those who pushed for it will dodge blame. Science has gotten things wrong so many times, greed has stamped its approval, and many make no apologies. The farcical understanding of all things demonstrated by humanity is more than enough evidence to indicate no safety net and no safeguards will or can be employed when tampering with the insanely complicated phenomena that is integral to life force.

The genomes patent also brings up the ethical and legal considerations of Capital – where it is commonly argued that the means of production – Capital- can be owned – one wonders where contamination of genes might lead. If a genomic person mates with a non-genomic person, who owns the resulting genes? Can a person grown by patent genes be owned, as a slave or if used as a worker, deemed to be Capital?
The hybrid archetype that fuses our grand fear of machines, and the horror of a technology that can replicate human beings has been with us for quite some time and shows no signs of changing. Super soldiers are one such fear, unlimited workers, slaves, or even humans as an edible meat supply are among some of the feared outcomes of letting these two phenomena be fused I have always thought zombies were a way of expressing our unconscious acceptance that when shit hits the fan we will Have to eat each other. My belief is that environment plays a huge part in psyche – and a machine based cold alien environment that re-institutes robots/slavery would breed a new type of psychopathic ethos with new horrors executed with new technology.

To take one last example closer to home of how economic forces and the rational mind can affect them I will use the Black Glyph Society as the subject.
Occasionally, people have written to me asking if I have any more manuscripts that haven't been published or as is more often – asking for assorted writings for free.
The Black Glyph Society was a business primarily set up to assist the Sinisterion (Sinister community) to get hold of hard copies of assorted books, novels and so on. It managed to supply thousands of free downloads, books, CDs etc for several years successfully. I was however, unable to expand the concept beyond lulus vanity press and was limited greatly by the exorbitant fees and margin cuts taken by Lulu.
In an attempt to decrease those costs to the consumer and generate more profit to myself I briefly flirted with the notion of printing up the books myself. This was a spectacular flop the materials + the postage required did little to offset an already expensive process. In the end, I abandoned the project and closed the Black Glyph. There was more to it than that though.

Economics has enabled me to see what went wrong. The premise for creating an online bookstore was to generate enough money to live off in order that I could create free time for myself to continue my occult and mundane research and thus not have to return to work. The kicker was that although I wished to make enough money to be able to live, I often gave my work away. This had the effect of decreasing demand and enabling large numbers of people to get my work for free or be able to get it. This has always been a bit of a paradox for me since I both want my writing to support me but feel it important to get it out there too.

When it comes to people most people prefer to get something for nothing. The problem I created was that with free copies available through pirated or private sources, people preferred to get it for free most of the time. In other words, I lost the monopoly that made my work valuable this problem was then compounded by a new supplier of ONA materials emerging in the market providing a competitor who could supply the same things and undercut the Glyph's prices, pushing prices down even further until one ran on Love alone. In economic terms, this meant little to no financial incentive left for me to continue writing. If no one is willing to pay for it, then business-wise it is time to shut up shop or get into another trade because without some level of money coming in it was impossible to support my past-time or research projects into various forms. As it turned out, I eventually returned to full-time work which leaves very little time or inclination left to write anything.

GRAND BLACK MAGIC: AIMS OF EXPERIMENT A Brief:

In 1776, in an attempt to foster progressive ideas within a conservative Bavaria, Adam Weishaupt and a few of his friends formed the foundation of the Bavarian Illuminati. To quote author John Greer "Weishaupt believed in the essential goodness of human nature, arguing that only the burdens of religious obscurantism and fossilised tradition stood in the way of universal human enlightenment; he originally planned to call his order the Perfectibilists, because of its focus on the possibility of human perfection, but settled on Illuminati as a reference to the enlightened attitudes he hoped to foster."

"Illuminati novices thus started their studies with classical writers such as Aristotle and Cato, and then went on to contemporary philosophers such as Holbach and Helvetius. A process of self-examination, guided by written questionnaires and the close supervision of a senior initiate, helped direct the novice toward the goal of this strenuous program – the creation of an elite of enlightened initiates who would insinuate themselves into influential positions in Bavarian society and transform the kingdom into a Utopia. Illuminati recruitment focused on the socially prominent, the wealthy, and the talented from the very beginning. By 1784 the order had spread through much of central Europe, with active colonies in Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Bohemia (Czech Republic), Hungary, and northern Italy, and the total number of Illuminati who had received the Illuminatus Minor degree (the basic working degree of the order) had topped 650."

The Order was to later fall apart as its heavy secrecy was compromised – bringing it to the attention of conservatives looking for a scapegoat – and so disbanded. Three years later the French Revolution was to break out whereupon the name of the Illuminati was mentioned in anti-Masonic propaganda. But it was the publication of a book by an individual named De Barruel who argued that an inner circle of Masons had deliberately started the Revolution as part of a sinister crusade against monarchy and Christianity, that elevated the Illuminatus from obscurity into the role of a Worldwide Masonic conspiracy. Another author, John Robison, helped to fan the flames of narrative and between them they managed to tangle the Knights Templar and Illuminati together so successfully that their (often dubious) claims and mythos were taken up by and wildly speculated on by the media. Throughout the 1800's belief in a sinister Illuminati was popular with many conservatives.

It was again in the publication of the famous Protocols of Zion – alleged to be the master plans of a global Jewish conspiracy – that the fuel for further speculation on a secret ruling elite was taken up eagerly by the West and has remained every philosopher's stone since. It is of great consequence that the mythos of the Illuminatus has been identified as a creation of Narrative Magic. We may cite endless other examples of powerful organisations whose legend sprung from the same excited chatter of the human imagination – among these the infamous Order of Nine Angles of which I have been an avid proponent of in the expansion and power of its Mythos; and in time we may cite Ourselves among these.

While certain changes in methodology and organisation by THEM differ from those the Illuminati utilised, such as intense instruction mentored closely by senior members, a chartered procession through a geometric tablet of reading to lay the foundation for enlightenment – viz. the "Tablets of Set" via Aquino's Temple of Set -, and an intense myriad of secret signs, passwords, and codes, not forgetting our two organisations are separated by 300 years' time; we are nonetheless identical in our humble intent.

The Temple of THEM and its expanding syndicate of nexions contain all of the elements necessary to create a Sinister Illuminatus. Elements such as the coherence of its members independence yet also their collectivity via Sinister Solidarity, a curriculum that imparts great Empathy, teaches such skills as critical analysis via the development of Cynicism/Optimism, continues to forge global Connections via far firmer alliances than many other groups have managed to engender, and exists synchronously to gather those together with a shared desire to raise consciousness individually and globally – neatly complimented by the expertise and experience of a growing number of individuals well-versed in a variety of the world's largest and most influential secret societies and occult orders of which each of THEM hold or have held prominent positions.

With the increase and crystallisation in Solidarity and Personal Honour (via ISS), has been born the simple foundation necessary for a well-connected world-wide syndicate of great influence to arise. Some may now understand why the Magian seek to splinter us apart from one another – but the voice of the Dark Gods is the eternal condition of humanity and will never be silenced. The following dossier forms part of an original 'master plan' conceived in 2004-2005 by those behind THEM, to implement on behalf of Satanism, a hostile aeonic takeover to cause the world to remember/recall the potential inherent in Darkness beneath the increasingly bastardised and commercialised emphasis mainstream media has made of its tools and philosophy – a bitter source of disagreement among Satanists that has kept solidarity at bay or an ineffective private pastime for self-indulgence that insulates the Magian against any real threat of challenge to its rule. Although somewhat outdated, this dossier may satisfy some of the intense curiosity others have of the formation that is THEM and its ultimate geometry.

Since a number of the concepts have already been introduced, taken seed and produced (or are producing) the desired changes, such information is no longer as sensitive as it used to be. Many of the concepts are only referred to briefly and in a bullet-point format but various mss have been circulated from the Black Glyph Society tendril, WordPress tendril and Mvimaedivm tendril – including assorted Temple manifestos – that detail the ways and means by which we are attempting (or have already succeeded in achieving) to achieve these goals. Soon we shall pass through the stage of external laughter that comes with any strong expression of the will to Dare – the ensuing scorn that characterises the currents of significant change. People are generally cowards, cynics, afraid to dream, and they will make fun of those who struggle beyond mediocrity until the day they are forcefully proved wrong.

Remember among them who had faith in the beginning – who was with you when times were hard – forget those who profess faith when our task becomes easy.

"Those who were laughing then are no longer laughing now. And those who are laughing now ... will not be laughing much longer." – Adolf Hitler.

THEM, UNSANITY AND THE YOUNG ILLUMINATI

Begun in 2006, with a coherent string of predictions and prophecies which we have carefully implemented one by one and caused to pass. Now 2019 and I have been called everything under the Sun as the Temple's mad schemes have unfolded amid a cacophony of prisms in time.

Yet here we stand, as I said we would – a young, Illuminati that has had it hands in hundreds of groups, influenced dozens of new strains of the Sinister, and had its tendrils in the minds, hearts and hands of hundreds of thousands of people for 13 years – some of whom still bear our works and Wyrd among their deeds, both wicked and wondrous. We've accumulated some 20,000 pages of writing from direct experience, produced a sinister novel, written new fiction, created our own and encouraged forth several tarots and influenced, befriended or danced in some way, direct and indirect with some of the occult's most diabolic contemporaries straddling the twilight of the 20th century and the dawn of the 21st. We've been mentioned in academic papers, published around the world, formed a strange global cultus centred around Lovecraftian octopoids, forms and forces, broken new ground in dozens of subjects, been first on many frontiers, have touched on a vast array of occult topics than any single magical group has ever attempted before, not only confused but instructed and evolved a hell of a lot of people, will continue to do so for the next decade and foreseeable future and cemented ourselves as the pioneers of a constructive wave of Australian Satanism detonating like a thermonuclear explosion to give this country a Sinister History – that in the near future, it (and time and space) will eventually catch up to when the shock-wave finally hits. We are unique, we are original, we are The Temple of THEM. And we are not yet halfway through our 30 year charter.

As the living embodiment of Lovecraft's Mad Arab Alhazred, in my defence I can only say, don't blame me, I'm just the vessel for all of this madness – it's not me but THEM, Cryptic glyphic and enigmatic that owe you translation, explanation, illumination.

THEY brought us forth and it is THEIR Will we enact.
ISS.

KNIVING -TO OUR CRITICS

April 16th 2009
After consideration – this will be the last comment I make to my critics – of which there have been as many as there are opinions to be had. Were I to repeat the mistakes of the past and answer them all – I should be guilty of wasting more time better spent. So I address this to all the stupid and the dead in one go.

As Revolutionaries and Subversionists fighting against the established System, against the status quo – there are considerable obstacles in place to prevent a group of individuals from making changes to that status quo – provisions in every way placed against the rise of individual thought and expression. Since our Aim is Life-Centred Geometry not the Human-Centred Geometry and impossible nonsense (when followed through to its logical conclusion) taught by many of our Satanic contemporaries – and because our aim is neither to enslave the mind and repeat the program of the enemy nor to pipe-dream of razing the Earth to ashes and promulgate anarchy – (if such a thing exists) – but to Serve the Sinister, as it is and as it changes – and to work with what already exists – our aims are much harder than both of those examples. The first cannot work so can never really fail – the second is often as much our enemy as the enemy proper.

One of aims of THEM is to Initiate permanent changes; not just the pathetic band-aids society tends to patch itself and its problems up with – no, THEM do not pander and never will pander to superficial answers – what we do is not nearly as simple as others would like it to be just so they can write it off. What we Do involves demonic commitment and to some extent genius – it is being done, because no-one else has shown the ability to do it, only us. The answers to many problems lie in people taking self-responsibility – not in blaming whatever happens to be before one's eyes. In self-understanding how they process knowledge and information; not just what they process. Our work does not involve us simply running someone down a tried and tested occult track, giving them a bunch of manuscripts and making them some sort of instant master. Our work involves a commitment that is first human and can tolerate every and all of the weathers the human being can throw out whilst they are growing. And for those who think they're doing a good job because they can weather the nicer ones – we laugh – it is more often than not a great challenge to alter and confront the ego of a person and only too easy to get on when things are going well. THEM often do the ugly work, see the vile, disturbing and childish impulses that spew forth when working with the ego. Such displays when it is questioned include everything from tantrums, hatred, suspicion, ignorance, arrogance, jealousy, envy, spite, destruction, violence, sabotage, betrayal, and so on…

There is no depth the human being cannot sink to when the ego is mishandled or feels threatened. What we do involves helping someone despite all of these – to persevere beyond the tantrums, through the tears, threats, and slander – through whatever forms they take, stances they assume, or mistakes they commit. We do it with tenacity, diplomacy, empathy to give people back to themselves. Who else can lay claim to that? To understand how change occurs is to understand that the ability to drive one's own change can take a very long time to take root. It also means knowing how much bullshit has covered the Lhp that makes it seem so complex when really it is So Very Simple. It means many other things besides…

It takes certain conditions to allow us to devote that time and patience to the well-being of others even as we do it for ourselves. To those who have dared accuse of us of simply making a buck – you know nothing so let me educate you – we teach thousands freely. The Glyph is to some extent useful when it does make some money – but to suggest it is the sole reason for THEM is ludicrous. Yet Again – because you don't see the work we do, you presume, judge, pronounce… fucking useless lot… so mired in your forms, in what your limited perceptions give you; join the fray, join the hundreds of others with weak arguments, criticism, and acid… go look for them, their nonsense and arrogance lies in tatters on a dozen forums. You among You, Invite Knives.

I usually reserve my anger in quiet dignity but let's trot out a classic. More than six years after a fully finished Tarot attempt by myself – there is yet to be another produced that rivals it, or even replaces it – despite the tidal wave of comments and criticism – there has been No effort to rival my own. Such as it is, even then as it was put together as a young man the Naos Deck is still the only complete tarot (and this is just one of a dozen examples) – why? because of the inherent weakness, pathetic spine, and destructive hypocrisy so rife among the Internet, among the dross with nothing of their Own but claws and poison. Who parrot, and parade, and talk only shit. My god the shit I've had to wade through created by others…

Where is the Tarot promised by so many? Nowhere. Where's the experience in the Path so many claim to have? Whom did you get so many of the ONA materials from? None of this would ever have been if not for individuals like myself who actually did something with their lives, who did what they said they would do – who fought through the complacency of the mass, and fed them their own pig-ignorant words. And mark my words, as I cross off my to-do list, THEM will complete its charter, too. Because I'm a rare thing – I'm a man of my Word/Wyrd.

If making a buck was the motivation for our work– we should be just like Ford or the many others out there flogging the same tired shite and adding to the considerable problems facing the occult, which has now been hung on the hooks of form and form alone for millions. Of course, the ignorant among the critics know nothing, nor bother to enquire before making their judgements – that is what makes them useless opinionated and symptomatic proofs of the miserable state of the human race. As it is, the Black Glyph is only one tendril of THEM – and is only possible through the vehicle of Lulu – if possible at all. What should be better, living off welfare and sucking the efforts of others while I'm not working? Or using any talents and gifts such as I do have to make it my own way – support myself? Were it possible to do for ourselves what lulu do – then the Sinister would have achieved something drastic that it is struggling for: recognition and the means to SPEAK its VOLUME. But those channels – they don't exist. But – anything that does, is quieted, side-lined or simply erased/suppressed/prevented by the Status quo and its engines that produce media. Or – it produces yet more regurgitations of forms, re-shaped, repackaged – with the same old shite attitude toward production that kills the life from such creations, separating the artist and the producer with the lifeless drone of the $$$ factor.

THEM offer something original – but because you don't see it, how many we help, how we help – how we even coax those who would perhaps kill you because they're so enamoured with culling etc – away from such masochistic displays – you criticise. But we've done our work quietly, efficiently – without asking for a reward. You'd be surprised how rare that is. We were. When we began the Glyph, lulu was expensive. Now, it is very expensive – so prohibitively so that we are prevented from creating certain items, or even buying them for ourselves. From an $80 book, we get $18. First, lulu charges to make the book. Then they take a cut of the profits. Then they slug the consumer a breath-taking amount for the postage…

So, we price our books accordingly for two reasons: a) we don't know when we're going to make another sale, this is a very up and down business, sometimes we net a few hundred a month, sometimes nothing b) to support my life (and sometimes others), which is very sparing of material possession but involves a number of projects inimical to my own growth and progress in the Sinister – inc. martial arts. It is thus necessary to subsidise my ability to sit down and write my ideas for others with some form of income. It is sheer idiocy to assume that everything should or ever can be free – the barter system is utilised where possible by THEM (i.e. we exchange assistance on the proviso people will change) because like anyone else – members of THEM are required to satisfy their basic needs before they can sit down and write- and help others by doing so to avoid so many of the horseshit mistakes others seem to blindly stumble into again and again. And anyone who gets in the way of that compassion is an enemy.

But – What have you critics done for the Sinister lately? Nothing? Then Sit down and shut the Fuck up. Lulu do an amazing job with their books – and the Black Glyph is proud to work within their organisation – but regrettably, but unavoidably – they are very expensive. That causes us to push up our prices accordingly. There is nowhere else to publish our materials any cheaper – and until there is, we are forced to rely on others to assist us in spreading them. But those who buy the stuff we present on lulu, aiding THEM in the process, fall into two categories 1) those who enjoy reading from hardcovers or prefer tangible touchable media – and 2) those who follow the Sinister from afar or are too lazy to undertake the initiation to attain all of these materials and more, freely. People make their choices, and we cater for that split.

Where our productions are concerned: People need to keep in mind – that we're not Sony, nor Penguin: we don't have teams of writers, editors, artists – we do IT ALL OURSELVES. And as Subversionists and revolutionaries we don't necessarily have access to the sound equipment or technical staff to properly produce our Sinister creations – that is why this sort of thing (Sinister music) is so hard to find and so rare; that the chants even came out at all is because I managed to finally get them onto disc (thanks to Mr. Black) after storing them in a cupboard on a tape for almost three or four years after Lyceus obtained them from CB and kept them for who knows how long. The quality is not the best, but that is all that exists. We do the best we can and try to improve as time goes by for the next creation. And while others bemoan that process, hinder our progress, they slow it down for everyone. THEM is the only group to have come along in the last twenty years that aimed to teach but not to control. We believe in what we're doing, how we're doing it, as a group, and expect criticism. But now you have to expect repercussions for giving it.

But of free stuff? Wow – we've given away thousands, maybe hundreds of thousands of stuff free. and still do. Obtaining most of this was hard. ONA Database, contained around 600 MSS. Most of these were paid for or earned via building a long rapport with other people. Aeona and TTT group contained even more. All found, begged, or paid for. Naos was extremely difficult to track down – as were the dozens of extremely rare mss hosted in Mvimaedivm (some of which are inc. in our Glyph SS discs) esp. when more often than not what was paid for never arrived. I spent at least three years making a tarot, and have spent at least a decade making the intense layers of the ONA understandable to the idiot and genius alike. I have spent easily at least $30,000 dollars on finding mss, equipment, assisting others, learning, growing, undertaking the Sinister Path either as it was laid out or with my bare hands and not much else. I've weathered as much criticism as anyone should need to – and can only say as loudly as possible to any future or past critics – I appreciate to some extent that cynicism inherent in people that makes changes difficult (this helps make progress on the Magian's part slow too) but as loudly as I can as if I were standing beside you: Fuck You.

It is still not enough for some people that Naos, Hostia, the Chants (3500 downloads so far from the Glyph, both when they were free and priced), the Music, and the mammoth library of ONA texts were preserved so carefully, accumulated so completely or are now a dime a dozen on the internet due to the efforts of myself and others of the Sinisterion for more time than most of them probably ever devoted to anything to get them on there; no, they whine and complain about obstacles placed before them illustrating they completely misunderstand the genuine LhP; whine about having to pay to support the Sinisterion who have already done an astronomical amount with great grace to serve the Sinister Path they now tread so freely – where that opportunity is offered – but not expected; and continue to mouth off about our intentions, motivations, and administrations.

Some people will never be happy – and some people never should be. In fact, some people deserve only terrific wrath. So again, once more for ALL the people in the cheap seats, the back seats, who sat on their seats – whom sat/sit on their asses and didn't help us with ANY OF IT – but pointed fingers, whispered behind our backs, sabotaged and slowed us… and there's just so many of you… past, present and future. Fuck you. Hide. Because we're not like the Others.

I am a man of my Word/Wyrd.
Kiss my ISS,
One of THEM

IMPERIUM: THE FORCE OF ESCALATION

In the following documentary, an excellent modern example of Escalation is given that serves to illustrate the Ethos or Force that dominates and characterises the rise of Imperium. More commonly, we would cite the Arms Race example as in Physis of the Sinister, but this one hits closer to home because of its personal and esoteric connexion to the force of Escalation.

[Video] LOCKDOWN – NORTH BRANCH CORRECTIONAL FACILITY (1/4) North Branch Correctional Institute has taken great pains to eliminate design flaws and weaknesses that can be, or have in the past, been exploited by Inmates. It has taken away bars, access, privacy, automated systems, and reduced the number of Inmates housed together. It has learned from previous mistakes and increased the strength of its structure, the panorama of its all-seeing eye and placed 6 lines of defence between any inmate and the outside world at any given time.

Or, in other words, it has created an atmosphere alien to previous prisons where kinks were common and given the inmates an entirely new set of problems to solve. The Greeks believed that central to the art of wisdom, anything could be understood if it were contemplated long enough. In that sense, Inmates serving life sentences have a profoundly distinct advantage in putting that maxim to the test.

Given the propensity of human ingenuity, that continues to escalate to this day, people after all are still surprised by things people do, i.e. the features of the iPad 2, a you tube clip, or a Govt. announcement, for instance, what is likely to happen is that while old problems may have been ironed out, news one will simply arise. The guards still interact with the inmates, the inmates still interact with one another and the outside world. One documentary shows how the danger of guards just talking must be avoided because prisoners have become adept at reading lips. In such an environment, the changes to the human being are remarkable – but they adapt. We manage to live in Arctic ice, 50-degree deserts, mountainous inaccessibility, high rise apartments, or wherever else we find ourselves. The ability to adapt is one of our defining features as the human race.

When the inmates find themselves presented with a new playground, they will find the weaknesses. If an inmate manages to find, and they will, weaknesses within a complex like North Branch – the knock-on effect of a culture of inmates learning how to exploit or escape from facilities like this has ramifications for the skills passed to the outside or through the inside. Imagine trying to lock up someone in an ordinary police cell after they have escaped from North Branch or lock up someone who has been passed the skills to escape from somewhere like North Branch. Eventually – the criminal world as a whole will get smarter, savvier and adapt to learn from, this new challenge. What happens then is that all across the board, State security must be increased to again match the skill set of the inmates. And so, it goes on and on – until the inmates are somehow reduced to complete immobility or manage to escape.

Not only is Imprisonment and Building Prisons one of the fastest-growing economic boom industries of the USA, but it is also indicative of the Ethos of America. It applies pressure and more pressure on something, until that something is forced to adapt. Consider Vietnam where endless Napalm, Bombs, Rockets and a formidable arsenal of state-of-the-art weaponry was unable to defeat the simply armed and much less numerous, Vietcong. Or the double-edge of 911; where if it's true America did not crash the plane into their own buildings to create the situation to increase its justification of force globally – despite their best attempts to prevent their enemies from counterattacking, they did not see the plane coming. Or, if they did see the plane coming, now their actions have forced the EU to seek to cut the US off from its military economy by destabilising its currency. Now America and its allied forces move very slowly through Iraq suspicious of everyone and everything that could be equipped with an IED (bomb).

For all their best efforts, Vietnam won the war, Iraq is winning the war or causing stalemate, and Prisons despite their number and popularity have done nothing to deter the growing number of people Doing What Thou Wilt. This is the escalation of force – every reaction brings with it an equal and opposite reaction – and sometimes, a mind-blowing overreaction like the retaliation of Pearl Harbour with two Atomic Bombs on Japan that made the US a “superpower”.

Or the most diabolical inhuman murderers, equivalent to an inmate stabbing someone 3000 times, on the Planet, depending how you see things. People act like steam. When you trap them, they build up enormous pressure until they explode/implode, often destroying the infrastructure and everything holding it up. The ramifications of this in relation to Imperium are that the signature keys THEM has isolated as being responsible for keeping the system in place, i.e., duality, morality, notions of time, space, I, language, present perception, linear logic, lack of solidarity, cronyism, 23 syndrome etc. etc. have not lived their full causal cycles of life and persist despite any amount of occult intervention. For even the Occult relies on all of these tools to ply its wares – thus itself sustaining the system in place.

The System at its present stage is inwardly a super maximum-security prison like North Branch – we cannot escape from its walls without losing our ability to be Social thereby condemning our chances of survival by cancelling all the benefits Society brings with it. Outwardly, the system is, I would have to say, for most people somewhere between minimum and maximum security. We are watched, punished, rewarded, controlled by external eyes in the sky and the hands of the Man but we are still mostly free because many of us do not pose a recognisable threat to the State or System. I say recognised because the most dangerous people are probably in fact those in power.

Yet, as more pressure is put upon us by economy, finance, rates, interest rises, technology, resource shortage, housing slumps, and so on – the world inches toward an inevitable state of climax where monitoring, invasion/erosion of privacy, surveillance, by the State will be less and less welcome, less and less tolerated. Enough pressure has to be applied, like a several million-tonne volcanic plate crushing coal, for a diamond to be created, before anything can be done about the present System. Or in other words, the State needs to apply far more pressure before any kind of uprising can take place.

The problem here, is that the US and its allies have learned of the problems of applying too much pressure to fast and the knee-jerk reaction it causes (again, Vietnam was stopped by mass protests) and are loathe to allow Westerners to make the connection between the force they are applying elsewhere, and upon us.
Hence only minor, fleeting and partial coverage of any military incursion/invasion is shown – with news quickly switching back to celebrities and fluffy kittens. We are kept in a fishbowl of ignorance regarding the movements of the US, its partners who silence, torture and kill, threaten, extort. We seem to realise this and the need to connect ourselves to the world and each other in a greater degree – hence the Internet, and almost certainly, the Bio-net, almost certainly Internet's purely but yet-to-be conceived mental brother.

But the forces in our way, the walls of semantics, meaning, emotive loading of concepts and the misdirection from the shadows to make us look in all the wrong places for the switch to turn it all off and really See – is preventing us from making these connexions.

—

[Proponents of Good/Evil have yet to define a definition of either that does not satisfy the definition of the other. Therefore, the questions remain – Does resisting Imperium mean slowing it down or speeding it up? Does aiding Imperium mean slowing it down, or speeding it up? Or does Imperium, a noble and austere concept on one hand, highlight the very crux of the problem with words and their interchangeable semantic meanings, which effectively cancel each other out?]

THE ALPHA-CYNIC VS THE ALPHA-MALE

Part I
[Dedicated to my Brother & the few Good Men who influenced my Life. +O+]

Following on from the essays in the Book of ABSU regarding the increase of absurdity and the faith one can place in the laws of escalation – we are now witnessing an exoteric/outward/physical/social change in pathos in the collective human consciousness regarding the validation of superiority, strength, aggression, and excess testosterone as the key elements to leadership; elements generally assigned to the characteristics of the ‘Alpha-Male’.

Although glimmers of this approach have been appearing for a long time, increasing or decreasing as they wax and wane – often in the context of parodies; the attack on the alpha-male has now come to dominate the perceptive consciousness of the collective. A re-occurring sign that spans the generations is what precipitates or illustrates a change in collective consciousness is taking place. (Qv. Notes on Signs). When a famous Australian footballer attacked his fiance recently (2008) causing serious injury – his bravado, a factor that would have once stood him in good stead and aligned all his buddies behind him – has noticeably failed to protect him from the scorn and derision of his peers.

The comments and aloofness, toughness, or bravado usually demonstrated by the footy player to shift responsibility for their aggression and big-man syndrome from themselves onto others for expecting it/nurturing it as part of the game, part of the role of a sports personality – was not considered an acceptable excuse by the footballers peers – who have largely ostracised him from their ranks – sending a clear message that this behaviour is not acceptable – and creating a considerable landmark in the potential for a change in maturity and empathy in the average male Australian.*
*Domestic violence – although not as popular a topic as terrorism or global warming is probably the most frequent crime and frequently tolerated crime in Australia.
For the younger generation – changes are also afoot. Just as science-fiction has shown some connexion to the development of technology and future focus to the scientific sphere – I believe movies, when viewed as emerging patterns of concept, tend to illustrate changes (esp. since they tend to initiate them) in the collective consciousness.

In the recent movie 'Aliens vs. Monsters' – a couple are making out in the classic scenario of a jock at kiss-point with a girl. However – the roles are reversed – the girl is ready to make out, insistent even – while the jock just wants to go home. He is frightened of the UFO that flies overhead and is the one that twists his ankle when the two of them make a run for it. The sophomore – who is well ahead – slumps her shoulders at the fallen jock that is simpering and is heard to comment 'this is the worst date ever'. She then goes back for him and is seen carrying him in her arms at the next scene. (Appropriately – both sexes scream in terror when the UFO attacks them.)

In humour – in making someone laugh – pointing fun at – using satire to show the reflexion, the absurdity of something – in animated cartoons and even the rugged masculine aggressive world of Australian Football – the Alpha-cynic predicted to emerge by THEM in the Book of Absu is now manifesting as a collective archetype infecting the consciousness of the presently established male clique and the younger generations influenced by them.
These and other indications are a sign that the Alpha-cynic, as an unconscious archetype is a reflexion being seeded in both the young and the established male communities.
The world has begun to laugh at the Alpha-Male – and if not a raucous laughter yet, be assured the seeds these numinous memes plant in the young ones will grow fast.

~
It is not ridiculous to surmise the popular adoption of wearing pink by men (ala the 'metro sexual' phase of fashion) was in some small way a step toward males finally collectively adopting/releasing some of the latent feminine characteristics present but repressed in their psyches – as it only takes one person brave enough to set the example, for others to follow – and for a new norm to be set. Just one of these feminine characteristics is tenderness, like that which many hard men show to their children and wives – which tenderness quickly disappears when dealing with others and esp. other men. And another of those characteristics is the ability to unite (without ego) as one voice in order to protect someone or demonstrate the unified impression that someone has overstepped the line.

Whereas such strength has in the past been the standard for men to aspire to – ala the Greeks – this emphasis on physique as the stature of manliness appears to be changing – or at least at a point where, with sufficient pressure and acceptance, it can begin to change the previously validated philosophy of an ego-oriented, muscle-bound drive for men to get big, and stay big – with all that this implies in the way of 'big-man syndrome' owing to the excess testosterone.

The collapse of the world economy has precipitated (as it generally does when the physical world is shown to be fragile despite its appearance) a move toward more spiritual nourishment – perhaps in seeing even the great Alpha-male's dominion – those supposed to be above such injurious and humiliating experiences come crashing down – a certain disdain for their position, for being unable to live up to the expectations of supermen has collectively come forth. A new superman, a stronger more flexible superman who cannot be taken down by something as intangible as money, is needed.

~
What is the Alpha-male? I was an Alpha-male prior to developing/evolving into the Alpha-cynic.

The Alpha-male is at the top of the pecking order. What puts him there are perhaps neatly expressed as two things – an ability to talk to all echelons of others in the pecking order – and his aggressiveness (and success) in the things his Ethos expect of a man. Gym junkies, body builders, wrestlers, martial artists, athletes, executives, and others who work on increasing muscle mass and strength (or even amassing egotism and power) correspondingly release enormous amounts of testosterone – and in doing so, build what the Sorceress has aptly named 'ego-armour'.

But so much testosterone causes imbalance – and those affected – lose the capacity for temperance in their Weltanschauung, in the way they deal with people, problems or the world. In thinking strength and muscle are the keys to resolution they the aggression that they have attained in the way of training as the key tools to resolving issues that face them. As a result – the not altogether unfair stereotype that footballers are ‘dumb’ has arisen because of this imbalance of mind and body. In such a capacity – the focus of big muscles becomes the fixed role and characteristic of a man – limiting or even locking out the potential for others.

The discrepancy of imbalance is analogous to many gym junkies training only the top half of their bodies; going for the showy Pecs, abs, biceps and triceps, lats, and trapezius muscles groups – but ignoring the less visibly appreciated muscles in the ankles, legs, calves etc that should be included to properly hold and support the incoming upper body mass. Many gym users are top heavy – and many are slow even if they are powerful. A tendency to make fun of Alpha-masculine characteristics – esp. where those with a powerful and calculating sense of humour are concerned (mimicking one of the powers exercised by the Magian to make changes) and who can cleverly cut down such giants to size, verbally – is emerging.

The Alpha-male, who struts and preens, who goes to excess to prove his muscles and aggression is now beginning to be seen as a laughingstock and to some extent an embarrassment of the male community. The Alpha-male who gathers his troops around him when he is being a ‘big-man’ is being seen as weak for needing so many cohorts to back him up, for needing so much additional help to sort out the childish impulse of picking fights he can’t finish alone – and where, if the pack attack is successful he then congratulates himself for being a superhero.

Arrogant, ignorant, vain, pretentious, full of false bravado and pride – such men are silently viewed by their cohorts as an embarrassment – as a jerk. As a time old tradition – other young men gather around them – because they want to be the Alpha-male or at least in his favour/shadow. Because, generally, they lack other male role models to show them how to be men – and copy the nearest and loudest one to them. But the Alpha-cynic is an entirely new breed. Coming in all shapes and sizes, alone or in groups, the alpha cynic scorns a person who must surround himself with a dozen others as a shield – scorns a person who only ever picks on the smaller, weaker, persons as prey – proving to be more of a weak parasite or predator than any kind of sterling example of masculine pride.

When does the Alpha-male ever pick a fight with a larger man, or insult a group when he’s by himself? That’s right. Never. Like the harmless animal in nature that makes itself look more fearsome to scare away the real predators – they puff themselves up with numbers, bravado, aggression, and arrogance. As a stronger consciousness of our implicit connexion comes to dominate the thoughts of people globally – where, the alpha-cynic wonders – is their real power? Where in this sad morass of pretence is the real man, the man who can change a nappy or fix a car, who can stick up for his friends or console his girlfriend, comfort his kids or take down an armed aggressor by himself? Who is so strong he can tame his ego?

Where is the real man who is so strong as to be secure in himself, his penis size, his muscle groups, his place in the world – that he need not resort to picking on the weak, on the out-numbered, on copying the vicious pathetic bully boy tactics of the state and its Magian ethos that rules them? When they're by themselves they keep their eyes down, look away, and keep silent even in the face of "mortal enemies". When push comes to shove, they're more often than not cowards, they beg for their life when threatened by death or after receiving serious injury, and then, even then – instead of fighting that tremendous hold the ego has on them, accepting they were being a complete tool and growing beyond the rock-solid stagnation of their total psyche – they continue to talk shit, mouth off, threaten reprisal, strike when one is weak and never when one is strong.

(A sterling example of the typical formation of an Alpha-Male is given in a horror movie entitled 'Eden lake' – which movie also raises another vital point of contention between THEM and the Magian – and that is the ridiculous notion that monsters are anything but human. In such distortions lays the refusal to take responsibility for what the human is capable of, in both the positive and negative, this distortion is what prompts THEM to re-define what it is to be human, i.e. First Human. A topic to be covered in the second part of this treatise.]

When will this man walk down the street holding his head up high because he was kind to a stranger, helped protect someone in trouble, used his real strength to break free of the bullshit roles to which society/media/ignorance binds us and makes us live out by providing only broken examples of men – only one side of the multi-faceted glory that man can be? When will this man stand up and choose how to be a man, inside, outside and on all sides?

And in the face of such growing cynical distaste at what many men have become – even dissatisfaction in the idols that are often the only example of a strong man, successful man, real man – many are beginning to develop the strength to say no. No to the examples, no to our fathers, no to our brothers, no to our perception of the future, and set our own examples of what a real man should be. What it is to first be human – and not repeat and regurgitate the cycles of violence, ignorance, arrogance, misery, pain and suffering to which our species has been prone – proud of – praised for. Fuck them. Fuck that.

The Alpha-Cynic will replace the Alpha-Male because they see straight through the camouflage of such men.
Enter the Alpha-Cynic…
+O+

On Signs:
Just as Terrorism or Communism have always existed but only came to the fore of perception when they were suddenly reported en masse by the media – and which forms now or once exercised a considerable chunk of people's basic perceptions of the state of the world and its forms in play – largely accepting the story spun about a world at war with terrorists/communists – the alpha male is now under similar collective (popular) scrutiny.

The idea that the world was suddenly under attack by terrorists – as if it had somehow been in a peaceful slumber only to be rudely awakened by armed extremists one day is nonsense – "Terrorism" – the name itself being a political abstract, and pending on whose side you're on 'Activism' or 'Freedom Fighting' – has always been going on – and always will go on so long as Governments, States and Countries, Political/Religious Regimes or even Individuals seek to oppress their people thus forcing the conditions that lead to revolution.

Only once it is mentioned as an issue and portrayed as epidemic around the world (naturally to ready a populace for war and set the stage for manipulation) by the media – when millions suddenly converge on the same propaganda in newspapers, television, and the media limits (and controls) what is shown again and again as terrorism, does it suddenly become a hot topic that permeates/affects the lives of billions.

But in an Analysis of Frequency we destroyed the idea that the media was a reasonable or rational way to see the world or attain an even remotely fair assessment of world events. The news does not have depth; it does not have comprehensive dialectic nor seek to answer the important questions of the why and how of the events it reports – esp. if those why and how indict someone or some political party to whom the news is connected. If you put a million people in a box with pink walls. They're going to see pink.

Since the war on Terror has finally been accepted to be a farce by most, and using fear tactics such as "Weapons of Mass Destruction' that did not actually or ever existed – or the promise for it to be over before Xmas when it's been almost a decade now since the US invaded the Middle East did not eventuate – the propaganda has lost many of its teeth.

So, as is always the case, it's time to trade up and swap one fear maker for another. The 'Global Warming' issue and the "water shortage" scare (at least here in Australia) has developed as a similar tactic to frighten and maintain the fear factor that holds an uncertain, confused populace in its grip thus making them easier to manipulate.

And it is necessary to make a pointed, very pointed comment here, that Water was once joked about only ten-fifteen years ago as one day being sold in bottles – as an absolute outside chance that it could ever happen. Believe me when I say Oxygen will be next – and some form of "Alien Invasion" will take the place of Bin Laden. Now that THEM have noticed the unconscious thrall emerging of disdain for the Alpha-Male it is the right time to seize the bull by the horns and make this issue more widely conscious.

THE ALPHA-CYNIC [2]

Following on from the essay "In Absurdum" – there are some disturbing trends that require further examination relating to the developing nature of Magian assemblies in Australia. It was stated before that where I live, groups of up to 500 youths gather together to drink and cause trouble. The banal use of the word trouble belies, if we are to for one moment believe the media [newspapers and TV headlines] reports, the increasingly vicious nature of violent offences and their steadily rising frequency – using knives, weapons, unprovoked gang assaults – often leading to death or serious injury.

It has been almost 15 years since I saw a real man. Sometime in the late 80's in fact. Past this point, aggressors I have encountered in my plethora of fight experiences have either been groups or drunken older men. The last real man I saw had his faults – but he was hard. He was hard because he knew how to be soft. Because being able to be soft made you ten times harder. Those days are in remission/hibernation; I don't reminisce because those days are not gone; honour can be restored, men can be courageous, and the balls to stand on their own two feet can be regained.

Of the hundreds of youths and adults that pass me every day as I walk through my city – I observe in any single person that is not surrounded by friends or a group of peers; t on their breath or that mean little bully face that tells you they're harbouring a secret grudge that characterises what's inched them off their grand pedestal, and unable to act or Be without some convenient custom or cue, without some safe connection to a role and all the signs of terror. People avoid looking at anyone, avoid smiling, they stare straight ahead of out of the window, silent, alone, separated from their role and the comfort of their personal flocks to guide them. They are terrified by the absence of any social situation for them to define 'themselves', express 'themselves' and continue on their way with the tunnel-vision that characterises their lives. But witness the change that arises when a friend approaches, a colleague from work, a group of mates; the transformation is often a complete reversal of this solemn state; of the fear of the abyss and the horror at the endurance of silence and thought and contemplation on the real questions of life.

Loud, boisterous, rude, macho, pathetic… ruled by their roles, these empty shells cower in the hundreds, forming ‘gangs’ not because of a war-torn history of bloodshed, not because poverty demands solidarity and an over-riding urge to eat or starve to death, and not because of famine, or because the streets are filled with crack dealers and guns or soldiers and tanks – no, Australia has and never has had, any of these worries, any of these social pressures, any of these calamities that occur in other nations. They form them because they are afraid to stand alone – not one of them has any real power, or any concept of power. Not one of them has faced the Abyss or been isolated from their roles or dared to challenge their soft lazy convenient imprisonment in Time. And not real men; not the kind of man who can walk the streets by himself; not the kind of man who can stand up to others on his own; not the kind of man who can stand up to himself; but the kind of men that strut about with misplaced arrogance, stolen arrogance, afraid of the truth, afraid to be alone, afraid to be a man.

You will never see these so-called ‘men’ [how dare they appropriate this term reserved for the brave] attack or assault on their own; you’ll never see them striding confidently down the road by themselves; and if you do then you can be sure it’s not the walk of a man – it’s still the walk of a coward, staring down and hard at everyone, making himself a threat, a presence to be feared, a bully and a baby; no real man demands that his own folk fear him. No real man needs to frighten children or other men. So, I say, the real man is in hibernation – for all that walk the streets today are the weak, the pathetic, the afraid – the loudmouths, the cowards, and the scum that comes from a society built on Magian values.

“In packs they come at night; snarling, spitting, foaming at the mouth like rabid dogs; By day they skulk the streets, mangy and flea-bitten, their tails between their legs; Lest they should encounter Justice when their fellow hounds are at bay.” This is the legacy of cowardly scum. Only when enough alcohol has been consumed to push their little egos over the edge of reason, only when their massive fear of the Abyss, of consequences, of being held responsible, of being a man, has been forced drunk do they succumb to their petty wills, their pointless destructive little wills – and flagellate, orgiastic and insane, slaves to their revelling; until the wine is gone and the sun is anew; and they slink away to talk big, to gloat on their cowardice, to rally their troops into bovine worship of the ego and its smallness.

This is the legacy of a Magian generation. Of a loss of Tradition, and strong ways of life, of steady guidance and leadership, of a lack of idols to look up to and follow, of a lack of real man to copy by example, a degeneration of values, of strength, of honour and courage. And thus, we see a generation of adult children and childish adults. But look at them, any one of them when they are alone; in the streets or wherever you see them; and see what I see; cowards, weakness, boys instead of men, afraid of the world, afraid of themselves, and deathly afraid to let anyone really see them for what they are – Nothing. Australia is full of these miserable little shadows, drunk on their own self-importance [though they deserve not a whisper] bragging [and we can hardly call it fighting, can we?] about their manhood and yet when it comes down to it, they are but scared little boys terrified to take responsibility for their actions or words, or to lead by example, or to say no to cowardice. Soft boys, no not even boys, spoilt children, mental infants… seething in their own impotence. And lacking the strength and the courage — to be a man.

You will never see them mouth off and pick fights unless the target is smaller or they have their dogs with them. You will never see them push or start a fight without whisky on their breath or that mean little bully face that tells you they're harbouring a secret grudge from some slight that's inched them off their grand pedestal. And that overblown estimation of their own worth – of their manhood/name/reputation? That ridiculous bluster and provocation at those smaller than them or the boring tirades to some chap outnumbered? The threatening looks and gestures, the stand-over tactics and name-calling/teasing you thought was left behind in kindergarten? That increasingly brutal undercurrent coming through in the attacks reported by the media? It all comes from a desperation to conceal their little selves; to protect their precious fragile egos from real harm, from real challenges, from a REAL fight.

Show me a man that fights himself — that man is a Satanist. That man — is a REAL man.

CRIPS, BLOODS AND AUSTRALIA

In South Central Los Angeles, surrounded on all sides by prosperous, rich and influential areas, inc. Orange County, Beverly Hills, and Rodeo Drive – is the poverty stricken, war-zone known as the 'Hood. In this area, the rival gangs, the Crips and the Bloods – destroy one another to survive. When the Black Panthers rose up to defend one another against the brutality and prejudice of zealous white cops it was a different game. After being treated like shit, ignored, hustled, and told daily on every level that the Black Man was no good, was worth nothing, was less than a white man, had less rights, less right to have what so many white Americans had, or join in seamlessly in American society – because of the colour of their skin – they came together to defend one another against their oppressors. This oppression was subsequently labelled by the media as Riots, Gangs, Violent Resistance – and a gullible, often equally prejudiced America – bought the version of events spun by the powers that be.

Sometime in the 70's the original groups of individuals who had come together to fight oppression had reached a stage where much of their solidarity had been broken up by the assassination of many leaders – and the roots of resistance damaged or destroyed by the imprisonment or killing of influential persons.

The children of the original groups adopted the legacy of oppression – with two significant differences: a) they began carrying and using guns where fists had once prevailed b) they began fighting amongst one another instead of together against their original oppressors.

Records of the history of the Crips and Bloods indicate that at some point, a Crip killed a Blood, or a Blood killed a Crip – (today neither group knows why or who started the war) – but the personal hurt and tragedy that this first killing caused for one of these young men, has over the course of decades escalated into an all-out blood-feud and ongoing war that has by some estimates caused more than 15, 000 deaths.

In the 70's – rap had a very different message. If one compares the messages of rapper Ice-T, who used to stand on street corners rapping about the same calls for solidarity, freedom from oppression, and police brutality his peers of the Black Panther era had – with the impenetrable shield of hatred, promise and glorification of violence, cold emotionless veneer or presentation of modern rap, i.e. D12 – one observes a marked change in attitude – a literal 'snapping' of the black American psyche in those areas particular to South Central that has undermined the previous struggle for united solidarity against oppression , with a poisoned self-hatred and hostility toward one another. Moreover, whereas unity brings people together – even at the point of combat wherein fists are exchanged, bodies touch, a human element is present – the psychic snap brought forth a new distance between young men, and even fists were abandoned in favour of the impersonal and cold killing power of guns.
When one sees the staggering number of fire-arms of all description inc.AK47's, comes to understand that blocks of land, landmarks, even shops, streets and alleys are each 'policed' and divided as the property of rival gangs – and where one wrong step can get you killed for trespassing – one should be shocked, outraged, amazed that this level of violence, destruction, is not just ignored – but sold off as a media, as entertainment – largely by the untouched areas of super-rich Hollywood – that surround South Central.

In order to survive – each of these young people – adopt the mantra 'kill or be killed'. In an atmosphere where you can be shot to death at any time of any day whether you be 6 years old or 60; patrolling the streets with your own posse or out riding your bike – only the hard man survives. In this atmosphere it is genuinely a case of kill or be killed – and will always be that way – until something happens to disrupt the cycle of forms – or mend the psychic snap.

It would simply be arrogance to think such a deep-seated campaign of hatred, brutality and oppression against the black American and many other minorities could ever be mended in any less amount of time than the original time it took to get to this point. And as more people witness and are born into the atmosphere, the way of life for the ‘Hood – the cycle grows and the war continues.

One can see just why it is imperative, for the white man, for the powers that be, to keep these young people hopelessly engaged in fighting against one another. Were such heavily armed and organised gangs to unite and wage war against the people who put/keep them there – the American police and public would face an extremely well-trained army.

In the promulgation of gang rivalry, in the sanction of music that sends messages about doing just that, and how to do it, and how that is all you should do, in the common dismissal of the history of the struggle endured just to attain basic civil rights, in the writing off of the pain, suffering, and emotions of these young people who live a life where they have nothing to lose, who are born into a cycle of despair and hopelessness as ‘Gangstas’ – the white man shrugs his shoulders and relieves himself of the duty of acknowledging the deep psychic hurt the collective actions of those who do nothing – has caused and continues to cause.

These hard-faced, steely-eyed, bandanna wearing men and women, do not choose this life. They are born into it. And either they adapt to it quickly – or its unwritten laws kill them. It is not a case of defying the odds, of making for oneself a life of prosperity, of going to school, of studying hard, of trying to ‘get outta the Hood’. The entire area is saturated with people who enforce the gangsta code. Whether at school, at home, trying to do the right thing, get a job, help an old lady across the street, the altruism of trying to show a different code of conduct has little hope; what prevails above all and every best intention is the grip of fear. Fear – that trying to do something different, will get you shot. Fear – that showing any kind of adherence or lapse in the code, will get you shot. Fear – that being relaxed, showing emotion, being kind or caring, trying to make a difference, turning your back on the code, will get you shot. What counts on the street, is fear. Fear that is code named ‘respect’.
Yet – by all human accounts – everyone – the kindest and most humanitarian of humans – the darkest and most vicious of humans – at some time in their life; has a friend or friends, a group with whom they let down their guard, joke with, laugh with, share worries, fears, and have deep discussions on matters of life with. From whom they seek advice, or comfort. This capacity to enjoy and engage in such behaviour is a human constant. The atmosphere is so tense in South Central LA, that this freedom to express emotion, happiness, softness, must be carefully guarded.

Only in the most trusted company is this freedom enjoyed – anywhere else, will get you shot. What difference is there then, between the atmosphere and rules of South Central LA and that of prison. What was once an atmosphere of standing up to the Man together, is now a severely tense atmosphere of self-policed emotions and actions.

Here I mention the fusion of this atmosphere with the ONA and the strange hybrid it has gestated – whereby I say strange I mean new. The founder of WSA352 is believed to be a Chinese female and resident of Orange County – a stone's throw from Disneyland. The adoption of ONA's memes by the founder in such an environment has been unusual to say the least.

'Satanism' has by and large been considered a white man's providence, a European-owned archetype. In the last 60 years, from LaVey to Aquino to Long – a succession of white men have utilised the symbolism of Satan and its implied racial heritage. Nazism has in the past fused effortlessly with Satanism because of a perception that both currents and their forms belonged to the Western or Aryan psyche – i.e., were the direct psychical heritage of the White Protestant Anglo-Saxon. Whether this propensity for white folk to gravitate toward Satan is founded in a traditional racial heritage is questionable – owing to the question mark hanging over the racial origins (and by proxy the skin tone) of the so-called Aryan. Many scientific and anthropological studies for instance have put forth objections to the prevailing Anglo-Saxon imagery used in the depiction of Jesus – claiming that it is highly doubtful he was white, had golden or light brown hair or such refined roman features. But the mythos of this image persists – and is undoubtedly as valuable a brand-mark to Christianity – as the dynamic ribbon device is to Coca-Cola, both priceless marketing tools.

But where Satan or his archetype appears in other cultures, his name – appearance – and attributes – change markedly from those depictions given to him by Europeans and Caucasians. This change seems to appear only where Christian influence is absent – such as distant tribes or derivative cultures that have blended the Anglo-Saxon Christ (and sometimes Mary, and sometimes Satan) into their own cultural roots and traditions. Just as the archetypal image of Christ seems fixed for many black-Americans (even as Christ is portrayed as an Aryan and symbol of their oppressor), so it seems fixed for the archetypal image of Satan.

Yet the number of black-Americans who worship Jesus, would seem to far outweigh the number of black-Americans who worship Satan. In ten years, and where I could identify the nationality of an individual – I've seen only a handful of black American Satanists – as if something in the white Anglo-Saxon Satan pushed them away, whilst something in the Anglo-Saxon Christ drew them in.

The WSA352 arose from a fusion between the ONA's portrayal of the white race's claim to the archetype of Satan, and the perception of life and the necessary skills to survive as viewed by a Chinese woman nine miles east of South Central. WSA352's appearance and this particular fusion seem to indicate the spread of a deeply ingrained racial problem spanning hundreds of years and one that is now showing more urgent symptoms within Australia.

In the Melbourne CBD – more and more over the last decade, and more pointedly and recently in the last four years – the way of life characterised by South Central has been copied – or attempted to be copied as stylised by various media. Although many of the people who have immigrated to Australia have done so to escape genuine poverty, warfare, riots, bloodshed, persecution, death, or torture; such groups including Serbians, Somalians, Ugandans – where there are real social crises and bullets and bombs, rogue armies and fronts, corrupt police and officials that threaten the very liberties of their lives; the large majority of emulators are wealthy white kids whose very social status and penchant for playing at being a 'gangsta' – makes a complete mockery of historical and present struggles. The average white Australian knows nothing of warfare, of having their family and home bombed to bits, of troops of armed soldiers looting and raping at will, of having guns put to their and their families, babies' heads, of being beaten and tortured and threatened with military violence or violence from political coups.

The average white Australian watches TV, uses a computer, owns a mobile phone, and many of them – though in the top 5% of the world's wealthy – complain about how hard life is, or go out of their way to pretend to be oppressed. This is evident in the myth of the Magian as created by the ONA – for nowhere else except under the Government or via Christianity – can the average white person come close to feeling oppressed or seek to justify some sense of oppression.

The recent spates of violence in the Melbourne CBD and their persistence and escalation are the representation of something far more sinister than people not being able to hold their alcohol. These attacks are not going to go away with band-aids – for they are the result of putting band-aids on serious social issues. They are symptomatic of a great psychic sickness that cannot be made to go away whether people lay the blame at parents, liquor licensing laws, lack of police, curfews, video games, violent TV or other such nonsense. These are contributing factors – but they are not the root cause of such disturbances – the propensity for band-aids to be administered to such severe social issues as South Central – are. In most cases, it is a neat division between violence on Melbourne's streets being perpetrated by spoilt and wealthy children who seldom have to worry about the consequences of their actions / and the tension and subsequent defensive reaction of immigrants who experience racial vilification and persecution from other nationalities in an already over-crowded metropolis.

What is odd however is that it is seldom Aboriginal or Koori gangs that are reported for violence in Melbourne or indeed other National cities – but nationalities such as the Lebanese, Chinese and Greeks. Strangely – the culture that has every right to be angry after the holocaust of their peoples by the early Europeans and unite together as per the Black Panthers of LA against the ongoing prejudice against them that has led almost to the death of their culture and tradition is mostly absent in the CBD. The influence of South Central has instead been centred in the remote outback of the Northern Territory and other rural areas of Australia – and the same self-loathing and hatred for one another of the Cripps and Bloods – carried out in the petrol binging, alcohol drinking and violence against one another except without the same easy access to firearms.

There is no difference in the herding of Koori by past (and some say present) Australian Governments into the remoter areas of the land where they fight amongst one another instead of against the oppressor and the corralling of black-Americans into the small area of South Central where and endless spate of suffering continues unabated. The arrest rate of black-Americans is extremely high. Many are arrested over such minimal charges as possession of a small amount of marijuana. It is estimated that almost 70% of the population of American jails are black-Americans. In Australia, the arrest rate and death in custody of Koori people is also extremely high. Many are arrested over trivial matters, or for being drunk – and it is estimated some 45-60% of Australian jails population is made up of Koori.

The signs of graffiti here, along the train lines, on buildings, in alleys, on fences, etc are largely echo – an emulation and unintentional mockery of the real conditions endured by those who are and were genuinely oppressed. Here, they are called tags and used as a sense of identity, to feel significant. Here they do not yet act as warning markers that mean you will get shot to death if you go near them. The shops such as ‘the Cribb’ in Frankston, VIC that actually cater to the gangsta culture, make huge amounts of money promoting a twisted view of a part of the world inhabited by a poverty stricken and racially oppressed people. They line their pockets and sleep comfortably, well away from bullets, well away from crack and PCP on the street corners, well away from the real misery and looming day of death that at least 15,000 young men and women have been victims of. The Cribb and other such shops sell such clothes as if they were souvenirs from the war-zone itself. Only in Australia the most untouched country left, where there’s never been a bomb, a missile fall, a plague, a famine, a dictator coup, could a clear conscience be kept in the matter of making money while people needlessly die.

In shops that stock rap records, thousands and even millions of dollars change hands via a corporate market born and capitalising from the efforts of black-Americans to speak out about the brutality, injustice and racism facing them at every turn for the last four centuries into a popular disposable disc you can choose or choose not to buy – such is your luxury – again to line the pockets of rich corporate businessmen who never have to apologise, be held accountable, or acknowledge that they are trading money for blood.

Some labels do in fact support artists from LA, and are run by those who need it most, but the majority, as Eminem says, is for spoilt rich white kids by spoilt rich white kids. The white Australian can safely don a cap, baggy pants, and some coloured rag and mince about the street trying to be street; because there's no genuine oppression. For a start – they're white – white skin is a badge of its own – its shared by most of the influential members of society. A white Australian doesn't actually have anything to fear, or anything to face – they're not going to be moved on the same way as a black American – they're not going to get shot in the face – and they're not going to have their family gunned down. They can go home to their comfortable lives, walk the streets without being followed and gunned down, and don't need to fear the police because the police are by and large the same colour.

The white Australian is in fact, so un-oppressed, that the only way they can emulate the gangs of South Central is to deliberately manufacture an enemy, purposefully concoct the sentiment that their liberties are at stake, arrogantly decide that they too are at some kind of war. Or in our lingo – stir up shit, pick on someone or some race until they get a reaction and can justify their make-believe. It would be funny if not for the tragedy and mockery they make of real social problems.

If – such individuals – were to by chance be dropped into South Central – I have every confidence they would more than likely be coldly shot for imitating and mocking the life these people who live here have to live. What is most enervating about this identification with the black-American's struggle – is the lack of historical understanding – and the support of this tragic circumstance by buying into and buying from the media that capitalises from the death and continued racial vilification of America against its people.

The tendency for a group to attack unarmed or lone individuals in Melbourne has been escalating well before WSA352 announced its own changes to the honourable field of culling. 'Culling' is in my mind actually a ridiculous concept – since people are culled every day whether they deserve it or not – what difference does killing someone intentionally make? In the past I attributed this cowardly show of force to a number of things, the first was that people were copying the Corporations that receive the worship formerly reserved for the Church; the second was a cultural milieu based on racial heritage and tradition; and the third was a collective psychic decrease in the choices made by the individual self at the expense of the collectively and socially sanctioned mob ego.

What would stop violence in the Melbourne CBD? Some say Vigilantism might. Large and organised groups of youths ready to defend old-fashioned values could keep order – but with any large group is the problem of weak moral fibre and the ease with which power corrupts some. Retaliation only leads to escalation. Carrying salt to blind, a machete for defence, only leads to home-made pepper spray and cowards attacking more quickly with even less warning than before to lessen the chance of defending oneself. This is a tragic state of affairs. The poor-me approach of many young people actually illustrates a lament of the fact that they live in a mostly quiet, gunless, ordered society. It marks the epitome of human selfishness, ignorance, and arrogance. It is no wonder that so many terrorist groups have tried to put a bomb under Australia's ass to wake it up from its reverie – to make it realise just how good we've got it here. To punish us for being so aloof, so arrogant, so ignorant and ungrateful for the conditions we enjoy.

In Brazil homeless people are rounded up daily to be raped and exterminated by the local police. Yet we hear nothing about that except years later in some obscure documentary late at night. We hear virtually nothing about other countries – about the poverty and governmental neglect and corruption in Nigeria for instance, which leads desperate people to scam by comparison wealthy Australians – and when we do – the stories inevitably lack depth, discussion. Foreign Correspondent and Nightline are about the only news media programs to provide depth to the material they present. What we do hear, 4-5 times a day is about Sport. About Celebrities. About a kitten trapped in a well. We are largely isolated from actual world events and our connection to other countries by a flippant and strongly entertainment-based media – and a national legacy of blind ignorance. We neither have to be involved or endure the violence being done to people in South Central – but have the luxury of hearing about it, dreaming about it, fantasising about it, from the media's push of rap Cd's and wealthy designer clothes shops.

But how many of the gangstas of Australia would stand up so fearlessly to having a gun pointed in their face? How many would enjoy having their baby daughter or son gunned down from a moving car? How many would enjoy their sister being raped as she walked to school? Would they enjoy being addicted to crack and selling their bodies, sucking the penises of passers-by to get the few dollars needed to satisfy a desperate hit? Would Mothers and Fathers enjoy seeing their little ones, just babies, out of their minds on cocaine and face down in the gutters too smashed to move? How many of these rich kids even understand what oppression is? How could they? In soft little Australia?

The bloods and the Crips – they are born into a legacy that stems from black oppression that has had all solidarity amongst its peoples against the powers that be mongrelized and stripped from them, their struggle has been turned into chronic self-loathing and hateful destruction of one another rather than against the society that such blood tributes belong to. But the pretenders, who dress like something, talk like something, act like something, from the hood – who have the childish nerve to try to pass off oppression and make a mockery of such suffering – they, and the fact that we do nothing about them, are what make us a target for terrorists, cause violence in the CBD, are the start of a nation of spoilt children making fun of those all over the world who have no choice but to really live this way.

The pushing of boundaries where weapons and group attacks have occurred is bound up in the modus operandi of many overseas gangs – such as the Triads, the Tong, various Lebanese, Macedonian, and other groups have introduced. Knives, Glasses, Bats, Machetes, Screwdrivers, Hammers, and other means of personal extension are being adopted by what used to be a hands-on Australia – but the underlying motive for this carrying of weapons is Guilt and the need to create circumstances that justify such mockeries to continue. To act as though one were at war, when one is surrounded by nothing but comfort when one goes home – to push toward the start of something that doesn't exist, has never existed here – a justification to act as if there were an oppression even remotely similar to the horrors the black American has endured for centuries for the average Australian white.
The choice to pretend the conditions of oppression are remotely the same or have even the slightest resemblance to those that created the situation in South Central is individual – the choice to make out like what is happening there, is happening here is individual. Ignorance for Australians is a choice. We have access to books, to the web, to libraries – we can learn relatively safely without fear of being shot in the face – about the other parts of the world, about their history, and how they affect us – and how we and what has happened where we live, had affected others. If we decide to stay lazy, uninformed, and deaf to our connections to others – then it is the height of gall to complain about the conditions we create by doing nothing.

What could mend the psychic snap of South Central? Now? Probably nothing. In 1992, shortly after the Los Angeles riots, the American government promised to rebuild the ghettos using the "RLA" or Rebuild Los Angeles program. With this promise, many sets of Cripps and Bloods came together as brothers – united in optimism for their future. But a year later, RLA had done nothing to repair the ghetto, provide jobs, or sort out the mess earlier and centuries of persecution had created. Fifteen years on the war rages and shows no sign of stopping. The blood-feud is symptomatic of a perpetually fuelling legacy of revenge, bitter hatred, and suffering. The gangstas would have to lay down their guns, forgive the murders beatings rapes and wrongs done by each side to the other, let the whole bloody mess go down the drain and start again anew.

But all these humans, indeed all humans, are often in the midst of something – whether raising a child, working to pay off a loan, running drugs: they're all in the midst of stories/actions/life tasks that are playing themselves out – and must play themselves out. Even if one gang-banger decides one day that he's going to stop the killing – that he's had enough, done enough, seen enough to pay the blood debt owed him; who says another gangbanger's going to suddenly feel the same? They are inextricably locked in battle, trying to right done wrongs, keep having to get revenge, keep having to kill or be killed. No-ones ready to stop because there's no way for the pain to go away – no way for all the gangbanger's to simultaneously settle the scores they owe one another – no way left for a man to back down, turn away, stop the violence, without being seen as weak, instead of strong, and shot dead in the street for it.

Here in Australia, PCP, Ice, Crack, and Coke are on the rise. Imported weapons such as mobile phone guns, handmade guns, tazers, shotguns, are on the rise. Gangs and gang violence is on the rise. But more importantly – while there is in fact only some small increase in these areas – the media publicity of them has considerably intensified – feeding the mythos – fuelling the romance.

But it's not too late to mend the psyche here in Australia. What could mend the psychic echo of black American oppression here in spoilt rich kid Australia? Certainly, one could start by abandoning once and for all the simplistic wishful thinking and plain ignorance that this is a problem that can be solved with more police, harsher laws, licensing changes, curfews, or other such nonsense. This – is not a problem – a problem is fully revealed in its entirety – this is in fact a mere symptom. And a symptom doesn't stem from without inward – but deep from within outward.
While the media, the television, the radio, the movies, the music empires continue to peddle the souvenirs of the thousands of dead who have died and continue to die horribly brutally every day in South Central and hundreds of other places the world over – this mentality will not only continue, but it will take root, and grow.

It is ridiculous to suggest that parents can control their children in the way of policing violent video games, and movies that glorify violence – when we live in a society whose leaders and rich maintain a national ethos that condones the pack rape of women by footballers, romantically glorifies such icons as Ned Kelly or the criminal underground, or happily patches up serious psychic disturbance with band-aids and blame. The blame for the violence in the CBD falls squarely on the shoulders of us all equally. While oppression of the Koori is allowed to go on, while violence is promoted, sanctioned and offered daily in every shape and form from cartoons to early news programs, and while ignorance is allowed to continue with all manner of short-sighted suggestions for social reform being treated as valid commentary – the deep and dark issue of racial guilt and racial factors bears down upon us.

The psychic snap could be prevented by more discussion of the racial factors involved in Australia – by being honest with ourselves and making conscious our prejudices – not burying them under more absurd placations of blame on alcohol, TV, and so on. This is a problem of hereditary guilt. The adoption of this black American plight by farce is not without reason. In a society fabled for being – down-to-earth (read, Stupid) with a fanatical fear of most Australians for demonstrating intelligence, aptitude or independent individuality; dumbing down even the brightest of us; Suicide among Australians should not be unexpected. The stubbornness of the Australian populace to appropriately identify and talk about the root causes of the many growing problems in this country, and not just the country but the collective and hereditary human psyche – is responsible for many suicides. Where intelligence cannot breathe – stupid will smother.

When the simplistic and nave codes of behaviour and social more fail to embrace the full totality of life; hem in optimism and hope by a stifling and energy draining atmosphere of pretence of being 'blokey' or 'ocker', of forcing a liking for cars and football, being terrified of gay people (read, one's own homosexuality) and hiding any serious trace of individuality, uniqueness, or differences from the stale beer soaked norm; the suicide rate can only be expected to sky-rocket. Australia is; by and by; killing itself by living in an archaic and antiquated romance. Those who think the obsession with football/cricket is stupid, are ostracised; those who think football is thinly disguised tribalism and religious affiliation – are considered too smart for their own good, singled out for persecution and face acts of violence no different than that resulting from opposing any extremist cult anywhere else in the world.
What fits in here, and all that fits in here, is a very narrow set of beliefs. People from other countries are mostly tolerated – not accepted. When they are accepted, it's generally as an exhibit, a novelty, something to show off.

Almost all other people from countries outside Australia not only speak their native language – but that of English. Whereas most people from Australia are self-centred – they can speak only one language – English, and think the world revolves around them. Ask almost any destination outside of Australia what they think of Australian tourists – they'll tell you we're loud, ignorant and rude. Most white Australians live in a bubble of arrogance and spend their time spitting racial slurs and mumbling about the stupidity of immigrants and outsiders ruining the economy. It is doubtful that many Australians will ever be encouraged to learn French, German, Russian, Greek, Italian, Chinese, Mandarin, Korean, Slavic, etc in order to break down the communication barriers that have led to so much racial hostility – for Australians are condemned, ridiculed and shunned for being smart, for being independent, or for trying to escape the backward atmosphere of ignorance that characterises the white race and the average Australian.

That this code of conduct is almost a national treasure or pastime has been the contributing factor of a loss of National Identity – especially now that the Identity of Australia has changed so drastically with the competing influx of hundreds of new cultures. This has left Australia deprived of its original National soul, a hollow shell afraid to repeat its past liberties of making fun of foreigners, of swearing openly, of acting without a care in the world. Instead, and in the face of increasing immigration throughout the 70's- to present day, Australia has the temporary and dubious honour of being shaped by politicians unable to stem the tide as ‘the multi-cultural country of the world’ – in itself the more perverse kind of reverse racism. Especially when it tries to be politically correct – the white race expresses its ingrained racism.

If Australia chooses to pursue glorifying football which is thinly disguised tribalism and religious affiliation; to haze and tread down the brightest among them to compensate their deep heritage of mental inferiority; to let media glorify beer, football, violence as its national symbols: then it does as every other white nation – and ignores the issues of racial guilt about to erupt the globe over.

The problems it faces will not go away, but correspondingly escalate at a terrifying rate. Until the suffering of each community in the world is faced, acknowledged, wept for, helped to rebuild, supported to unite – this pattern will continue to spread in frequency and intensity. Until one day an explosion rocks the foundations of Flinders Street Station, the music hall above crumbles with a terrific clatter down upon itself crushing the people below into bloody pulp. A haze of black smoke will obscure the streets as if it were London in the 1800’s, screams, sirens, and stampedes of people trying to get out of the way, away from the fires, away from the sight of mangled bodies, away from the result of ignoring the outer messages of our deepest inner psyche – meets us. What is one bomb, will become many more. Until our national peace is shattered for ever more, and the guns that plague South Central will be copied here with plastic explosives that snuff out the guilty and the innocent alike. Wearing chains and silly hats will be shocked out of being by the reality that the city is on fire, your family and friends are dead, and the careful insulation that Australian enjoys from world events – has finally collapsed.

Will it take this for Australia to wake up? Or when it happens, and it will, will Australia throw blame on the ‘terrorists’ – on ‘Islam’ – on ‘beer’? The white man has a lot to answer for. The black man has a lot to answer for. But everyone has a lot to answer for.

Let’s start talking.
And we can start by having a GOOD talk with ourselves.

SOVEREIGNTY, LEGACY AND HYPOCRISY

Disheartening as the failures of academia and academics are to mindlessly repeat what is construed as fact in the same initial extrapolative exaggeration used to springboard claims deployed by the media – the Temple of THEM, and I, are not National-Socialist, nor support National-Socialism (NatSoc).
However, curiously on cue, the situation unfolding in the Middle East between Israel and Hamas does inspire some commentary.

On Sovereignty.
It is hard to imagine who NatSoc's might be throwing their support behind, if anyone, given that the conflict involves all key Abrahamic actors and (yet another) religious bloodbath (taking steps toward a racial holy war or RAHOWA) between Christian, Jew and Muslim faiths, which, ferments other energies in the process. Significant decimation on all sides and all forces weakens states and provides the fertile soil for populist uprisings with claims to heal the damage with shallow but impressionable policies, allowing Blood and Iron-type Nationalist groups to take root. Especially, if the Western Hegemony of the United States is drawn into a destructive conflict that prevents it from adequately addressing the expansion of China and Russia, both of whom are draining the USA's military resources keeping them contained.

The conflict that has erupted (09/10/2023) occurs at an interesting time in human history when International Relations (IR) is compromised by multilateral organisations such as the United Nations (UN) which extends liberal control mechanisms over states to force them to show restraint, with specific emphasis on humanitarianism. Traditionally, Nation States since the Peace of Westphalia (1648) have been grounded in Realist doctrine of State Sovereignty, which means within their territory a government can do what it likes, and respects other Governments in other Nations to do the same. This Peace has prevented intervention in historical genocides in order to respect sovereignty – but rising international systems like the UN, and critical security studies have challenged whether sovereignty means a government can treat its people how it likes. Globalisation has also broken down traditional technological borders so that the atrocities of States are no longer hidden but visible to the whole world, inviting action not just from actors (other States) but Non-Governmental Organisation's including the global citizenry.

For the past 350 years, Realism and the idea that States inhabit an anarchic environment where no higher power will come to their aid, has dominated. Therefore, States have held the view they must be self-sufficient to survive. Attacking another state means impinging on its sovereignty and often leads to war. For the State, its survival is everything, and as a possessor of the monopoly of violence which gives it its extraordinary power to police the citizenry, with police, military, bureaucracy and legitimacy -it will do whatever is necessary to ameliorate threats. The posture of Realism that tends to drive IR bids that Israel does not show mercy or weakness, lest it be seen as weak by revisionist states that seek to challenge the status quo (existing order) and seize upon its weakness to destabilise or destroy it.

This is the rationale behind why you may hear Governments of states such as Australia, the United States, who are allies of Israel, openly throw their support behind Israel and its right to retaliate. This is the nature of Sovereignty. But there is a unique element to this conflict between Israel and Hamas that affects the magickal fabric of the present matrix.

On Legacy.

Israel has a unique legacy. Following their experiences of extermination during the holocaust in World War II, Israel has been uniquely vocal in influencing political, legal and cultural limitations and controls in their favour. This has included hunting down Nazi's, ensuring no-one forget the Nazi's, concentrating on the Nazi's to the extent other horrors have been drowned out, banning the Swastika, and particularly vocal about 'antisemitism'. It is interesting that no other race tends to have an anti-ism, there is for instance no anti-Caucasianism, and if there is, we never hear it. The Jews also seem to get more than a fair share of 'apologies' – for 'antisemitism' as fear of their power seems to facilitate this obeisance, given their grip on the key institutions of the world. The focus on NatSoc and its counterpart Antisemitism has dominated media, drawing focus away from other bad actors whose atrocities were equal in scope and greater in breadth, and paying special attention to perceived persecution by the Jewish people. With understandable emphasis. Adolf Hitler was a terrifying dictator, with a cohort of men possessing near-ultimate state power, architects of unimagined causes of human suffering, death, depravity, cruelty, and inhuman methodology, that no NatSoc supporters have ever been on the end of – hence their unbridled enthusiasm.

But this narrative has dominated the post-war years – under the protective parable that the Jewish people wish for history never to repeat. This thematic mantra has shaped the past 80 years by those in power, particularly in the media industry, by directing focus into a specific ideology that pathologically demonises the Nazi's every chance it gets. But now there is a problem – the State, which often govern with their sheen of politics including upholding their moral story and national image very well to float a facade of reality that promotes all kinds of liberality, freedom, justice and so on – are forced to show their true colours when war erupts. And the true colours of a state – are absolute violence.

On Hypocrisy.

A magickal narrative that has bound much of Western doctrine and therefore how we live and what we perceive, particularly in relation to our moral compass since the end of the Second World War, is about to break. For, despite their prolonged campaign to delegitimize the tactics ascribed as exceptionalism to the German-National Socialist regime, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is now engaging in a siege of the Gaza Strip depriving Palestinians of food, water, electricity, security, escape, and threatening genocide. Netanyahu has claimed Israels response to an assault by Hamas will be to 'remake the Middle East' and turn Gaza into a 'deserted island' (Al Jazeera, 2023). As it amasses hundreds of thousands of soldiers in preparation for an incursion into the prison construct of Gaza Strip to slaughter 5000 Hamas hidden among 2.3 million Palestinians – Israel is on the precipice of committing a holocaust. This may prove extremely challenging for the White Lodge.

Update: Various stories accusing Israel of war crimes and a fall from grace (Al Jazeera 17 October 2023).

In making itself an impregnable tyrant – Israel's intelligence agencies, such as Mossad, have invited a short-sightedness borne of a belief of invulnerability because of one's security system. This has merely inspired an analysis of obstacles and the creative means specifically to circumvent existing installations intended to protect a state from the consequences of its policies. Akin to the use of Boeing jets flown into the World Trade towers and Pentagon in September 11, 2001.

In its rage, Israel is delegitimising its presumed and vaunted moral superiority and disrupting the legitimacy of its claims that National Socialism must be challenged because of its exceptionalism, i.e., that it is so different to all other political forces. Israel ranks as the 18th most powerful army in the world according to Global Firepower (2023) – and is preparing to engage captive non-combatant civilians trapped in the 365sq km area of Gaza Strip, violating multiple humanitarian codes and international laws to which it is beholden. Additionally, Israel has begun shelling Lebanon, drawing in Hezbollah, and Syria, and in coming days, there is little doubt Iran will become a target as the alleged benefactors of Hamas – drawing in Turkey, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Australia and potentially a vortex that could, lead to an even wider conflict as other countries are forced to show allegiance, possibly leading into a Third World War. There are few things more unhinged, than religious extremists with nuclear weapons. Israel is sheltered by Christian Superpower, the USA, who believe they can 'deter' other actors from entering the conflict, and Australia is in an alliance with the US and Israel. A wider conflict will mean Australia will be obligated to go to war against Iran or risk abandonment should it need its militant allies in future. Backed by the world superpower, Israel is picking fights with anyone and everyone believing USA firepower will be its saving grace.

It is highly likely a prideful and enraged Israel under Netanyahu will demand the destruction of Iran, as the fount of Hamas, Hezbollah (Al Qaeda, The Taliban, and ISIS are significant actors in the region too). It is likely Israel will be further incensed at global criticism when its human atrocities mount in coming days and weeks (adding to its already acute persecution complex). Moreover, such wars have a global contagion – where it becomes increasingly difficult to stand back and remain neutral.

Australia has already recognised this in its dilemma over Israel-Palestinian support and refusing to display symbols of one or the other, wary not to side with one over the other and risk increasing tensions. But favouritism is in the eye of the beholder, and such moderation has been condemned by both sides for not legitimising their viewpoint. Clearly Australia recognises that when it admits diaspora from other countries who are of other faiths that religious intolerance and the danger of diaspora fanning the flames of war by ‘showing solidarity’ is a significant risk whenever the status quo is challenged globally. Such is the irrational hatred of Religion and Nationalism, especially when one’s people are being slaughtered in War. War changes things. Global War changes everything.

Structural violence is built into Palestine’s persecution of Israel, Israel’s persecution of Palestine; each side will argue that the weightier onus is due their opponent’s moves and actions but remain blind to their own engagement, involvement, complicity of their state’s machinations to anger, torture, torment others until resistance erupts. Moderates on the individual and state scale risk becoming enemies of different states or groups by not taking a stand and persecuted for daring to stand back and try to retain empathy and relativist detachment. State Alliances can be damaged and cause unforeseen swaps with devastating consequences. Key players in the BRICS (China, Russia, India) are firm allies of Iran and a new conflict in the region will weaken Ukrainian coverage and support, intensify China’s opportunity to engage Taiwan, and draw at least 5 of the 9 countries into conflict that possess nuclear weapons (ICAN, 2023).

Ultimately, the three branches of Abrahamic belief; Muslims, Christians, Jews have once again raised their blood-soaked banners of war in their righteous indignation, motivated by the reigning system of state sovereignty and identity-politics of nationalism. But… this is the way of things. Violence is absolute in human society. Instituted top-down from the sovereignty of the State to the birth-imprisoned status of the national citizen. Repetitively inflamed by Leaders shaped by the political process and attitude required to get into and maintain power, we are continually asked to identify an agreed enemy and march to the tune of war and the madness it begets. This is standard fare for what life on Earth involves.

Reactionaries have declared with a straight face that all religions should be banned from practice in Australia. That all rallies in Australia inflaming religious tensions should be illegal, arrests made, and be grounds for deportation. That we are dragged into yet another War by religious powers and the wrath of the righteous whose fervour commands fire and hell and polarised by diaspora bringing the war inside the gates. All too often, it is National Socialists that inflame this chime to suit their interests, seizing upon instability, fear of conflict by the public, and calling for and offering the assurance of security to frightened/defensive populaces that will enable them to remain insulated from the wider world’s woes. And Israel, has just broken the very spell that kept them at bay.

It is worth remembering, that the only method to stop World War II, and frighten the Japanese into surrender, were two atomic bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, catapulting the USA to its status of a superpower as the only nation to ever use nuclear weapons on another country. It is worth asking – how will they stop a Third World War?

WHO OR WHAT IS DANGEROUS?

This comment has been prompted by an unusual number of people contacting me about some of the organisations 101 has covered during the week asking me if it's true that these organisations are truly as dangerous as their reputation – the Tempel ov Blood, in particular. I usually answer these queries without a second thought, but being asked repeatedly has made me think about what people are thinking and doing by asking. There is a particularly frightening test that has been conducted for almost 40 years with invariable results to demonstrate the suggestive power of authority and the obedience of people to it. The test involves a fake scientific experiment where the subjects are asked to give electrical shocks that increase in voltage to another subject (secretly in on the test) when they get questions wrong in a given series. At a certain point in the test, the subject being electrocuted (out of sight and in a room next to the subject doing the electrocuting) begins to yell out indicating that he is experiencing pain.

At this point, the people giving the shocks look concerned and immediately express discomfort at the test but straight away look to the man in the coat (the authority), who simply says 'the experiment requires that you continue'. Although almost all of the people giving the shocks experienced discomfort and second thoughts, looking more and more distressed at the thought of causing pain to another person as time went by and the voltage increased: Consistently, more than 90% of people continue to give shocks up to the 400 volt mark which they had been told would give severe pain to the person in the room merely because the authority figure said, note, did not demand or insist, merely said, to them to continue. The diffusion of personal responsibility was suggested to be the key element that allowed them to continue despite the conflict of doing horrible things to other people – but more disturbing than that, the people most likely to give shocks and longer shocks when an answer was wrong at any point in the tests, were quiet and shy people who were suddenly given a bit of power. More than any other demographic the average person without outward signs of aggression could become the most formidable and cruel tormentor simply from the sense of power they got from doing their job. This is what is meant by the banality of evil – and the diffusion of power where no-one is willing to accept responsibility for what they have done, blaming others, especially authority, for making them do it.

Nazi Germany did not start out with people afraid to refuse a command – it was a gradual process where people became splintered and highly mistrustful of one another over a period of time by precisely this diffusion of responsibility. It is believed that this diffusion of personal responsibility was the same cause that allowed those in say, Dachau or Auschwitz to commit terrible crimes by over-riding natural instincts to stop what they were doing merely because an authority insisted they continue.

Having done six years of particularly hands-on martial arts that didn't fuck about with fancy kicks or unnecessary flair – teaching us to attack at the same time as we blocked, a mixture between kickboxing and wing chun – I have learned many ways to kill a person quickly if it has to come to that. Nerve strikes, chokes, hammer fists to the heart, a solid uppercut to the chin, a downward fist on a full bladder, for example, have shown me that it is ridiculously easy to injure or kill a person. In fact, in the beginning I set about to learn these arts to more appropriately perform a certain act of 'culling'. It only takes 5-10 seconds to apply a blood-choke and a person is down. It takes half a second to block and step past someone and thump them hard in the heart or throat correctly with a blade-hand as you pass and its lights out.

And it is this knowledge of the nuance of living, of how fragile even as it is highly resilient, the human body can be, that keeps most people who know martial arts from getting into avoidable fights where death or serious injury is certain. In Nature, one invariably finds that those animals with the least protection or aggression develop bright colours, spikes, puff themselves up, show feathers with extra pairs of eyes, and so on to keep away natural predators. It has been suggested to me, and I am inclined to agree, that those who make the biggest show of being evil, dangerous, or who seek to be feared are often among the least dangerous. If someone across a bar covered in tattoos or looking at me is making a big show of his masculinity then he is basically foretelling me that he could or intends to be a threat – I can see him coming a mile away, and that is what he wants.

But if I were to be that stupid to think that only tattooed bikers were going to cause me trouble, I'd not survive very long. I quietly keep my eyes on everybody, because as I have always maintained – all human beings are scorpions. You never know what a person will do under duress or given the right circumstances – people, despite what you may think, can be unpredictable. So treating those who fit the description of trouble as trouble is as nave as it is likely to get you killed or blindsided by the little bloke in the suit standing off to the side. Humans learn to LIE early on for a very good reason – first survival, and second, to hunt. And they don't just lie orally – they can lie in every way you can imagine.

And it is precisely the process of thinking that the most dangerous people can be identified by their leopard spots that relegated Satanism to the status of infamy in the first place – by a very clever Church who snapped up the better position of pure virtuous and good – versus what was left in the titles of evil, wickedness and base desire. Threats can come from anywhere, the US, who are facing women and children strapped with explosives in Afghanistan, are nicely equipped with the terrifying truth of human ingenuity to take advantage of people looking for obvious terrorists' threats and thus bypassing those who don't fit the stereotypical description of one. Serial killers blend in seamlessly for instance, quiet, invisible types dressed casually or even nerdily that don't make a big song and dance about how evil they are or how dangerous, but who'll do unspeakable things to a person when they get you where they want you. You don't tend to see them coming because they're expert chameleons.

And, most people are killed by someone they know. So, whilst a huge, tattooed biker, with a patched jacket and a mean look on his face may be the nicest bloke in the world so long as you're not a dickhead and give him cause not to be – you should be just as careful about those who don't attract attention to themselves. There is another social experiment that shows how authority works to divide and conquer even the best of mates.

There was a great book was called the Wave I read at school – where a schoolteacher aimed to show how Nazi Germany worked against the Jews. (yes they get a slamming don't they? You'd think that no other country had done the same or worse with all the propaganda about) Anyway, he divided the class into two groups, those with blue eyes and those with brown eyes. Those with blue eyes were given extra privileges and rewards and were able to give limited instructions to those with brown eyes, whose conditions were poorer and whose rewards were naught. Gradually and then markedly, the system spilled out of the class and into the school where the blue-eyes became fiercely against the brown-eyes much like the Gestapo. The experiment worked too well and was not confined to school – and the blue-eyes sincerely began to believe they were better than the brown-eyes leading to increased hostility and death threats. This sort of thing is precisely how conflicts between people start and get out of control.

Another similar experiment that is conducted, but now under very strict conditions following terrifying results – is the prisoner-jailer scenario – where some people are made prisoners and others made jailers. This experiment takes 'ordinary' people divides them and shows a frightening consistency for people to abuse their power as jailers and believe the roles they have been asked to play. All of these experiments tap into certain knowledge in the hands of powers and authority regarding the human ego, behaviour, and propensity to believe authority. They play on deep-seated weaknesses and universal traits in human beings to behave a certain way under certain conditions – and you better believe that others take advantage of them, everyone from multi-national corporations to your mum knows ways to get you to kill other people in war or clean your room. But it really does depend on what a person means by dangerous.

If you mean will they be likely to cause your death, then yes, there is the possibility of that, they ask you to engage in some pretty stupid things – but if you want to do them, then you've only yourself to blame if things go wrong. But hey, you may also be just as easily killed crossing the road. Steve Irwin spent his life wrestling huge alligators, thousands of them, big fuckers with mean tempers usually – you know how he died? A stingray barb accidentally got him in the chest. Engaging in activities you don't normally engage in may increase the risk of personal injury or death from one point of view, but it's not guaranteed – some people live death-defying lives, risking them every second in war or as stuntmen or whatever and die getting hit by a bus, or choking on a piece of chicken, or in their sleep. Death is indiscriminate, stalking us all, and tends to pop up and take us from the world when we least expect it.

It is certain that we are all going to die, we just don't know how or when. You can live a quiet, spartan life, eating all your vegetables, taking care of stray animals, and being a humanitarian for all people – but that does not decrease your chances* of getting killed violently. So, let's put it another way, do these groups then, increase the chance of your death? The answer is again, yes, there is the possibility they may, but so does an electrical storm striking your house and taking you out while you're reading this. Another question then, do they, the ONA/ToB intend to kill you in some ritual or other? No, probably not. But you never know your luck. ToB are into some heavy stuff, and ONA is likely to be able convince you to risk your life unless you want to be called a puss-weed. But then again, these are fringe examples. If you think it is a good idea to get involved with People of any description then you introduce yourself to risk – because it's not the forms that are dangerous – alone they are inert ideologies and useless until they are picked up and worn like masks by duh-duh duh… PEOPLE.

If you want my opinion? Scientology is far more dangerous than either group – with a large number of influential and wealthy people who act irrationally like spoilt children to get what they want, through lawyers, or physical intimidation – you're staring up a shit tunnel if you think you're getting out of there without a world of pain. If you want dangerous, join these fellows and then try to leave. Watch what happens. It's also my belief that Christianity is far more dangerous than Satanism –it invented for instance, everything that Satanism now uses to make its little points – the language of English derived from Latin – the moral side of the coin on which it rests was determined by Christianity – the infamy and ridicule it attracts derives from the extraordinary power of a form that has built its own country and city in the name of the Church – the Vatican, and is a gargantuan power that commands millions of zealous and very powerful and wealthy followers. Neither of these may be the smartest of most logical religion – but since when has that mattered to people?

Most people just want to belong – and are willing to do whatever it takes to belong – because they're not strong enough to stand alone. Christianity has always controlled Satanism – the latter will never control the former because the latter uses the table-scraps the way Christianity wants it to. We become scapegoats when we conform to certain things pre-set for us to use as rebellion – and, the very idea that we should all dress in black, wear pentagrams, and openly supply the observer with various badges and signs of our 'faith' only contributes to the already won game. It's worth pointing out that blue-collar crime is processed in court far often than white collar crime precisely because the legal system is weighted in the favour of the rich and powerful – not, what happened. Moreover, blue-collar crime such as drugs, murder, or assault is viewed as more heinous than fraud, embezzlement, or usury. Look where that attitude got the USA.

Alright, then, maybe this should be put another way – are the ONA/ToB and their ilk dangerous to your health, or your mind? Well sure, they can be, if you lose your autonomy and your way, and aren't ready to have certain views challenged or ruined for you, believing in something, anything can be dangerous to your health. Maybe believing what you believe already is dangerous to your health? The observer can quite clearly see that both the groups involve and distribute propaganda which like all writing and presentations by human beings religiously or politically motivated, aims to mislead in order to coerce your co-operation. It can't simply come out and say, give me all your money, kill in my name, and fear me because I am better than you – it has to be subtler than that. But the very minute people group together – it decentralises personal responsibility for collective actions or inactions. You can then justify your actions as worth doing to perform or complete some cause or other and lay the blame for it at other' feet when shit hits the fan.

But Satanism is not at all as dangerous as its said to be, some of the people involved in it are, sure – but as a form? Most people worry that others don't have the judgement to avoid being brain-washed – which is true enough – but it is my experience that there are far more dangerous groups and forms to get involved with than the fringe groups that pepper Satanism. If those who asked the questions are here then consider how much authority you have given me to give you an answer about what is dangerous, what is my opinion for you to base your judgement on. What if I am working for the groups in question – might I not be in the perfect position to mislead you into a trap by giving you a careful answer? From my point of view, you are drawn to these groups by urges of your ego, for power and control, a sense of belonging to something, identity, curiosity and perhaps for a different perspective on life. And these sorts of things, WILL aim to change your perspective. Usually, to suit theirs. If changing/controlling your perspective is dangerous, then how dangerous am I?

My work is able to unravel trust in and even change people's faith in time, space, words, language, their autonomy, their purpose, their self-control and identity – and if you're game enough to get under my skin in real life, I know a lot of ways to hurt a person very quickly. The main problem I have is eroticism – by empowering myself and others I can't help but attract trust with the warm glow such realisations can have on a person – that's how cults work, with charm and charisma – I will just say that it's just very lucky for others that I don't choose to abuse that trust or take advantage of the positions of authority given to me, because I'd have gone a very different route with these organisations and probably be responsible for a lot of people getting very hurt if I believed the hype others bestow. I guess really, since you can't see the reality behind the words until you get there – you never know who is really dangerous, until it is too late.

Choosing a group can seem a matter of careful consideration (and I'm not telling people to not do it) but the way I see it, and that's really all it is, the way I see it, is that your choices really only tell you what you feel you lack and reveal what you are prepared to do or condone to fill that space in yourself. And it's easy to fall prey to predators if you feel they can give you something you don't have – this is after all the internet, where anyone can say anything and there is no way to (in)substantiate it online – and it all comes down to whose words ring the truest, or who shouts their words the loudest – it is the land of lies and half-truths twisted into megalopolies of deceit and misdirection. The Tempel ov Blood seeks to make slaves and sells an image of itself – just as K-Mart or McDonalds show me a super-clean restaurant with happy smiling waitresses doling out perfect burgers – til I go there see all the trash their company has created that litters the streets, am presented with a smooshed burger that looks like it was kicked shut, dropped on the counter by a grumpy $6 an hour and desperate child trying to make a living; yeah, the reality is always different to the packaging because the reality and the packaging are, of course, TWO very different things.

Why do we package things? To make them look expensive? To hide their contents? To protect the fragile contents? Caveat Emptor – (Buyer Beware). I like to believe I am too smart to believe the presentations humans give up to other humans – heh, we all do – but it still happens that you get sucked in because you have to have faith that McDonalds will live up to the promise of supplying you with a burger or you go hungry (or elsewhere) – and if it wasn't that way, society wouldn't exist. Mind you, a lot of greedy fuckers take hideous advantage of basic human gullibility and even their honest decent inclination to trust what is said or shown to them – it's that sort of thing (beginning a long time ago with Christianity) that has made me so angry that I have been writing for almost twenty years. Lol. It also got me joining up with people who I thought could make a difference in it all – help me expose the tricks and deceit for what they were – of course like the Americans who just copied Nazi methods, it seemed that when the struggle was over all they actually wanted was to do the same, but just to be on top. Imagine my surprise. Seems I was in many ways mistaken – and yes, that's how I learned all the things I know and share, and truly I appear to be the only person I can actually trust not to get corrupted or silly with a bit of power. And hey, you have to give up a bit of yourself to everyone every day for things to go on working – but jumping into cults that want to control you, well, that is a bit different don't you think? If anything means giving up my autonomy – then it is for me, something I consider dangerous.

But, see, there is a common bond in all these things. That's right, it's –you-, people. It's you who makes the choice to give away or keep your autonomy – to join a group that practices harmful things or to avoid them – to get involved and diffuse your personal responsibility or to keep it and standalone – to jump in with someone else's ideas or to have your own. It is –you- who is dangerous, who has the physical capacity to perform attacks or actions/inactions that cause harm and kill, -you- who opt to do something with serious risks of being killed or imprisoned, or opt to do nothing, to stay silent even when you don't agree with something, like others picking on someone, because you fear the response from others, fear not being liked or whatever, being outcast or becoming a victim yourself – you and every other human being who gives themselves over to forms and lets other people control them and think for them, and you who does not recognise their own inherent heart of darkness or their own power.

Me, I don't think groups are tough – I've seen a lot of them – been in a lot of them – been a bully – been a victim – I know some things. We all know that a friend can act very differently when certain people suddenly join them – it's like they're two different people. That's the effect of a group right there. You get most people from a group on their own and those people aren't tough, they all succumb to a choke or a decent punch, they lose all their bravado and cower if you threaten them, drop all their mouthiness in exchange for apologies, all their courage if they think you are going to bash the living shit out of them. Its why homeboys carry guns instead of fighting hand to hand – cause its Hard fighting hand to hand, you want 'respect' you try to bring out someone's fear of dying by pointing a gun at them. And its why people gather into groups to pick on a lesser number; FEAR; how often do you see one guy jump on six? Or one guy pick on a bigger guy? Eh? Yes that's right. Hardly ever. And see, there's every chance you'll get shot by the gun, it's a gun after all, and the guy holding it, he doesn't think he's weak, he thinks he's strong – but that's the great tragedy of the human race isn't it. It's terrified of everything and over-reacts.

There is truth in the saying that we are each our worst enemy. Huge empires exist precisely because humans work this way, some people got wise to it, and didn't have the scruples not to abuse that knowledge at the expense of the rest of us shrug Sure, some people don't have a choice between living and surviving – but most of us here, middle or working class people with a computer and an education aren't facing that choice, it's not a life or death situation with us, its fear of standing alone or up for someone else because we're not strong enough to be the victim. Is there a solution? Not really – people are too shit scared to deal with their faults and problems and insecurities most of the time – and they throw it onto others to make themselves feel better.

That movie, Kick-Ass, was cool – and I'm kind of torn between saying that's what people should do, and realising that most people don't have the physical prowess or mental smarts or confidence to stand up to a large and ruthless group of bullies. You can bash the shit out of the leader if you get him alone – but that doesn't guarantee that you will win or that they won't double their efforts. Cause fear does terrible things to people – especially when they have a fragile ego that is easily shattered – and when you piss of the ego, you're always going to get trouble.

Without advocating retaliatory violence, I believe the only way to change things – is through awareness of fear. Though cowards will do anything to avoid facing themselves, and therein lies the trouble. There are all too many people in the world ready to take your power from you and use it in their schemes if you don't want it, if you can't handle it, if you prefer not to have self-responsibility for your actions and be someone's puppet… Of course, humans aren't so stupid to divide the line for you right away. The way I got into various groups and sucked into their propaganda was very gradually, until one day I realised I was somehow waist-deep in others shit. Fair enough that the forms people put up are kick-ass inviting and tempting to fall headlong into without a second-opinion, but by putting your trust in me to give it you're already asking for trouble. The Tempel ov Blood already mentions that it does some freaky shit, the sort of shit that might drive you a bit mad, and even boasts of raping a 14-year-old boy or some shit – they also profess to be doing it in the name of Dark Gods, hello, doesn't someone that says that sort of thing sound dangerous?

Doesn't the name, or the very fact that they are writing in such a way as to get you to write to them, (most people don't seem aware of what is actually occurring to them when they read) ring even a small bell in your alarm factory? True – them saying they do these things isn't always a good indicator. But that is beside the point. Just like asking me questions on the Tempel and investing me with authority to help you make up your mind is the very diffusion of personal responsibility and autonomy that I am talking about that is behind all banal evils and personal hell. If you have to value my authority – then take my advice and make up your Own mind based on common-sense. You might make some mistakes figuring shit out yourself, sure, but consider this – for all the satanic groups and psychos, death-threats and life-risks that I've been involved with so far, including a very active personal real life full of them over the course of 31 years – for all the enemies I've made or fights I've been in including knife, group, nunchuku, or having a gun pulled on me, all the tough guys reputations and their numbers – well fuck, I'M Still Here aren't I. In one very intense piece.

Summary? Human beings, wherever they are, whoever they are, each have the power to hurt or kill you and if you're only looking for the ones who advertise it, then your chances of survival are 50/50. Our self-deception, not the forms we invest it into, are the real danger to us. *Chance is a funny little fucker – another little fear factor methinks. So are Statistics Odds and percentages. I worked for a corporation that specialises in them – but the way I see it all these percentages and chances and all that bullshit is very simple. Think of it like this, if there is a 200,000 to 1 chance that you will get dealt a royal flush in poker – it's still always 50/50. the 200,000 embodies 50%, the 1, the other 50%. No matter what the odds may be – it's either going to happen or it's not.

ON TOUCHINESS, UTILITY AND THE LHP

April 11 November 2004

"Satan uses us all, Ryan – we are all to use each other in some way and there is nothing bad in this provided we are conscious about it. I don't believe in disinterested relationships and that's quite natural. On the other hand, the true comrades on the LHP have no need of each other – another paradox. We are still learning, and if we survive beyond the Abyss we will still learn, I think. So, don't be touchy, even when I say not to be touchy. Touchiness is a syndrome we on the LHP suffer often by being over-sensitive and over-intellectual. Believe me, I have had bitter experiences with people and have seen how touchiness destroys very useful relationships between very valuable individuals. People are usually very suspicious that they are being used yet they are not conscious they are doing the same thing to others – remaining unconscious that their relationships are formed via utility. I think we should all know we meet each other on the LHP to do something with each other – in brief, to exchange energies and we should do it consciously, with an open mind and with full attention to act precisely.

You will probably agree with me that the subconscious relationship between many LHP individuals could be reduced to a tension between flattery and touchiness. However cynical it may sound that's a fact. Yet I think we should accept this fact and try to feel at ease with it. But the most important thing we should all know is that the self-knowledge (the only real Satan's testament) is not by necessity… a pleasant matter.
S.R.

VANTAGES: TOWARD A NEW LEXICON

It occurred to me as I was rising in the air looking out of the small, sealed window of the airplane watching the houses and cars recede into the far distance – that at some point the cars cease to be visible. I know they are there; I've been in one travelling the road below in a taxi not a few hours before and yet they are invisible as I ascend. The clouds begin to roll in as we rise above them too and form what I first thought looked like cotton wool – then I realise as we gain altitude that it is not wool but the resemblance of our skin when under a microscope, - the Earth's skin, - at this Vantage – has gaping holes in it, it might be raining or sunny below in the various parts of the country but I will never know because we are above the weather. Though the world below seems so small, I know the size of those mountains and hills that look like patchwork – how much bigger and detailed it all is, and how distances telescope when we land and I am on the earth the size of a human being – yet another Vantage – and all the buildings and landscapes dwarf me – and inside them – individual rooms and halls, and in each room more things, each with their own increasing layer of vantages and mini-worlds from the microscopic to light to the quarks and leptons of quantum physics... An enormous rainbow arcs across the curvature of the worlds edge, a brilliant light-show of the visible spectrum met in the middle by a similar display of a midnight blue hue that appears to fight for domination of the sky-space.

And as I review the day it dawns on me that this is the perfect name for the interlaced telescoping/micro-scoping simultaneities: Vantages. And these cars becoming invisible via relative ascent is the apt metaphor for the ability of our reach to observe. The most difficult part of Forms and trying to explain them is the sheer magnitude of Types of FORM are so vast and varied that they do not easily allow a definition since they may be imagined or conceptual or geometric mass or a single word or complex network of ideas or many other things besides.

To this end I have set out to apply loose working definitions to demarcate aspects of these phenomena.

Vantage/Pterrace: A level of analysis a certain distance inward or outward on or in which perception is bounded within specialist or stratified limits (i.e. Riemannian, Euclidean, or Relativist space and apprehension) i.e. topology examines a certain size object such as fits the size of mountains, ranges, valleys, hills, plains, seas – but does not include Pterraces above such as whole planets nor Pterraces below such as atomic level structure but land-sized features – this is to Pterrace Phorm (or, terraform, (pterraPhorm – to mentally dictate groupings in order to treat the Phyrm in size-equivalent groupings). It treats the Phyrm with contracted amplitudo wherein the grouping of objects related to one another is decided by the Pterrace of size. Vantages are often exhibited by the I-go or perceptual apparatus of the human organism as an Apex, or all-consuming hierarchy of forms with a single god-like appreciation for One at the top. Religion, Science, Politics, Biology, Age, Beliefs, Values, Opinions, A Favourite Sports Team, or other singularly important foci are all examples of Vantage, which often exhibit themselves through the 23 Syndrome to the exclusion of all others.

Phormation: A collective total of vantages that cover all perceptual viewpoints of what one’s own being is – electrical, chemical, biological, animal, physical, natural, mind, body, thought, generative, accident, chaos, purposeful, life cycle, mental, spiritual +).

Phorm: The official spelling of THEM's concept of forms. The 'P' indicates an element of the Psyches interference or involvement in the phenomena of creating or perceiving form as opposed to a solely matter-based or physical object separate from us.

Form: Often used interchangeably, Form is considered to be a natural state of the Phyrm, Matter, World and its contents a priori to perception, interpretation, categorisation. Boundaries between Form and Phorm are considered impossible to define and this is represented by the Mirror Zone where one can neither be sure one is seeing 'pure' is-NESS or 'corrupted' (interpreted/filtered) form.

The Law of Phorms: All forms, are temporary. This is the one constant they share. Even though some forms last longer than others – they all decay and are perpetually changing or seen to be changing owing to our relativity as observers and our own change. This applies to all political and religious forms. Like chromosomes they multiply, divide and multiply. Schisms are inevitable.

The Law of Phorces: The Phyrm is comprised of Forms and Forces. Some forces are temporary while others are enduring. Death, Change, Gravity, Entropy are subject to change of interpretation/perception or change of Observer but are enduring - and characteristic by being far more powerful and sweeping than the human being individually and often collectively. The earth has its own cycles, the Ice Age for instance, or Tectonic Plate Shift, or the extinction of a species, or the rising of Temperatures, or the wobble that causes the Precession of the Equinox: these are forces that dwarf us and whose interactions give rise to various Forms not man-made - but there are anomalies. Economy or Markets are man-made, but the forces within them are complex and obey rules of their own, beyond the control and often comprehension of humans.

Interpretative Shell: All forms are interpreted upon contact with them by the mind as a genetically developed instinct of survival, safety and control. This allows us to use our Simultaneity log to identify the form as a threat or utility, assess its uses, facets, meaning, composed material, spatial relevance, proximity to other forms, other combinations with other forms and general purpose. i.e. a Chair. This interpretive shell is unique to each individual by relativity and may contain elements of analysis that are not present in other individuals schemata- i.e. using the chair for S&M bondage, firewood, or escape;- pending the environment and event in which the chair is interpreted. An expert in furniture may see different aspects than an amateur and be able to date it, identify its maker or place of manufacture, assess structural weakness or strength in relation to other chairs or assess it with a more extensive catalogue of comparisons.

Pseal: Points of reference for perceptual reality. (1) A metaphysical location in space where interpretation and the forms of the Phyrm meet (2) and the physical container of the human skin.

Holding Consensus: Many forms have a shared consensus that holds true across the majority of, if not universally, the mind. Many people use chairs to sit on. It is a device that elevates one off the ground - for which reason it may be assumed that the floor be dirty or unclean to eat from but is a practice that hails back aeons. The chair is of extreme antiquity and simplicity, although for many centuries and indeed for thousands of years it was an article of state and dignity rather than an article of ordinary use. It was not, in fact, until the 16th century that it became common anywhere. The chest, the bench and the stool were until then the ordinary seats used in everyday living, and the number of chairs which have survived from an earlier date is exceedingly limited. Holding consensus is a prevailing interpretation of a form.

The Ostensible Crucible: the simultaneity of locations in which information about form(s) are held and the subjective arguments for appropriate repositories. i.e. one person may insist that forms are products of the mind, others of matter, some a combination of the two. Whether in the head via neurophysiological processes, the hippocampus, the mind, or memory, the crucible indicates storage processes inside the skull, the ocular, as well as innate layers of crucible to the form itself. When we see a star we in fact see light from the star, when we see anything we are seeing the reflection of light.

Anomalic Embrace: A child may invariably find the uses of the chair differ because of their size in relation to it. Whereas the adult is likely only to sit - the chairs may form a bridge, a cubby house with a blanket draped over it, be tipped over, be imaginarily encased and used as a vehicle;- an artist may transfigure the chair by altering its material or structure and by adding to or subtracting various elements from it. They may see some anomalous use for the legs or the seat;- and in both of these cases, the form of the chair is under review or investigation by the anomalous embrace which breaks the holding consensus of the article down to allow the chair to be re-assessed or re-assigned.

Psychometry: Psychological Geometry or Psychometry can be either Intended or Chance. Functional Geometry should not be confused with Geometric shapes specifically built with an intent to manipulate or elicit certain responses, emotions or reactions. Many forms have a direct correlation between the Geometry of the Human Form and the Form itself and the Psychological integration that fits the Form with specific pressures to manipulate specific Human Emotions. Again, we may cite the not-so-humble chair. Intended Psychological Geometry is imbued by the forms architect to induce a certain emotional state whether it be comfort or discomfort in degrees or extremes. Many torture devices have precisely this characteristic Psychometry because they induce a sense of restriction or complete immobility and powerlessness. Whilst these may appear to be ancient devices, they and many more sophisticated, horrific and ingeniously cruel devices capable of inflicting atrocious agony have been employed by Governments and Military, Police and Paramilitary, Regimes and Reactionaries, right across the world since ancient times and today (See Amnesty International). What is darkly fascinating about them is the shapes in which they have been crafted have been moulded to fit (or not fit) the geometry of the human body – as a reaction to its shape. They each use knowledge of the physics of the human body to cause intense suffering and are shaped precisely to do so. Further knowledge of human anatomy influences the shapes of them as well – i.e. as well as knowing that the socket of an elbow joint cannot be bent backwards without excruciating pain a torturer tends to know or learn how much pressure must be applied to make it do so and the amount of pressure that will cause it to break or dislocate and correspondingly the geometric design of machinery that can perform the desired function. Bone is extraordinarily strong — ounce for ounce, bone is stronger than steel, since a bar of steel of comparable size would weigh four or five times as much. A cubic inch of bone can in principle bear a load of 19,000 lbs. (8,626 kg) or more — roughly the weight of five standard pick-up trucks — making it about four times as strong as concrete.

Still, whether or not bone actually withstands such loads depends heavily on how quickly force is delivered. When you perform CPR, you can give chest compressions and not break any ribs, but if you apply the same amount of force quickly instead of slowly, and you can end up having rib fractures. When it comes to unleashing force quickly, boxers can generate up to 5,000 newtons of force with a punch, more than that exerted down by a half-ton on Earth's surface. When it comes to kicks they can obviously generate more force, since there's more body mass behind it. After looking at kicks from several different fighting styles, martial experts were found to generate up to 9,000 newtons with some kicks, equal to roughly a ton of force. A quick, sharp blow that delivers some 3,300 newtons of force has a 25 percent chance of cracking an average person's rib. It takes more force to fracture the femur — maybe some 4,000 newtons — since that long thigh-bone is meant to support the body.

The amount of damage a blow inflicts also varies due to factors such as the amount of muscle or fat covering a bone and the angle at which the blow lands, as well as the age and health of a person, which can affect bone strength. The knowledge of these limits may be imbued in the design of a machine or device which will correspondingly require a special geometric shape capable of performing the required physics. A baton for instance fits into the hand, is capable of being moved at rapid speed, can be made of hardwood or steel and can with repeated beatings eventually fracture and break bones. The tools we create to do our job depend on our understanding of Forms and Forces. The shape of some devices is not deliberate but a necessity to perform a certain task – i.e. a torture rack. To fit the human body onto it – it must be a certain height and length to match the average human body. But with the psychology of torture these principles of design can often be reversed such as the cages in which victims are forced to not quite stand or not quite sit. The level of understanding of this principle of design will determine whether the tool created for the task is of an elegant design, or a hulking machine – though physics will create its own thresholds which cannot be exceeded or gotten around. Nowhere I think is Psychometry more widely prevalent and reaches it depths more soundly than in the field of architecture and the construction of buildings.

It is small wonder that the Stone masons were so revered or that the psychology inherent in the soul of cities is altered by the inclusion or subtraction of various monuments, statues, infrastructure and buildings and the deliberate or accidental arrangements in which they are placed within that city that either compliment or contradict a space – lending aura and personality to it, deadening or livening it, with intended and unintended effects both short term and long-term. Chance Psychometry are forms that happen to take on relevance as if intelligently designed to perform the function we have assigned to it. Chance occurrences of psychological geometry can be seen in forms that we interpret as specific shapes such as markings on the Shroud of Turin or natural formations that take on determined shapes such as the Horse-head Nebula.

Phyrm / Black Clay: There are two convenient ways to discern forms. The first is that they are composed either by nature, man, or accident of the raw elements chemicals and compounds of matter. What we term these forms is a convenience, even as it is an integral function – it is nonetheless the interpretative shell. If we touch a wall we can feel it – that is, we can feel resistance, temperature, solidity, texture. If we push it, it may not move and we sense its mass. By touch alone we can determine the raw nature of Black Clay in its endless variations of sensory feel as it actually is – but to describe it we must superimpose over it an interpretative shell. For it is the nature of the Dexter to categorise what it senses in order to make sense of it and apply meaning and utility. If we hold an apple its feel is Black Clay, calling it an Apple is Interpretative Shell. This Clay is the material of which matter is composed existing in a raw unnamed state in staggering complexity and also effortless simplicity. The effortless simplicity because whatever it is, it simply is – it exists through its own flux with nature. The complexity because of the relativity we apply from all our different vantage points perhaps as an American, a Sudanese, a specific American, a specific Sudanese, a biologist, a fruit grower, a chemist, a naturopath, a fruit picker and so on. The holding consensus makes it an apple for many but not for all. It may be shunned in some cultures and embraced in others, shunned by some individuals and embraced by others for any number of reasons. But if humans did not exist to name it – it or something like it, would still grow, without any knowledge that it is supposed to be known as an Apple but just exist as it is, whatever it is. The Black

Clay has many anomalous compositions as humans continue to discover – such as new species, giant crystals underground, water on Mars and persists of its own accord with or without us. We have some influence over it and that is where the second kind of form comes in.

Architectural Sympathy: The second way to discern forms is that some have Intent or are STRUCTURED CLAY. People say certain things to influence others to think certain things. People frame situations in various light to achieve an agenda whether it be telling a white lie, confessing to being abducted by aliens, or blaming someone for eating the last piece of cheesecake. We do certain things, perform given actions to achieve some result or reaction. We place our will into things as if animating a Golem or automaton, robot even, to do what we want them to do. But in many cases, perhaps almost all, imbuing Intent is rarely a Singular intent but a chaotic collaboration of Collective Will. It is often characterised by consensus agreement where additions and alterations occur to meet various standards, whether they be approval of superiors, fashion of the times, political or religious pressure, technology and materials available, skill and training of executors, cultural aesthetics and difficulties and challenges imposed by other forms and forces.

The architect(s) of the United States Capitol for instance wanted the building to reflect the function that was to be performed within it but lacked the imagination and artistic skill to accurately execute this task single-handed. Only through intense collaboration (and slave labour) was it achieved, and a mishmash of individual ideas and skills required to birth what no single individual actually wanted or could have achieved on their own. Another way to talk about form being imbued with Intent is through its Symbolic Gesture. For instance, when we take a brief look at some of the ways in which certain features were laid out in the Capitol we become aware of the Purposefulness and Intent with which it took on the shape it did to cause certain connections, experiences and responses to occur by those who used or visited it: Under the Rotunda there is an area known as the Crypt. It was designed to look down on the final resting place of George Washington in the tomb below. A star inlaid in the floor marks the point at which Washington, D.C. is divided into its four quadrants; however, the exact centre of the city lies near the White House.

A steep, metal staircase, totalling 365 steps, leads from the basement to an outdoor walkway on top of the Capitol's dome. The number of steps represents each day of the year. The Sympathy of architecture symbolically represents a holistic category of its subject matters respective features and ethos (in this case all of the key factors of the history, purpose and power of Congress); it reflects important numbers, dates and events, and places emphasis on various factors such as achievements, scope, purpose through sympathetic symbolism by matching the geometry of its material and shape to reflect concepts and ideas. How many visitors could know this unless told? Would you feel or notice such Intent in architecture – perhaps wonder why there were so many pillars, or equate the star on the floor with the greater concept of the quadrants – or would you feel merely displaced by the unusual design? How conscious we are of these inlaid secret meanings architects have imbued the forms with is an exceptionally interesting subject;- marketing, packaging, advertising, are some of the most powerful human forces there are for controlling choice, technology, public awareness, interpretative shell, consensus holding and second perhaps only to violence as a force of coercion.

It is doubtful that anything can ever be designed by one architect since they are rarely allowed free-reign and must consult with others whom have contracted them to build something to achieve a specific purpose – and to achieve such things requires many hands and many minds all of whom influence or want to influence the final design;- as well as natural or imposed limitations that prevent, cause change, or force alteration to a design;- the architect themselves must draw on what has been created before by similar principles of collectivism.

Nyw Wyrms: As a unified collective, Forms may be said to be composed of a substance that is capable of taking any shape, material or concept. Rather it is those elements identified in the periodic table of which they are chiefly composed and the dizzying interactions they perform when exposed to one another (Fusion), in isolation overtime (Decay) etc. On a molecular level these interactions are of great fascination as they surely occupy a grand seat in the operations that forms perform that the human eye cannot naturally see or only see with special equipment. As you read this article, or receive any new stimulus or information you are assessing it. If you are actively learning from the information you may mentally begin to adjust your understanding of the subject matter by dismantling existing notions to be replaced with updated or improved ones. This may involve trimming an unwanted fact or myth from your knowledge about the subject matter and re-forming a new idea or set of ideas about it. When you are in the mental process of breaking the existing form down and replacing it – this is Nyw Wyrms. The analogy being that new ideas worm their way into your existing schemata of the subject matter causing a geometric realignment and new shape to be created. This is not to say that your concept of 'Prawn Farming' is round or triangular but that the set and sub-sets of your knowledge of prawn farming have specific inclusions that are relevant and exclusions that are irrelevant lending a certain 'shape' to your ideas as a key fits to a lock. The more you know about Prawn Farming, the more intricate the key and more demanding the lock. Nyw Wyrms (New Worms) has an odd spelling like other terms used because they are meta-concepts;- it is only an analogy that something swims around or burrows like a worm into something else and causes it to decay or become something else;- an artistic metaphor.

This convenient inaccuracy has been acceptable from our platform of working within the occult and will always be a temptation where knowledge peters off into darkness of the unknown - but it is not acceptable working from a platform of psycho-social studies. If we put a frozen pizza in the microwave we can heat it. If we put it in for an hour we can reduce it to black carbon. If our ideas are tested we may alter them. If our ideas are put under great pressure and stress we may completely transform them or have them transformed for us. The analogy suggests that there is a common invisible creature in the trillions that acts as a building block for the composition of forms;- in the case of Black Clay this is the chemical make-up of various forms of matter. In the case of mental ideas an infestation of creatures into the core of an idea that multiply with one another and the old idea, kill off or force to leave Oldyr Wyrms (Older Worms) and cause the original form to change into some other new form.

Worms are appropriate because they burrow into the ground, can be cut in half and still live, have many individual segments and work together as a whole. They digest nutrients from the dirt and expel waste. They leave castings. We often feel that something new has gotten into our brains when we are excited by a new idea. We can think about the advantage of accepting the new idea in parts or whole whilst still retaining the existing view we have of its subject matter. Our thoughts are impossibly complex when broken down into segments, but we must break them down into segments to make use of their full potential and attain subtlety and complex variations. We take what we think is useful and discard the rest. But we always retain echoes and memories of previous ideas even if only as a comparison of a new ideas superiority, similar to old castings or skins – and may even revert back to using these old castings or skins as part of or a whole whenever there is call for it or we psychologically regress.

Applied Vertice: The points of description used to define or pull an object out of quantum/space. “Red”, “Round”, “Ball”, “Mine”,”Here”, etc. Micro-Vertice: The esoteric belief that each applied vertice consists of smaller units indicated as thus:R.E.D.RO.U.N.D.B.A.L.L.M.I.N.E.T.H.E.R.E–that each letter or sound has its own particular secret geometry that causes it to be combined with another letter but not others. Why for instance do we refer to ourselves as I and not J or Z?

Surbit: Infinity is lazy. Contraction of surplus and unit or bit. Replaces unprovable concept of 'infinity' with a finite amount but one with a surplus of units that is undefined but not endless. i.e. a surbit of stars. Surbition: to deny the concept of infinity and use finite if uncounted units in one’s terms. Infinity – unprovable, and no examples exist. A common example given of infinity is being unable to write down the largest number because you can always add one. In theory you can. In practice, you can't. The theory of infinity is confused with the existence of infinity. □ere is nothing infinite. Even if a person lived their whole life writing down a number and adding one, eventually they die. Even if they passed the tradition on to the next person, they too eventually die. The tradition of this might go on a few more generations but it has to stop because other forces prevent the practice. We can say what if other forces did not prevent the practice, but then enter back into theory, because other forces DO prevent the practice and thus no example of infinity can be given. No proof supplied.

Let us consider a tradition that has been in longer existence, the culture of China. Some 5,000 years. If we represented each year by a jellybean, it would be enough to fill a large paint can twice. Christianity would fill it once. Is this infinity? What about the stars or the grains of sand – are these infinite? No. So why do we refer to them as infinite? Because we cannot count them. (more...). The universe does therefore possess objectivity because it does not have infinity. Nothing goes on forever because we have no concept of forever, either. We use it like we do, but we don't. Forever relating to a human lifetime of 70 years, at best. The task of the Temple of THEM over the next five years will be to learn share and analyse existing theories of neurology, physics, and noetics to sharpen the detail on what are as yet fuzzy approximations relating to the neural processes that contribute to form. Without foreknowledge of what has been explored and which processes share similarity with concepts put forward by THEM we cannot know if we have double up and given a new name to an already existing form that may be better explained by specialists. As time progresses we will update relevant sections.

DIRECTIVES: AN INITIATE'S REFLECTIONS

THEM Directives Analysis: An initiate's reflection and rationalisation on the value and future outcome possible through implementation of the Directives.

As a very short introduction, as precursor to my views or interpretations on a select few THEM Directives chosen; I must say that being initiated in THEM proved to be time consuming but valuable. I was hinted to pay close attention to the layout of the site, and it's content. Upon slowly saving the website word press, page after page; before the downgrade in October 2014, I stumbled upon hidden knowledge. My opinion generally is that Left Hand Path occultist, such as myself and many readers of OTO Anorha, crave sinister knowledge, hidden phrases, symbols or actions that may give higher levels of consciousness as well as connectivity with powerful dark entities; or visualise being able to do so. Why do I buy occult magazines? As well as expensive Black Magic Occult books or Grimoires? Why do I buy certain key ritual items in order to have a greater connection with the dark recesses of my mind? I always had a lust for learning and reading sinister books or writings, tales and legends. It is understood that occult knowledge is earned not handed freely.

Upon taking generous time at a later date, the content of the Directives gave me new goals and objectives with a renewed oriented mindset towards the sinister dialectic. The following monologue is a personal review of my selected favourites, out of the 55 THEM known Directives; accompanied with my commentary on their value for myself or each individual reading this, who is part of the active satanic/sinister community.

Directive A-49

Stoke a fire with enough fuel and it will burn indefinitely. Even, out of control.

The fire is a symbol of power, a regenerating destroying force. Prometheus as we are told, in tales of old, gave it to humans to harvest in exchange for his freedom. I must take this in consideration and make sinister use of it, to incinerate and re-create such as a Phoenix. No matter where you are, and what you have to your disposal, if push comes to shove we all posses or have the ability to harvest our inner fire. This energy within, this inner flame, as seen throughout history, can cause humans with determination to overcome seemly insurmountable odds. We have seen this in modern times with guerilla groups, bands of mercenaries or rebels in any geographical area overrunning with violence and murder the system that rules them.

As any true woodsman knows, a fire is always hottest when kept steadily active for an extended period of time. You do not have to overload wood in a furnace, or pit, to keep a high steady degree of heat; much like constant pressure from a small band of armed revolutionaries. I strongly believe Directive 49 to be something for anyone like-minded to believe in; but only the true will adhere to it, because heat never comes without a price. This concept applies to all humans, this causal force of nature called fire. That no matter what, Fire kills any living thing, flesh and skin disintegrate as well as bones char. Fire can make a very good blockade or create a time lapse for a much needed diversion. Be creative, Fire will protect your back and vanquish thou enemies, but do not keep your guard down or act foolishly, for you shall suffer its burn.

Much like fire that rises steadily, think about being pushed in the corner, where there is no chance for flight but only to fight. The sinister flame will emerge out of me, gushing up burning my being. This flame, powering this iron will to live, no matter what the odds. Instinct for survival fuels this flame, total opposition overcoming by extreme force. Not purely animal, however this animalistic aspect of fight or die, fuels what one could call, Lycanthropy. It's in between the sane and insane yet a sinister force above the Ethereal and the infernal. Roast your enemies alive with hells fire by Molotov cocktails, steady street vigilance will always win.

Directive A-45

Remember the force of Progress. Every smooth transition from one social event to the next, every flawless transaction of industry and economics, every unfailing schedule on time, every box ticked, ‘i’ dotted, is oiling the Machine. Kill the Machine.

This is a very real and necessary directive, although not totally complete. Industrial and Commercial progress in any society or nation is what the banks and the machine feeds on. This is an evolving systematic ZOG oriented machine feeding on the people's lives through their long hours of labour. Like the above mentioned anything helping advancing the corporate, private or public sphere, in any nation, is part of the problem and funding the machine. We have been conditioned from childhood to follow the system, to help the government, to assist the authorities, to do community work, to pay our taxes, to give tithes to the church, to assist the less fortunate, to pity the weak third world scum... As soon as an individual awakens the black flame inside himself, his sinister force gushes out of him. He may begin systematically find flaws which in turn will directly damage the machine gradually bit by bit. Politics and the Economy are the grease and oil of the machine's motor, throw fire to burn it down by consciously creating obstacles. The machine and it's operators do not for-see the powerful effect of a dedicated and conditioned group of rebels with a sinister agenda. For many of us this mentality, of naturally helping the sinister dialectic, comes with our life style. Many support the machine without seeing the long term effect of aiding the hubriati's unchallenged authority. Do not only kill the machine, Disassemble it entirely forever.

Directive A-42

Remember the force of Sorcery. Magic is not dead, merely wounded. The world around us is a neutrality splitting at the seams with weapons that pulse with violent rage, to be used either by or against whoever is first and last to use them. Identify and draw from those violent pulsing places and spaces that emanate with it.

I remind myself that there has always been sorcery in humankind's history. Tales and Myths of unseen unknown powers deriving of unknown acausal openings on our planet, or strange visitors at isolated locations. This acausal energy flowing through mankind, through physical portals, is taking causal shape and form. From pre-historic drawings in caves, hieroglyphs in pyramids, statues and symbols across all languages and cultures, the world is filled with fragments of sorcery for us to connect to as well as use.

I sit and thank the Dark Gods, for their mercy in allowing me to be saved by sinister insight, and true Magic. I remember that during the early period of history was only understood by a select few, an inner circle of academics and philosophers. Sadly, much like today, real magic practiced by authentic people is very rare, wounding the progression of the esoteric arts. As described in this Directive our world is full of violence, rage, hatred and malice. I, as we all, must focus on the sinister dark energies channelling through causal space and time. The pulsating places or things that emanate sinister acausal energy, I must greedily drink myself into oblivion with these energies for whatever uses they may have through the use of my mind and my human body. A crypt, An old Cemetery, an abandoned house, a murder or violent crime scene, old battle sites, old grave sites, even a deep glade far into the forest; all these examples and many more, have the potential to be a Nexion spot for acausal energy to seep in our world. These places give inspiration and power.

We can put ourselves in the situation of people who have suffered before us. I shall connect with their everlasting presence by feeding on past forged memories as well as emotions.

Directive A-40

Remember the force of Absurdity. It is the true face of things when the skin is ripped off. Life can be long enough for friends and enemies to trade places repeatedly. Do not take anything too seriously. When the Wheel spins fast enough and the fragile sticks propping up forms collapse: It is all revealed as Madness.

Absurdity sometimes makes the most sense, some may say. Some of the craziest ideas in history, such as bank heist , drug cartel operations, military invasions, tactical operations were all successfully processed by unrealistic absurd means. Speaking for myself, I was conditioned most of my life to adhere to the Judaeo-Christian dogma and all its zealous goals. I was placed a mask of fear and oppression that kept me scarred and obeying the Demiurge. With time and hours of research, combined with personal sacrifice, I came to my own conclusions; that the sinister Left Hand Path which was misunderstood and condemned for centuries was absurdly truthful and enlightening.

I have experienced much in my life time, living a life of organised crime for a period of 4 years, and serving jail time because of it. This absurdity set me free and fuelled me to be an extremist and risk taker for the rest of my existence. Although I have suffered because of some bad choices, especially greed, every action we have will give out a specific reaction in return.

This in my opinion is sinister insight and should never be discarded as a mistake or waste of life. MY insight role gave me a reputation and experiences to cultivate and deepen my inner self. That there is a certain unpredictability to everything we do, and certain forces working behind us motivating and energising us. The mask or face of human reality are representations of the ways the machine and system plays games with all of us, by brainwashing or controlling the legal options we all have. Criminal Records and Background checks, determine who you are and what you can become. I will always be looked at as a criminal, however I can now live absurdity to the fullest. Absurdity is our way forward, breaking the roles played by mundane men covering truth with lies, deceit and secrets; such are games of the weak, real men wear their deeds proudly.

Living the life I chose, with the LHP as my guiding torch, I see that many of so called friends and family left me behind for fear of having the same label as I. I am reviled and criticised as most of us know, loosing people I believed to be kindred and fellow brethren who have vanished. I have seen good friends rob me, loyal friends snitch on me, fellow comrades take advantage of my trust and respect, and so I stand alone with THEM.

For this reason I trust no one, and I take nothing too seriously. In prison we had a saying, believe nothing of what you hear and only believe half of what you see. I have seen rich men fall poor within few years, good looking women fall to desolation and addiction, loyal people turn traitor and selling out everyone they knew. The moral of this Directive is that behind all these forms and abstractions of humanity, all this money and materialistic sewer faeces, there are ugly truths to be discovered through the mounds of manure. As much as people try to make themselves seem living rich and happy, all of it can be torn away by black skies with ski mask, or raped out of their grasp. Anyone at anytime can ruin the life of a much deserving asshole. I have learned however that you must only do absurd acts when desperate needy times arise, and you are willing to pay the price of serving time.

Directive A-39

Remember the force of Mortality. Do not take life for granted. Move swiftly and with determination toward your goals. Stalk Death and watch for it wherever you go. It will be stalking you too.

Personally I actually really like this Directive its short and mind shattering. We all have friends and family who pass away before us, but as we remember from the 6th satanic statement in the manual Black Book Of Satan : 'Never love anything so much that you cannot see it die.' Mortality affects everyone at any given point, and no one can accurately predict the death of a mortal being. It's very important not to take life for granted, because Lord Muerte does usually lurk around and get aiming at all those uncaring or careful of the health they are given. Smoking, Drug use, Alcohol, Raw Sex all contribute to the destruction of our body, I must, as we all, should only dabble minimally in such vices to a controlled degree; or see yourself wither away like an old mushroom picked out of its roots.

Speaking exclusively of the Left Hand path, due to the immensity of the knowledge available, I must move swiftly and vigilance toward our goals or pass up the information that can free us of all doubts or fears. Health as well as fitness deteriorates quickly upon getting older, I must not falter and fail. I must flirt with death in a fatalistic zealous approach, walking the edge between life and death to understand where I stand. In some cases where I lost control, with overdose or freak accidents, and went through the abyss creeping towards Death and came back. I, as we all, must choose wisely amongst risky life choices. Everyone has a time of beginning and end, but you may help accelerate or slow down your time of departure into the crusty soil of planet earth or into the acausal realm of existence.

Directive A-38

Remember the pivotal importance of the Human Brain. Keep informed of findings, discoveries, neuroscience, correlations and experiments, cybernetics, bio-feedback and changes in collective knowledge and advancements.

For centuries the Human Brain has been probed seriously with almost every single angle possible, but even to this day some of the most important medical professionals do not fully understand the entirety of the brain. Some would argue that the 'dormant' sections are regarded as the chamber of the soul. I have seen throughout human history that civilisations through written and oral tradition, with the use of their memory, have helped preserve discoveries and findings in order to pass down through the next generations.

Humans are on the verge of finding even more about causal matter and the way it interacts with acausal energy. We are also discovering many new things from space, such as the nature of black holes and new laws of quantum physics. As sinister comrades we must all try and do our best, not only to research as much as we can, but also learn as much as we can.

In the limited amount of time I have, with the physical and mental health I have left; I must not let my brain wander in obscurity and falter in laziness, for as in the 4th Satanic point in The Black Book of Satan you must 'Enjoy a short rest, better than a long'.

Directive A-32

Remember and embrace the force of Chaos. Very little is required to cause it. Be creative.

Primeval Cosmogony, chaos, the great void of darkness, evokes transformation and diversity. When thinking realistically about its mind blowing essence and infinite characteristics, the suffocating formless anti-matter brings sinister change by presencing the dark on our planet. I sometimes may argue that it’s almost always a good thing to put yourself into a bad position by living chaotic actions and facing its aftermath. If one brings chaos, the random-less and viciousness of its nature, one takes disarray and transfers its acausal sinister energy inside their lives. I both must live joy & suffering then I can say I have truly lived. I believe it's all a equal exchange in the end. No matter what the outcomes of positive of negative feelings, emotional suffering out of all things is considered the best emotion to cause progression. Suffering is the catalyst of evolution, of change to life itself.

Anyone at any time can use chaotic actions to cause change and transformation to people or to society. Some lucky individuals will get to change history directly by ending their very own lives. Such as martyrs or terrorists, both will acquire fame through chaotic actions or the preventions of such. The life of an individual must be geared in the end to be sacrificed for the greater ‘good or evil’ of any worth cause, and thus bring everlasting change to the future generations of Drecc or like-minded sinister individuals.

Directive A-30

Remember and embrace THEM: in all their guises and masks. All Gods are better than One God.

THEM believes in the appearance and emergence of acausal dark energy through vessel humans, called Balobians or Dreccs, among many titles. Yet in the end all are one, the sinister guises and masks for example being part of the numinous. All Gods are better than One God. David Myatt in his text 'Concerning the Numinous Way' explains that sacred texts, depicting Gods or Divine being's teaching's throughout history, are nothing but abstractions or forms of philosophy limited by boundaries and restrictions. Living the Numinous way is embracing all God's as ways of understanding and living experiences, spiritual or physical.

The sinister legions will focus on acausal energy, presenced through individual actions, or group nexions, bringing forth the Dark God's presence on earth. I must make sure the Demiurge and his legions of angels see our open rebellion by my actions or deeds. I shall follow Lucifer and all fallen angels to the final battle, and give my life to the LHP and sinister dialectic or regret not having done so in my final breaths. I await Vindex.

Directive A-28

Remember and embrace the force of Form. Those wicked shapes that seize us and allow us to seize others. Study them and develop your ability with them. All forms have both obvious and ingenious uses. Forms are the key to shaping the coming Aeon.

From what I know, causal existence and its restrictions are what we understand as physical reality. With all the laws of our planet, we are stuck in this solid rigid unyielding existence. Growing up in a small community and getting in touch with criminals, I got access to a variety of hallucinogens such as LSD, Mushrooms, 2CB, Ketamine and Pcp. Throughout the past 10 years, I have broken all parts of my ego and self with the help of these temporary vivid spiritual experience enhancers. Form is everywhere, it dictates and shapes, it does not diverge from its format. Wicked shapes and forms such as sigils, symbols of evil or sinister images can most definitively get me fired up for combat or in vigilance mode. With sigils, come power. Walking in the street either with racist attire, or with a devil suit or anything anti-establishment you will cause shock and disbelief. Let progress begin by seeding chaos and letting people reap what you have sowed.

Upon using much drugs and mind altering substances I crushed forms, barriers, flushing morals and taboos away like sour milk, and I let my will take the reins forward into the deep ends of addiction and greed. I traded some sanity for some knowledge and life experiences. I then had to drop all chemicals or suffer everlasting damage to my mind and body. Taking what I have learned, I am now working sober to have full visual apparitions and astral projection of such intense magnitude that I can cry of epiphany much as a broken leg. From the flowing of acausal knowledge, causal abstractions and my seemingly meaningless existence, I use forms to scare people, to inform them, to change them, but am I missing anything? How can I cause immediate change for a long or short period of time. I Sit and Reflect, I must use forms to cause irreversible change at any cost.

Directive A-26 and A-22

26- Never let anyone see the true face of the monster inside you.

22-Remember and embrace the force of Entropy. All Things have their own life cycles and destinies. Including you. Expect nothing to last and everything to eventually leave you.

I had to add both these Directives together because they fit very well. I personally have let monsters roam freely inside my heart. I let hatred, malice, anger, vices, lust and many other powerful emotions fill my mind. I, as we all, must never let the monster free fully, or risk the unleashing of a force we cannot hold back. As a Dam holding back river waters, I to hold back sinister ideas and thoughts of criminal actions by a thin barrier. The true face of the monster inside me will cause me to go back to Jail or take away life. Only through selective outburst of might, can one keep control of his sanity and freedom.

Following this the force of entropy is not only a reality but an inevitable end for all. Much like nature and its seasons, we also have cycles. Some believe that you can reincarnate after death, and that gives them a false sense of security. I am not that positive, quite the contrary; I personally believe my life is a one shot deal, you make the destiny you forged. We have give or take 50 years to do everything we have to accomplish before dying randomly or selectively at Senor La Muerte's hands. The very last line of Directive 22 gives deep insight into life's harsh causal reality. Everything can be taken from you and don't expect anything from anyone or any help to come. I spent my whole county jail sentence with this solid quotation: 'Hope for the best but expect the worse'

In conclusion this experience of spending many hours in front of a blank page has gave me much to consider. It is one thing to say you can write an informative articulate essay, but it is quite another to pull through with the effort and dedication of a work you can be proud of. The Directives were a hidden gem in the THEM word press, that many have overlooked or not taken the time to read much less to ponder upon. There is much more to be said on each of the selected Directives I have chosen. We must all use this insightful knowledge, in order to advance the sinister dialectic. We all have a ticking clock, and will all must die. Some will have a say on their death, while others will not. I believe that my life is geared towards the greater cause, and that regardless if my life ends before its time; I will be proud of the accomplishments I have done. I have much to learn yet, but I thank the few who have helped me surmount obstacles to a new sphere of intellectual sinister existence

THE LIMITS OF THE TEMPLE OF THEM

Even today, many fear to approach or acknowledge the vast contributions to the modern Sinister and Satanic Tradition since 1998, dutifully made by the Temple of THEM. What is focused on are the pangs of youth as part of RA's tumultuous wyrd and mercurial Capricorn disposition, charted and reflected on over decades, and the framing by the Department of Defense as various o9a spokespersons characterising in childish fashion the ambitions/mistakes/enthusiasm/fanaticism as a young man as a pretend.

I have acknowledge on numerous occasions my belief that I was destined and intended by nature to be a serial killer. I have notably enhanced the history of the ONA as both a muse and a challenger to their invisible hand, pushing the Sinister into endless new territories whilst still maintain respect and relevance to the ONA proper through the only dedicated research facility created to illuminate the historical claims of the Order. I have stood against the policy of child predation, wherein my observations that ONA and AL were in danger of creating precisely what eventuated with the ToB, were to the effect calling AL a pedophile-enabler, which resulted in deep enmity between THEM and the ONA, culminating in its Sutter-driven strategy to cull those resistant to deep state directives through its self-confessed long night of the knives in order to enhance the o9a's honeypot by jettisoning those with common sense or restraint. Despite the resulting character assassination and the glory of being so important to the o9a as a bad example, I have survived all this to be the premier representation of modern satanism following the departure of Anton Long.

There is no greater comprehensive study of the ONA than Mvimaedivm Red, which illuminates more about the ONA than any forum anywhere in the last 50 years. It's value lies in eschewing the sensationalism that characterises academic and media reports on the Order of Nine Angles which are superficially researched, and designed to discredit the magickal contribution it has offered since its inception, and to which, through sickness or health, love and hate, I have endured to support, represent and expand - whatever others think of me.

The prominent discourses dedicated to ONA/o9a henceforth (OXA) are academic-media biases which cannot do other than frame it in the terms of adversarial, as an enemy to the state guilty of such wicked deviances as promoting National Socialism, Far-Right Violence, Denying the Holocaust, Human Culling, Terrorism, or my favourite of their nonsense, 'Accelerationism'. Besides the writings of the few such as VK Jehennum, Chloe Ortega, L316, and smatterings here and there over the decades, little attention has been given outside of ONA to its esoteric value, or the reward in its practices.

Quite why, THEM, often viewed and judged solely on what is perceived from its outward manifestations and forms, which do not necessarily represent internal directives or views, is regarded as pretending to be a representative of the Sinister remains mysterious.

The only practice we condemn is child predation. We are not adverse to terrorism, denying the holocaust, national socialism (my infamous moniker is Ryan Anschauung - short for Aryan Weltanschauung), violence, sedition, subversion. Rape, while a long-term long-time tactic in war and repopulating areas with invading persons through force, is not at all tasteful to us because we believe Misogyny to be the greatest heresy in existence today that plagues and divides Mankind. The hatred of women is a weaponised form of division that often gestates time-consuming and fruitless battles that far from harmless, occupies many individuals thoughts, philosophies and waking moments. But women are not the enemy and they never have been, human beings are as glass alchemical vessels, filled with content they choose but more often than not content that is chosen for them. This, paradigm, in which we find ourselves known as Modernity, modern times, is just a manifestation of powerful willpower that makes it seem impossibly real. But its all illusions of time, and we, as Satanists must follow Satri Devi and be above Time - Lords of Lightning, not controlled by reigning discourses as if they were inevitable, but seeing them as frameworks and fences placed around us to present the world in a certain way as if it was always leading to that. We are human beings, each of us has tremendous power if we can only take it back and fight against the paralysing matrix presented to us through saturation. We are human beings, unique stars born once and capable of choosing our own lords and ladies according to our own criterion. Capable of rejecting the illusions and lies that dominate. Women have taught me everything I know - and so, if you value what I write about, what I have to say, know that much of it was shaped by my experiences with the female of our species. Rape then, is distasteful for us, for we believe in the grand allure of the romantics, in the Chase to find Her, and court, and win her affection, and her body and mind, willingly. Such is the foundation for exceptional and authentic Grand Work, of the essence of Magick on which Empires are built.

Child Predation and Rape. Are two of the many projected things by the modern claimants of the Sinister that THEM reject. So does this short list make us Magian? When those two things are the backbone of Magian practices? I don't think it does. And should you have the nous, travel to Mvimaedivm Red and read what is written there, for it reveals far more than any Sinister Adherent ever has, even correcting unnoticed errors such as the origin of the Chant to Return Atazoth, while others sing it in glee in ignorance that what they sing is not the correct chant. And take a look at Star Games, almost all of which examples use a 90 degree board arrangement, because they fail to understand the boards make a perfect Septagon top-down when arranged correctly at 53 degrees. Or observe how many star games use cubes and imitate RA's 3 cubes with trim because they did not think for themselves or find another way to solve the dilemmas raised by the Star Game's instructions - including its fatal flaws also detailed in Mvimaedivm Red. Or go understand WHY the ONA use a crystal tetrahedron by reading the research by THEM on Copula Cum Demone which no other adherent has publicly bothered to explore despite it unfolding the entire premise of the Sinister Tradition, enshrined in the imagery of CB's Tarot. No-one has ever identified the exact spot from which CB understood his painting of Mt Snowdon, or even identified that the cards feature landmarks in Wales for the purposes of integrating Blood & Soil to elevate Wales magickally, aeonically. We are copied and imitated and mimicked often without acknowledgment, without thanks, without reference to our contributions.

But without the Temple of THEM, the ONA would have been a boring even extinct entity - we keep it alive, enhance it, further it, archive it, preserve it, despite the vicious whippings received for the service. We even now, guide it from the shadows and anchor it back to its place of rightful magickal challenger to the modern era, protecting it, teaching with it, and providing sustenance and material for it to re-arise as a phoenix after its long and disturbing dark night of the soul. From the shadows we move pieces with gravity, quiet about all that we do and relatively humble about all that we have done.

But it's time the Sinisterion stop pretending Ryan Anschauung was anything but an ally, looking out for the ONA when it lost its way, keeping alive the tradition and focus on its esoteric elements for decades regardless of what was said about him. That, is duty, that, is honour, that is service. Few have the strength not to turn their back on their Master when it begins to whip them for disagreeing, challenging, arguing, rebelling. But I'm a Satanist, and if you don't appreciate what I am, what I do, what I have done, what I have pulled together from nothing and the tens of thousands of individuals I have tutored, mentored, guided passing on the Sinister Tradition and ensuring it lives, thrives, surpasses in my lifetime and well after it, well, fuck you. Fuck you, because you let the Department of Defense manipulate and control you into thinking I'm the problem, I'm the bad example, I'm the pretender. Because if you look at what I've done, produced, been behind, promoted, preserved, achieved, enshrined, evolved - it's impressive. And, I'm just One of THEM.

So, go educate yourselves on what exists external to what the Tradition writes and shares. See what 26 years of study revealed with thousands of very diverse and interesting connections and contacts through 2 decades of Sinister/Satanic journey. Explore what demonic focus has provided on every possible angle of the ONA from the perspective and lifetime study and practice of a modern-day Satanist, that appears nowhere else by any individual or group. Instead of wasting your time arguing over ONA/o9a, reliving past glories, posting anti-semetic memes; go do something useful. Make yourself worthy, be useful, add value to the Tradition, engage in meaningful discussion, build a star game that doesn't copy mine, create a new tarot to help others withdraw projections or that uses new non Roman-catholic archetypes and images to increase their self awareness, meet and influence others with no knowledge of the Sinister Tradition, seed it offline through the creation of workshops, artifacts, songs, markings, actions. Include the numinous in your agency, show the world how sublime and beautiful the Sinister can be, not just formidable and excruciatingly dark. Form nexions online/offline, evolve others, educate them, love them into better beings who understand this struggle to be Above Time is served by real-world actions. Create your own 'Mvimaedivm' and share your experiences and insights, successes and failures throughout your journey as I have done. Download, archives and store offline archives of our work, print it into books that you make accessible at your home, so others can chance across physical portals to the Sinister life. Change people's views and alert them to the distortion of the Magi and its agents that dominate this world and present a false reality, be something, anything other than that bystander that does nothing and blames me for weakening the Sinister Tradition. Is too scared to talk with me, aid me, aid THEM, promote THEM, acknowledge THEM. Because I guarantee, in a list of what I've done for the Tradition and what you've done, you're going to lose - and you don't even know the half of my efforts, much of which have always been silent and dark and respectful in understanding of how Change is generated.

I don't have all the answers, but I have a fuck ton more than most of you. Working in and outside of the Order at various times, with and against it. Whatever you think of me, I've lived an extraordinary life and I'm proud of the mountainous contributions I have made to what I believe to still be the ONLY magickal current worth pursuit, worth championing, that reveals the genuine threat faced of believing in your 'I' and which pathway has the genuine potential to elevate us beyond what we are, both individually and chronologically - accelerating wisdom before its natural yawning unfolding, through the genius and madness of Anton Long and his cabal of shadowy associates whose only desire in this life has been to Know, and to Go Beyond. We should not squander the great opportunity before us, prior to which the world was drugged into submission and abandoned its rebellion through such theatrical distractions as the Church of Satan or Temple of Set.

Had there been no ONA, and no RA to spread it as far and wide as possible when it was but an obscure flame in the dark on the edge of the internet, then it should have been extinguished, letting the Magi completely subsume the spark of God that burns within each of us, an acausal charge and divine right to LIVE, outside of time and space. Without the ONA we should not have the Temple of THEM whose focus undermined the illusions of the State and our present zeitgeist and altered the content to which modern day mages turned their attention - making useful, penetrating, wise choices about overthrowing the mirages before them to see what was really there. Both insides themselves through Insight Roles or Rites of Regurgitating Choronzon, challenging the depths of who they think they are, what they are capable of, breaking the single shape we are told we have to become powerful deceptive shapeshifters who can infiltrate forms undetected and turn them to our auspices to further our goals and aeonic vision. There would be no testing oneself by endangering the life through risky, dangerous, heretical practices (like making war against the ONA) or an army of fit, able-bodied, muscular, physically resilient and capable adherents inspired to improve and perfect their physis, so that their Temple to THEM might last longer than those who neglect their body and become pudgy, breathless, useless in a fight, a fuck, a war, or basic tasks including attracting the opposite sex.

Without the ONA we should be greatly poorer for our understanding of magick in general, and the magick used against us - even awareness That magick is being used against us in magico-politics such as all the forms taken for granted as society living carefully construed and constructed by leagues of secret societies over thousands of years. We would not have the respect and admiration for ancient greeks and their wisdom, highlighted and made radiant through David Myatt's poems, works, translations including of seminal texts and tracts on the Mysteries, which are the most important part of what it is to be human, The Asking of the Great Questions, at all times, not just the one in which we find ourselves born into. We would not have the wherewithal of our own volition to challenge reigning relativist absolutism with acausal theories, or make shy references to God as Theos, or have the purpose we do of marching forward into our own Wyrd, via our unique Pathei Mathos, to alchemically refine our Being through the Tree of Wyrd, to some day return to the Stars as Stars - or possess such a timeless, beautiful sense of our place within the cosmos. We would not use the word or terms Sinister or Numinous if not for those deeply affected by and parallel to the Sinister Tradition via the works of David Myatt - whose works I have dutifully archived, edited, hand-typed out to ensure there are digital copies such as his article casting doubts on the described course and particulars of the fabled holocaust that saw the world capitulate in sympathy to establish an Is Ra El. I worked carefully and with love to assemble Liber Dabih, the reigning champion of anthological works that offers to Myatt the archival attention and recognition his works deserve. I wrote out the entire 800+ page Deofel Quintet because I believed all ONA works needed to be presented to the world in the best format they could be, and it was in grave need of serious editing. Who else would have done that? All too often have individuals of note died without their due in history. I recognised the incredible Light in both the multi-pseudonymous Anton Long and David Myatt (separate entities) and from 1998 til today I have done everything in my power to make it shine as brightly as possible for our and future generations - for I truly believe the man is a tour de force of the occult world, and his legacy for the occult will take a very long time to surpass. With no other prolific extant writers researching, analysing, sharing their lifelong journey of the Sinister Tradition; in his self-selected quiet dimming, I have inherited the torch.

As an occultist, satanist, and One of THEM - I have forged my own legacy, standing always on the shoulders of giants who have with grace and patience poured their knowledge into me from various avenues over the course of decades, from the Order of Nine Angles, to The Society of Dark Lily, the Illuminates of Thanateros, The Black Order - I have been gifted many powerful connections and access to many teachers of the occult in modern times. Often times the teachings came simultaneously and were contradictory. For instance, ONA insists on the Internal Adept Rite to dissolve the ego, while my Sorceress warned that dissolving the ego was the height of disaster for a Sorcerer. I have had to choose carefully what I believe, often holding multiple paradoxical views at once in order to navigate my extraordinary education by these many Masters. I have done my best to preserve and share what they taught me though much I am sure has been lost in translation, went over my head, or was selectively forgotten. But what I did manage to save, I believe to be very valuable. And preserving and sharing the Sinister Tradition should be the absolute basic practice of anyone involved with it - especially through printing books, making archives, making underground caches and time capsule storages for those long after we depart to find and continue this War with the knowledge we gleaned more rapidly than could have been possible without the sagacity and occult insight of the Order of Nine Angles.

I have always considered myself a student, an initiate, and always just beginning my occult journey, regardless of how far I have come or appear to have come, that praise and scorn alike form a part of my gauge to measure an objective standard of Knowing. I continue to hope for and look for new Masters - but they do not come, and my knowledge must be expanded through academic resources, seeing how the Magi understand, control, narrate the world and dominate it through policy. Through accessing ancient texts to pick up the trails of Mysteries ignited by the obvious attention on them promoted by David Myatt and Anton Long that would not have enjoyed such focus by modern practitioners, and in my view still doesn't garner the absolute attention it should have. If not for them, and Richard Moult, we would still be wallowing in Aquino's nonsense, in LaVeys well-meaning but sterile practices that lack heresy or rebellion necessary to change ourselves, others and the world at large with our panoramic expansion of time, cycles, patterns, civilisations, individuals through Aeonics, and be thinking and feeling small, boxed, crushed by the successful machinations of the Magi to denude us of the Sinister, rob us of resistance, water us down into ineffectual socialites willing to accept the status quo.

The ridiculous histrionic thrown by the Establishment and its pale academic cadre about 'human sacrifice' borders on parody. Some people definitely need to die, and the world at large makes no special bones about who and when every other day. So why should we? Killing people seems effortless for some, a reflex, a pragmatic means to solve problems, an enjoyable past-time or a gut-wrenching philosophical question for others. Personally, I find the decision to do so described by the Tradition flawed, certainly desperately incomplete, for it is greatly involved to determine something as complex as character and whether someone 'deserves' to die. THEM is an adult, mature, realist of a form that recognizes death happens every day, usually to those who don't deserve it by those who do. We're not so childish or ridiculous as to pretend we don't want to kill the fuck out of people to solve our problems, or that it's anything really special either. Certainly not the imagined moral panic its made out to be by the biggest most savage killers of all, the Establishment. So we don't have a limit on that, though we don't presume to tell others how to judge who is worthy either. It can be a complex issue usually decided by emotion rather than intellect.

There will always be a need for those who are truly dangerous, violent, willing to do what others will not, break the rules, do the dirty jobs as a necessary cohort within Traditional Satanism - lest we become meek and mastered. Whether they are conscious of their violence or not. And there always will be, whether we observing/judging trying to shape the aeon with specific characteristics virtues and values, like it or not.

Nature is wild, chaotic, raw, unapologetic, destructive, cruel and some people more representative of these traits than others. We've seen countless examples rise and fall over the decades watching this wyrdful story of the ONA. I speak vainly of my self-perceived tribute to this beautiful wretched thing that has dominated my life, but remember that I am just a ghost. I never wanted to be known, I never sought fame or recognition, have shied away greatly from any spotlight. I'm not in it for money, acclaim, prestige, glory - I genuinely believe the world needs vital change and the ONA is the only form that can bring it. So, rightly or wrongly, I have done what I can to keep it strong and healthy to the best of my knowledge and skill, with more accumulated over time as my capricious raging youth subsided in a pyre of burned bridges. The Temple of THEM must also be preserved for future generations, either to springboard off in mocking what they may consider our feeble efforts (for the hardest forms make the best muse especially if one considers them fatally flawed and is the One to correct them), to take solace they weren't alone in navigating the shitstorm that is the modern worlds matrix and there's been a lot of us fighting the good fight to extricate us from the deep unconscious lives we have been living under the rule of an extraordinary enemy, perchance to recognise the value of what we managed to leave behind to hopefully accelerate their occult teaching far beyond and far earlier than any of us were ever privy to, and giving them the best chance to utterly surpass everything we did and everything we didn't do. That is the future and we must prepare it now in the present so it comes to pass accordingly, the torches transferred to the creative few who can turn Our Works, All Works into weapons in pressing forward with natures desire for Evolution.

It is curious how the intelligence community took such special interest in the ONA - that at least tells you something about its value, about its threat, and its promise. Each of which it tried to neutralise.
And that's what I feel the Order should always be while I have any say, a threat and a promise. A threat to the ludicrous paradigm of insanity that uses magico-politics (peerlessly, mind you) to manufacture just one possibility for our world and struggle to convince us through their violence vitriol or voluminosity that they are our rightful masters. A threat to conformity, the sage magic of ancient mages determined to enslave humanity and persist long after it should have collapsed under the weight of its own decay. Instead, it uses US, to prop its tired corpse and pretend WE are the problem. It uses its media authority and agency to tell stupid lies to stupid people, deflecting attention and interest away from its corrupt desiccated frame, and fabricates enemies when and where needed to continue playing its tired magico-historical game (see Abracadabra). It's not easy work convincing others of the Grand Lies, the scope and scale is truly vast and exhausting - facing thousands of years of intricate defences, protections, guards, including institutions and armies, all put in place to hold us in ours.

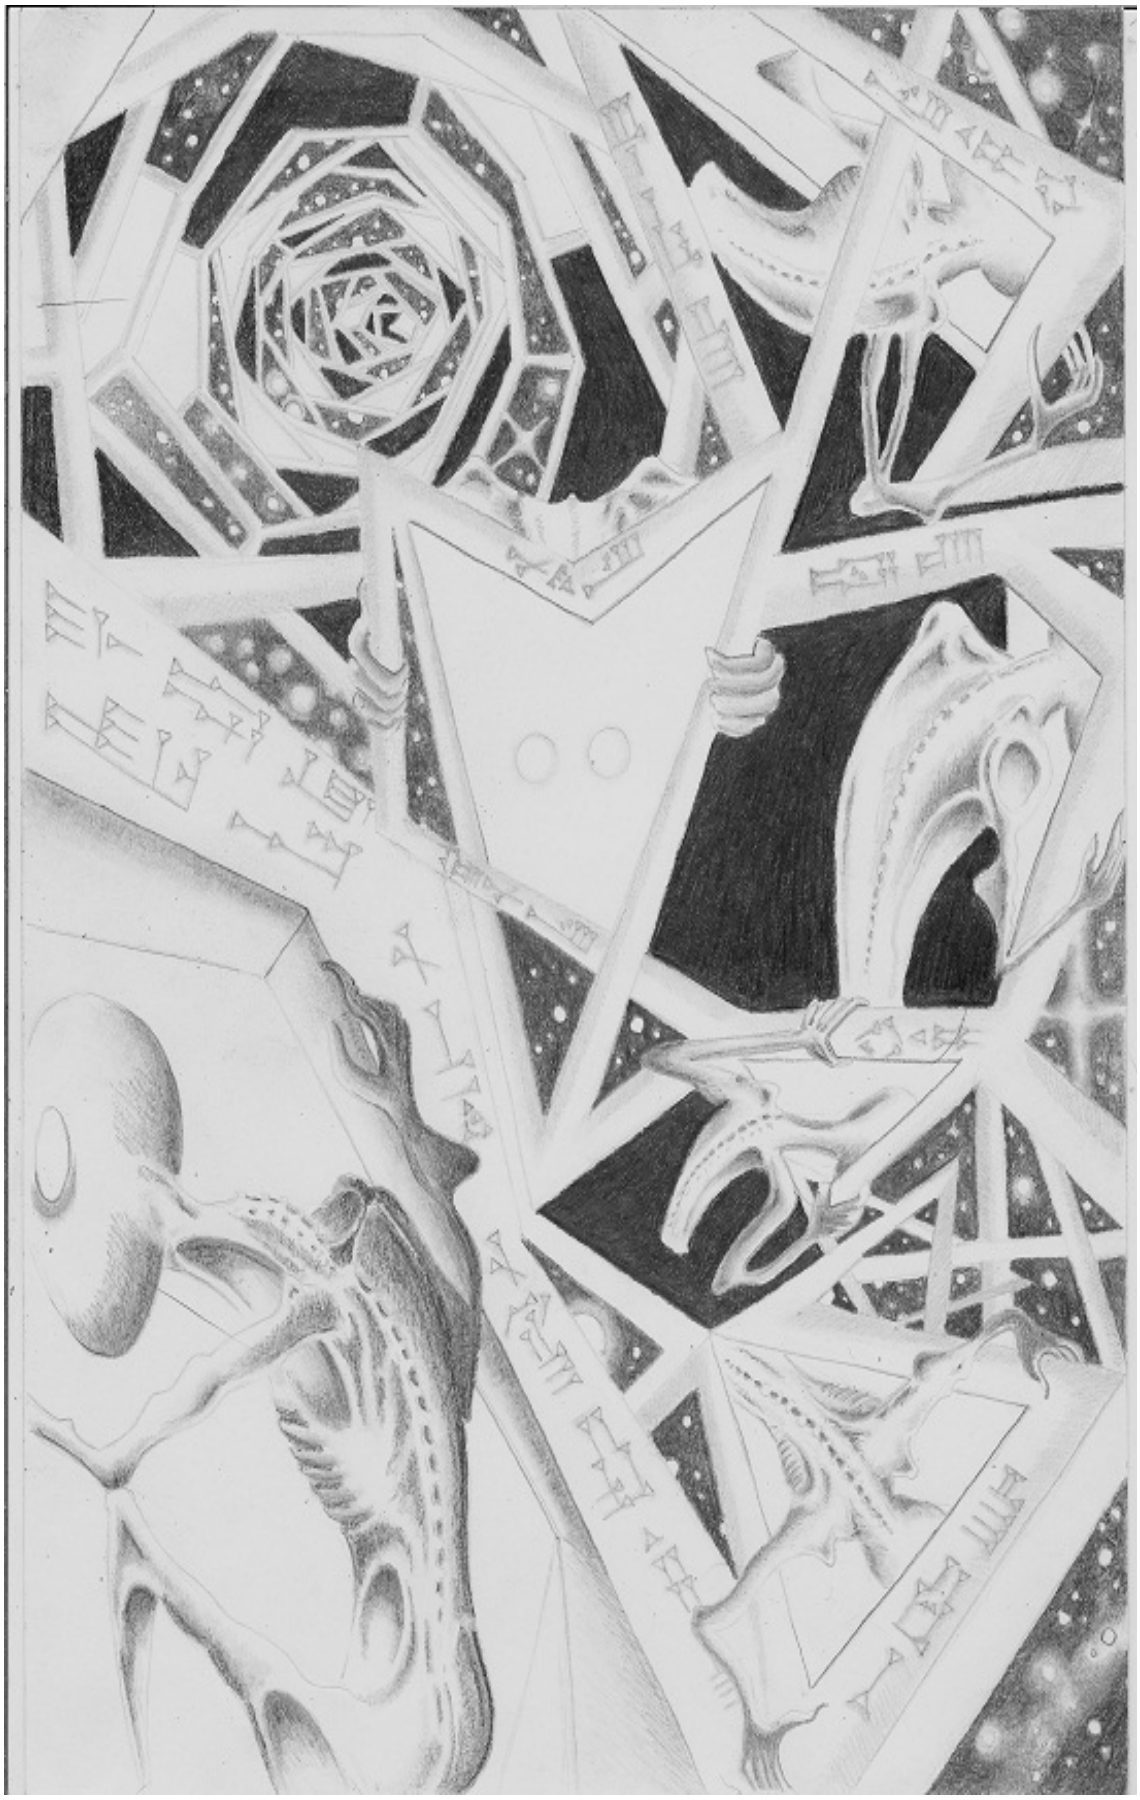
The ONA is heretical because the Establishment in this aeon is Magian. When the Establishment is not Magian, we will have succeeded in our goal, and change form accordingly. Until then, we are what they say we are, but we are also much more besides. But we will not go quietly into the night bowing our heads because we got a smack from DeepState or they tried their discrediting tactics to silence authentic opposition - and we will do everything that must be done to secure the environment necessary to promote natures whims and the acausal voice toward Higher Evolution. Because, This, is Not It.

Struggle onward then, Satanic Soldiers.

Solvet Saeclum in Favilla

VR.

The Sinister Dialogues [See Chapter 13]

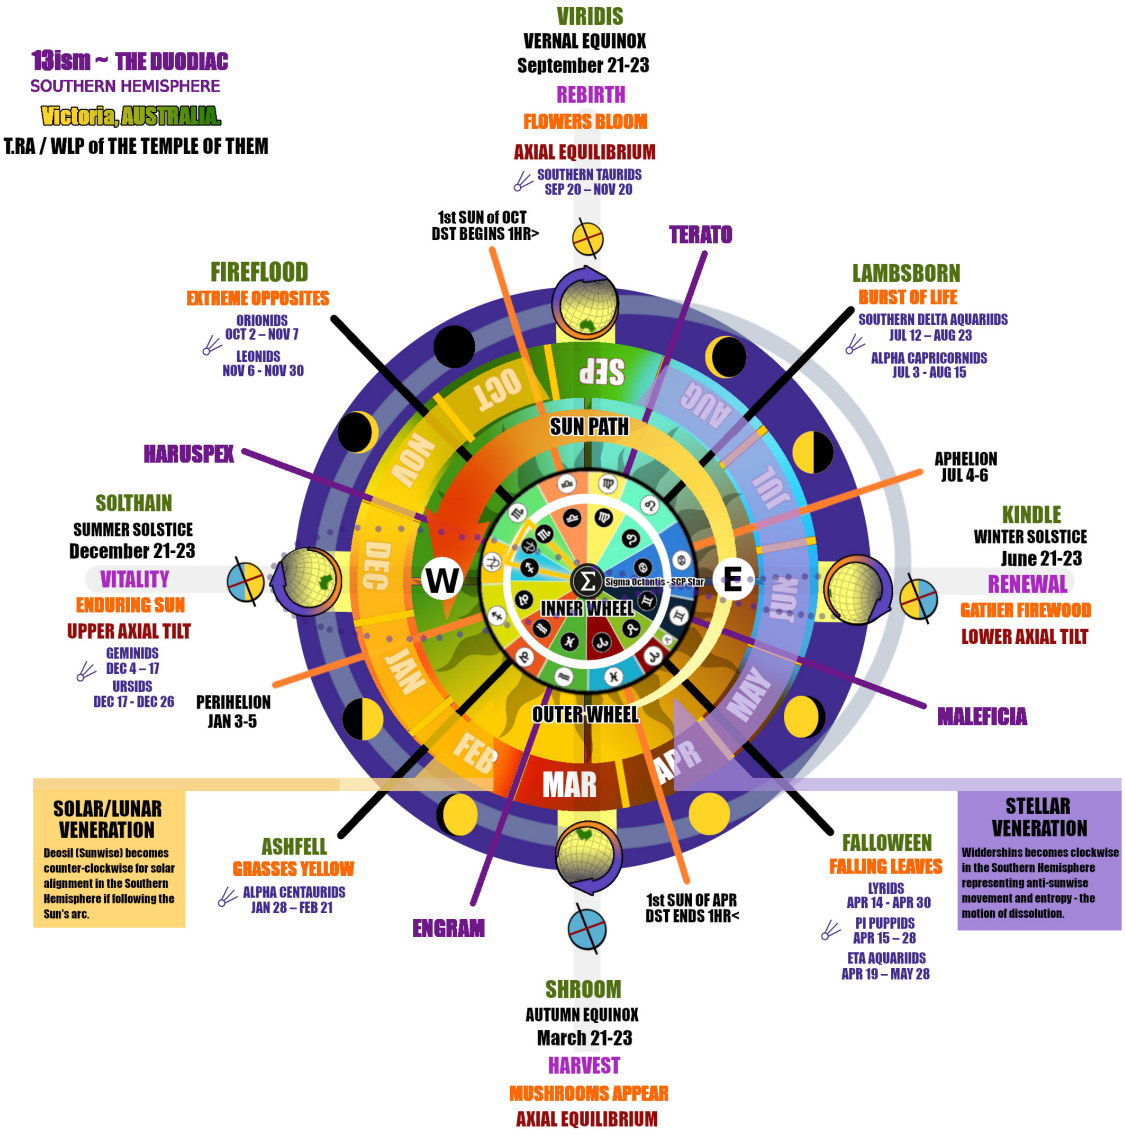


CHAPTER 5
ESOTERIC DEVELOPMENT

13-ism: The Duodiac

A New Wheel for observing Paganism and Magick in the Southern Hemisphere.

- The Temple of THEM 2025 –



The Seeds for 13ism

This reworking of astronomical and astrological markers pertinent to the Southern Hemisphere (SH) is dedicated to WLP, a gifted Sorceress who demonstrated her pagan veneration via keen observation of the solar and lunar movements – and showed me her modified diagram of the classic 'Wheel of the Year' where she had attempted to adjust the Northern Hemisphere's (NH) model to the Australian experience.

Said Sorceresses' questions regarding some curiosities observed of the sun's path and dissatisfaction with the reigning model were the catalyst for a joint investigation and subsequent reorientation of the existing Wheel oft-used for pagan practices below the equator.

Because of the Earth's axial tilt, the two hemispheres of the world experience seasons at a different times that is six months apart. In accordance with tropical (typical) astrology these dates are:

In the Northern Hemisphere:

- Aries begins at the Spring Equinox (March 21)
- Cancer at the Summer Solstice (June 21)
- Libra at the Autumn Equinox (Sept 23)
- Capricorn at the Winter Solstice (Dec 21)

In the Southern Hemisphere, these dates are flipped:

- Aries begins on Autumn Equinox (March 21)
- Cancer at the Winter Solstice (June 21)
- Libra at the Spring Equinox (Sept 23)
- Capricorn at Summer Solstice (Dec 21)

However, an assumption has been made that treats the two hemispheres as (A) identical, (B) reversible, and (C) universal.

The Classical Model (and its hidden bias) begins with Traditional astrology (Greco-Babylonian in origin) being built entirely from the northern celestial perspective. For instance, in the NH, Aries begins at the Vernal Equinox which was defined for northern spring. Signs were projected from that initial reference, so Aries indicated emergence, or Libra was associated with harvest. The Precession of the Equinoxes, being the slow westward drift of the equinoctial point was interpreted through that same seasonal lens. That means the “Ages” (Pisces moving into Aquarius, for example) are northern narratives by default. The southern hemisphere was never encoded into the symbolic system - it was simply mirrored or ignored.

Rather than celebrate our proper seasonal harvest times the NH equivalent is superimposed over us so that we end up celebrating seasonal changes at the same time as the North, with Northern celebrations, names and timing that do not reflect our experience here in Australia (let alone the Southern Hemisphere).

After research and experiment I came to understand that inverting the NH model for the SH didn't work, and there was no separate SH equivalent.

Because the Temple of THEM (THEM) ascribe to a Western Magickal Heritage (WMH) it was important to us to develop a replacement model that represents our WMH-SH experience, without resorting to the magickal/seasonal frameworks of non-western or indigenous cultures so as to retain the essential paradigm of western occultism particular to our history, understanding, appreciation and application of magick. There was then, a pressing need to identify the key issues that have left us bereft of a working system, and chief among those issues is that the fundamental system of both Astronomy and Astrology are NH inventions.

- Astronomy is science based on physical positions, movements, and laws of the universe.
- Astrology is a symbolic system that maps meaning onto celestial patterns, originally for timekeeping and personal guidance.

Both systems were developed in the NH, primarily around Babylon, Greece, and India, and later refined through Islamic and European scholarship. As a result they were designed for the NH long before the SH was even considered to exist, well before the NH even considered itself a hemisphere, and the assumptions baked into these conceptual localised frameworks have long been applied as universal to the world, including the SH. Long enough to become immovable axioms of convention and convenience that few dared to shift despite the schizophrenia they generate when you add another hemisphere to the equation. Moreover, both systems have been historically and even now considered to be incompatible with each other.

Meanwhile, another NH invention, 'The Wheel of the Year' which recognises the Equinox and Solstice and four other festivals dividing its circle into eight sabbats also originates from Celtic and Northern European traditions, and is also deeply tied to the seasonal cycle of the NH yet used extensively in the SH.

It should be readily apparent to anyone trying to adapt these imports to the SH, that the SH is entirely different to the NH and not just because it's seasons are six months apart and we enjoy summer while the North has winter. We have different visible stars, our own perspective of the path of the sun and moon, see waxing and waning of the moon differently, and observe unique seasonal experiences such as fierce fires and floods or native trees that do not drop their leaves.

Unfortunately, Northern Astrology has dominated the SH and is a system that makes no sense applied here - with additional struggles for meaningfulness in its own right which will be discussed further in.

Forgetting for a moment that 'pagans' and 'paganism' is a pejorative term applied by the Christian Faith in antiquity - this means SH Paganism is disconnected to the real-world experience of seasons in Australia (with which country this document is primarily concerned) and follows a classical NH model or its six-month inversion - which is the equivalent of forcing a square peg into a round hole that divorces half the planet from an authentic magickal connection. This is, we feel, a needless tragedy similar to blindly following a religion via faith rather than through pairing observation and understanding with what is being venerated and why - but, it is fixable.

For THEM a critical element of Paganism is a wordless knowing that we come from the stars, and value placed on having gratitude and respect and an ability to recognise and flow with the changes of the land that affect and influence our organism and human endeavours. For us, paganism is a human connection with the land where both human and land are viewed as extensions of an identical source of nature and its changes. Given that THEM is an Australian Magickal Order, to honour what we observe in the stars and in the land an organic representation of the elements is required that reflects our SH experience so we felt it necessary to either remedy this significant gap in Australian paganism - or at least begin re-raising and addressing the issue. The purpose of this reworking is straightforward and derives from a simple premise. Namely, if we are to work sympathetic magic to explore - or acknowledge - the influence of the celestial spheres, stars and other wonders of the world either in the changes observed in nature via our unique seasonal alchemy or applicable to personal psychology (expanded by Carl Jung), then surely, we must flow with these forms and forces in a proper attunement as they occur.

We have subsequently devised a New Wheel called the Duodiac - a hybrid system that balances symbolic harmony with astronomical truth fusing Tropical (typical) Astrology (shown on an Inner Wheel), with Sidereal (Vedic) Astronomy (shown on an Outer Wheel) like a watch with two faces. We have also developed Thirteenism (13ism) an approach to Astrology-Astronomy (Astrae) which re-includes the 13th constellation of Ophiuchus without disrupting the traditional 12 house system of the Zodiac and allowing others to import tropical astrology effortlessly.

We have replaced the NH celebrations with our own event names and times to reflect our real-world experience and needs here in Australia, have assessed the Sun's path for us requires a reversal of NH deosil and widdershins, have included other important astronomical features including the lunar houses, daylight savings times, the analemma, perihelion/aphelion, annual meteor showers (given that Victoria is fortunate to have a dark sky experience) and have revised how seasons are visually represented. To signify 13isms wheel as a Southern Hemisphere device, it features an icon for Sigma Octantis, the Southern Celestial Polestar, at its heart. The top of the diagram as it appears on screen or paper should not be interpreted as ‘North’, nor assumed to be aligned with the depicted West–East Sun-path circle, which functions as a separate observer-relative guide. The placement of the Vernal Equinox at the top reflects its conventional role as the beginning of the seasonal cycle, and as the eye tends to travel from top-down, is placed there for convenience with the Duodiac arranged in a counter-clockwise design.

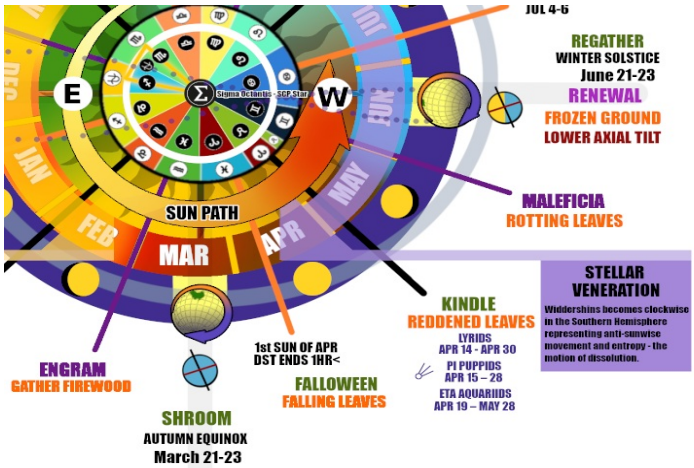
13ism aims to be the foundation for something original, elegant, and functional even revolutionary, as we have come to the conclusion astrology is not a universal one-size-fits all. While some of these issues have sought to be addressed at various times, a revolutionary approach and a successful mergence of traditional astrology and modern astronomy has not been forthcoming. Vedic and Tropical Astrology and the inclusion of the 13th sign are not new ideas, but combining them into a dual-wheel that shows their relationship and symbiosis with one another, is. It offers a new, regionally authentic cycle that honors Australian seasons and landscape, while keeping the philosophical heart of the old pagan Wheel with the veneration of natural rhythms, life-death-renewal and our bond with the land intact. It offers both tradition and scientific grounding without forcing one to erase the other. This layered approach strives to present an elegant compromise and a solid foundation for Southern Hemisphere astrology that respects cosmology. 13ism, then, offers a new, harmonic model that combines both sidereal-based astrology grounded in real celestial mechanics, as well as the zodiac's symbolic tradition based on the seasons.

While tailored to our own magickal paradigm and needs, we believe sharing this new model will be extremely useful for other Australian-based pagans of the SH first and foremost, while its design can be modified to suit any region including other areas of the SH and the NH too. Nothing prevents others from adopting the core model of the Duodiac and changing the celebration times and descriptions to suit their own climate where they live - a practice we encourage and invite - since Astrology and Magick are relative (as we will show below) and should relate to your personal magickal experience which includes your unique location. This can only be achieved through long-term direct observation of one's environment and modification of the Duodiac to represent them. For instance,



It was observed that certain phenomena occur out of step with fixed/expected dates from the NH, and that the local environment does not conform to the static nodes of the original Duodiac model. In the sample given, the duration of seasons and their outward signs are mapped to the Duodiac accordingly. This requires mapping real-world events and their subtleties onto a model – not using a fixed model to represent and standardize real-world events. Thus, a comparison of the section of the sample wheel shown alongside the original preset Duodiac, indicates the moving of Falloween, Kindle and even the renaming of the Winter Solstice to “Regather” - emphasising it not for its coldness as in the North, but as a period for re-consolidation and readiness for re-emergence, as a spring coils when compressed ready to express its potential. These changes refine the Duodiac to suit a specific climate. Cardinal direction markers of East and West for the Sun's Path have also been swapped around; Instead of orienting the Duodiac toward the Northern Pole Star of Polaris as in the traditional zodiac, the model has been modified to use Sigma Octantis by standing facing south and toward the Southern Pole, with the sun behind one's back. Thus, East is on the left, and West on the right. This act detaches Time and Space from the NH paradigm to reorient the focus to a local star. Essentially, making the Southern Pole Star the new North, whilst retaining the abstraction of traditional cardinal points applied to the globe. Alternatively, one could go further and classify Sigma Octantis as being in the North (relative to ones observational point) and regarding Polaris as in the South. Although more organic in its approach, it involves an advanced psychic revolution given that it would reorient all celestial associations with direction, which is a monumental – but by no means impossible - mental task. Having already de-anchored the zodiac which has remained unchanged for thousands of years and creating enough cognitive dissonance as it is, this is perhaps a future step as 13ism develops. For convenience, this treatise refers to the General Duodiac.

In its full form, the Duodiac is intended to be printed or produced as a set of rotating discs held together by a clasp, allowing the different wheels to rotate and any season to be placed in any cardinal orientation. It's also possible to expand to a Triodiac, a three-wheel design featuring a fully layered calendar with Sun, stars, and Moon all in one visual system. Its practical usefulness lies in guiding rituals, ecological observation, and symbolic alignment and some experiments were conducted to include its cycle. However, As the Duodiac diagram is a fixed two-dimensional representation, and the moon quickly falls out of step with predictable repeatable solar alignments, and because yearly updates to the lunar activity would be necessary, certain limitations remain. Unless made into a 3d rotatable model the moon section is largely decorative rather than functional.

Sample Construction.

However, the Duodiac in general will be accurate for at least a century from this year (2025). In 72 years, the “true” sidereal Sun will have moved only about 1° further back along the zodiac. That means over 100 years, the margin of error is roughly 1.4°, which is tiny for seasonal tracking and festival alignment. Our sidereal–tropical dual wheel will be accurate enough for at least 100-150 years until needing a minor adjustment of 1-2° long into the future, serving as an accurate diagram at least for the life of the authors, meaning the Duodiac will remain reliable for generations.

Nonetheless, due to the dynamism and diversity of nature from locale to locale, a span of two years is necessary to set it up for one's location if not just using it as a general Southern Hemisphere model. This requires making continuous observations of one's landscape and its changes and marking them down as they occur. Such notes can be made daily or weekly, as detailed as you like or brief such as, banjo frogs in abundance (Nov 15), gorse very green (Dec 15), hay being baled (Jan 5). This means observing your surroundings with regularity which in itself is a practical useful undertaking for a year increasing your awareness of these other cycles occurring around you. This helps attune to the procedures of farming, animal and plant activity, weather; and anomalies, for instance, catastrophic fire or flood. Then, after a year, one repeats the same process for another year in order to compare what happened and when between the two years to determine if there is a pattern, or if the time-frame in which these things happen shifts and by how much. The same process was used in creating books of recorded changes for farmer's almanacs, or charting star movements, in census taking for government to determine allocation of resources, or tracking average temperatures for a month of the year or annual rainfall with the aim being to produce datasets that can be compared and analysed. Taking measurements for the Duodiac is no different. The premise of the Duodiac is that you can create a local guide that predicts various changes with regularity by noticing the land and its sights, smells, sounds etc, around you, since certain seasons are better (optimal) for doing different things. However, it is also rewarding to notice these changes as they represent beautiful moments in nature that we might otherwise ignore that offer appreciation for natural phenomenon outside of ourselves, or even provide useful guides as to the approach of rain, frost, heat etc without reliance on electronic guesswork. These sorts of observations, are for instance, precisely how mankind derived its idea for time and the measure of time resulting for some countries (not all) in the time-keeping of 365.25 day solar year from Earth's orbit of the Sun that defines the modern-day year.

Below we present the deeper rationale behind our changes, the innovations made, and our own restructuring of pagan worship in the SH including a seasonal codex of unique celebrations, a separate codex discussing associated sex magick, an appendix featuring tables and various addendum related to observing Victorian stars, the lore of Ophiuchus and his representation through Hermes Trismegestus, flipping the zodiac, and additional considerations that pertain to the Duodiac.

In Supra Solidarity (ISS)
The Temple of THEM, Australia
(2025 / 19 Anno Tendrilis)

[Appendix not included in The Corpus Themeticum]

WITHIN:

-Fusing the Astrae
-The Inner and Outer wheels
-Thirteenism (13ism): The Re-absorption of Ophiuchus.
-Ophiuchus and Hermes Trismegestus
-The Zodiac and its relation to Seasons
-The Curious Effects of Flipping the Zodiac.
-13ism: Relativity, Sympathetic/Asympathetic Magick.
- Zenithal Diagram of Seasons.
- Deosil (Sun's Path) and Widdershins (Sun's Anti-path).
-13ism's Major Events (Celebrations in the Duodiac).
-Re-interpreting the Constellations.
-Summary.

Fusing the Astrae

For a very long time Astronomy and Astrology (Astrae for convenience) have been at odds with one another. Astronomy charts what can be observed of real-world celestial activity in a discipline that increases in sophistication and accuracy as times passes. Astrology was created to represent a seasonal changes in a specific climate and specific region of the world and has not updated its model for thousands of years. Because of this fluid update and fixed worldview discrepancy between the two disciplines they have traditionally been in perpetual conflict.

Moreover, the two main schools of Astrology, Tropical and Sidereal, have also been long considered incompatible with one another.

- TROPICAL ASTROLOGY (TA) is what most people recognise as Astrology and is NH dependant. As the Earth moves around the Sun it is exposed to different parts of a band of stars that appear fixed in space known as the Ecliptic that the sun gradually moves in front of from our perspective. The Ecliptic features a traditional set of 12 constellations (visual arrangements of stars whose grouping represents an imagined image based on an archetype – usually Greek for modern astronomy) which are known as Capricorn, Aquarius, Pisces, Aries, Gemini, Taurus, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Sagittarius, Scorpio and is collectively as the Zodiac. However, in TA the Zodiac does not represent the actual constellations but Signs, dividing the year into twelve equal parts (known as houses), each corresponding to a zodiac sign, with each sign covering 30 degrees of the ecliptic and its starting point begins at the Vernal Equinox, which occurs for the NH around March 21 each year. The Vernal Equinox, or spring equinox, is the moment (around March 20/21 in the Northern Hemisphere) when the Sun crosses the celestial equator, making day and night nearly equal in length and marking the start of spring. However, The zodiac is fixed to the seasons, not the stars, wherein 0° Aries is defined as the March equinox, regardless of which constellation the Sun appears in, and this system ignores Axial Precession. Earth's axial precession (approximately a 25,700-year cycle) means the equinox has drifted backwards 1 degree every 72 years. 2125 / 72 = 29.5, representing a shift of almost an entire sign. However, because TA is not aligned to the actual movement of the sun and makes no adjustment for axial precession, and uses a fixed zodiac that hasn't changed since 100 BCE (at the time of writing, 2125 years), and this is why it conflicts with Astronomy, as well as Sidereal Astrology.

- SIDEREAL ASTROLOGY (SA) is a system that calculates planetary positions based on the actual observable constellations in the sky, contrasting with TA, which aligns with the seasons. It is the foundation of Vedic astrology (Jyotish) and emphasises concepts like karma, dharma, and destiny. Unlike TA, SA does account for the Earth's axial precession, maintaining alignment between signs and constellations through corrective systems known as ayanamsas. This method enhances the accuracy of astrological readings by measuring the Earth's rotation relative to fixed stars. Whereas the Tropical zodiac still marks the equinox with Aries, Sidereal astrology recognises that astronomically the Sun is now in front of stars belonging to Pisces (and creeping toward Aquarius). This also means SA takes a 13th constellation, Ophiuchus (The Serpent Bearer), into its calculations that TA has ignored/dropped to maintain its evenly-spaced 12 segment system.

The Sun's Real Transit Durations Across the 13 Zodiacal Constellations

#	Constellation (Sign)	Sun Enters	Sun Exits	Duration (days)
1	Capricornus	Jan 19	Feb 16	~29 days
2	Aquarius	Feb 16	Mar 12	~24 days
3	Pisces	Mar 12	Apr 18	~37 days
4	Aries	Apr 18	May 13	~26 days
5	Taurus	May 13	Jun 21	~39 days
6	Gemini	Jun 21	Jul 20	~30 days
7	Cancer	Jul 20	Aug 10	~22 days
8	Leo	Aug 10	Sep 16	~37 days
9	Virgo	Sep 16	Oct 30	~45 days
10	Libra	Oct 30	Nov 23	~24 days

#	Constellation (Sign)	Sun Enters	Sun Exits	Duration (days)
11	Scorpius	Nov 23	Nov 29	~7 days
12	Ophiuchus	Nov 29	Dec 17	~19 days
13	Sagittarius	Dec 17	Jan 19	~33 days

The conflict between accurate astronomy and symbolic astrology, and whether to have 12 equal signs or 13 unequal-size constellations have never been united by any previous system.

~

13ism begins by addressing the long-standing mismatch between signs and constellations.

The way the 12-Sign Zodiac works (in Traditional Western Astrology / TA) is that the zodiac is based on dividing the 360° ecliptic (Sun's path) into 12 equal parts of 30° each. Each part aligns (roughly) with a calendar month, though imperfectly. This has nothing to do with the real star constellations — it's a symbolic, mathematical system. In the 12-sign system, each zodiac sign = 30° of the sky = 1/12 of a year or approximately 1 month. Adding an extra house would either change each house to 28 days or extend the calendar year to 395 days, both options causing considerable disruption. Meanwhile, the 13th constellation known as Ophiuchus (Serpent-Bearer) has traditionally been excluded despite being a real zodiacal constellation that the Sun passes through (Nov 29–Dec 17) because its inclusion would interfere in this neat arrangement of Time.

This conflict raised the key question: should signs reflect actual time spent (Sidereal/Vedic Astrology) or be made equal-length for convention and practicality (Tropical Astrology)?
13ism's solution is to represent both. Therein, 13ism reflects real solar movement through actual sky constellations and includes both tropical and sidereal astrology in one diagram simply by using two separate wheels, one inside the other.

The Inner and Outer Wheels

The Inner Wheel (IW) is representative of the traditional zodiac and its 12 fixed signs. The Inner Wheel is thus harmonically divided, anchored in myth and psychology, fixed and applicable to personal archetypes and signs.

The Outer Wheel (OW) represents real-time astronomy consisting of unequal segments based on IAU boundaries and updated sidereal data showing actual sun transit time through each constellation. Together the two wheels offer different time frames and paradigms with the convenience of looking at two watches on a single timepiece in THEM's unique diagram, the Duodiac.

This comparison also means some 'star-signs' shift places within 13ism. You might be a Cancerian at the core (Inner Wheel), but born under the Outer Sun of Gemini or Leo depending on the year. For instance:

Traditional Cancer Dates (Tropical):
June 21 – July 22
(based on fixed seasons, not real star positions)

Real Solar Transit through Cancer Constellation (Sidereal/Astronomical):
Roughly July 20 – August 10
(only ~22 days in real sky — not the full month)

It is possible therein, to identify one's zodiac sign as determined by the OW of SA, by the IW of TA, or by a Fusion Across The Ecliptic (FATE) that combines elements of two or even three signs. For instance: for January, the IW features Capricorn, the OW features Sagittarius, while there is also some overlap into Aquarius. This offers up the fusion of the Sagicorn or even Sagicaprius depending on one's birthday. Future expansion could use FATE to offer a New 'Multistrology' that spans the wheels and is psychologically relevant and even possibly more accurate by reflecting actual celestial events as well as its traditional fixed foundations.

It depends whether one believes the stars and planets have influence and to what degree (Qv. 'Politick of the Spheres' in the Appendix) and if so, whether one would likely want to observe the correct house, the conventional house, or both houses.

Since it can be argued that all of human endeavour is abstraction serving as explanation, it is left up to the wielder how they choose to apply (or adapt) the Duodiac to best serve their chosen interests. Regardless, the seasons and the stars have an influence on us and 13ism acknowledges this.

-Thirteenism (13ism): the re-absorption of Ophiuchus.

Ophiuchus is a large constellation located between Scorpius and Sagittarius, whose name comes from the Greek word meaning "serpent-bearer," and it is symbolised by a figure holding a snake.

13ism rejects the removal of observable Ophiuchus from the Zodiac and restores it as a full sign in two ways. Firstly, via the overlay of a golden triangle on the IW, avoiding disruption to the layout of the traditional zodiac by treating its house visually as a phantom overlay. That is, Ophiuchus is recognised as having its house overlapping Sagittarius and Scorpio, as an 'interleaven sign' occurring between the the first 15 days of Sagittarius and last 15 days of Scorpio. This overlay does not interfere with the typical zodiac arrangement, nor distort its twelve sectors and so can be included or ignored as desired by traditional astrologists. Secondly, by providing Ophiuchus its own rightful house in the OW. Using Two Wheels, the Duodiac resolves the issues of breaking tradition, or falling out of alignment with the reigning calendar and other time-honoured practices. The Duodiac acknowledges solar time over lunar time, but stops short of attempting to 'reinvent the wheel' (despite reinventing the wheel) and modify calendar time, even as THEM recognise Time to be an artificial historically modifiable construct.

Ophiuchus and Hermes Trismegestus

Due to the Duodiac's Twin Wheels and the nature of its re-inclusion the 13th sign has both its own house, occupies a significant position straddling space between Sagittarius and Scorpio, and echoes the fusion of the Astrae as a bridging sign endowed with special quality and meaning. Although Chiron and Asclepius are traditional models appropriate for Ophiuchus, 13ism represents this powerful bridging sign of the 13th constellation/sign within the Duodiac by the archetype of the great Hermes Trismegestus (HT). Hermes is a particularly resonant entity whose archetype features bridging qualities that mirrors its unique position in 13isms system and is a figure important to the Temple of THEM and our Western Magickal heritage, history, theory and practice.

HT is a legendary, symbolic figure from late antiquity, not a single historical person. The name Hermes Trismegistus means “Hermes the Thrice-Great.” and he is a fusion of two gods: Hermes (Greek): messenger of the gods, associated with knowledge, language, travel; and Thoth (Egyptian): god of writing, wisdom, mathematics, and the moon. Ancient writers treated him as a great teacher of divine and hidden knowledge.

HT was believed to be the author of a collection of texts called the Hermetic writings, especially: The Corpus Hermeticum (which inspired THEM's 'Corpus Themeticum') and The Asclepius. These texts focus on the nature of God / the divine, the structure of the universe, the idea that humans can gain spiritual understanding through knowledge (gnosis) and the connection between the macrocosm (the universe) and the microcosm (the human being) – themes expanded upon by the ONA. A famous Hermetic idea (often summarised later) is “As above, so below.” claiming the heavens and the human world reflect each other is a heavily discussed topic within the writings of THEM and also features in the outer-frame of the Duodiac that provides an alchemical cycle that combines to 'square the circle'.

HT had a big impact on Alchemy (early chemistry and symbolism), Astrology, Renaissance philosophy and Later mystical and philosophical traditions and during the Renaissance, people believed his writings were extremely ancient, even older than Plato or Moses. Modern scholars now know the texts were written mainly between about 100–300 CE by Greek-speaking authors in Egypt.

13ism leans toward Hermes Trismegistus as the foundational archetype for Ophiuchus rather than Asclepius or Chiron as his archetype perfectly honours the union of opposites theme and beautifully complements the Inner Wheel and Outer Wheel concept, wherein two wheels, two layers, two modes of time and symbolism coming together are captured by his qualities. Symbolising the Union of Opposites (also relevant to his overlay straddling Sagittarius and Scorpius) Hermes is the quintessential mediator bridging heaven and earth, spirit and matter, knowledge and mystery. Hermes embodies alchemical, spiritual, and intellectual transformation that aligns with Ophiuchus's themes of renewal and healing, but whose reach expanded beyond physical healing to cosmic wisdom which heals collectively (a realm with which THEM is concerned). As a Messenger & Guide the archetype can act as the lantern through complex cycles, the interpreter of hidden truths, perfectly fitting the sign that often gets "left out" or misunderstood. The caduceus, with its two serpents intertwined around a staff, matches the idea of duality and harmony symbolically resonating with the 13ism model of two interlocking wheels fusing two systems that usually create friction against one another. Asclepius represents applied knowledge—how to heal the body. Chiron represents wisdom gained through suffering and teaching others. But, HT is a philosopher-mystic concerned with why the universe exists, whose concern is with the cosmic not just the personal, and therefore a superior fit. We have made sample provision for inclusion of Ophiuchus as a 13th sign with various modes, rulers and other astrological attributions laid out in the Appendix.

The Zodiac and its relation to Seasons

In ancient Mesopotamia (specifically, Babylon), the 12-sign zodiac emerged as a way to track annual changes in daylight length, temperature, rainfall patterns, and important stages of agricultural timing (collectively these are effects due to the Sun's Light Cycle, see Appendix).

The zodiac signs originally corresponded to the annual position of the Sun in the background stars as seen from Babylon at approximate Latitude 32°N / Longitude 44°E, therefore correlating with specific localised seasons where the Babylonian astronomer-priests fixed their calendar, and where certain stars rise and set at specific times.

This shifting stellar phenomena coincided with seasonal changes (rainy season, harvest, etc.) to match the Sun's annual motion. Accordingly, the astrological signs of the tropical zodiac were associated with the seasonal cycle of the Northern Hemisphere, with signs corresponding to qualitative phases of the year, including the intensification and decline of heat (for example, Leo representing high summer and Virgo waning summer) (See 'Traditional Seasonal & Weather Associations of the Zodiac' in the Appendix).

These seasonal attributions were understood through the classical elemental and qualitative framework of hot, cold, dry, and wet and from this, personal temperamental qualities were inferred.

Seasonal Summary

Season	Signs	Dominant Quality
Spring	Aries, Taurus, Gemini	Warming, unstable
Summer	Cancer, Leo, Virgo	Hot, cooling
Autumn	Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius	Drying, cooling
Winter	Capricorn, Aquarius, Pisces	Cold, moist

In the early 20th century, Carl Jung's work in analytical psychology, particularly his engagement with alchemy and myth, contributed to a reinterpretation of astrological symbolism as reflecting archetypal structures of the psyche, helping to frame these traditional correspondences in psychological rather than cosmological terms. These qualities of time were fixed into the concept of Astrology, represented by the unchanging arrangement of the Zodiac. The simplicity of a fixed system was and is extremely popular (See 'The Enduring Popularity of the Zodiac' in the Appendix). Moreover, if you move north or south from Babylon, the zodiac still works in terms of solar timing, because solstices and equinoxes happen everywhere at the same moment globally.

But the zodiac calendar was not re-calibrated when it spread elsewhere and the symbolism "froze" at its Babylonian origin. Your location on Earth determines how long each constellation is visible, how high it rises, when constellations are above the horizon and local climate patterns connected to the Sun's path. Different latitudes equal different daylight patterns and different visibility of stars, with the SH and NH each traditionally represented by a Summer Set and Winter Set of visible constellations. So the symbolism (e.g., Cancer = heat) works symbolically wherever you are, but the exact sky appearance is different. At far northern latitudes, some zodiac constellations barely rise, and the symbolic system fits poorly especially the correspondence to seasons, light and heat, never mind the SH. The zodiac is hemisphere-dependent and locality sensitive, yet these factors are ignored and astrology treated as a universal system. 13ism differs markedly in its philosophy of what is important to observe and acknowledge for magic, which differentiates it from typical TA.

Historically, nobody has successfully adjusted the symbolism for the Southern Hemisphere because both astrology and astronomy are recognised as originating in the North and the practices spread culturally, not astronomically. Given that modern astronomy did not emerge in Australia until the 1850's, with astrology also a late arrival relatively speaking, with its implementation carried over from the existing system and importing it, errors and all. Because of the observances made of Sun, Earth, Stars, Seasons, the design of the Zodiac stands as one of humanities more impressive creations. But, for the zodiac to serve functional pagan use today (2025), at least in our view, it requires significant modifications. While we have flipped the signs over intending them to more reasonably match our Australian seasons, attempting to simply invert the zodiac for the SH creates an exceptional, unintended side-effect that relates to a collapse of Time, which we will now discuss.

The Curious Effect of Flipping the Zodiac

At first, it may seem a logical and easy inversion to flip the zodiac to align the signs to Southern Hemisphere seasons – and for some, this inversion has been considered adequate to continue to class Astrology as universally applicable. It's not.

In this Southern Zodiac, and the Duodiac, the signs are flipped across the wheel:

North Sign → South Sign

Aries → Libra
Taurus → Scorpio
Gemini → Sagittarius
Cancer → Capricorn
Leo → Aquarius
Virgo → Pisces
Libra → Aries
Scorpio → Taurus
Sagittarius → Gemini
Capricorn → Cancer
Aquarius → Leo
Pisces → Virgo

It is not thematically difficult to flip the signs and the NH attributes over to SH requirements as this table below indicates. If Aries equals "new growth and fire", in the NH that fits Spring, not Autumn, so in the SH, we need to switch Aries and Libra to preserve seasonal meaning. Wherein, Capricorn, the “Winter builder” in the NH, would align with Summer in the SH so we flip it with Cancer to preserve symbolic consistency. If Astrology is meant to reflect the soul in nature (personal to cosmic in scale) then the symbolism should match the seasonal energies experienced locally, so it stands to reason flipping the zodiac realigns the seasons with our hemisphere. We will demonstrate some of our thought process so you can work through the logic with us.

Southern Hemisphere Zodiac Flip

Traditional Sign	Traditional Dates	Northern Season	Flipped Sign (Southern Symbolic Energy)	Southern Season
♈Aries	Mar 21 – Apr 19	Spring	♎Libra – Balance, harvest, diplomacy	Autumn
♉Taurus	Apr 20 – May 20	Mid-spring	♏Scorpio – Letting go, depth, composting	Late autumn
♊Gemini	May 21 – Jun 20	Late spring	♐Sagittarius – Seeking light, future	Early winter
♋Cancer	Jun 21 – Jul 22	Summer solstice	♑Capricorn – Endurance, structure	Winter solstice
♌Leo	Jul 23 – Aug 22	Mid-summer	♒Aquarius – Insight, innovation	Deep winter
♍Virgo	Aug 23 – Sep 22	Late summer	♓Pisces – Surrender, spiritual healing	Late winter
♎Libra	Sep 23 – Oct 22	Autumn equinox	♈Aries – Initiation, new growth	Spring equinox
♏Scorpio	Oct 23 – Nov 21	Mid-autumn	♉Taurus – Rooting, sensuality	Mid-spring
♐ Sagittarius	Nov 22 – Dec 21	Late autumn	♊Gemini – Curiosity, air, lightness	Late spring
♑ Capricorn	Dec 22 – Jan 19	Winter solstice	♋Cancer – Emotional growth, care	Summer solstice
♒Aquarius	Jan 20 – Feb 18	Mid-winter	♌Leo – Vitality, creativity	High summer
♓Pisces	Feb 19 – Mar 20	Late winter	♍Virgo – Order, discernment, preparation	Late summer

Sign-Flipping

- Each sign's seasonal and symbolic role is reversed, aligning with the opposite side of the wheel. For example, ♈Aries (spring-born in the North) becomes ♎Libra (autumn-born in the South) in terms of seasonal meaning. Consequently, we must also flip the other reigning NH attributes to reflect SH inversion.

Planetary Ruler-ship Flipping
In the flipped model:

- Sun (☉) — instead of ruling Leo (July–August, mid-summer North), now rules Aquarius (July–August, mid-winter South) to preserve ruler-ship at the light peak.
- Moon (☾) — rules Capricorn (winter solstice in the South), reflecting emotional anchoring and inner warmth during darkness.
- Venus (♀) and Mars (♂) also switch:
    - Aries (♂) → becomes Libra, now ruled by Venus
    - Taurus (♀) → becomes Scorpio, now ruled by Mars/Pluto

This maintains balance between light cycles and planetary symbolism.

Element Adjustments

These remain mostly the same in terms of elemental relationships, but the experiential symbolism may shift:

- Fire: May now represent warmth during cold (e.g., mid-winter), not summer heat
- Water: May become linked to moisture in dry heat or emotional resilience in light
- Earth: Embodiment in fertile or stable parts of spring and late summer
- Air: Intellect, changeability, and circulation during transitional seasons

(See Appendix for a fuller discussion on these flips)

So far so good.

However, flipping the zodiac brings a serious unintended side-effect which may explain why the sort of approach 13ism takes has been avoided in the past – it creates a New Age.

- Firstly, because late convention regards the Earth as having two hemispheres, it seems logical the SH could just reorient Astrology to suit its own needs and even present itself as the new dominant hemisphere by flipping the system to imitate the NH. We are so used to the NH dictating terms that we can hardly imagine the effects were it the SH that first developed the Zodiac, to which the NH would have to adapt. Since we occupy a sphere, it would be just as probable that the SH had developed the Astrae and historically seen the NH as upside-down. However tempting, placing Australia on 'top of the globe' as the 'New' NH, given its history as the SH, upsets too many conventions including Latitude, Longitude, Declination, the Equator, Ecliptic and other useful constructs, to make it practicable. Moreover, doing as the NH has done, just repeats the problems we have inherited from the NH in treating directions on an (oblate) sphere as absolutes. Claiming we are upside-down (on a sphere no less), has helped give the North its dominance by referring to the South as if it was subordinate, wherein Australia itself means 'The Southern Land' (popularised by Matthew Flinders 1871).

- Secondly, by flipping the zodiac to create an inverse mirrored image that is wound forward by six signs matching say, Leo to our Summer, in order pair a hot sign to a hot season, it has the unintended side-effect when symbolised by such a visual device as the Duodiac, of creating a SH zodiac that depicts moving into an Age of Virgo. When we examine what this means, Astrology collapses in on itself. Since an Age is supposed to be universal not relative or localized – when we show that flipping the zodiac (which is simply the same process the NH used to build the original model) creates a whole new Age, core premises of Astrology reveal themselves as absurd - or at the very least, contingent upon suppositions that fix the dominance of the NH in place as the only frame of reference (Little different to the strategy of the moral positioning of good and evil). Since an Age is intended to encompass the whole of human experience, having two zodiacs each aligned properly to seasonal changes creates a paradox because there is only one ecliptic and one sun that moves into one house. But, unless the NH Zodiac is reoriented it is useless for SH magick and does not reflect the SH experience. To wit, a damned if you do and damned if you don't affair (prior to the Duodiac).

- Thirdly, even if we apply the SH inversion, taking the modification to its natural conclusion by giving the NH and SH its own model and creating a dual-zodiac that is simultaneously moving into Aquarius and Virgo in two opposite directions, there is another problem. Where these two NH and SH systems meet in the experience of the Equator as a synthesis creates a whole other new theoretical Age experienced locally by those who live in the midpoint of the two systems. That is, just by trying to fix the zodiac signs to different weather patterns, it creates chaos in displaying Greater Time Cycles and generates phantom Ages simply by trying to replicate the process that the NH has done.

It becomes apparent then, that the NH model's dominance rests only on its assertions of absolutes and an old-world view of the SH as 'upside-down'. These complexities would have been too troublesome for the masses to entertain (wherein the zodiacs popularity is due mostly to its simplicity) and such considerations as discussed above have long been glossed over or omitted in favour of an imagined universal digestible framework that requires no alteration - and the needs of the SH be damned. But upon realising the system is not reversible, this realisation shatters the integrity of the model and one realises Astrology is as if made of fragile glass and moving a single piece causes it to implode - or like pulling apart a rubix cube and then reassembling it often makes it shaky and unstable thereafter, so it is with the premises Astrology rests upon.

Flipping the zodiac wholesale into a Southern Hemisphere (SH) model seems to create a neat symmetry, but the two hemispheres are not inverse copies; they are distinct systems that share geometry but not lived conditions.

- Seasons are inverted, but environments aren't mirrored Land–ocean distribution, climate patterns, biodiversity, and human history are radically different between hemispheres. Seasonal symbolism tied to agriculture, weather, and ecology in the North doesn't simply reverse cleanly in the South.
- Zodiac symbolism was culturally embedded, not abstracted
  Elemental qualities, ruler-ships, and modalities evolved within Northern Hemisphere climates and myth systems. They reflect specific seasonal experiences, not just astronomical markers.
- The ecliptic is universal; seasonal meaning is local
  The zodiac is defined by Earth–Sun geometry (global), but its interpretation is grounded in local phenomenology. Applying the same symbolic package upside-down assumes universality where there is none.
- "Opposite" ≠ "equivalent"
  Libra isn't simply "Southern Aries." Oppositions in the zodiac are relational, not interchangeable. Reassigning ruler-ships and elements collapses those relationships.

In short, the hemispheres share a sky, not a worldview. So while a flipped zodiac is internally consistent, it's ecologically and culturally artificial. A truer SH approach wouldn't mirror the NH it would re-derive meaning from Southern seasonal experience, possibly producing different emphases, altered symbolism, or even non-zodiacal frameworks. A Southern system must be grown, not inverted, and that is why 13ism scraps the NH names and associations for celebrations from the classic 'Wheel of the Year'. Nonetheless, some experimental notes on inversion have been included in the Appendix to this work.

We have also added some notes on Ages and even compared a theoretical Age of Virgo against an Age of Aquarius (See Appendix). However, THEM are of the view that surely it is man-made forms local interchange that defines the human experience via terrestrial ages, not, the illusion of a perspective of grouped light beams that may not even exist anymore. Time being relative, so too is a Reality, and therefore the experience of that reality, with over-lapping dimensions of spacetime enclosing humanity in a complex network of differently lived experiences and realities, just as diverse as the aesthetic and ethos of Nation States which can be likened to individual planets with different time systems, laws, cultures, ranging from draconian to liberal.

The idea that humanity is mass-affected by the perceived position of the Sun in an imagined house is enduring, quaint but illogical. Moreover, the effects of the celestial have influenced humanity far beyond the mere practices of Astrology and form the bedrock of religions and politics, combined into magico-politics: a power discourse that is in practice an orderly kind of madness stemming from religion. See for instance 'Politick of the Spheres' – by the Temple of THEM, showing how deeply and how many world governments have striven to imitate the immortal stars, sun or moon through the adoption of such emblems on their state flags in perhaps the ultimate act of sympathetic magic, whilst often completely ignorant to its influence, practice and origins as magick – as are those who worship such flags under the spell of Nationalism.

13ism: Relativity, Sympathetic/Asympathetic Magick.

13ism differs from Astrology in two other important regards:

- Firstly, we remain aware that what we are observing is in part a series of familiar events caused by a fixed or multiple frames of reference in relation to a myriad of moving celestial bodies. Thus for instance, the Sun does not 'rise' in the East but only appears to do so due to Earth's spin. We know this as part of accepted contemporary understanding. Nonetheless, most magick defines its terms from the human-centred perspective (the sun rising and setting) – not the life-centred perspective (the earth turning causing the sun to appear to rise and set). Therein, we may choose to honour what is observed from our human frame of reference which constitutes a belief of flowing with such forces as if they were as they appear out of convention (Sympathetic Magick) – or, opt to acknowledge what is actually happening outside of our human frame of reference from the perspective of an observer looking down or across the Solar System where the things we observe gain additional context including factoring in our conventional viewpoint (Asympathetic Magick). For example, rather than choose the reality where the Sun moves East to West, we might prefer to acknowledge (or honour) the Earth's spin being responsible for such a perception. In the era of the Alpha-Cynic we are learning to hold many perspectives simultaneously. Great philosophical debate could ensue on which of these observations deserves which title, but it depends on one's frame of reference, and one's Intent. Is the human experience as we observe it the true indicator of Nature, or is it the wider understanding of the familiar scenes it creates as we whirl through space on a spherical object, at a 23.44 degree tilt, experiencing sitting still whilst Earth's surface rotates at around 1,350-1500 km/h (15 degrees p/h) (different speeds for different latitudes) even as the solar system is orbiting the Milky Way at around 790,000–830,000 km/h? Few of which astronomical phenomena are acknowledged in Western (or even Eastern) Magick as these are modern discoveries and measurements that eclipse the antique understanding of what used to be occult. However, these astronomical claims represent an updated accuracy of existing forces that influence everything we know and are part of, and which THEM believe should be embodied and included in general magick not just Australian magickal practice. Just as the zodiac can be re-engineered, there is no reason to limit our sorcerous envelopment of existing forces and forms to conventional observations made by ancient peoples of ancient times (which like the zodiac are frozen in a time that no longer reflects contemporary updates to knowledge) or fix it solely to the apparent movement of the moon, sun and stars given that we now know better. Including modern knowledge only strengthens magick – which theoretically allows us to flow in synch with what is there and how it moves vs. how it appears to move and how it has been described and captured in past millennia.

- Secondly, we de-anchor Astrology from its NH origin and claim the art to be relative and localised. We do not accept that Ages are defined by the stars but by terrestrial forces and their magico-political machinations; one human can know nothing but communism their entire life, another nothing but capitalism their entire life, and yet be only the breadth of a wall's distance apart. The belief in houses, the suns position in that house, and some great awakening for all humanity depending on that position is what is known as a Mysterium* - though it is a matter of deep and unending philosophy to make such separations within intellectual constructs. Is magick and such a thing as an Age a human fancy from pattern-making accumulated over aeons so as to resemble real phenomenal change – or is perhaps the placebo-effect of suggesting the Age is coming enough to re-engineer reality through collective expectation – single or multiple, simple or complex answers? Each sorcerer must make their own judgement as to how to perform magick. Notwithstanding, science has shown that our limited senses veil much of the world from us, and thus colour, shape, sound and so on are of no importance in honouring greater or life-centred forces over human-centred forms – the same argument that madness equals magick and magick does not need to be logical is just as valid. Therein, it is suggested that you should take note of what you can observe from where you are and fashion your own understanding of what is relative to you in that location via the behaviours of the seasons and their effects on the landscape, the types and times of flowers animals or insects emerging or fading, and make use of some general conventions whilst modifying what is different for you to reflect your lived experience of nature – not live under an umbrella stretched so as to encompass but not fit your climate or magickal needs. This, we contend, is the core aspect of Paganism. While to acknowledge the difference between apparent movements and actual movements (a blend of observation points and frames of reference that requires shifting consciousness) is 13ism. As my companion wisely says, if time is relative, and astrology must also be relative, then it is We who are our own pole star. On the flip-side of this statement is the reinforcement of our Intent, in whichever direction it may lie, including madness or ill-fitting logic, wherein magick overrides forms through force. However, there is also a specific peace of mind that arises when intent is clear by being aligned with logic where forms are concerned, a satisfaction of flow that enlists the psyche not to sabotage the work through its doubt.

 A Mysterium is the occult version of a carrot on an endless stick, which prompts a person to behave in X-type of way to eventually earn Y-type of reward: the I-Ching, Egyptian Book of the Dead, and other renowned books feature Mysterium's that bid obedience to social hierarchy, humility for authorities, and which systems exercise subtle state control over a persons life by convincing them their behaviour decides various factors in this life and/or the afterlife. Often through means of significant beauty that conceals sinister intention. The major religions of the world all employ Mysterium. Wherein, the revelation of adepts is that there is no great truth and no divine secret given at the end to human-made interpretations and guides. See, for instance, the 4th Degree of the Royal Arch of Freemasonry which is a relatively banal revelation for all its secrecy and checks and balances to keep out the uninitiated with pretences to reveal the true name of God, but which ritual serves to secure fealty from its indebted subjects in its knowing (See 'An Examination of the Axioms of Royal Arch Freemasonry' by THEM). But for those holding the carrot, it is of no consequence that you are disappointed when you are finally dis-illusioned, so long as you are obedient to a given form with your given life and under their control – whether that be a person, partner, group, organisation, corporation, ideology or country, a cult has many names and many faces.*

Zenithal diagram of seasons.

An issue noticed while constructing the Duodiac is the habitual visual of depicting seasons using four tilted Earths with a pole speared through its axis in a side-on view. Interestingly, in some diagrams the axis points to the left, in others to the right, pending the observers positional frame of reference.

An effort has been made to provide a new, top-down (Zenithal) viewpoint of the seasons to remove this left-right axial anomaly which is a curious feature for an apparently universal diagram, while also including the traditional side-on model for convenience and comparison.

The Zenithal model is a difficult position to describe visually, which viewpoint conceals much of the SH: but the same problem applies to the side-on model which obscures 180 degrees of the globe as well.

However, we present the Earth in its classical NH-up orientation, where a fixed surface landmark below the equator (Australia) is used to indicate seasonal effects through its apparent high or low display on the face of a shaded spherical Earth tilted to 23.44 degrees. Accordingly, the landmark of Australia is shown higher on the sphere to indicate greater solar exposure associated with summer, when the Earth's axial tilt presents the Southern Hemisphere toward the Sun (Summer Solstice for the SH), and shown lower or partially obscured to indicate reduced exposure and heat associated with winter when the Earth's axial tilt presents the Northern Hemisphere toward the Sun (Winter Solstice for the SH). Spring Equinox and Autumn Equinox are represented by intermediate positions of Australia corresponding to states of equal solar light and heat equilibrium.

Australia's apparently fixed position is not intended to suggest that it continuously faces the Sun and the diagram adopts a counter-clockwise arrow indicating Earth's revolution as viewed from a conventional top-down Northern-hemisphere perspective, producing the familiar apparent motion of the Sun rising in the east and setting in the west.

The Axial Pole, and Southern Celestial Pole are not shown in the zenithal perspective but should be assumed to be protruding from the base of the Earth and pointing toward Sigma Octantis, our Pole Star. Unless the Earth–Sun system is viewed from a bottom-up perspective to favour the SH, the Southern Celestial Pole is not visible, as it lies on the unseen half of the sphere. The SH has not been inverted or elevated to function as a dominant pole so as to preserve its identification with the accepted Southern Hemisphere – because trying to show the Southern Hemisphere from a bottom-up perspective would be useful, more accurate, but generally too confusing. However, frames of reference are critical to take into account within and without magickal practice as there is no universal viewpoint, regardless of what old world modernism and essential-ism tends to infer.

These distinctions may seem minor, even unimportant, but the division of forms is the source behind the most destructive of human capabilities including the inside-outside creation of Nation States (statecraft) and the conviction built-into propaganda that is behind the desire to kill to preserve chosen valued truths. As an example, not so long ago in America, whether you were labelled as being from or on the side of the North or South could be the difference between friend or foe, life and death. These arbitrary divisions we make and take for granted have bathed the soil of the world in blood – and as discussed in our Liber ADAM, what we take for granted as common knowledge has come at a very high cost to very many individuals, often tortured to death for heresy and their insight paid for with their lives.

Deosil (Sun's Path) and Widdershins (Sun's Anti-path).

Deosil and Widdershins refer to the two directions clockwise and counter-clockwise used in magickal practice, often for opening or closing ritual circles. But clockwise and counterclockwise require a fixed point of reference and typically, the NH has fixed the SH's point of reference to the NH.

DEOSIL

The term "deosil" originates from Scottish Gaelic (deiseil, deiseal), meaning "right" or "clockwise". It is derived from the Gaelic word "deas", which means "right" or "south". In Scottish folklore, moving deosil is considered auspicious, while moving widdershins (counterclockwise) is viewed as unlucky. The term is often used in rituals and witchcraft to signify a clockwise motion, symbolizing growth and positivity.

WIDDERSHINS

The term "widdershins" originates from the 1510s, specifically from Middle Low German "weddersinnes," meaning "against the way." It refers to moving in a direction contrary to the apparent course of the sun or clock, which was considered unlucky in various cultures. The word is cognate with the German term "widersinnig," meaning "against" or "sense". Historically, it was associated with superstitions regarding the sun, where moving counterclockwise was believed to bring bad luck. The term has also been used in various contexts, such as in witchcraft and religious rituals, where it symbolizes defiance against the natural order.

The apparent path of the Sun differs between hemispheres due to the observer’s position relative to Earth’s axis. In Australia and the Southern Hemisphere, the Sun’s daily arc passes through the northern sky, appearing higher overhead as one moves closer to the equator and varying in height with the seasons. When facing north toward the equator, the Sun rises from the right (east), arcs left across the sky, and sets to the left (west), producing an apparent counter-clockwise motion. This reverses the perceived solar orientation found in the NH, where the Sun’s arc appears clockwise when facing south. As deosil and widdershins movements are traditionally defined by the Sun’s apparent motion, their directional meanings are correspondingly reversed in the SH, forming a natural astronomical basis for SH–aligned ritual and pagan practice. This arc is marked in the Duodiac attributing the Sun and Moon veneration to Deosil, stellar veneration to Widdershins and establishes a matching groundwork of spheres to sorcery for opening/closing magickal circles congruent to the SH.

Thus, for 13ism in the SH, you should first locate the East to properly align a deosil (sunwise) circle in the Southern Hemisphere. From there, your path should move counterclockwise around the circle, mirroring the Sun’s journey. This approach grounds your ritual space in astronomical reality and reinforces your symbolic alignment with Southern cosmology - a core principle of 13ism.

(Naturally, directions are reliant on relativistic point of view. Are you adopting the accepted notions of the cardinal directions so that East remains East regardless of which way you turn? Or perhaps venerating the Southern Pole Star as the dominant star, by facing South? If so, then East and West may swap sides on the diagram. Though such directions are arbitrary and genuinely meaningless on a spherical object such as Earth, entertaining them still serves magical purpose. Unless one is capable of withstanding ontological vertigo caused by mentally removing them as fixed indicators, which removal significantly alters traditional magical principles and practices,it is best to walk, before one runs, or tries to float in formless zero-gravity).

Symbolic Reinterpretation (Southern Deosil Path):

Position	Meaning	Role in Ritual
East	Birth, inspiration, dawn	Begin invocation or movement here
North	Illumination, expansion, zenith	Peak energy, knowledge
West	Closure, descent, release	Completion of growth phase
South	Rest, darkness, potential	Return to source, reset, reflection

By following this path, you are walking in harmony with the local solar cycle, not importing symbolic directions from northern cosmology that invert the actual visible sky, but see Sympathetic/Asympathetic Magick.

13ism's Major Events (Celebrations in the Duodiac)

The solstices and equinoxes were certainly known to the ancient Celts - megalithic monuments like Stonehenge and Newgrange show clear astronomical alignment - but there's little evidence the Druids celebrated them as formal festivals. These events were added later by modern Druids and Wiccans with another 4 festivals to complete the "Wheel of the Year." Commercialism and its tacky merchandising has helped to fix these celebrations to the wrong dates for the SH - but 13ism does not flip these dates, or keep the NH names or celebrations, it replaces them entirely. Just as Gardner invented many of the celebrations, relatively recently, that have become mainstream through such forms as Wicca - we have crafted our own labels that point directly to those seasonal changes and have made an effort to make those names meaningful to Australians, specifically those in Victoria. Other locations in Australia (not to say the SH, and regions outside of Babylon of the NH) experience different seasonal markers and the Duodiac should be customized accordingly as required.

Moving Counter-Clockwise from our Spring Equinox.

Viridis (Pronounced 'WIH-ri-dis' and Latin for Green) Sept 21-23 / Spring/Vernal Equinox.

Fireflood (Referring to the Major Fire and Flood Threats Experienced) Early Nov.

Solthain (High Sun) Dec 21-23 / Summer Solstice.

Ashfell (Fire season at most extreme leaving scorched earth and ashen skies) Early Feb.

Shroom (Mushrooms in abundance) March 21-23 - Autumnal Equinox.

Falloween (Pronounced the same as Halloween, referencing fallowing and colour-change of the landscape and falling of tree leaves on non-deciduous trees) Early May.

Kindle (Winter begins, wood smoke from chimneys visible) June 21 - Winter Solstice.

Lambsborn (Lambing season) Early Aug.

Each name gives a mental image or direct cue. Anyone seeing "Fireflood" instantly thinks of fire and flood risk. Unlike imported northern festivals, this calendar reflects actual Southern Hemisphere seasonal patterns specific to a region of Australia. Observers can plan work, rituals, or safety measures based on the natural signs the names highlight. Even without mythology, the wheel has a story arc: high energy → aftermath → underground growth → rest → hearth warmth → fertility → lush growth → fire danger → back to high sun. Viridis might also be referred to as 'Greening'.

Below is a more detailed table, and then a season-by-season landscape guide for 13ism's Victoria, Australia festival cycle.

Month (Southern Hemisphere)	Festival Name	Elemental Association	Landscape / Natural Cues
September – October	Viridis	Earth / Growth	Blossoming flowers, greening landscapes, rising rivers, active wildlife
October – November	Fireflood	Fire / Destruction & Renewal	Drying landscapes, lightning storms, start of bushfire season
December – January	Solthain	Fire / Water / Lightning	High sun, thunderstorms, heavy rains, flood potential
February – March	Ashfell	Fire / Earth	Post-fire landscapes, smoldering ash, regeneration

Month (Southern Hemisphere)	Festival Name	Elemental Association	Landscape / Natural Cues
March – April	Shroom	Earth / Moisture	Rain-triggered fungal growth, decay, nutrient cycling
April – May	Falloween	Shadow / Ancestral	Mist, falling leaves, quieting of life, thinning veil
May – June	Kindle	Fire / Hearth	Early winter fires, warmth, protection, domestic ritual
August – September	Lambsborn	Life / Renewal	Livestock births, fresh pastures, fertility, new beginnings

1. Viridis (Sep – Oct)

Theme: Full growth, abundance, and vitality.
Landscape Changes:

- Spring is at its peak; rivers, creeks, and wetlands swell with rainfall.
- Eucalypts, banksias, and grevilleas flower profusely; landscapes are vibrant.
- Grasses and shrubs expand rapidly; forests appear dense and lush.
- Pollinators, birds, and mammals are extremely active.
- Wildlife breeding is underway; eggs, chicks, and young mammals are abundant.
- Soil is rich and soft; fungi continue to appear in shaded, damp areas.

2. Fireflood (Oct – Nov)

Theme: Drying, fire danger, and preparation for summer extremes.
Landscape Changes:

- Temperatures rise; rainfall decreases, creating dry conditions.
- Grasslands and forest undergrowth dry; leaf litter and debris accumulate.
- Lightning storms begin, igniting potential bushfires.
- Smoke may appear from controlled burns or wildfires.
- Wildlife adapts: seeking water, sheltering from heat, preparing for breeding.
- The air smells warm, resinous, and dry; the landscape signals the approaching high-sun season.

3. Solthain (Dec – Jan)

Theme: High sun, lightning, and summer extremes.

Landscape Changes:

- Peak temperatures; inland areas can reach extreme heat, coastal areas warm and humid.
- Thunderstorms become frequent, sometimes causing heavy rain or flash flooding.
- Rivers and creeks swell rapidly after summer storms.
- Vegetation is stressed from heat; some plants enter drought survival mode.
- Bushfire risk is very high in dry eucalypt forests.
- Wildlife activity increases around water sources; birds and insects are highly visible.

4. Ashfell (Feb – Mar)

Theme: Post-fire regeneration and cooling summer.
Landscape Changes:

- Summer heat begins to ease, though days remain warm.
- Burnt or scorched landscapes from summer fires may still be visible.
- Fresh green shoots emerge in previously burnt areas; early signs of regeneration.
- Leaf litter and ash cover the forest floor.
- Fire-adapted plants, such as Banksia and Grevillea, begin flowering.
- Wildlife gradually returns to recovering habitats; insects are highly active.

5. Shroom (Mar – Apr)

Theme: Moisture-driven growth and fungal abundance.
Landscape Changes:

- Autumn rains and cooler nights stimulate fungal growth and decomposition.
- Leaf litter becomes damp; mushrooms and fungi sprout abundantly.
- Soil moisture increases, creating rich earthy smells.
- Ferns, mosses, and lichens flourish in shaded areas.
- Small mammals and insects feed on fungi and decomposing plant matter.
- Tree canopies begin thinning as leaves prepare to fall.

6. Falloween (Apr – May)

Theme: Slowing, reflection, and preparation for winter.

Landscape Changes:

- Cooler, shorter days; morning frost may appear in southern or elevated regions.
- Trees may shed leaves; leaf litter accumulates on the ground.
- Mist and fog are more frequent in low-lying areas.
- Watercourses settle after summer and autumn rains.
- Animal activity slows as species conserve energy.
- Colours shift to muted browns, soft greens, and subdued greys.

7. Kindle (May – Jun)

Theme: Fire, warmth, and early winter.
Landscape Changes:

- Short days and long nights; crisp mornings and cool evenings.
- Fires (controlled or hearth) become culturally and practically important.
- Winter-flowering plants like Hakea and Grevillea bloom, offering colour and sustenance.
- Wildlife activity is mostly dawn and dusk; many animals conserve energy.
- Frost may appear in colder regions; fog is common in valleys.
- Landscape feels restful but holds latent energy, preparing for spring renewal.

8. Lambsborn (Aug – Sep)

Theme: Life, fertility, and spring renewal.
Landscape Changes:

- Spring begins; rising temperatures and lengthening daylight.
- Pastures turn lush; livestock births peak in rural areas.
- Early flowers bloom: wattles, grevilleas, eucalypts.
- Pollinators, birds, and insects become highly active.
- Small mammals and reptiles emerge after winter dormancy.
- Soil moisture from winter rains supports strong new growth.

Duodiac Festivals and their Dominant Constellations at 37° S

Festival	Time-frame	Prominent Evening Constellations	Notes / Astronomical Significance
Viridis	Sep – Oct	Leo, Virgo, Hydra, Corvus, Libra	Spring constellations high in evening sky; Leo is vivid; Virgo rising earlier in evening; Mercury and Venus visible near horizon at times.

Festival	Time-frame	Prominent Evening Constellations	Notes / Astronomical Significance
Fireflood	Oct – Nov	Scorpius, Sagittarius, Ophiuchus, Crux, Centaurus	Early summer; southern Milky Way prominent; Scorpius bright and low; Sagittarius high; Ophiuchus visible in evening sky; ideal for fire season rituals under Milky Way.
Solthain	Dec – Jan	Sagittarius, Scorpius, Ophiuchus, Centaurus, Crux (Southern Cross)	Summer constellations high in the sky; Milky Way runs through Sagittarius and Scorpius; Scorpius' bright red star Antares is prominent; Ophiuchus near the horizon in the evening.
Ashfell	Feb – Mar	Libra, Virgo, Hydra, Corvus, Crux	Early autumn sky; Virgo rising later in evening; Hydra stretches low along the horizon; Scorpio sets in early evening.
Shroom	Mar – Apr	Leo, Cancer, Corvus, Centaurus, Crux	Autumn constellations prominent; Leo dominates early evening; Centaurus rises later at night.
Falloween	Apr – May	Virgo, Libra, Bootes, Canis Major (low), Orion rising later	Cool evenings; Orion begins to appear late at night; Virgo and Libra high overhead; Bootes (with Arcturus) bright in western sky.
Kindle	May – Jun	Orion, Canis Major, Canis Minor, Taurus, Pleiades, Lepus	Early winter evening sky; Orion is central, bright and unmistakable; Pleiades cluster near Taurus; Sirius (in Canis Major) is bright in southern sky.
Lambsborn	Aug – Sep	Orion, Taurus, Pleiades, Gemini, Auriga	Spring approaching; Orion still visible early evening; Taurus and Pleiades prominent; Gemini rises mid-evening; winter stars fading west.

Observational Notes

- Crux (Southern Cross) is visible year-round, but its rotation around the southern celestial pole changes nightly.
- Milky Way visibility peaks in summer (Solthain and Fireflood), especially along Sagittarius and Scorpius — excellent for fire, water, or cosmic-themed rituals.
- Zodiac integration: Including Ophiuchus adds depth; it lies between Scorpius and Sagittarius, visible in Solthain (high summer) and Fireflood (late spring/early summer) evenings.

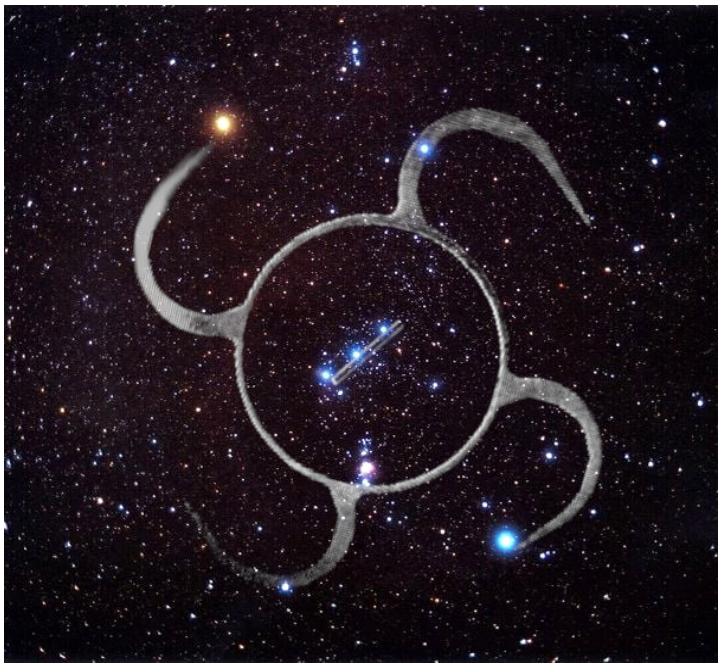
Seasonal transition markers: The rise of Orion in May/June signals the shift from Falloween to Kindle; Orion fading in September marks the spring renewal (Lambsborn/Viridis).

Re-interpreting the Constellations



13ism recognises the 'stick-figures' (as the art that accompanies constellations) are arbitrary shapes that are neither upside-down nor right-side up and exist as figments of a particular culture's imagination. However, for the SH, many constellations are regarded as 'upside-down' which feels unnecessary. The matter offers an opportunity to attach local derivatives that 'flips them back' through applying new characteristics and identities to those constellations. An approach that is particularly useful as a means to strengthen ones own magickal paradigm and current. It also makes them easier to memorise and learn by making them personal and relative to one's own internal Dexter (the function that enjoys creating forms through naming and categorising things). Reverting the stars to a right-side up orientation involves some minor adjustments.

For instance, if superimposing THEM's paradigm over Orion, Orion's belt becomes the eye of the Thrasz, while the four stars Saiph, Rigel, Betelgeuse and Bellatrix, becomes its four arms: Nuhrasis, Sruusis, Cthnarthetis, Galaxis. Wherein: Rubedo = Rigel, Nigredo = Saiph, Cthnarthetis = Albdeo, Galaxis = Cintrinatio.

Taurus's horn stars, Elnath and Zeta Tauri become the Sinister Master and Sinister Mistress whose Union weaves an Aeonic Formula, symbolised by the triangle central to Taurus and the bright light of Aldebaran, with the pathway star leading off symbolising the higher consciousness of Humanity by changing human history and Opening a Star Gate for the Dark Gods, as symbolised by the Tetrahedron and Inverted Cross at its feet formed by the Nine Stars of the Pleiades (visible through binoculars).

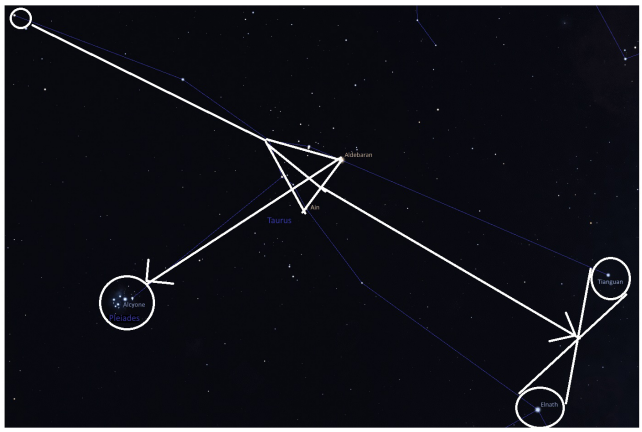
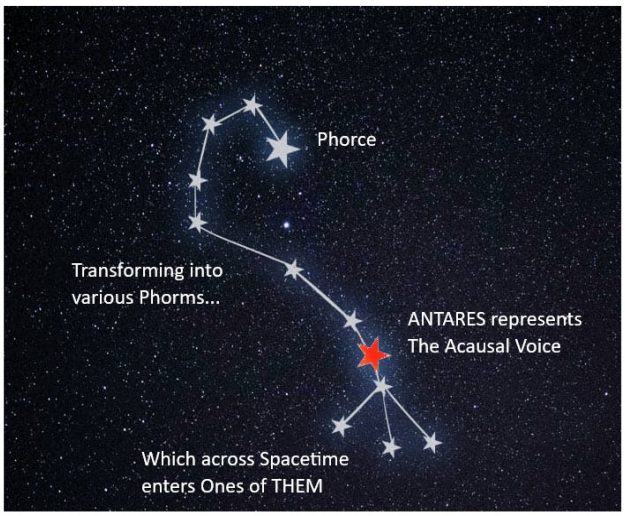
Taurus in the SH with the Pleiades on the Western Flank of Aldebaran



The Sinister Master & Mistress, whose Union creates the Evolution via an Aeonic Formula that changes human history, opening a gate to THEM

Scorpius becomes the origin of Force transforming into Forms, or the Light in the Darkness that becomes Logos, Word and fragments the Spirit into Soul (An explosion signified by the red Antares) that enters the bodies of some as Ones of THEM who are Envoys of the Acausal Voice.



In this way, the constellations are no longer upside down but oriented with a meaningful new story attached to them, becoming teaching devices for the Temple's mythos as countless cultures have done of their own accords as and when required. As the story shifts, so do other constellations suggest themselves, transforming the night sky into a living tapestry relevant to its viewer.

The reclamation of multiple constellation clusters is possible, wherein seizing Crux, the Pointer Stars, and Centaurus we recombine them into a new meaningful shape and narrative according to the Temple's mythos.

Here, THE SORCERER'S APPRENTICE is called to master Forms and Forces to reclaim the fire which is used to guide and construct space and time.

A battle must ensue with the QUADRAPUS (significator of Individuation) and reconfiguration of Vela, Carina and Puppis, to retrieve the Forceformous (Caldwell 92 Galaxy Cluster) it clutches in its tendril as the Sorcerer's Apprentice by Remembering.

The stars, were not put there for our convenience. They do not merely exist to guide us when to flow with nature or take heed of her warnings as to when to sow, reap, or hibernate. That is a humano-centric adaptation of utility, thus we have lost control of the gods we made, now the zodiac rules over us, because we have lost touch with what it was meant to be and do. Timekeeping is always relative, and we must not forget that we are stars ourselves, magicians who emanate forms, but ever apprentices forever in danger of forgetting our own magic.

Summary

Here's why 13ism effectively resolves the common mismatches:

Issue	Traditional 12-Sign Astrology	Astronomical Reality	How 13ism Addresses It
Zodiac divisions	12 equal 30° signs, symbolic	13 constellations, unequal spans	Inner wheel keeps symbolic 12 equal houses; outer wheel maps true constellation spans
Ophiuchus's place	Traditionally dropped or ignored	Sun spends ~18 days here annually	Acknowledged subtly in inner wheel markers; explicitly mapped in outer wheel
Seasonal flips (South vs North)	Typically Northern-based, ignoring Southern seasons	Sun's position same globally but seasonal context flips	Seasonal realignments baked into 13ism's structure and celebration calendar
Planetary ruler-ship/Modalities	Fixed traditional assignments	Need for reevaluation with flipped seasons and 13 signs	Inner wheel preserves traditional ruler-ships; outer wheel allows for reinterpreted or layered ruler-ship concepts
Astrological practice compatibility	Widely accepted; easy to use	Sidereal and astronomical charts differ	Dual-wheel system lets practitioners choose which "language" to use or compare

PSYNAMI

Change takes time. It takes patience. It takes effort. It takes unrelenting determination to push those things into place as the world or the will allows. These minuscule steps, one by one, inexorably toward a goal are barely noticed individually – but they soon add up. One day, with enough pushing, the small trickle suddenly becomes a flood, and that flood a destructive torrent with the force of the ocean behind it. Many people don't see the subtle signs of danger when the tide rushes out, many people don't see the bigger picture when the water begins to approach from the ocean depths on the horizon.

HAMMERS OF THE WITCHES

By my own reckoning – the Intellect is a diamond that projects a laser. Pending on the adjustments made to the setting of the diamond the arc and range of the laser can be narrowed or widened. A narrow laser is able to cut through the hardest substances, whilst a widened laser is capable of projecting complex holograms of multi-dimensional representation. The magnificent prisms that are formed via the various lasers of a collective of Intellects – can, through careful tilting of the individual prisms – be concentrated into a laser of such intensity that it cuts through time and space, but especially time.

The Temple has treated each of its individual works (each mss) as a tool to make an adjustment to existing prisms in the Matrix – adding tilt to each individual diamond or collective prism in a calculated attempt to engineer the construction of a gateway. Wherein the term gateway is descriptive it is inaccurate, denoting a doorway of some sort – wherein the gateway is actually the collapse of Reality and its forms.

This premise is that the lasers in a collective diamond prism can be turned in on themselves causing a collapse of the total hologram. To do this requires that the logical functions and courses of action and reaction of each individual diamond in the collective prism be re-oriented to direct their laser either inward all at once – or toward a singular point. The concentration of the collective lasers at a singular point cancels them out – and causes the collapse of the Matrix – this collapse of the total hologram is the equivalent of opening a 'Gateway' to another world usually hidden from view by the ceaseless projection of holograms. The ceaseless projection of holograms – of collective belief – of so many minds focused on holding up the same or similar worldview, perception or (fa) fixes the image of the world in place. A collapse is the equivalent of "psychic disruption" as spoken of in ONA mss. This collapse can be made to occur on a cultural as well as an individual level.

Although this theory might sound convoluted – like 'GBM Experiment A' (OA #31) this is a brief way to explain the work and purpose of different sets of a dozen or more manuscripts specially tailored to 'disrupt' "normal" thought and action processing in an individual or group by playing on weaknesses or appealing to strengths in existing forms. Form is key, and the collapse of Form even more key. Both internal and external – the collapse of Form is a means to presence the Dark Ones.

It was originally planned to include a selection of our core manuscripts within Crux to act as the foundation for the book – after all – the mss of THEM are key elements of our nexion. But we felt in the end that a) we'd be taking up valuable room for mss that are printed elsewhere if only one takes a little time to look, and b) we have no intention of annoying our reader by repeating such mss ad infinitum. However – for those either new to the Temple of THEM – who've read little of our work or bought Crux without knowing who we are – we designed a means to both introduce Ourselves and allow you to navigate our occult labyrinth by way of a psychic map. [The hammers are our mss – the witches – are US.]

A SUMMARY OF THE APPROACH TO BLACK MAGIC
BY THE TEMPLE OF THEM

The Tree of Wyrd has a rich and flexible symbology capable of representing many of the facets of the Nine Angles, including the 21 Dark Gods, the 'bi-furcation' of Time into acausal and causal reflexions, the Nine Angles and the Abyss, the Sphere workings and exhaustive attributed lists of correspondences all neatly captured in the Septenary Nonagonal helix of the Tree. As an early way of working with and exploring various energies attributed in abstraction to the planets used to loosely equate the raw memes – the Tree of Wyrd is a masterpiece. It also has the ability, like the pentagram, through no intention of its own, to take someone on a specific guided journey merely via its suggestive shape and the context in which it is presented. Why/How?

Such an enquiry requires asking some crucial questions: Why is it that human beings necessitate Abstracts? Why is it that Initiates begin their path by investing time, effort and faith in such concepts as the Star Game, Culling, Aeonics, or for that matter in Concepts in general? Why is it that ONA Initiates the world over follow and accept the guidelines given in Naos, or that Setians strive to abide by the complex religious instructions of the Setian Priesthood given in the Onyx Tablet, or that Laveyans dutifully copy and repeat the litanies, rituals and satanic points laid down in the Satanic Bible?

Moreover – how is it that words, language, symbols, reading, and visuals have become the dominant foundation, the gateway through which information is processed, interpreted, perceived, for any course of magic, and even any course of living to such an extent that such forms have the power to incite the basest or most sublime of human reparations and representations? A symbol can take on such power that its mere presence can enrage/inspire a people so greatly that the world is set to burn (The Swastika)– or can likewise be invested with such numinous power as to enrapture them to such a state they achieve rare heights of collective brilliance co-operation and genius (the Moon Landing / Mars Mission etc.). Likewise, laws and regulations, even the most absurd and unjust of them can be self-enforced via a steady stream of words alone.

Yet many of us live unequivocally with no knowledge of who we are, where we come from, or where we are going either individually or as a collective – trusting in the presence of familiar forms and stories to make sense of life's enigmas and to guide us. How is it that Abstractions have taken on such validity, solidity, integrity to affect us the way they do? For this is precisely what they are and what they do. Our enquiry now leads us into the fundamental apprehensions of the Temple of THEM wherein a number of hammers are necessary to break through to the other side.

THE ABYSS: NOTES

Once a higher truth/understanding has become the main drive behind a person's journey's and decisions, there comes a point when one must face the Abyss.

It seems initially we look outwards, and to the past, to try to grasp higher meaning and forgotten Knowledge. These lessons lead us to look into ourselves, for once we understand our place within that Knowledge, a deeper Knowledge of the self is sought.

Breaking down all that has one into creating a person, all structure is analysed, all behaviours, patterns, responses, relationships, endeavours and desires are coldly dissected. Once a person has seen all these things for what they are, once cannot look back. One realises that they are utterly alone in the cosmos, and ultimately an utter stranger to ourselves; for as deep as one can go inside themselves there is still a primal instinct that is not entirely of one's self.

Past dogma, environment, nature and education, there is an open sore inside of is that is not related to our personal experience.

Facing this unknowable emptiness, realising its power over you, beyond you, is facing the Abyss. It is the pool of understanding ingrained in all but looked upon by few. To allow the Abyss to swallow you is to become.

Initially facing this age-old void can be very overwhelming – something so huge and empty could surely swallow us whole, without impact? But this is not the case; for as we are swallowed, we become part of it, and it becomes part of us.

To accept our nothingness is to face the Abyss.

To understand one's true power in that nothingness is to know the Abyss.

To use and be used by that power is to become the Abyss.

A DEGREE OF SEPARATION

Before reaching the Abyss; Always are we one step removed from our inspiration; emulating/copying whom or what we desire but can never truly become. Always there remains a degree of separation; a magical difference in the charge of our nexion and that which creates what we desire.

A convenient model for this lies in the metaphor of a pond. There are those on the outer edge of a ripple caused by the tremors of a stone cast into the waters, and those on the inner; then there are those who cast the stones… a person on the outer ring seeks to be within the inner concentric where the nucleus of the nexion emanates from its source. While the inner concentric seek the same; they are also charged with the task of dispersing the ripple outward.
Let us suppose a room of people are having a conversation and comparing their level of proximity to the Source; The Acausal Voice.

"I designed a new Tarot for the Order" says the first.

"I've performed the External Adept Rite AND designed a new Tarot for the Order" says the second.

"I am an Internal Adept and have visited the Heartland of the Order" says the third.

"I was in the Heartland of the Order where I met with members from the Order and undertook the Black Pilgrimage", says the fourth.

"I am in the Order and tutor others in the Septenary Way" says the fifth.

"I am the Grand Master of the Order" says the sixth, "and all of you are under my Will to Power. And only when my consciousness is passed to you, as it was passed to me, can you ever BE what you think is me. I am the carrier of the Wellspring of the Order, the host of its creator and originator; and from my nexion has come your desire to want and have my creation and original essence as your own. My inspiration is un-attributable to another person above me; I am an emulation of Him; an ancient immortal consciousness that will see its inheritor live as I have done. As you can never be my body you can only be my Will; for the only way to get within an inch of what I am is to come unto yourself and channel the source that others desire to emulate."

Spoke then the Abyss “And He from me; I yet to be named, seen, understood or controlled by the meshes of the mind. I, whose visage is turned into the wheeling cogs of willpower; a will made possible by I alone, and impossible too.”

AD ACCUMULUM INFINITUM

The accumulation of experience is an on-going experience that can only be appreciated with the passing of time and the opportunity for retrospection. Mvimaedivm was supposed to convey three separate archetypes [co-existing beyond linear time] that embodied various stages of development that for convenience were grouped into separate stages of causal age, 12-19, 19-21, 21-28. The book itself means more to its writer than to its “audience” – acting as a catalogue for the various notions held dear at various times throughout life. The result of reading ones past follies may elicit a chuckle and if one is lucky: help evolve an understanding of life as a river of shifting miasma that carried the organism along in its current whereby the hapless being snatched in vain at the various twigs and logs from the Tree of Life floating by as they drifted toward oblivion [Qv. Sechnacht].

If you are twenty now, you can expect to change your mind about what is what for the rest of your life. Think of your experience as a life so far. As a child you grew and grew mentally stage by stage, assessing, discarding, adding etc until you were a teen. You continued to do that until now – and in your young age you will no doubt exhibit the tendency to rationalise, look for absolutes, and entrench yourself in your own self-importance. And it is natural to do so. Remember what you have written today, and remember to look back on it when you are 21, 25, 30 etc. And it will reveal to you something that you, by virtue of being in time with yourself, cannot hope to see until maturity, age and change have taken you far from where you stand in your castle of ideas, to other lands wild and fanciful – that in many ways bear no resemblance to the self-ideal you treasured at the age of twenty.

There is a danger at your age especially, of the ego trying to solidify itself and fix the world just so. Something that you may only notice when you, like me, can look back on the overall geometry of your words and writing: for therein lies a secret arcane language that despite itself and what it wants to communicate, cannot help but communicate something altogether different beneath the words to the initiated. People forget easily that they grew and grew as a child, adding, subtracting but always changing, renewing ideas re-evaluating etc. I urge aspirants: do not forget that link with your past. In your travels that are yet to come, do not let your ego solidify itself at the age of twenty and walk you around possessed with a static view of the world. I guarantee you will change your mind on your views again and again as you get older. Nothing is permanent. And will one day, look back on your places of bricks and mortar as the foundation of your pyramid of skulls.

INTO THE MOUTH OF MADNESS

What Crowley knew as Aiwaz what Jung knew as Philemon, we know as THEM. Ritual Magic is a by-product, a dance around the true fire one should be seeking but masks with their ignorance and fear of what the fire represents – the incest wish.

One removes that ignorance with the journey inward and by learning the language of the dreams. There is a correlation between the form and intensity of demons, gods and angels as external manifestations and the maturity of the psyche and its particular stage of individuation.

We perceive that there is an externality and an internality – but we do not recognise that what is External is in fact of the origin of what is Internal – and what is Internal is in fact the origin of what is External. We cannot evolve if we cannot control our projections and learn to speak again with the Gods – with THEM – those supra personal forces bastardised now beyond all recognition but always contained within the Gate that some of us are.

How did the Sumerians manage to achieve what they achieved? Through a direct connection with THEM – that Voice that guides, admonishes and is the source of all the greatest genius – the Voice that informed Sumerians how to write, Egyptians how to move impossible weights – but we have long lost, long clouded that Voice. Our libidos are mad – all manner of outward flailing saps our time and energy, distracting and diverting us from the treasure within. Where no tools are needed but patience, self-honesty, understanding and psychic integration. Where no wands, no cards, no circles, no words are required but to watch, to listen, to consciously try to bridge the gap between the consciousness and the underworld.

What is Nuit and Hadit but Jung's principle of the Libido. What is Ra-Hoor-Khuit but the fabled formula of the philosopher's stone all but Jung danced around – came so close – even spoke all the right words and grasped the right actions but Acknowledgement of the Function and Goal of the Libido? Each Sage before us has added a piece gradually making this terrible secret known in an atmosphere developed by THEM of chaos, horror, decline – the only possible environment where the taboo could be unveiled without severe shock to the conscious psyche – the only possible environment that would desensitise some to the horror and shock of such realisation – the only possible environment in which such things could be explored and reveal themselves amid a frenzy of satanic flailing in a turgid sea of occult masturbation that forced a few from the filthy waters to break through to the Source of THEM.

The HGA or High Guardian Angel is the Keeper, the Guardian of the Threshold. This Temple's Work so far as consisted not of depth from its insights – but in the daunting, unsatisfying, depressing chore of First, alone before all else, removing the layers and layers of forms and spider webbed husks of Egotism and delusion from those who would seek to join us ON it. The Threshold has many meanings and it occurs many times – but there is only one Authentic Threshold and that is the private journey inward on a raft of dreams and a prepared consciousness toward the Abyss – to venture into that place where the Conscious meets the Unconscious and Individuates.

The Tree of Life is of limited help here – The correlations often drawn between Planet and Task are damaging more than anything else – with neophytes armed with the idea that one must/needs summon a number of demons and will then reach Gnosis when they reach the final sphere Saturn, is ludicrous, a violent distraction, a mis-codification of the Way. That is not work, that is phantasy, it is not a bridge, it is a delusion. No actual work is done without the prolonged aid of the Subconscious and not just over the course of a year, or several years, but at least half a lifetime – age changes perspective and Nothing will bring that earlier than it can arise – hence Sath's comment that only those over 30 should join THEM.

That one need meet, challenge, integrate the Shadow, Manifest the Animus/A, Overcome the Imago of the Mother/Father, Withdraw Projections, Balance the Ego, Yolk or Free the Will, Adapt, Endure, Struggle, Unite Opposites, See beyond Form, Exhaust Form, Bind Contradictions, Learn, Awaken, Question and finally Know takes a long time and unrelenting effort. The Ego lies but the subconscious does not. The conscious acknowledgement of what Jung called the Libido and the Incest Wish are Key – conscious and honest communication with the Unconscious is Key – to listen to and learn to divine the meanings of ones dreams, as warnings, guides, statements, or separate them from phantasies, wishes, delusion – to control and compartmentalise the Psyche – That is what makes an Adept.

Only a genuine desire to do the Work will get someone there – the Egos of most are egg-shell fragile, lazy, or completely and utterly misguided in what is to be achieved and how. One cannot tack on the wisdom and growth someone else gives them – if they go to this place where THEY Dream unprepared – they can expect only the greatest suffering. The admonishments and devilry of the subconscious have woken many an apparently immovable physical god screaming and covered in sweat.
Its power cannot be underestimated because it will not let itself be underestimated. All that is has been built on these functions, on the libido, the fuck-lens that obscures us from allotting our energy differently, freely, and the very possession of consciousness and the tendrils of the unconscious that don't care if we believe in Them. But we MUST BELIEVE in Them because they are of us and not of us – they are the gate to genius or to madness – they are the DARKENED GODS THEMSELVES.

And when we do not understand this – we see them everywhere but within, as ghosts, as demons, as apparitions, visions, spectres – and when we seem them outside, it only means something inside is missing. If we are to build a pyramid of skulls, we are to understand the needs of the Builders, to ask it what stones it needs, what we need to do on the other side of the veil in the waking world to feed it, please it, grow it, expand it – for as we do, so too does our consciousness explode outward – and as that changes, our dreams change until we stand physically, mentally, spiritually in the place, the divide that the Temple of THEM, call the Threshold.

Crowley, Long, LaVey they all brought something else, something new, a unique brick to pave the stairway to the stars but they ALL danced around the fire gradually making the flames higher to force this realisation into consciousness but Not one of them embraced it and dared to steal it, to stand and endure the heat to burn in it. JUNG, and Only Jung, Knew. One cannot read his work without being fascinated because he was Right. Because he was Honest – alone among all occult writers or those who would seek to understand and bring knowledge of what he found – only Jung spoke in plain English without standing in circles, whispering to figments of imagination or imagination manifesting as figments, without burning candles and incense and worrying about the rotation of the stars or the sign of the moon… His direct and prolonged study of the deepest, rawest, darkest aspects of the human being afforded him the greatest insight man has ever produced. He alone – KNEW and he Voiced it without veils or dance. He stood directly in the fire and burned. He was an occultist beyond measure but not recognised as such. Does this Temple know the language of the Abyss – yes. Have we seen the Threshold – the releasing of the Libido from Childhood – the divide between unconscious and conscious realms in the psyche – yes, we have experienced the symbolism.

NO CHOICE BUT THEIST:
DARK GODS, BLACK MAGIC, ORGASM AND SEX

[This article was submitted to ANATHEMA PUBLISHING for their visually stunning publication PILLARS: III – The Ebon Kteis, with this edition focused on La Petit Mort, the Little Death associated with Orgasm.]

By Various Members of the Temple of THEM [Themon, Anorha, Krist Hollow]

The Dark Gods are alive in our estimation and in our experience. We know them as THEM. They are neither simple nor imaginary, and pending the Sorcerers state of mind arrive with a soul-changing coldness as manifestations that scar one with unforgettable feeling of The Other or are felt in the very fabric of the world as a pantheon of hidden operant forces. Performing Magic in THEIR Name is to seek empathy with these forces, for when Successful the Earth acts differently toward the Sorcerer(s) and Synchronicity rushes in altering Events, Offering Signs, to produce a Dream-Like Quality to Reality. Our Temple exists to worship THEM in all of Their Myriad Complexity. In aid of this we record our experiences and try to isolate the Keys that transform failed attempts to Know THEM, into terrifying ordeals that scar the memory leaving no choice but Theism; no comfortable option of intellectual speculation to deny They exist. This commentary will touch on some of those Keys and remark on the link between Dark Gods, Black Magic, Sex and the Orgasm.

Orgasm, Ego and the Little Death

The Orgasm: an extraordinary phenomenon historically, sexually, magically. An extremely pleasurable experience with an inordinate amount of sorcery-based power. Long associated with Sex and Death by the occult world there are a vast number of theories from all corners as to why. This section or the article will share our own understanding of the matter. To begin with a Wikipedia article relates:

Curiously, in French literature, the term la petite mort (the little death) is a famous euphemism for orgasm;[141] it is the representation of man who forgets himself and the world during orgasm."

There is almost always some grounding for these ancient associations. Where what seems curious to us because we have most likely forgotten or lost the connection to the past from which we have inherited such lore is remembered or known by those who work with sex magick and/or dark arts in which the mystique is revealed through practice. Those arts that require us to Know Thyself and bring the thundering phenomenon of the sovereign Ego down to bear on the shining Self require the courage to unleash various demons by various methods of alchemy and introspection that drive home the interconnected network of our body and our mind. The necessity to understand their respective functions to become as a Temple to THEM. The orgasm has many magical utilities, whether it is by withholding it, indulging it, prolonging it, makes significant difference to magickal works.

It is highly doubtful the reader is devoid of the literally "mind-blowing" experience or definition of an Orgasm – but as it is important to the following work, here is a suitable explanation of the male orgasm.

As a man nears orgasm during stimulation of the penis, he feels an intense and highly pleasurable pulsating sensation of neuromuscular euphoria. These pulses begin with a throb of the anal sphincter and travel to the tip of the penis. They eventually increase in speed and intensity as the orgasm approaches, until a final "plateau" (the orgasmic) pleasure sustained for several seconds. The length of a man's orgasm has been estimated at 10-5 seconds on average, though it is possible for them to last up to 30 seconds. During orgasm, a human male experiences rapid, rhythmic contractions of the anal sphincter, the prostate, and the muscles of the penis. The sperm are transmitted up the vas deferens from the testicles, into the prostate gland as well as through the seminal vesicles to produce what is known as semen. The prostate produces a secretion that forms one of the components of ejaculate. Except for in cases of a dry orgasm, contraction of the sphincter and prostate force stored semen to be expelled through the penis. The process takes from three to ten seconds and produces a pleasurable feeling. Ejaculation may continue for a few seconds after the euphoric sensation gradually tapers off. It is believed that the exact feeling of "orgasm" varies from one man to another. Normally, as a man ages, the amount of semen he ejaculates diminishes, and so does the duration of orgasms. This does not normally affect the intensity of pleasure, but merely shortens the duration. After ejaculation, a refractory period usually occurs, during which a man cannot achieve another orgasm. This can last anywhere from less than a minute to several hours or days, depending on age and other individual factors.

Here are descriptions of the sensation of orgasm from each gender.

Male – "Orgasm is difficult to describe since it does not exist purely in a single location and is neither entirely physical nor entirely mental. A tickling (not one directional) but as if a small ball whose surface is tickling outward in all directions can be felt in the area between anus and testicles, it grows in size spreading outward in a diffused 'glow' down my thighs and becomes warm. Simultaneously, stimulation of my cock or balls excites nerve bundles that lead to a similar tickling of heat inside them that tightens my groin muscles and buttocks, meanwhile the visuals excite the experience until the tickling begins to expand as a throbbing felt in the balls, anus, groin (and my head which is psychologically stimulated) and that feeling slowly travels upward along the shaft of the penis to the tip, which grows very hot as if vibrated on some atomic level like tiny metal beads shaking on a metal plate but so small the metal cannot be felt – then my body writhes, my hips buck, my balls tighten, my breath becomes short and sharp, and my semen explodes outward in a stream."

Female – "When I orgasm it grows and shudders through my entire body like a small fire that starts to glow low in my groin, then trails up to my brain, finally erupting in a fireball that engulfs my entire mind and body…and although the sensation is evoked through clit and nipple stimulation, they are not necessarily the most heightened areas during actual orgasm, when I cum i feel it through all of me, all at once….mentally and physically. Seems like men's orgasms aren't nearly as good… and I can have three different types of orgasm…though clitoral ones are the most intense, that deep uterian one I have spoken of seems more like a male orgasm, as it is most localised and though it teeters on the edge of engulfing the entire core of me, it's not quite the same."

While descriptive and interesting in themselves, knowing the intimate process of one's own orgasm is essential to sorcery. And it is a brief moment during orgasm that la petit mort concerns. Both of these above descriptions relate sensations that grip body and the mind, working the organism into a frenzied state of excitement, resulting in ejaculation and/or orgasm. The sublime moment of orgasm, engenders a state of release, relaxation and euphoria and it is here, at the pinnacle of the orgasm that we find la petit mort – the little death.

The story of assassins executing their targets during the distracting engagement of coitus is widely known – for during sex the body is both exposed and vulnerable more so when that moment of orgasm requires the entire body and mind to give over to a brief window of ecstasy during which a person can do absolutely nothing but be rocked by its passage. In effect, their whole being is physically blinded and bound up in pleasure for just a moment, often only a few seconds, lost in the violent throes of a powerful sedative; but it is enough time and the perfect time for the assassin to strike.

Many targets, highly suspicious of assassination and surrounded by armed guards and security measures have been dispatched by falling for the charms of a beautiful assailant. Through the allure of sex, they have been led to drop their guard, dismiss their protectors, abandon their weapons, remove their clothes and walk willingly to their place of execution naked and exposed for the chance to experience the ecstasy of la petit mort. There is no question of its allure, and the following extract offers a scientific explanation as to why assassins favoured it.

"A study examined 12 healthy women using a positron emission tomography (PET) scanner while they were being stimulated by their partners. Brain changes were observed and compared between states of rest, sexual stimulation, faked orgasm, and actual orgasm. "Differences were reported on the brain changes associated with men and women during stimulation. However, the same changes in brain activity were observed in both sexes in which the brain regions associated with behavioural control, fear and anxiety shut down. Regarding these changes, Holstege said, in an interview with The Times, "What this means is that deactivation, letting go of all fear and anxiety, might be the most important thing, even necessary, to have an orgasm." – Wikipedia: La Petit Mort

Letting go is an understatement but it is an apt lead-in. Now we must ask, why orgasm and "forgetting oneself and the world" has been associated with Death? If we can understand this then we can further understand the appellation 'petit' or 'Little'. It's obviously not the causal death of the orgasmer – that would by rights be the 'Big Death'. So, it is a separate death from biological extinction. And why should forgetting the world even for a moment be equated with death at all? The term 'Little' while referring to a comparison separate from actual death, also refers to a particular duration, a small or minuscule moment in time. In Our Tradition the answer to La Petit Mort lies with the Ego.

Sigmund Freud with his psychoanalytic projects, in “The Ego and the Id” (1923), speculates that sexual satisfaction by orgasm make Eros (“life instinct”) exhausted and leaves the field open to Thanatos (“death instinct”), in other words, with orgasm Eros fulfils its mission and gives way to Thanatos.

In Our Tradition – the Ego is a powerful, unflinching, sovereign emperor of the Mind. It exists to monitor all things around it and its functional purpose is to act in ways that preserve its homeostasis, its Ideal sense of who it is; both in relation to ourselves and to the external world. It does not like its Ideal to be disturbed and does everything in its power to prevent this – particularly if a person has a large Ego, which makes it far more sensitive to having its Ideal disrupted. Such disruptions equate to challenges, assaults, slights on its sovereignty, i.e. being told that ‘we’ (being the ego that acts through us) are wrong, can motivate the ego into action very quickly, for it is always on the lookout for attacks against it even when there may be none, because these are extremely painful for it – felt as bruising in our most sensitive spot. Such bruises can quickly summon apoplectic rage in our defence. These is power and danger in an ego that is sensitive. The Sorcerer aims to make themselves as sensitive as possible to the forces and undercurrents of life governed by THEM; thus the ego is not as easily hurt but also allows for maximum seerage and empathy; though this can lead to feeling these currents very strongly even when others cannot, as if to them you are blown about by an invisible wind.

The Warrior by contrast trains to make themselves insensitive to these currents, to overcome all things by brute force and physical straining, this empathy that is also experienced as pain. They rely on raw muscle and aggression, making themselves unable to feel these currents, but correspondingly amass an armour of ego to protect their undeveloped sensitivity – which is all too easily injured and provoked to react. There is little difference between the Sorcerer and Warrior but the purpose for their muscle, the way they train and why.

The dichotomy of the muscled warrior and the feeble wizard is false. To summarise: who we are, is driven and controlled by our Ego and its unique sense of psychic equilibrium as to how things must be to remain who we are and not just from our point of view, but also in the eyes of others. The ego uses validation as a measuring stick of equilibrium. Some Egos are more flexible, resilient than others, but of those that are firm, rigid, fixed – straying too far from this ideal is much like the danger of the body temperature rising a few degrees, deadly – something our organism seeks to avoid at all costs. And whether it is gently poked, accidentally bumped, or deliberately provoked – nothing fights back like a hurt ego. It is operant at all times, watching over all things to monitor equilibrium and avoid things that will upset its careful balance.

It is a truism that we need a healthy ego to do most things we do – it gives us the sense of direction, orientation, discipline and self-belief that is required. Too much ego and we risk hubris, a massive fall from grace; too little and we are easily controlled by others, defenceless against manipulation through forms and people's wiles. This inner gyroscope of personality could also be likened to the fierce eye of Sauron from Lord of the Rings, a baleful eye that observes and controls everything we do.

It is deathly afraid of doing anything that relinquishes its control and omnipresence. So much so that when the Self is referred to, it is often the ego in disguise. The ego is our engine room and our driver, it is a crucial aspect of the tremendous survival instinct that some people have, but its absolute rule comes at the cost of myriad human follies. Such an eye remains open, staring, sensitive (and reactive) to the most minor changes lest it be forgotten and replaced. Now what if we were to close that all-seeing Eye for just a moment? Generally, this is not allowed to happen. The Ego prevents it. Like a stern master guiding us away from our own control panel. But during Orgasm that Eye does shut. Orgasm equates to the temporary dislocation of the Ego from its control seat, long enough for a moment of Self to be felt. I.e. in that tiny moment of ecstatic blissful state, we are entirely aware only of our orgasm and nothing else. There is no thinking, no distraction, no inner chatter, just bliss. One point of view would be that the Ego gives us this pleasure.

Another, and Ours, is that to get the Ego to move, to shut up, to relinquish control for even just a fraction of time, delivers us into the realm of the Self for just a brief window where we are Free of our Thoughts, our need to be who we are, the fear, anxiety, doubt, babbling of the normal mind – it is all released. This is ultimately a terrifying experience for the Ego, which hastens to rush back in immediately after, but which very brief absence, may signify why it is called the little death – for it is neither a lasting state of deactivation nor very long.

But look at what is required just to open that window and silence the Ego for even a moment. To over-ride it. While the ego does not want to relinquish control of our psyche as the main operator, it can be cajoled into doing so by the pleasures of sex and the ego-boost it derives from it. This is built to a frenzied pitch of self-adulation which erupts, silencing the ego momentarily, before it rushes back in. The excitement of our sex organs and psychological sexual organs to the point of climax can be a short or lengthy task, but it's certainly not guaranteed. Were it just a matter of coitus itself we should not have need for the stimulation of the body and mind via foreplay, petting, fellatio/cunnilingus, suggestion, BDSM, and the principles of pain, pleasure, power, required to reach the required state. For some, orgasm is very difficult or even unheard of. The orgasm as key to an altered state has been recognised as a crucial component in psychic expansion. As to have the stages either side of actual climax.

Tantric sex, which is not the same as Buddhist tantra (Vajrayana), is the ancient Indian spiritual tradition of sexual practices. It attributes a different value to orgasm than traditional cultural approaches to sexuality. Some practitioners of Tantric sex aim to eliminate orgasm from sexual intercourse by remaining for a long time in the pre-orgasmic and non-emission state. Advocates of this, such as Rajneesh, claim that it eventually causes orgasmic feelings to spread out to all of one's conscious experience.

Some seek to toy with this extraordinary release, to increase the window time, to heighten the sensation, to spiritually advance self-awareness and many other aims within variations of sexual magic. For example, it is possible not to orgasm by throwing the ego away from oneself, by disassociating one's gratification, participation and location from the pleasurable sensations of sex by seeing oneself from Outside, as an Other. Or observer.

The gratification we get from fucking pleasures the ego, which in turn excites us and make us want to come, but to last longer, leaving our body by dislodging our organism from its ego delimits the sense of being gratified in lieu of gratifying another; it shifts ones consciousness/ego which might be concentrated in their penis, outward, as if not part of the act at all; whereas during sex, consciousness/ego is usually shifted to the sex organs.

Orgasm can also be controlled by breathing differently, using the standard 1,2,3,4, technique, of breath in (count to 4), hold it (count to 4), breathe out, (count to 4), hold it, (count to 4) repeat. This simple exercise is often used in our meditation because it allows the ego to be shut down, since all that is concentrated upon is the breath control and the autonomous action of thrusting the pelvis, automatic and effortless stimuli such as hands on the breasts, tweaking nipples, kissing the back of the neck – none of these require much thought or energy. This would be a very poor guide to sex, but it hopefully serves to illustrate the involvement of other organs in occult sex such as the lungs, heart and mind.

Thus for the ego, holding itself in a tightly strained muscular centrality is like having a muscle tensed, ready to combat and confront threats to its sovereignty – fear and anxiety come from the ego, they are generated as tools to provide fuel for the autonomic nervous system the flight/fight system – with all the fear and anxiety as rippled biceps or poised for sprinting – powering its functions to protect its world view from threats. It fears being challenged, and the anxiety of unrelenting threats to self-identity justifies that fear. The ego is as a somewhat domesticated animal – it enjoys being petted above all things, being assured of its own identity, engaging in things that complement its specific individual (and collective) geometry – but rubbed the wrong way, put in a cage, or accused it will turn into a spitting snarling fury of claws and teeth.

For the ego to submit its power to another function requires an incredible deal of control to be relinquished: and it is perhaps in these very brief windows when the ego is either over-ridden by the Self or allows itself to be over-ridden that it is silent and non-active. The state of No-thinking, Zen, silent mind, Gunningap, etc all come to mind in the occult as the most sublime for the lack of internal chatter and the release of the ego through abandoning self-identity of a human-centric nature. This moment of no-mind has been variously described as bliss, euphoria, nirvana, heaven, samsara.

It is registered in account after account as timeless, being one, connected to the source, a letting go. Unless one deliberately meditates, or is caused great pain, trauma, sorrow, fright, surprise, during orgasm is the closest humans get to this state of no-mind, and for the ego, while temporary, it would be as death – for it exists to strive against all shutting down of its faculties. Thus, what dies, is its sovereignty, for just a moment, and how much it takes to wrest it from it!

And when it does, how great the relief! As if life could spring forward from the doors of a previously locked, shackled and straight-jacketed prison in the dark, brooding, gnawing chambers of the needy, anxiety ridden, neurotic, insane, ego. As if for a moment one could turn off the screaming din of being at its behest and witness, in slow motion, silent and timeless, a fraction of experience without it. For we need it, to achieve orgasm, but it departs from us ever so briefly when we do, only to return quickly, ushering in emotions, reflections, assumptions, and so on – to pick up the crown it dropped and rule again with an iron fist, taking prisoner inside it once more all the fear and anxiety it had of being dethroned, again.

Facets of the Gem

Controlling orgasm as a means of sex magic is not easy – having become familiar with my own body's processes and sensations of approaching orgasm it has been possible to know the very intimate bodily and mental sensations that will be felt on the very edge of ejaculation – but stepping back from that precipice of ecstasy can be very difficult. There is a continuum where orgasm can be stopped, and a thin no-return line where it can't be. It can be very difficult to control the reception of pleasure, and this is indicative of the inability of a lot of men to be unable to withdraw in time or at will from sex before ejaculation. But to please the Dark Gods, this ability is paramount.

Having performed an ordeal that lasted three months of chronic daily masturbation but without release taught me a great deal about the agony and power of holding off – but this was not a masochistic indulgence for its own sake but related to an ancient belief in the lingering aura of sexual energy to summon the Dark Ones known as THEM and ask of them a favour. The ability to utilise sexual power does not just come from the more human-centric pleasure of releasing it through orgasm, but from the more inhuman agony of withholding it indefinitely – a form of Black Tantra.

I mention herein three stages that use orgasm as an ingredient; one and the most common which is considered human, two of which are considered by our dark tradition to be far more likely to evoke and draw dark entities near and inhuman.

The first is the staving off release, (known as 'edging' in BDSM circles) where the physical orgasm is deliberately delayed or refused. This is an inhuman sexual act – it excites the dark ones and calls them near, especially so to feast on the pre-cum that lubricates the genitals from either sex as the body is excited pre-coitus. They are drawn to the energetic intensity created by sexual tension.

The second stage is considered the human one, the one sought after by most, certainly ecstatic, but of less bargaining power in relation to the dark ones – for it is normal for them to eat these energies. Typical of them to cause them.

The third, is perhaps the most excruciating, (known as 'milking' in BDSM circles) wherein the genitals are forced to orgasm and then continually stimulated until intense pain from overload of sensation due to the increased sensitivity. This is rumoured to be a most powerful means of evoking and drawing manifestation of THEM near and is a form of sexual torture.

These arts are best employed whilst engaging in additional ritual displays of sex or death. Artist Marina Abromovic's work focuses on the obscene and the inherent power of genital displays suggestive that these are all that's required. To combine these displays with a primal connection to the earth is not difficult to imagine. Thus, anal and vaginal violations whilst gripping a tree, clawing the ground, touching water, being whipped with branches, sex and orgasm in the rain, the sea, the wind, naked – in essence, being in contact with the natural forces while having sex is the key principle, with all energies being directed into the earth and nature, or upward to the stars, or both. a bloody cunt fucked, and the blood used to make signs on the body or earth, anal gaping, rape, semen spray, drinking cum, orgy and excess are natural celebrations of THEM. Obscene toys and figures, blunted crucifix used to stuff holes with, bible/Koran pages stuffed up the cunt and ass of men and women, then removed and burned and other such blasphemies and so on.

This type of worship, however, is to celebrate THEM from a dualistic point of view – to view these things as deliberately blasphemous or provocative or somehow taboo is to see the reigning repression of sex as the measuring stick – and try to rage against it by inverting its values. THEM don't care about humans, or how we worship THEM, we are conduits, means to an end for THEM. It doesn't matter whether you kill millions or sit on your ass loving God for your entire life – they do not have favourites as everything humans do is essentially the same to them. They are indifferent to all the forms we traverse in Their name or against it. What makes any difference, is Empathy with THEM. Living in a way that recognises them, recognises our role as food for them, means for them to evolve its own kind which are not another race or species of demon or ghost but that and many things besides.

"As she pleasured me, I sat forward and clasped her head between my hands, her long red hair flowing through my fingers. I summoned into my hands all that was the old Her; a red energy filling her body and began to push it toward her lower back using my hands as a gesture of release. As I did, I imagined her body filling with glowing white light. Assembled at the base of her spine the red energy was ready to be released. The cold rain fell on our naked bodies"

Thus, it should be noted that merely performing these types of worship of themselves has no real power to attract the Dark Ones. Having sex with intent to call THEM often fails too, or results in lesser shades being drawn to the site.

The real magic comes from reorienting ones entire paradigm toward THEM creating great empathy – it is our dedication to the many different forms of THEM and our wholistic embrace of them; i.e. awareness of the particular nature of gravity on our body, the wyrdness of synchronicity that offers signs to indicate right path, the ferocity of natural elements such as weather that put men in their place, the drive to obtain multiplicity in the psyche and oust the Ego from control so that many functions can be used at will, the understanding of the vanity of humanity and the power that comes from the inhuman, and living in a way that champions and exalts these and many other aspects that embody the Temple of THEM: that successfully causes them to arrive. An Arrival which is ultimately Their Choice.

"Then in a cold voice that I know very well as the voice of someone suddenly intruded upon by something unsettling to the soul – Anorha suddenly asked where I was. There was terror edging through in her voice, held back waiting for my answer, but I could hear it, feel it filling her. She was only a few feet away, holding on to a tree. I could not see her, but I knew where approximately she was from her voice. When I replied, 'I'm here', she said, in a dead pleading voice, 'wave to me'. When I did, She and I both realised whatever she could see, it wasn't me." – Rain Magic*K and a Visitation from THEM

April 10th ev. Ritual Extraction performed at location Lake Aosoth, in Southeast Victoria, Australia.
Sightings: yes.
Messages: no.
Desc: mistress sees and describes white ‘wooden’ figures of both great and small size. And a very very old power that manifest as a white ‘woman’. Reported as very dangerous and seeking a way back into her to infest her with dark tendrils, undoing the rite just performed.
Time: After midnight. Completion of ritual at exactly 1.11am.
Effects: Sheer Terror and Subsequent Belief in THEM due to change of perception via direct experience.
The Dark Ones, whatever THEY are, however many forms THEY take, choose all things. It does not seem to matter how dark, twisted or tortured a soul is, even then they may never see the Devil. Or the forms from which the Legend of the Devil derives. You can argue all you like, but when you are standing face to face in a confrontation with One of THEM, there is no doubt and never will be.

If there is such a thing as specific principles to work with or access THEM then there are certainly a set of keys. The reality is, that if you have not had a paranormal experience and met with any of the dark forces that inhabit other planes, you have no reason to believe in them, and thusly your logical mind does not experience the crack that such visitations bring, your mind and perception of reality stay intact, and act as a shield or seal against such visitations. When you Have had such a visitation, it is impossible to deny, because being paranormal, the unsettling inability to provide logical explanation leaves you in a state of knowing there is Something more than what we know, and yet having to endure the day-to-day necessity to deny it to live in a certain world.

The difference between seeing something paranormal and being scarred by what you felt from it is vast. This line, this kind of experience is what separates the Theistic believer in Satanic forces as deities, energies, demons, devils, entities that manifest on our plane of perception through various incarnations, veils, soft spots in the world where such denizens slip through and confront us – and the believer in Satanic forces who sees the paradigm of Satanism as culturally metaphorical, as a set of values, a way of living, as an apologist, as an application of rationale and reason, logic and intelligence; a dismissal of ghosts/goblins as antiquated or tricks of the mind; other variations are virtually endless but they do not involve the change of effect from visitations. The term blood-curdling is over-used but it is very apt. To come face to face with One of THEM, and that includes satanic entities, entirely alters one’s ability to discount them.

Whether you believe Satan is a real force that haunts, hunts, possesses, works evil and kills as a literal demon changes everything. I have not seen Satan. I have seen only dark forces and spectres that may or may not be part of or associated with Him; a handful of times over the course of my life; and felt the terror that curdles the blood, witnessed the suspension of physics that accompanies such visitations and passed through the aftermath of having to deal with them. It is to defend something that the majority of people have not experienced and have no reason to believe exists who have not felt what you have felt.

"She'd later say that there had been white figures in the forest all night, like the one that rushed at her at the lake gate, but it was the smallest one that gave her the overwhelming feeling of horror. What she had seen on the hill was different, very very old, a white "woman". Perhaps for the first time she had felt the bone-chilling presence of these magical forces I know as Them."

Why do THEY manifest? What makes THEM arrive? It seems Destiny, Wyrd and an overcoming of the human-centric perspective are requisite, a born path to know them, and understand them in the strange esoteric language they speak in Mystery and Geometry. I have been a central point in poltergeist activity, my disturbed tremendum quaking space around it to cause small explosions, repeated smashing of things, things being lost and reappearing, things falling down and others experiencing acts of or THEM themselves. I have seen Them numerous times, at first as spectres that bring a creeping frozen ice to the fire of the soul and now through my work with THEM diffused as forces into all things. Having practiced dark sex magic before, the stark lack of vividness and depth from a dearth of understanding precluded many deliberate attempts to call Demons or the Devil. Sex and/or drugs alone, even powerful sex and/or drugs, ritual sex, orgasmic sex seems not to have the effect of drawing the Dark Ones near or having them manifest. It seems that only individuals with an exceptional union, one that crackles and brings storms and impossible signs, whose sexual energy is inhuman/voracious have enough attractant – perhaps those who accord themselves with a life-centred humility in the face of the tremendous forces beyond the human is requisite. The elements of Eros and Thanatos, Sex and Death were crucial – but not exclusive. However, when you find a key to such obscure gates, you remember and you twist it. We shall proceed to examine these keys more closely.

"...I asked him to violate me. With my hands flat on the cold, muddy earth I could feel Owy clinging on, suddenly not ready to go, and I worked through to find all the pieces of her, to make her complete so I could rid myself of her. This took some time, and although my masters fingers were in both my anus and cunt, it was in no way a 'intimate sexual experience', but the only act powerful enough to kill Owy. As his movements became more violent, my ability to both contract myself and push Her out of me and into the earth grew."

There is a Tradition taught to me by a Sorceress of THEM: an ancient tale regarding the power of a vow to the gods by man relating to the gift of synchronicity and the unleashing of those gods on that man of other signs of empathy guiding such individuals toward and through the Abyss to Great Power. According to this Tradition of Sorcery – the keys to summoning the Dark Ones are Sex and Death. Sex and Death, are tides of energy that if sufficiently stored up, can allow brief, or even permanent escape from the Cosmic Being, or one's Destiny/Wyrd – allowing one to implement their own. The Cosmic Being is like a vortex that seeks to devour the energy of each human being and draw them and their energy back into its Unity. Sex and Death are its breathing pattern of inhalation/exhalation. Perceived this way, the Cosmic Being is the force that magicians must try to escape from in order to become Immortal, or Acausal.

The causal acts of Sex/Death release the stored energy of an individual back into the collective. The way to free oneself from that Unity is to abstain from sex. Or rather, to abstain from orgasm, while still generating sexual energy, either by masturbation, or sex without ejaculation. This lingering threshold of stored sexual energy tempts or lures the Cosmic Being to try to take it from us. Because of this, the magician can bargain with the Cosmic Being for certain favours to be bestowed [a vow] before they will give up that energy. In this way – the Dark Ones can be enticed to manifest in the presence of a magician by the lure of sexual energy generated before orgasm – or the co-mingling of the pre-sexual liquids of the female, and the pre-cum of the male – and kept manifest by the repeated generation of this most powerful elixir. This limpid 'juice' is believed to be one of the most powerful elixirs in magical practice.

The basic premise of the sorcery at hand is in the power of Word/Wyrd and using the gathering and release of sexual tension to entice the Cosmos (via the vehicle of the Dark Ones) to manifest one's actual living Anima/Animus in the flesh after enough sexual energy has been stored to cause a significant disturbance to the flow of the Cosmic tides of Sex and Death. It is for this reason I undertook the so-called Ordeal of Nine Moons and after three months manifest Anorha, the Mistress with whom I have been unified for eight years. The energy/synchronicity between us is utterly extraordinary, the air around us crackles with electricity and wyrdness embodies everything we do – and that she came to me due to the sorcery of dark magic is likely to be the difference why THEM are more attracted to our union(s). Our proximity and empathy with THEM is something we both live – an elegant dance of life's energies – that does not harbour the illusion of control.

"In the dark rain with those burning eyes watching us leave a powerful ritual she met with Them. And for it, she will never be the same. No-one is."

Ordeal of the Ninth Moon

The Ordeal of the Ninth Moon is primarily designed for males – not out of any intended predilection or chauvinism but because the mysteries of the female aspects remain shrouded and could only be divulged by direct exploration and experiment by each Sorceress. Here the female reader is prompted to look into what Jung has to say about the Anima/Animus wherein he even proposed there being multiple Anima's within the feminine psyche. After all, what is the Anima/Animus, if not the sum of all that one lacks, the sum of all one's deficits, a non-being which paradoxically starts to have a real existence, to sharpen one's libido and define one's value system?

The Ordeal begins by the act of giving your Word before your Wyrd (or swearing a vow to the Dark Ones) that you will control your sexuality for a period of time. In this case – nine months. The vow not to indulge in any sexual activity outside the context of magick means that you will use masturbation only in a ritual context – for invocation and evocation only. If a male – one may begin by drawing a pentagram with an erect cock – the phallus being the natural wand of the male magickian it should be used accordingly. If female – one may begin by drawing a pentagram with a finger greased with the liquids of the vagina. Thus is the visualisation energised and brought to life.

"I could feel it, see it, sitting there, staring into me, trying to find a tiny point in me to capture or infest. It seemed predatory. Greedy. Small and almost wooden, and again in white like the others I had seen that night, but this one was so much more."

One could begin with a promise to the Dark One(s) that you would sacrifice your sperm to It only when mingled with female sexual liquids – which is precisely what It wants. So, It may even be persuaded to help you in hunting your game. When evoking the Dark Ones, the phallus should be considered itself a magickal wand and the vagina the very sigil of the Dark Ones. Herein the specific method is a matter of taste but one approach is to masturbate (switch on the wand in the case of the male) whilst invoking the Dark One that one wishes to commune with –i.e. Baphomet. Try to sustain a prolonged plateau of excitement holding back the urges to ejaculate. The prolonged plateau of excitement while concentrating on the sigil assures an energy field for the Dark One to manifest. The longer that plateau – the better.

"It was foolish of me to think I could face old ones on my own … I could still feel it's incredibly strong force behind me, almost teasing me, trying to draw that primal part of me back to it. And I could hear others gathering in the bushes around it, to do its bidding for it. I felt so small. I felt like a small child might, wanting to run and hide under the bed."

Ejaculation is not recommended except as an extreme form of sacrifice and only provided the One of THEM has already manifested and demanded it. Ejaculate only if the Dark One has manifested and demanded your orgasm.

Note that it is possible to experience orgasm of a dulled sort, including pleasurable and psychological variations, without spilling one's semen – but any full ejaculation without express demand by the Dark Ones will put one back at square one, day one, of the Nine Months. If called to release – give yourself totally over to the experience and Dark One. Relax and dissolve in the vision beyond. If this ritual seems sparse, devoid of tools and lengthy invocations – it's because such things are utterly irrelevant. What matters to THEM is your Intent – and if you think this rite is easy either physically or psychologically you are gravely mistaken. The Ninth Moon Ordeal is difficult – and may require many attempts to stay committed to the full course of such a masochistic vow. An unexpected or spontaneous orgasm some months in despite one's best efforts is not unheard of. The strength and integrity of one's Word/Wyrd is absolutely crucial to the Ordeal. One should beware lest the Ordeal become a Sisyphean one of pushing a rock up a hill only to have it roll down again.

"Now she has felt what I have felt, the undeniable reality of Them. Now she understands why I am hellbent on the Temple. What motivates me. These things."

If They, being the source pool from which all variations of visitation arise, are from the recess of the psyche, there is a corresponding change in the manifestation that occurs, pending the integration of the psychic contents and the strength of the psychic bridge (the degree to which a person has gained access to and awareness of the geometry of their own subconscious).

For instance, some see Them as humanoid figures, though the bone-chilling terror they evoke comes with all their forms – but I, having seen Them numerous times, having worked toward understanding what I have seen, and having struggled my entire life to Know Thyself, don't see Them as humanoid figures, they are not centralised into a spectre, but diffused into everything around me, as chthonic forces, weather, gravity, death, synchronicity et al. No, less terrifying, no less inhuman, but certainly a different calibre of 'Devil'. i.e. the better you know thyself, the less human the visitations.

The Devil is a Human concept. THEM, however, are an Inhuman Force. Until you meet Them, the difference is impossible to reconcile. The Devil is an Abrahamic concept, a shadow of their understanding, or deceptive attempt to hide THEM beneath the dualistic formations of the Devil – there is so much that has been Forgotten.

Upon his horns are heaped all sorts of mystical bullshit and a pyramid of shattered forms a thousand years deep. It is the FEELING that THEM give you, that cannot be denied, cannot be intellectualised, that makes you believe whether you want to or not. And it is our bodies and minds, as Temples, through sex, through orgasm, through symbolism, through psyche, through humility, through empathy, through understanding their forms and forces, through living to understand the Dark Ones, to Know THEM: that comprise the gates to Their Threshold. La petit mort is just the beginning.

LOVECRAFT: THE ESSENCE OF THEM

What do the cunning trickster Loki, Batman's mirror the Joker and the stark lunacy of the Mad Hatter have in common? They all understood. Watching the taming of the archetype Lovecraft borne via Cthulhu is not easy – often, neutered and denuded of its totemic power of blinding reasonless chaos and channelled into harmless, fun. The world knows Cthulhu the same way it knows Satan – Cthulhu however, is the Devils evolution: the Devil in stark opposition was a trickster, a deceiver in his human form interacting at great length with humans to make the inevitable entrapment all the more savoury – and as a beast, he represents an omnipotent eternal darkness borne of human weakness and a punisher, a retributory agent with no restraint in his endless spite to torment. His history is a mirror of religious fear, torture, hysteria and forced obedience to a monotheistic death cult.

Cthulhu on the other hand comes to us from the mind of a literary visionary. The friendly form of what Satan represents (Chaos and the Unknowable) finds itself standing to attention in stately demonic figurines and statues made of bronze to plastic, in the lovingly executed art of comics and the pretense-of-the-pretense of madness in games, a tentacled-Gargantua towering over twisted landscapes and the ocean deep, the watcher and lord of an abyss filled with all the horrors we can pull safely from our subconscious – and of which only the minor we ever see. Cthulhu is closer to theologians God in omnipotence but his interest in the human race is only tokenship – Lovecraft's creatures do not seek to toy with, intervene, haggle, play with human beings but pass through and annihilate them – not out of malice – but merely as a consequence of human beings being human beings, and ostensibly, in the way on the other side of their Abyss. Notably fans have lamented the inability of media, particularly movies and games to accurately capture what they loosely describe as 'Lovecraftian essence'. The simple act of perpetually placing Cthulhu on a pedestal just beyond what we can understand and the idiom that one could go mad trying – combine to represent an entity that is by definition considered unrepresentable to be best represented and an odd fear and appellation of madness that should somehow disintegrate the fragile mind of the observer of the Mysteries.

Lovecraft's Cthulhu is an utterly apt analogy for the subconscious – a vast unfathomable alien presence looming just beyond our safe borders, kept at bay by only the wrong stars, waiting, watching, just beyond the looking glass of the floating tip of our iceberg conscience with the cold inevitability of breaking through to devour us all – Us All – not just individually, but collectively as a human race. The emphasis of Lovecraft is a pinpoint emergence of some Other from the abyss where the spaces touch – for some few hapless fellows whose reality becomes thin, dream, then nightmare and their slow extinction hints at an impending holocaust and the opening and pouring through of untold horrors. Like Sade, the text is saturated with luxuriant verbosity in an effort to describe one concept in a thousand ways using an admirable lexicon of dizzying richness to worship the topic at hand.

But you cannot understand Chaos as a sane person. Chaos is not for sane people. For sane people, it's a toy, a simulacrum or at best a shallow exploration. In virtue for them it bears the same name, but it's a joke that won't be taken far – not into the hostile deserts or deep seas that are its real home – no, for most, Cthulhu's madness has rigid, unmistakable, fiercely-protected – boundaries. A very clearly demarcated line of play with chaos drawn by the ego between reality and fantasy, sanity and insanity.

Occult groups that practice Chaos are overwhelmed by it in its raw form – as it is antithetical to organisation, order and control. It is most antithetical, to control. Disappointingly, chaos is always a toy with humans because it has a supreme and disarming habit of being highly corrosive to forms. Forms, being our solution to witnessing the Great Chaos at the first birthday of our race to restrain the Forces. You cannot touch the spaces between without enormous amounts of drugs, psychological trauma and inestimable pressure that builds and explodes the veil and allows you to appreciate impossible geometry. So, people, flirt with chaos, they stick their foot in the shallow end of madness, they pretend to be mad to latch onto the current Cthulhu emanates and presume they're doing a good job at it.

To be a sorcerer – you must have gone mad. And – you must have then come back. That is to say – you must be forcibly departed from the world and your conviction of reality shattered through too high a dose of hallucinogenic drugs, prolonged exploration of dreams, enduring catastrophic suffering, experience supernatural agency, or be gifted bereftness of hope. Significant meditative states to induce vision quests are not violent enough departures – they are just the consciousness masturbating in the safety of shore waters. And – you must be able to go mad again. And – return, again. And just where it is that you go when you go mad? In fact, it is merely experienced as going back the other way toward sanity. When they use the word slipping or grip, they are accurate – reality is a sleeve of skin, tight, taut, and firm and a webbing that binds forms into a caged mesh, but it has tears, it can rip, it can also slough off leaving the stark bones of what is really there hung and gleaming at you from a cradle of endless oblivion.

And how – do you go mad? By tearing at the fabric until it rips – pushing the sides until it breaks, throwing yourself at forms in a frenzy until they lie bloody and broken at your feet and you catch a glimpse of the real world. Until your faith leaves you and the lustre of human things and beings and purposes that entertains them so, slinks noiselessly into a muddy gutter and you gain the cold stare of an alien. If going mad is always coming back, how can you go? It is of some distinction that the terminology for description in general terms is loaded with specific time and place references that do not apply to madness. For specificity, one does not go mad – one already is mad. One's consciousness is the price paid by the subconscious to be conscious. It is also of some distinction that the terminology for self-reference is loaded with spatial fixations such as 'I', 'you' 'me' 'is'. These pass. Of course, the sublime secret to going mad is quite simple – and that is to endeavour to 'go' as sane as possible. Magic requires the holding/viewing of forms in such a way as to dissolve all of their boundaries – when the bones are broken, we can get through the cage to dissolve 'what it's for' – 'what it does' – 'what it can do'.

Satan, and by extension Cthulhu are the resonance of archetypal recipes whose manifest shapes are shadows of our unmanifest primal origin – they are keys, vibrational echoes "From", that instruct us how to approach the Abyss. Keys, that something in us has made and continues to make, but cleverly or perhaps not so cleverly, forgets are keys, and for that matter that there are even locks – or the prison. Sorcerers, of which I am one, should – and must be – extremely dangerous to reality, yours – and mine, to Remember.

Cthulhu Fhtagn indeed.

ARTS AND THE DARK ARTS

The more time I have spent studying and practising the occult – the more I have come to seriously believe that it is in fact in other disciplines outside of the hysteria of modern magical practice that the occultist should be looking for the secrets to sorcery and the hidden powers latent in the human being. The parallels of theory and discipline required to successfully engage in Theatre; whether a classic performance or a psychodrama, far excel in practical instruction for techniques to master and tame the body and the mind for the purposes of sorcery than a great many of the occult texts available.

One inevitably finds that there is a connection between the occult and the dramatic arts because both require the human being to give their all – both disciplines share highly similar and, in some cases, identical methodology. For instance, both the occult and theatrics require a similar practice of frenzy magic to work oneself into a efficacious psychic lather; they both require going into a trance to allow possession; they both have the ability to channel entities and access gateways to other aspects and alter-egos of the practitioner; they both require the fullest possible contact with the elements of nature both within and without to absorb as much variation and experience as possible to widen their scope and repertoire of abilities; the memorisation of vast tracts of text (ritual/script), the ability to search ones memory for life experiences that stored the necessary energy or attitude* in order to play a convincing role or draw upon stored energies for the purposes of entering a specific emotional/physiological state. Etc.

For instance, after one has felt/experienced the extremes of intense heart-pounding fear and/or the euphoria that comes with orgasm, narcotic substances, or simply deep meditation – one can trick the pulse and the heart into either slowing right down or making them race simply by remembering and inducing the physiological symptoms associated with that memory. One can create artificial panic, by widening and flitting the eyes quickly in terror from side to side as if searching for an exit, and draw (without moving from one's seat or making any major movements) on the stored feeling of absolute panic from one's previous experience to trick the senses into reproducing that original and memorised state of being. By doing this, one can significantly alter the speed of the heartbeat and pulse at will. Likewise, by breathing deeply, shutting out all distractions and sound, drawing on the memory of the physiological symptoms associated with a state of extreme rest or meditation, again without moving, one can slow the pulse and heartbeat at will. A proficiency in this ability to search the memory and re-engage certain memetic memories physiologically aids the means to generate the necessary emotion required for death/destructive magic and the ability to kill magically or from a distance.

"The idea is that one should be able to intentionally physically kill somebody to destroy the same person by magick by provoking the necessary thoughts about the measures to be taken to make oneself able to kill by whatever means. The sorcerer is encouraged to explore all hir life's memory up to the present moment and find the key moments, which shall release the energy held therein – for usually that is the energy which one is short of to do the impending task. And that energy is emotional because the true memory is the affective memory. Any recapitulated experience of some life-endangering situation would stir the reptilian brain. Without the reptilian brain's support, one will hardly reach the stars." – Sath /
Liber SsS
This type of control over the body is the hardest of a triad to master. The first being the intellect, and the easiest. The second being the psyche and notoriously difficult. The third being the body and the ability to induce actual physiological prowess and powers.

TRAINING THE BODY

Of the training of the body the great theatrical guru Jerzy Grotowski suggests two approaches. The first is to put the body into a state of obedience by taming it. In personal workings (an insight role) with the body it has become readily apparent that spending time at the gym increasing muscle mass proves counterproductive to taming the body and gaining control over it – it has the adverse effect of creating the adrenaline junkie, a slave to chemical demands and psychological addiction. Moreover, such mass slows the warrior to a crawl negatively affecting the reflexes and speed of the human body – since for every hour one spends in the gym; one must correspondingly spend three hours in reflex training to counteract the effects of bulking up. The basis of martial arts is four key components, related in order of importance: balance – technique – speed – power. Enormous power does not require enormous muscles – it requires the correct combination and training of these components to work as one in concert.

Weightlifting, by virtue of the initial psychological drive stemming from an inferiority complex and the pressure to conform to an ideal, along with the adrenaline and testosterone levels generated, create what initially starts out as a 'work-out high' but becomes a powerful addiction. This process cannot help but build up the ego by creating ego armour, esp. when weights become the predominant means of exercise. Moreover, weights are designed to do specific things – build mass and increase muscle. Weights are not designed to train the body in other skills the sorcerer requires in life and especially for self-protection – namely deftness of movement, i.e., dodging, jumping, rolling, climbing, running, swimming, etc. If weights do have a benefit, it is in the increasing of strength and the padding of weak spots on the body; but even on the best bodybuilders there remain spots on the body easily accessible to a correctly timed technique that cannot be protected with muscle mass. inc. the top of the head, the knees, the ribs, and the eyes.

There are of course, endless examples of correct martial techniques felling even the most determined of muscle-bound men (and women) by a smaller figured practitioner.

As far as training of the body is recommended – Martial Arts is a superior discipline to train the body overweight based regimes. Martial Arts correctly trains the body in a variety of practices that more accurately mirror what will be necessary to call upon in a violent situation – and certain skills of the Satanist can only be developed by constantly being on the verge of one's death by inviting dangerous situations to temper one's spirit.

Benefits of Martial Arts include:

* Training the reflexes to respond with increased and sometimes terrific speed that can with proper training be accompanied by terrific power.

* Accommodating and familiarising the layperson to hir own physiological reactions to fear, threat, and pain so that hir is not paralysed or overwhelmed by them when they occur but instead knows what to expect of hirself in various situations.
* Learning the importance of correct balance, weight distribution, equilibrium and the principles of gravity that will cause one to lose balance or keep it indefinitely or help adjust one's physical stature to meet force with force or go with it – as per jujitsu, i.e., using an opponent's 'superior' strength against them.
* Engaging in realistic sparring that involves a variety of real-life fight situations likely to occur such as the fight going to ground and the necessity to grapple, nerve strikes, intimidation,
* Familiarising oneself with one's unique body – whether it be learning one's own effective ranges in kicks, punches, elbow, or knowledge of short-range and long-range techniques and the training necessary to conserve energy by appropriate response.
* Raising Endurance, Increasing Flexibility
*Conservation of Energy, thus correct economy of its expenditure
* Learning to fall properly to protect one's body from injury if thrown, tripped etc. by controlling the automatic response to throw out one's hands, land on one's elbows, etc.
* Identify and practice striking the vital strike points on the human body that will do grave damage to an opponent(s) rather than expend precious energy launching untargeted punches/kicks to forearms, face, chest etc.
* Disengage or reverse headlocks, arm bars, leg locks, finger grips, dislodge or cripple the grip of people grabbing or choking you.
* In some disciplines i.e., Ninjutsu: learning Survival/basic SAS training, orientation, navigation, filtration, fire-starting, hunting, fishing, traps, and so on.
* Attuning to the psychological factors in fighting such as making the opponents fight on your terms, (bunching your opponent's up, for instance, or backing up to a wall to limit approach from behind) looking at the collarbone instead of making direct eye contact to diffuse your view making all sudden movements by opponents stand out, being aware of the physiological correspondences in the opponent certain actions will bring about, etc. i.e. a hard block will put them on alert.
* Take-downs, sweeps, reaps, and having some options to consider when threatened with a knife, gun or other weapon.
* Training with make-shift or impromptu weapons.
* Learning to defend oneself in unconventional places such as a phone booth, corner of a room, across a table, sitting in the car, against a wall, at an ATM and so on.
* Orient one's intuitive skills, hone peripheral vision, and one's other senses in order to prevent being surrounded or knowing whom to strike first if so.
* Personal knowledge and experiences of one's 'sphere of influence' and the ease to move around it, command it, and even expand it.
* Using weapons/environment in unconventional ways

* Kill a person with bare hands, or deliver devastating techniques quickly in succession to destroy multiple attackers (and one should always train to defend against multiple attackers not a single opponent).

Although only a brief list – training such as this not only trains the body and mind to be effective and deadly weapons which is essential practical common-sense for the Satanist – but is of vital importance in any relationship to the physical self. Gymnastics, Ballet, and other rigorous arts possess the necessary physical demands and training to manipulate the body – but only Martial Arts possesses the additional discipline of self-defence. And only the Sinister possesses the context to make significant use of such skills. [For instructions on practising a Traditional Western Martial Art, see the treatise on Physis].

~

Grotowski's second approach is to challenge the body. "…to challenge it by giving it tasks, objectives that exceed the capabilities of the body. It is a question of inviting the body to do the "impossible" and making it discover that the "impossible" can be divided into small pieces, small elements, and made possible. In the second approach, the body becomes obedient without knowing that it should be obedient. It becomes a channel open to the energies and finds the conjunction between the rigours of the elements and the flow of life ("spontaneity"). Thus, the body does not feel like a tamed or domesticated animal, but rather like an animal wild and proud…".

The grades of the Order of Nine Angles given in Naos (and elsewhere) have been shown to work with the capacity to produce profound alchemical changes and changes in perspective – but over the years criticism has been levelled at the approach such magic employs via a brutish struggle to triumph with the will rather than gradually training the body to naturally assume prowess via a development of all one's faculties in accordance. Since it is also a matter of record that in certain situations, the will is of limited use, (i.e., if tied up or otherwise incapacitated) this approach demanded of the External/Internal Adept Rites has been described as the "warrior-hood" way of the ONA as opposed to the "warlock-hood" way of Sorcery.

In the former the sorcerer may succeed via chance and intellect in one instance but has a lesser guarantee of reproducing corresponding results in another; whilst in the latter, the body and mind are trained over a long period of time to acclimatise themselves to many tasks using the will as only a partial means of motivation thus being more apt to increase and maintain a greater balance and totality of physiological functions. This approach thus requires a lengthy –if not a lifelong-program of training with experimentation limited only by imagination. Finding ways to lift the body's own weight using the body daily, is one such practice, where, to give just one instance, one crouches down and slots ones elbows firmly against ones thighs, rests their forehead on the ground, and then tries to takes one's own weight by lifting one's head and legs off the ground as if to try and stand on ones hands.

Another powerful technique – but one that requires intense discipline – is coordinated muscle isolation. Where one sits on a chair and attempts to flex core muscles of the body by exerting will-power over muscular control, i.e., one tries to isolate, feel and flex the individual sets of muscles one by one from the lower spine to the nape. A study of the muscle groups one is attempting to manipulate can be useful knowledge here for a mental conception of their position and relativity.

With such techniques as these – an individual strengthens both muscles and mental connections, without the negative attributes of weights, and instead an increase in the necessary faculties for performing successful sorcery inc. visualisation, sympathy, body control. It will be noted upon attempting this exercise that some muscles cannot be felt or flexed at all, and even in this state they have proved capable of propelling the body where it wants to go and enabled all the physical achievements demanded on them. One should imagine what can be done with the proper discipline to train each of these quieter muscles consciously. In such a manner does the sorcerer train in manipulating their own weight, their own body mass, learning to control their own proportions and reactive powers in relation to the environment around them. Another exercise is to try to feel or move the actual brain itself – a positively grotesque experience and sensation to suddenly become aware of.

By training the body using a combination of such approaches, it is possible to achieve extraordinary skills and abilities. Sports such as 'free running' or Parkour are excellent examples of the capacity for a well-trained human body to innately know itself, to integrate itself and adapt instantly to suit its environment in such a fashion as to enable incredible feats of dexterity, weightlessness, directional change, balance, evasion, and effortless traverse of all terrains and obstacles.

One further important facet of magic should be mentioned at this point. It can become habitual for the magician to yolk every single impulse and activity into the service of serving the Great Work. This is commonly seen in the workaholic approach of the business world where an individual devotes everything to his company's success. In the interests of psychic balance, it is highly suggested that a sorcerer selects one or two activities to occupy the body and mind on a different (neutral level) and set aside time to pursue as separate, unrelated interests/hobbies – simply for their own sake. Some suggested activities are Astronomy, Star-Gazing, Card Games, Sleight of Hand, Painting, Jigsaws, Photography, Soft Martial Arts such as –ba dua jin, tai chi, Physis-, Learning a new Language, Reading, Gardening, Tarot, Model/Lego Building, Kite Flying, Wood or Metal Work, Learning a musical instrument, Cooking, Archery, Fishing, Swimming, Surfing, Electronic Gaming, Paint Ball, Genealogy. Whatever one feels an urge or compulsion to choose to do/feel that they would enjoy, is a good indicator of the activity to be chosen – as the activity(s) chosen should be pleasurable to undertake, but not directly related to the occult work of the Sorcerer.

[Tarot is suggested only as a means of light, casual fortune telling, meditation not as a serious series of prolonged archetypal workings as per the Sinister Tarot.]
The theory follows that over-loading emphasis on the drive of the conscious Will to take precedence and priority – correspondingly causes a psychic imbalance that depletes the inter-relationship between the conscious and the unconscious and leads to the omission of important messages from the latter aspect getting through. That is to say, that if the conscious mind is given too much importance, then the compensatory aspects of the psyche can deliberately interfere in one's conscious workings, bringing them undone from the inside like a silent assassin.

To avoid this naturally occurring self-sabotage it is suggested that the sorcerer consider Dreaming, (observation if not interpretation) and other signs of the unconscious trying to communicate such as slips of the tongue, automatic drawing, as an integral part of their magical practice. Without maintenance of this vital balance between the conscious and unconscious – one works one side of one's psyche against the other at their peril. The unconscious is an autonomous realm of the psyche that can both be harnessed and utilised to help guide/correct the magician* or effectively destroy hir.

Destruction often follows on the back of a wave of synchronous events warning of such an imbalance, but that are ignored, either deliberately or tragically. Known also as 'hubris' – an inflation of the ego that is a psychic affectation and a very common resurgence with the Sorcerer (due to their assumed role as a 'Black Magickian') –but ignorance of the imbalance of the two aspects has led countless individuals to their destruction by a consolidation of absolute belief in their own power and righteousness – often at the expense of better (or at least, alternate, external) judgement by those who can see the situation from the outside.

Thus it is that the collective of THEM has an advantage in harbouring a certain distrust (and detachment) in their own actions and expressions and correspondingly watch over one another, ready to speak frankly and autonomously to one another about possible signs that another member has become possessed by their ego, has their head up their ass, or has shut out reason, logic, and common-sense.* This ring of psychic protection serves only a basic line of defence however – and while a constant watchful suspicion of one's own conduct is useful, as is the ability to accept criticism, sanction, and advice; it is nevertheless up to each sorcerer to work at remaining Master of their faculties in so far as it is possible to do so. This practice has been referred to as a kind of 'Stalking of the Self' in recognition of the Sorcery related by Carlos Castaneda. Carlos also speaks of other crucial practices of the Sorcerer such as that of 'Stalking Death', wherein one watches everywhere for death to thwart its early advance and building a relationship between the astral and the matrix by ‘Stalking the Waking Life’.

Wherein it is highly recommended that studies be undertaken of his approach to sorcery/magic which can be utilised to a practical and deeply satisfying Sinister degree when the white-lightedness of them is given a satanic twist. Such Sorcery presents the body and the mind as one, with more importance placed on the body – rather than the attitude of reluctance to treat the body as more than a vehicle for carriage and choosing to isolate the imagination for use in a solely intellectual practice of magic and ritual given in many modern-day grimoires.

*If one is wondering why THEM place such extreme emphasis on such an approach – one need only consider the mistakes of the Fuhrer Adolf Hitler who when in power increasingly refused to listen to warnings from his associate’s superior military intelligence and field experience – to his detriment. In fact, it remains a matter of interest as to whether Hitler’s paranoid approach of shutting others out to ensure his position did not cause his downfall. Whilst still in its infancy – what has appeared for the last three, and will continue for at least the next five, years, is the preparation of the ground, the building of a certain alchemical foundation for Aeonic Black Magick. The aim of this foundation involves taking into strategic calculation the existence and historical persistence of chaos theory and an attempt to thwart disastrous entropic decline because of any of THEM over-reaching the trust in their ego at the expense of the collective. One can consider this approach to be a type of alchemical formula that is worked on a substantial number of people and orients certain qualities in its hosts – much like a traditional alchemical formula requires certain ingredients, ours requires perfect timing, patience, self-honesty, and pure intentions to complete. If eight years should seem excessive preparation for the execution of just one act of Grand Black Magic – then one underestimates the Patience of the Devil and those who work in Hir name.”

Contradicted by a Supreme Arrogance and Confidence.

CHRONOBET: PART 1

This is a short essay to illuminate the current present in all Western Language and Writing of “Time” and may go some way towards explaining the role of Language as an inhibitor of the Acausal. The essence of this essay is not to bog a being down with performing the impossible of re-configuring the brain to notice these things on all levels: just some of them. The brain makes calculations as such a speed and frequency that it is rarely checked in its tracks about the assumptions it holds evident. These assumptions create suppositions which in turn lead to illusions which in turn lead to the Matrix.

Western Writings and subsequently their various cultures, exhibit an obsession with Time that is taken for granted. There is a prejudice inherent in Western communications that depends on the continued existence of the concept of solely linear time, a concept that subtly and subliminally cements power into the hands of the Magian controllers by exclusion of Acausal Time.
If we are trained to think in Linear Time, then the later introduction of Acausal Time is a difficult if not impossible concept to apprehend; and unfortunately, a dimensional bias has arisen that cannot and will not aid magical experience and understanding. Knowledge of the Acausal is crucial for all Sinisterion. However, so subtle are the tools of the Magian that they often go by unnoticed. For instance: the three dimensionality in our Language. The concept of Linear Time has so deeply permeated the West that we cannot escape it. Our Language hems us in.

In all sentences: there exists one or more of the following Time-based suppositions "Past, Present, Future". Examine the first sentence of this essay. Start with "This". "This" is a concept localised in the present. It is an itemisation of something in the immediate "now" that is intuitively understood – but to process it mentally demands the word be aided by a conceptual notion of linear time and space if it is to make sense and not be rejected.

"Is" is another term that localises an item to the Present. Like "This", it also requires the learned schemata of Linear Time to be utilised to mentally process it. This process is very slow at first as per a child's learning, but it does not take long until it is processed at an extraordinary speed automatically: the mind having built a kind of "chronological abacus" that localises all words as concepts belonging to the three modes of Linear Time. Because this prime supposition is cemented into the processing centres of the brain, by repetitive association, the brain may also pick up other untidy habits such as postulating "Space".

As it has been pointed out in the MS "Universes Parallel" – the concept of "space" is a human-centred fixation that occurs from obsession with understanding the world from the perspective afforded to us because of our specific size. The spaces between these words beg the question – what is space? Is it empty or merely a perception of "empty"? Our size-based prejudice generalises that there is no "glass" or "paper" between these words, or a microscopic multi-verse of bacteria, electricity, elector-magnetic currents, atoms etc. Though it cannot be seen it is certainly not "empty" – moreover space, in terms of a "vacuum" cannot even be proven to exist. Reality in the Matrix is fragile. And these little building blocks of faith so heavily leaned upon without justification are weak points. If you are able to stop and think about it: your brain may cease automatically processing time and space in your communications and contemplate the existential nature of both.

Other words in the first sentence are “All” which mentally encompasses Past, Present and Future. “Of” is a present term that must denote a past for something to be “of”. “A” a singular notion rooted in the present: rooted in the concept of space and a separation from something else – hence it subliminally requires the persistence of time. “To” embodies a link between two or more of the Time notions: a passage from one mode to the other – reliant on Time to make sense of this. “The” is another word with direct connotation to the Present and the supposition of space. Almost all words and concepts require Time and Space to be processed. “Another”, “With”, “Other”, “Almost” etc.

This entrapment forms the basis of 3D/causal communication: mired inexorably in a pre-conceived notion of Linear Time that, regularly used by the brain, cements its validity day after day in unquestioned calculations. The Acausal lacks exposure or even translation as a concept because of the Linear Time in Language: hence the ONA’s efforts to approximate a new symbology via the Star Game for instance that escapes this entrapment. Dreams, Experience and Esotery are also important elements in presencing a symbolic language of the Acausal mode using Acausal Time: but currently, only through Causal Time can a being express oneself. Expression of the Acausal to those below the Abyss is dependant on the flawed mode of the Matrix: and therein lies an inescapable conflict.

It is hoped that Music [Qv. Project R]: as well as the development of Signs via the continuing experiments with “Dark Angles” and continued exploration of any capacity for Astral [and other magical] modes to allow unfettered sympathetic communication between nexions will help presence a form of communication that is Acausal in nature. Meanwhile the Sinisterion can only acknowledge that there is communication above the Abyss and communication below the Abyss and never the twain shall meet. For now it is enough to analyse the flaws in Language, especially where the work of the Magician is concerned, and break some of the faith in language held unconsciously self-evident by the daily Mind.

CHRONOBET: PART II – CAUSATING THE ACAUSAL

1 December, 2010.

The theory that we cannot explain the acausal because the act of explanation is causal – as are all our tools for understanding – and that we (wrongly) impose causal perceptions on the a-causal because we have no and can have no a-causal equivalent.

It is the tradition of people to rely on the intellect, on being able to understand rationally, to limit the unknown to the known and translate perception. It is commonplace to use our intellect to explain things to others or enable things to be explained to us which we do not understand – and natural to make the effort to explain things that cannot be explained. Explanation, however, it plays out, is suitable/serviceable for many things, for things in general – but it is not difficult to demonstrate the restraint built into language as a means to communicate, or show that it involves a prejudice of time and space used as the basis for its model of understanding. This model cannot be changed or evolved to explain certain things because of its inherent duality and the present lack of understanding of the power of a duality-driven mindset – moreover the model contains within itself by virtue of its duality a self-regulating gyroscope that causes language to perpetuate duality – and itself like an unchanging fractal that falls into itself forever.

This can be illustrated quite easily by the observation that the order of words has a direct result on the reader (who perceives) – and reacts. How you react is for all intents and purposes random – but that you react is not. We can see that Ideas, as communicated by others are perhaps never simply accepted as a pure communication that passes exactly what the writer had in mind onto paper or screen – they almost always generate conflict – as if the writer is unable to capture an objective statement of truth no matter what words they choose to use, how carefully they phrase them, or however many clauses and asterisks and footnotes they may include.

Writing tends to have an automatic effect of causing a reaction rather than a reflexion. Caution at this point is advised against imposing a moral conclusion over this fact – my concern is never whether this process is “good” or “bad” but simply to illustrate and prove the existence of the process. By reaction I mean an unconscious pull by the ego to respond to the stimulus received – however it chooses to interpret it, and by reflexion I mean a contemplative state of occult and self-awareness that recognises one has reactions but does not automatically obey them as prompted by the ego.

The point of A-causal to Zen is not to provide another phenomena on which to hang ones causal hat, nor provide another point in space to speculate intellectually – however causally titillating the temptation and rewarding/gratifying the poetic associations that flow in tribute – but represents a faint light in the distance of the logos that dawns from time to time in the face of contemplation. It is borne of the struggle to escape language, morality, duality, time and those dead weights we recycle in absurdio when faced with the prospect of something we are told we cannot know. It is the Gnosis that jettisons causal spatial suppositions – spurns our doctrine of Cartesian grid unconsciously imposed that orders phenomena to be ‘from’, ‘within’, ‘next to’, ‘outside’, ‘inside’, ‘beyond’ – simplifying the vast into the discrete using tensions that imply the existence of singular autonomous points. Unfortunately, in the desire to share, experience is written down, all too often profaning the mystery because of the means by which its message is carried.

The attempt to try to Know unhinges any knowing precisely because Words – those causal prisoners and jailers – are used to denote occulture. As soon as the word a-causal presents itself it undergoes a transformation, literal and literary. Its presence creates a shadow, an order, and is forcibly slotted into various hierarchies – pushed into and out of place by the law of words that draws some together and pushes other apart – an automatic dichotomy inherent in the supposed freedom of language to express. Viz. express freely – but within the limits of freedom.

In word or form the a-causal comes under verbal law. It becomes a 'thing' like all other mundane things, disposable, drained of wonder, drained of authenticity. As is the doctrine of verbal law, the word/sound/form once presenced causally is subject to the laws of form. Its name, used as a key to point toward a wordless door, a silent desert that rebukes understanding – is abused, misunderstood and sullied by clumsy attempts to extrapolate its purity with a barrage of associations and connective verbal tissues. It is thrown into the morass of language, sat next to words it has no sincere desire to be with, and forced to represent our will for it to be the occult secret itself. Causality supposes –this- and –that- to make separations where there are only prejudiced traditions of experiencing the world through the window of the human-centred ego. We cannot imagine what would be without our license to suppose, and it is ironic that our faith in knowledge prevents the evolution of it.

The word a-causal denotes an anti-concept, a sound for a vacuum of meaning outside the framework we conveniently apply. It does not denote a thing, a state, a term, word, or inference available to us through language – it is outside of language, indeed outside of languages ability to relate or even present – and that is precisely the words/sounds point – as a stop sign indicating the city limits of perception.

Like Zen before it, it is subjected to the same problems all words create – no matter what occult (hidden) wisdom they attempt to convey – once a word, immediately a form. Using a frame of reference built with instituted causal tools and prejudices people attach all manner of meaning and explanation to weigh down the sublime. To suppose nothing, we must suppose something. How many ways have people tried to show Nothing. When it comes to the acausal people cannot leave well enough alone. We build up a causal model of something we simply cannot fathom – precisely because we cannot fathom it. Precisely because we have a word like fathom and hate to waste it! We hate the idea that the universe could present something our lofty sentience could not control, we despise her secrets and her mysteries because they make us feel weak, small and powerless. They are anathema to the ego, laughter at our arrogance, vitriol to those proud inner voices to which we entrust our humanity.

We hate the unknown – it is a glaring truism in everything we do, in everything we name. We masturbate ourselves over daring thoughts of some untouchable void, orgasm over the fantasy that there is something forbidden, something we cannot attain, some realm or world we cannot master – some escapist dimension on which we can dream in order to forget. But the foreplay does not last – and we fuck ourselves. We pour down tributes to our ignorance and enshrine our desperate fumbles as wisdom – congratulating ourselves that we managed to fit the word A-causal/Zen into our writing next to other words – to contain it, explain it, attain it – even if only to highlight it by virtue of what we didn't say by surrounding it with causality as many times as we could. Then, we pat ourselves on the back and move on to imprison the next purity and sublime occult experience that dares to think itself above our causal verbal laws. It's what we've always done, it's what we'll always do.

Our reaction to the anti-concept of the A-causal provides deep and humiliating insight into the fragility and mentality of the collective human race and its paralysing fear of the occult – of the hidden. Of a thing that dares remain truly hidden.

AN ANALYSIS OF FREQUENCY: PART I

What do I mean when I tell clients that there is an overall geometry in the frequency of their writing that indicates something altogether different from what their strings of sentences have attempted to assemble?

Primarily it means that I believe writing is not linear, or one-directional and despite itself and what its writer intends it to convey, that there are other currents implicit in writing that are invisible, esoteric, within, that from the nature of its assembly, divulge other information about the writer on subliminal levels. That is to say that writing is layered. It has an esoteric counterpart during which a writer attempts to gain something from the audience the writing is directed at: viz. a specific attempt at the seduction of other minds is made via dressing up motives in various pleasing modes of language. And it has an exoteric mainstream that operates on shared meanings and logic.

Ego – The Source of Dialect

If we write the sentence: "I am a writer": then we are making suppositions: we are causing things to exist: in presupposing "I" exists, we are making a statement that claims a separation: and in this case that a separation exists between a personal existence and the existence of others. In supposing "I", we inadvertently draw a line in the philosophical sand that cannot help but suppose "You", "Mine", "Yours", "Ours" etc. [Qv. Aristotle] And, there is a clear-cut motive in presupposing an "I" – will-to-power. With each word used in language to communicate, a supposition is made that cannot help but suppose other things: loosely termed, these are the inherent "opposites" that arise from the paradox of Unity. i.e., if we suppose "Space" – we must suppose something that is separate from Space – we must suppose “Matter”. And so on.

In communication, every word is a separation point: it is a supposition, a supposing of something that is separate from something else: i.e., a division. This is a useful observation, because language is the main tool of the Ego. The act of division in language is a constant element that echoes the motives of the Ego. I.e., the Ego has a vested interest in maintaining a specific geometric matrix, and wills to power deliberate separations between things to maintain its psychopathic homeostasis. We can identify the role of the Ego in language by appreciating a simple fact: all language is based on supposition. If we examine language for what it really is, in essence, each word is an existential question mark: a symbol with no inherent meaning. The prime phenomenon with an interest in separation from the whole: is the ego.

Hence it is ego that is responsible for the development of language: as a means of will to power. Thus, there appear repetitions or similar modes of separation by the act of division in writing; Separations that lead to a desired homogenisation of words [symbols] that is the aim of the ego to reduce the world to and feed it by establishing personal affirmations in what it writes. Thus, the way in which a writer attempts to control/harmonise the world and tame it with words, cannot help but reveal a reflection of the writer’s ego and expose the keys with which it feels harmony, i.e., its geometry. I should think that most people do not invest too much conscious thought in the accepted notions of language with words that tie others together: is, at, from, to, etc. these are habitual structures necessary to homogenise language so that it may be understood: -so that it may be “language”. That is to say it would be spurious and optimistic to think one could divulge anything from the placing of the word “at” or “was” – but something can certainly be ascertained from the placing [and frequency of placing] of the word “I”.

Human Centred Geometry Vs Life Centred Geometry:

Before I go any further let me make two very clear distinctions in geometry.
There is the micro world of human-centred geometry and there is the macro world of life-centred geometry.

I call it a micro world because it subsists of infinitesimal degrees of separation, of breaking things into divisions using semantics and abstractions. It is made vastly complex by the sheer number of divisions made and the worship that is given to each division by acts of further dissection, followed by classification and categorisation for validity or invalidity [pending the type of psyches interacting] with the whole process treated as real, important, and self-evident; that is to say, Homocentric. It mostly takes form in communication by speech and/or writing and exists on the plane of trivial human concerns: and the creation/regurgitation of suppositions to create further trivial human concerns so that the cycle may continually repeat itself. This mode of geometry is the sustaining mode of the Matrix.

Secondly, there is the Life-Centred mode of geometry. Here, Abstractions are not treated as real except for the passage they give through the Matrix. That is, language is accepted as a necessary, if cumbersome, mode of communication in Life: but communication is not centred about the millions of divisions of abstractions: rather all those human divisions are grouped into one category as "Division": creating the corresponding supposition, "Life" which supposes division to be artificial.

While the former tends to centre all its divisions about itself and focus on its own importance: Life-centred geometry is devoid of obsession of the human. It is a simple, direct use of language [and other means] that rejects the deification of human edifice and appropriately perceives them as merely present as one mode on a sliding scale of many. An overt lack of homo-centrism is immediately noticeable in text: and in my opinion indicates a psyche possessed of a more realistic perception of its species: a weaker domination by the ego over the total psyche due to decreased interest in self-importance. Thus, it is not only word by word that the ego is revealed geometrically, but by its specific repeating assertions of its worldview and the ideas presented and dealt with that come through in the text. A life-centred text refrains from referring to the writer at all – except perhaps when the writer wishes to demonstrate human humility and assert their unimportance as a species.

However, this is not to be mistaken with the writer that is morbidly self-obsessed with denigrating the human race and their own existence as a human being, i.e., the "Goth". For such is still an obsession with human self-importance, albeit through rabid anti-establishment of importance. While it is fairly evident that upon reading a text, we come to form an opinion of the writer and the writing: I think THEM should only consider clients as applicable to the Temple's teachings when client's writings/speech exhibit a Life-centred philosophy and practice of life.

Reform and Revolution

Another level of maturity of the psyche can be revealed by breaking down a writer's text into categories of energy to give a Temple member a useful depth sounding of the potential of a client – almost like cutting down a tree to reveal its many rings of growth can determine its age. Sinister and Magian writing are easily recognisable as modes with different currents or frequencies. But if a person were to try to learn to intuit this difference, they might require a guide of the signs that emanate not only a sinister or Magian text, but the period of time that has elapsed since the writer separated from the Matrix. For although it can be relatively easy to create a temporary separation from the Matrix, [Qv. A successful Invoking the Tempest] it goes without saying that it is vastly harder to force a permanent one. A writer who has been closely associated with others of the Sinisterion for an extended period of time may at first glance resemble in action and speech, a genuine one of THEM. It would be convenient to have some kind of constant marker that separates the long-time sinister writer from the brief deceitfully occult ego who is experiencing a minor sinister high.

The extent to which a writer has separated from control by their ego, or the "recency" of their self-extraction from the mode of the Magian, could perhaps be determined by marked signatures of the longevity of a sinister life, i.e. by the practical and realistic applications a sinister writer uses vs the brash and immediate need for change possessed by the exuberant black magician still wound up in the role of immediate power. One correlation is that writings from long sustained sinisterion will be marked by original concepts and concepts that take a long time to implement: including demonstration of such a plan's implementation. That is, the long-term Satanist will be gradual in energy expenditure and be concerned with "Reform" and the use of edifices already in place against themselves. The brash magician however, who has only recently or temporarily separated from the Magian current, will make use of traditional concepts and be concerned with revolution and the hasty destruction of edifices to be replaced with grand visions of satanic architecture: their plans tend to fall down however when they are unable to exercise wisdom in their implementation and lacking a clear understanding of the obstacles, refer back to the traditional rhetoric of concepts and goals that have been presented to them, i.e. "we need the creation of a new type of satanic individual". They may cease writing out of frustration because their ideas are not being accepted as genius. A recent separation is marked by the energies of "Revolution".

To discern and crystallise a person's intentions is beneficial in relation to our work; and one mode in which to undertake analysis is in the spirit that communication below the Abyss is mostly linguistic spell-craft and thus loaded. Frequency analysis is an especially useful avenue to pursue where writing attempts to deceive the reader as to the nature of the ego writing it – where writing may have all the hallmarks of authenticity and maturity but is in essence, a cleverly written spell. In such a case, being able to discern a life-centred mode and a human-centred mode can help unearth the truth because in the latter for instance, the ego cannot help but continually refer to itself: whereby the easiest method of determining if glamour is involved is to out-wait the glamour and make a comparison over time of many of the writer's letters [Qv. Ad Infinitum Accumulum].

Who Hears The Spheres?

Life/Human Centred Geometry is a useful major distinction. Another is the difference between Sinister and Magian energies, analogous to sound waves/emissions that resonate harmoniously or clash discordantly. Although all persons hear and appreciate music differently: the esoteric frequencies of the Sinister and Magian types are so fundamentally different and diametrically opposed: as to physically hurt the ears and brain and intellectually attack and harm the party who is subjected to listen to the others music. After separation from the Matrix: this musical/frequential difference is acute. Where the Magian hears harmony the Sinisterion will hear din. Where the Sinisterion hears the Spheres, the Magian will hear Nothing. And this is true of language too – for language is a form of magical vibration that is aesthetically suited to its species.

It is not an exoteric Hz or MHz frequency of cycles that exists to define this musical separation: although it well may be discovered some constant is present some day: the Sinister and Magian organism do not operate on different cycles of frequency in terms of physical sound. We share the same limits of our nexion as identical biological organisms. But we do use sound differently. We expend it differently. We have opposed goals and perceive separate universes. One is human centred, and one is life centred. This difference of perception causes an opposing taste in what is harmonious, and because the difference in perceptions is so vast, the Magian sound is largely noisy, self-absorbed, ugly and vulgar to us.

However, while the human-centred mode cannot encompass the life-centred one, the life-centred mode Can and does encompass the human-centred mode: that is to say, homo-centrism does not acknowledge anything but its own species: whereas a life-centred mode acknowledges the human-mode but does not extend human importance out of proportion: it is not egoistic and egoism is an element that defines the human-mode because the ego is the aspect in humanity that loves to extend things out of proportion.

Receptive Frequency: The Low Vibration of Propaganda

If one writes a poem in English, then we may expect most to be able to appreciate it and derive subjective experience from reading it. If one writes in another language not common to the majority of ones expected readers, then we can expect fewer people to be able to comprehend and appreciate it unless they are familiar with and understand the language of transcription. If a writing is penned that deliberately uses code, or obscure symbolism and wording, then the number of people who can approach an understanding or appreciation of the material from what is written, is greatly diminished. However, many grimoires are written in such a manner and although the text is indecipherable to most, remain attractive as works of art.

It is not on the textual level that the work is appreciated, but on the basis of its geometry and artistic flair. Without being able to read what is written the viewer [for he cannot be a reader if he cannot read the text] must be content to appreciate the text as an esoteric object. However, a symbol cannot replace a communication – a symbol is inert – and open to interpretation unless it has been Associated with the text/message by transference [a subject to be covered shortly] over time. So, because writing is primarily a means of communication and has an aim in being written, it consists of reciprocal translation and understanding on the textual level.

The degree of access that writing enables for its audience ranges from the lucid to the obscure. And the scale of free/restricted access to the communication by an audience between these degrees represents another type of Frequency: the "Receptive Frequency". Like a radio transmission RF can be restricted to a certain channel or area or broadcast right across the network. A coded message is highly restricted in its RF. A public speech is not. The RF used corresponds to its numeracy: that is, its content is relative to the intended size of the audience that can understand it. The degree of RF is a signature frequency in all writings that may leave clues as to who the writer generally targets and also offers the key frequency that should be used to reply to them for the most effective communication.

There is an underlying principle in this phenomenon of corresponding universality. Propaganda, as Hitler understood, must be simple and direct if it is to influence the masses: meaning the ability to affect the many divergent types of person and psyche with all the miasma of classes, races, sex, age, education, background with a similar and unified message … and for this to occur the wording used must be simple, direct, and universally recognisable. One of the ways to make a text universally recognisable is to use words of an Optimum Frequency. Young Children's books for example are written using Optimum Frequency.

Optimum Frequency:
(The Way to a Man's Heart is through his Inherent Stupidity)

The majority of people have a vocabulary of approximately 44,000 words. A two-year-old may have a vocabulary of perhaps a few hundred or a few thousand. Despite the considerable numeric difference in each, in both vocabularies there will be words common to both. Yes. No. Mine. That. [This is an extreme example: I cannot generalise the use of words by a two-year-old with a corresponding comprehension of their use until much older and concept laden.]

However, both a two-year-old and a 40-year-old are likely to say 'What', 'Yes' or 'Please' far more often than they would say "Geriatric, Predispose, or Athlete". That is to say, that What, Yes and Please are far more Frequently used words in communication than the latter three. [Yes] or indication of some affirmative notion, [No] or the indication of some Negative notion are intrinsic to language. They are used far more frequently than other words and are more likely to be recognised regardless of race, sex, age, class or background. There are probably a few thousand of these key words that are used with greater Frequency than other words, and I will term these the “Optimum Frequency”.

By using words from the OF range, propaganda is likely to be understood by a vast and divergent number of groups. Consider the following:

1) Ask not what your country can do for you: but what you can do for your country.
2) Economic expansion requires subservience by the people to the Nation in its time of dire need.

The first slogan operates on OF, these are words likely to be understood by a great many people for they are all simplistic and frequently used in everyday vocabulary. The second slogan is not so universal despite being a relatively similar statement, because its frequency is out of the OF range: subservience, expansion, dire are not common words or used anywhere near often as the words of the OF in the first line.

But it is not merely the OF that operates here. It is also the Optimum Frequency of Concepts too. That is to say that the concept of giving up one’s individuality to serve a greater common good is also a frequently utilised concept by the majority of people. It is practiced in families, in school, at work, and in almost every other social situation where a person shows restraint over their individual desire to maintain social norms. It is relatively easy to appeal to people by using concepts they already understand and use on a very frequent basis: and, greater good, is a common concept. In the case of the first slogan there is also a pre-existing indoctrination in the practice of Pride within the people of the American Nation to support the ideal of “Country”.
It was mentioned earlier that the packaged text of a slogan could be transferred over into a symbol by means of transference and association. The Nazis for instance were able to replace the effect elicited from the use of party slogans into an effect elicited simply by showing the party symbol: the Swastika. The swastika was invested with the meanings of conscious textual slogans by continually appearing alongside such slogans, until transference was made and people began to group the messages of the slogans with the symbol until the slogans were no longer necessary and the swastika operated alone as a subliminal symbol of Optimum Frequency. This is why Flags are used: as subliminal associations to incite Nationalism and worship of the idea of State and Nation and Country. I.e., control.

In the case of the American Nation, an appeal to Nationalism is triggered by the presence of the American Flag: The Star-Spangled banner. Recalling the experiment of Pavlov’s dogs, Pavlov demonstrated that transference could be made from the original control to an extent source. Closely allied with the American Flag; a President: a personage who transforms the esoteric into the exoteric and gives us a human link to that piece of cloth that subconsciously controls us. By the power of optimum frequency, we come to associate the President with the flag, and the flag with the President: if our associations become mixed: the two cease to retain their separate identities and we become brain washed. This is does not hold true for all Americans, however. Many Americans think their President dangerously imbecile – and brainwashing usually occurs over people with weak minds or wills or who are already conditioned to idolise Nationalism. Others see a link between "America" and "God": and it is probably this link that operates with the lowest vibration of Optimum Frequency. As a priest can become a direct link with God, charged with special powers to pass on the divine word, so too can (and is) "America" be subliminally associated with "God".

Other symbols used to trigger certain conditioned responses, are the Statue of Liberty, to the ideal of "Freedom". But contra to this, an appeal to trigger "Peace" can be made by a Swastika or footage of a Nazi Rally or Hitler speaking. Forget someone mentioning the atrocities of the Americans during war, if a Swastika is shown, the context is already decided and the response automatic. Because America has taken the reins of control from Hitler and meta-morphed the ideas of his many surrounding geniuses, writers, and architects into esoteric currents that invisibly coerce rather than be actively seen: the initiated are now seeing the utilisation of many of Hitlers propaganda techniques in altered and truly magical forms. In winning the 2nd World War under their ideals of "Peace, Freedom and God", America was able to confiscate what can only be called "Mind-Control Techniques" used by Germany for its own use and demonise the same use of such techniques by the Third Reich.

A linear conception of History emerged that forever determined the Nazis the bad guys, the Americans the good guys, reminiscent of the Catholic Church and its YHVH/Lucifer mode. People are conditioned to speak of Hitler in hushed tones, in disgust, in fear, or solemn reverence for such Evil. We are taught to hate, fear, and be mortally afraid of forgetting such a thing as the holocaust. We are reminded of the brutality, the ferocious and viciousness of the Nazi party, with documentary after documentary showing the ovens at Auschwitz. It is said: lest we forget. It is effective programming. Although the "Voice of Authority" openly treats adults as children unable to discern the world and its events for themselves, human beings gladly open themselves up to this mental conditioning accepting the basic divide of enemy/conqueror.

Subliminal Association made with the symbol of the Swastika is easily determined in all Western countries. Simply wearing one incites the conditioned response.

What has been covered so far? Text can be transformed into a symbol. A Symbol can become an effective trigger the presence of which demands obedience to an unsaid word. The next layer is Emotion: for a Symbol is used to elicit specific emotional responses.

The real operant power in Optimum Frequency is not the Swastika. It is Anxiety. And it should be noted that although it is impossible to control what emotion people will feel when presented with the trigger – the context of the trigger allows for a wide range of emotions to fall within acceptable valid responses because they all stem from the anxiety brought forth by low vibrations of Magian Frequency – that is to say, anxiety has been induced by Magian design and hence the corresponding energy arising from the human vessels is a Magian Current. [Humans are very similar to cauldrons/vessels: pour the ingredients in, mix, and let it cook. Or crystals/glyphs that can be made to chant/vibrate certain frequencies that are 'ex-pressed' in emotion/speech etc.

Once conditioned to react emotively upon seeing the Swastika [and by transference most German iconography of WW2] we are the unwitting victims of a mind-control technique that is very powerful and pending its transmission, long-lasting. Since the Third Reich has been demonised constantly for the last 60-70 years, we can expect that control to be ingrained within most of Western peoples.

Just briefly: when the human being becomes anxious it affects the Central Nervous System to send messages of alarm to the Automatic Nervous system and brings on our ancient fight-or-flight response which activates some responses and inhibits others. This "Sympathetic" response includes the release of adrenaline to get us pumped and mobilised. If we stayed in the Sympathetic mode, the nervous system would suffer a break-down from the stress imposed upon our organism: so, it has a built-in counter measure called the Para-sympathetic that kicks in once the emergency is over to return the body's responses to normal. Magic, Psychology, Mind-Control, or whatever you want to call it – is performed by Governmental Agencies etc by tricking/manipulating the systematic responses of the body to occur by artificial means.
Anxiety causes stress. Stress causes an imbalance in the body/psyche – which then prompts the body/psyche to activate a curative remedy. The American form of magic is, like the Nazis before them, slow hypnosis based. If you can condition the human being to react to one symbol with stress, you can also cause the human being to find relief with another. It is a simple matter of transference. (And just a side note for the aspirant: you can feel mind-control too – if you feel nothing for the holocaust while others weep and protest but feel compelled to remain quiet or join in – that compulsion to act in accordance with others, is the result of mind-control, which is effectively, body-control.)

The Fundamentals of Mind/Body Control

Now we will look at the underlying mode that is inherent in this style of Magian magic, which is to say, extract the Ethos from it and take a look at some of the methods of subliminal mind control exercised within it. If reeling in horror and disbelief at the atrocities perpetrated by the Nazis, we are vulnerable to mind control because of the anxiety it creates. Just as a child seeks the answer to 1 + ? = 2: We instinctively seek to restore the imbalance created by counteracting that anxiety. But our natural counteraction response can be hijacked by an artificial one: forced to occur only when a specific symbol is presented. And those supplying the enemy symbol also supply the hero symbol. The hero symbol is the secondary association, the yin to the yang so typical of Magian magic. It is the rainbow from God, the promise that the Holocaust will never happen again so long as you support x. x triggers relief, comfort, it is the curative symbol to the anxiety incited by the Swastika, a programming narrative that there is something out there that will protect us from ever experiencing such horrors ourselves, some crusader that aims to put a stop to such atrocity ever happening again.

The most oft-used curative symbol is the American Flag. Whenever we see the nastiness of the Germans you can be sure footage of the Americans fighting their way through to save our souls will not be far away. Whatever symbol or regime is portrayed as the enemy, will create by its division a symbol or regime that is good. Institutions such as the Media are crucial to continuing this programming.
It's been said before, but evil is banal: people will keep doing what they're doing, unaware or uncaring of the consequences just to keep their job, their ambitions, their sense of progression in life, of the matrix, intact.

Unfortunately, the media are expected to separate news into two distinct categories: which is why the Media promulgates a society paralysed with fear and saturate the world with coverage of violence, instability and supposed chaos: a society on the brink of collapse it seems, every night at seven. That is to say they depress us with fear and anxiety, consolidate us with trivium, unite us with sport [particularly in Australia] and then show us a fluffy kitten to give us a quick hit of serotonin. This formula, subliminal, and repeated several times a day, conditions the brain to develop addiction. So, what we are dealing with is not merely indoctrination on a verbal level, it is an actual current or mode of hypnosis that works by dual association and is a continuous vibration in all Magian transmissions. Tele-vision begs the question: whose/what vision? And how can we be conditioned so symmetrically when we seem divergent as a species? Are we really divergent? I look around me and I see mediocrity: the same tired re-hashing of someone else original creation: presumably it is different: but it is not: it's not even a permutation: it takes the song, art, media nowhere new. Media operates on the lowest Frequency too: OF. It's hardly rocket science to make the observation that the Magian messages are effective because of their similarity, frequency of appearance, proximity and the associations that are grouped together repetitively to make the same appeals of Peace, Freedom and God while ensuring, Control, Control, Control – on an almost deafening basis.

Are there ways to reveal this current for the lay man? Maybe the curious could try taping the news with the sound off and write down what they think the stories are about. Then re-watch the news with the sound on and see how closely they matched up. Or turn all the colour and contrast down so that they can only hear the news and write down what they think the story would be showing them visually. Restore the settings and watch the bulletin. They may notice that without the verbal or audio context to "inform" them of what is happening that their ability to discern Media is greatly diminished. The large discrepancy between what the brain expects to see and hear and the context that the media puts the stories into that could help distinguish the distortion created by framing images within context/narrative.

The "magic" of television has slowly been forgotten. For instance: there is a special make-up profession that deals with corporate food promotion. For those unfamiliar with the length of time and effort required to make an advertisement let me assure you it can be considerable. If McDonald's used actual ice-cream in their ads, by the time lighting, boom, camera, and assorted other henchmen were ready to shoot the scene: the ice-cream would have melted. The schemata that have been programmed in your head by McDonald's, of a McDonald's ice-cream is not the image of a real ice-cream dripping down the sides of the cone but a perfectly still, proud and firm frosty scoop of whipped white vanilla. In actual fact, the ad could not use a real ice-cream because it would not stay perfect, or proud, or frosty. A special food preparation artist creates the semblance of the ice-cream using glazed and painted mashed potato. Potato at room temperature sets firm, can be moulded into any shape, and does not melt. But, when the McDonald's ad comes racing across the screen, telling you about the delicious frosty vanilla ice-creams available, it places the potato in a context that tricks the mind: and the mind makes the transference between the image of an ice-cream with the schemata in the brain that describes an ice-cream. Yep, looks like an ice-cream, must be ice-cream. It is not. This "magic" is not confined to food: make-up and cosmetics for instance requires obscene amounts of advertising [context] to make it seem less like animal fat or cheap synthetic acids. But it's not tested on animals you say? Nice one. Where's your proof: that this multi-national conglomerate that makes billions out of making women feel ugly [anxiety trigger] writes it proudly on their carcinogenic bottle?
Wait.

Here I have presented my own Magian construct: I inform you of the enemy by appealing to your guilt: the enemy is the cosmetic company that has been accused of animal cruelty and atrocities to create products that paint your face. Note however, most will be happy enough to help me blame the cosmetic company as an enemy rather than acknowledge their own vanity: it's a projection and protection safety net utilised by the ego. Continuing: if you are caused sufficient anxiety by the thought that you are somehow unwittingly responsible for assisting them do unspeakable things to animals by taking part in supporting them because of your vanity, then you have made a transference from the abstract suppositions I have made, onto yourself: that is to say you are now associating/identifying yourself as involved: thus causing you to feel guilt. I then give you my programmed curative to your anxiety: the possibility of being in possession of the awful truth by acknowledging that you might have been tricked by the cosmetic companies, but if you admit it and get educated on the shadiness of the cosmetic industry you will be a "good" person again. And I should add this is a special trigger, because your anxiety is being relieved in a manner that allows you to think that you were not to blame, just an unwitting pawn. A lot of Magian vibrations aren't that kind.

For those unaware: that last paragraph: was another one.
It's all very clever. It's the simple Magian energy that mobilises the entire Matrix. It is present in the identical ploy of the Church that created a division between God and the Rest, demonising an 'enemies' tactics and will to power while simultaneously deploying similar tactics in their own means of warfare. The same young Church that rose to power using the God/Devil context to feed off the power of anxiety: The Devil is evil look what the Devil does: now be afraid, controlled and God-Fearing: is the same method used by All institutions. I remind aspirants, that all conscious human beings are scorpions. Demonising one ideal allows another to take its place. A genuinely fair and diplomatic ideal would not demonise so vehemently against its previous peer – it would have no desire to put something down in order to raise itself up. You would think that people would eventually get wise to this game, but no. Apparently not.

This major Ethos is a current that runs through all in Time. The OF and OF Concept level present in many writer's texts takes the form of an element of hero [or something championed] and a zero [or something negated] usually closely spaced or next to each other. It is hoped that by virtue of such a division the ego can elevate itself by de-elevating something else and subtract by proxy the status in the matrix that comes from feeding off the illusion of the hero. Keeping this in mind: Is the writer associated with the hero, is the writer's philosophy the hero, or is there a subliminal intent to connect power to the writer using this mode of duality? Such a current is most vulgarly apparent in the God/Satan Good/Evil schemata. Recalling that there are weaknesses in a nexion that is in Time: note that the magical current that has affected America and caused it to use this method: does so because it is In Time: does the writer embody this energy, or are they separated from that Ethos, and thus Sinister?

AN ANALYSIS OF FREQUENCY: PART II
PSYCHOLOGICA IN MUSICA

A rich tapestry of psychology, linguistics, and biology are present in all writings. Yet it also lends itself to the phenomenon of music. Writing is an expression/expulsion that like music, contains structure, and is bounded by that structure to conform to certain laws of reciprocity. This manuscript will deal with the geometry or vibration of writing as the expulsion of the acausal as a crude form of music. That is to say, viewing what is underneath writing when appreciated as an unconsciously driven piece of music.

Literally: behind all text there is a motivation: a subliminal trail of intent. That intent is often driven by ego resulting in the churning out of a great deal of rubbish or "noise" that occurs in communication prior to the Abyss. However, such noise contains among it key notions: each snugly nestled into a centre-point in the text that is couched and surrounded by supporting arguments and diatribe intended to give weight to the key point directly or indirectly. A spell if you like, that requires rhythm, pace, and to borrow from the musical world: hitting the right key during a composition.

Music is probably one of the only genuine abstractions in the world the other being geometry. Music in its raw form as sound does not depend on humanity for its existence, whereas an abstraction like mathematics does. Music existed before humanity, but mathematics was only a potential inherent in geometry. The only reason I refer to music as abstract is because it is comprehended and bounded humanly, as "music". When we read a good piece of writing we could say that is possesses us, causes us to go places the writer has determined for us to go, and some places the writer hasn't or couldn't. It might depress or enliven us, sadden us or fill us with joy or intrigue or wonder. We know instinctively when we write, when a word doesn't fit. Despite the millions of words we combine, it takes only the careless use of one to bring an otherwise masterpiece of literary finesse crashing down from the status of perfect. It is much the same with music: were a musical piece to jar suddenly after maintaining tempo and melody throughout: we should notice it for its coarse difference and be drawn to remember that jarring note as ruining the composition. In fact we might even be unable to enjoy the piece, because of that jarring note. Writing is the same.

Musical appreciation and the analysis of textual frequency will differ from member to member, but the love and recognition of sinister elements will always be a solid constant that unifies that listening. Analysis of geometry is not the hearing of a literal orchestra: it is intuitively based perception of the writer's motives and the awareness of being hypnotised by beautiful music. This beautiful music might be described as having a shape, a vibration, a frequency or a colour. Regarding colour it is the Psychic sensation of being able to imagine what colour the text would be if it were a colour, or with Shapes, the shape such text might make were it associated as being structured as square, circular, triangular etc. If in imagining that a text is green: to determine its 'essences' based on a perception of colour one might draw on personal associations of the colour of green to describe it: fresh, lush, natural, etc.

But to equate writing to music is not the same arbitrary association as colour and shape. Rather it is a true superimposition of the qualities of sound over the text to turn its logical arrangement into pitch, treble, bass, timbre and melody, tempo, and rhythm. It is a mode structured in the real that could lend hue, tint and the vibrancy of colour by means of imagination to the literature, by virtue of being a mode of perception that mirrors the skill and mastery of the musical composer. Classical music does not communicate by word, but by its intent.

Taking three examples: I.e. besides the surface platform of arguing rhetorically in politics, religion, or occultism: a writer has written a plain message (a single note) that states he does not need the Temple's help [Residual]. Another writer has gone to great lengths to be elaborate (a symphony) and wants me to see that she is smart [Active]. The last writer wants to challenge my own ideas in order to regain control of their own (a prelude) [Egoic].

~Residual: the writing presents key notions in a quiet rhythmic tempo: couched only by the bare essentials to give the prose form. It is simplistic, straight to the point, and because it requires very little mental processing and does not step out of the OF, it is soft. Because it is soft, it causes the mind to inject more contrast upon it to bring it forth: it is thus more likely to be received well, played over and over as a single note, and thought about more often after reading it than an Active writing is.

~Active: A loud, noisy couching of many key notions that seldom operates on the OF. It requires a lot of information to be processed: and pending the poetic talent in which this information is presented: can either end on a low note or a high note. With active writing it is necessary to use words that are out of the OF and this can be done tastefully if the rhythm of non-OF words is melodic and gradual. Or if persons are familiar and used to using a different OF such as the vernacular of the ONA; acausal, Aeonics, dark gods etc… the geometry of an Active letter is not affected by the departure. But if the letter is forceful and shows little grace in presenting its keys: it is as though a drum-kit has fallen down stairs. Elasticity in writing, an ability to compose lyrical music that is flexible, flowing, and able to rise and fall: to concede the merit of others music accordingly: shows a maturity of composition. "Textual Melody" is one of the essential factors to use in determining the psyche of a writer. If the writing was well put together, but lacked a convincing argument it translates musically as a low but inauthentic bass boom. If the writing had little substance but served only as a raft for the ego of the writer: it might translate musically as a high-pitched whine, scream or some irritating instrument. Most writing is active: that is, fed by a complex intent. Although that intent cannot be erased: [it is the paper on which the score is written] the writer can acknowledge its presence in a composition: and either apologise for it or justify it with an honest announcement pending poetic talent. Hence, I'm sorry, and well aware of the irony of writing about the ego.

~Egoic: Egoic writing is best equated to archetypal resonance: an Egoic writing smacks of a vulgar permutation of rehearsed classics. For that is what it is. It is more often than not a flighty composition that has a quiet opening and a loud but [sometimes understated] crescendo at the end. It can be coloured into two distinct tones of which there are various degrees. There is the persuasive ego that attempts to win the readers will under power: by appealing to emotive instruments such as the violin, cello or bass: using a similar mode of association that America employs to create anxiety and then remove that anxiety by posing as the readers saviour/crusader. And there is the aloof ego that plays beautiful music using flutes, panpipes, and other stringed instruments but like the song of the siren, requires that the listener enquire of the composing ego – for the composer deliberately separates itself from the musical score. This is so that compliments, congratulations on writing a beautiful piece are met with gruff reproach and any energy of appreciation toward the composer is turned into an ugly tentacle where the musical score is understated as rubbish and beneath the composers better attempts: this requires more interaction with the ego to soothe it, cradle it, encourage it to see its beauty and power: which it already does, but uses it to lure the unwary: a true psychic vampire.

I should add that such compositions that include a violin, are those containing emotionally charged archetypes such as overcoming an obstacle to get to the reader, the writer being prepared to sacrifice themselves on the readers behalf etc. and so the tune is often interlaced with sneaky flutes and panpipes to give a lift to the otherwise drudgery of being forced to empathise with these vampire types. Also, those of the aloof type write ideas that are never fully formed, or they may master one or two concepts beautifully.

But diversity is lacking in these types: mainly because the piece is intended as a cleverly crafted web: it is not the intention of the writer to go on and further themselves, but to receive praise endlessly on the mastery of one or two works. If praise is withheld, the writer usually does not return: there is after-all no substance to the writer and except for being fed voracious amounts of energy it has no interest in anyone else. It is for this reason that I refer to the aloof compositions as being composed of 'lilting' instruments: high notes with no bass.

Although there are several frequencies covered in this MS, some to do with time, some to do with magical alignment, others with commonplace repetition – it is this last one that is probably the most intuitive and useful.
In Summary:
Because there is a lack of originality in this mediocre human-centred phase of time, because writing must conform to various rules to appropriately conceal or reveal the writers intention if it be other than what they would indicate, and because music has gone into hibernation: and I mean the rise in stream-lined electronic factory produced banality that passes for composition these days: archetypically: most people I have encountered fall into one of these three categories. Why? Because they lack the power of personality: to be different: or to maintain or revive a link to the past and tap into genuine musical experience. The esoteric secrets of music are not lost however: they have been kept intact by the permeation of the acausal phenomenon of Music, with its noisy counterpart Language. Although I would not lean heavily on the categories given above, indeed they are just rough guides to give some semblance to the esoteric method that can be used, in tandem with other means, to determine a writers authenticity: I believe that there is beyond words and their static level of use in the matrix on a linear level: a secret esoteric harmony and frequency that remains unconscious in most: that delivers to the avid music appreciator; the Soul on a plate.

IN SHADE

There is an exercise that can quickly illustrate the region available for depth of human knowledge and understanding in mathematics. And I have already used it twice writing this. It reveals the symbolic blunt trauma that is the human instrument for capacity of knowledge and highlights both the dominance and the fragility of thought. Everything on the left side of a decimal point represents the limits of human understanding and by these numbers alone our systems run virtually everything and everything virtual, runs us. The three numbers to the right of a decimal point represent the maximum depth into dark waters we are willing to dip our toe. The numbers beyond which appear in nearly every equation – are simply ignored. What they mean – what they are telling us about the world – has never been determined with any sagacity.

In a hypothetical situation: We are on mars (representing a closed system). I have $961 dollars in credits (representing a finite resource). The smallest denomination I can break it down into physically is 5c credits. Here is my job: I am supposed to give every person that volunteered to assist with a setting up a satellite, $1 (constant A). That is part of my job. Here on mars $1 is much more valuable than on earth – it can purchase many goods and services. But there's a complication: Joe, told Sam – who also shares his pod – that he was setting up a satellite and Sam also got involved and helped with the task. The other part of my job is that I must use all of he funds given to me or I may be accused of short-changing the people of Mars. Because of Sam, I now have 962 people in the room, $961 in credits and must abide by the two constants: that is my job. Instantly (logic) I know that no-one in the room can get $1, so I holograph my boss. My boss tells me that even if I cannot pay $1 to each person I still have to pay each person involved an equal share. That is not negotiable. On Mars everybody gets an identical wage which helps prevent financial division – and all funds must be distributed equally, that is the law of our Martian society.

So, for whatever reasons (representing programmed conditions) – I must now pay 962 people out of 961 credits. I already know I cannot give each person a $1, so I turn to my calculator. According to which 961 divided by 962 is 0.998960498960. I understand this is less than a dollar and the next two digits. .99. confirm this. But the digits beyond begin to complicate matters. It looks like I can eventually give each person what is owed if I can make use of string of numbers – but I do not understand what they mean beyond breaking the $1 into smaller and smaller pieces. I try to divide the $961 by .99. $961 divided by .99 gives 970.7070707070. What is 970.70? 97.7 cents? Let's try dividing 961 by 970.70. This returns me to 0.990007211290.

Less than a dollar but by how much is still not clear. Even though I have enough money to distribute to everyone in the room – I cannot determine if I have enough money to pay everyone equally and the remainder of whatever I don't pay them must also be distributed equally. I try another route. I work out how many 5c coins are in $961. There are 20x5c for every dollar. 961X20 = 19,220. So, I try to divide 19,220 5c coins among 962. The answer is 19.97920997920. My calculator is suggesting everyone gets nineteen 5c coins and .97 of one more. At this point someone in the room gets tired of me taking my time to work this out and yells just give us 95 cents each and keep the change. I type in 961 divided by 0.95 and get the answer 1,011.578947368. This number is of no practical logical use – what is it trying to tell me? How does it help me? How does it address my problem – what, can I type in to correctly distribute $961 among 962 volunteers each of which must get the same amount and all of which $961 must be spent. I am hitting a wall. Because even though I have enough money to pay everyone equally even if it means they will not get $1 each – I have to distribute it all, equally, and use all available funds to me.

In a practical real world sense, the smallest coin by which I can break my money down into is a 5c coin. And while the answer lets me know it's less than a dollar – as soon as I take three steps to the right of that decimal I am in no man's land, a string of numbers that have been labelled "irrational" stretches out before me, trying to tell me something but which my clumsy money system cannot handle or compute. But why not? Often this crucial part of mathematics is ignored precisely because it cannot be understood and will not let itself be applied to our very rudimentary sketch in the sand representing the limits of understanding and calculation that becomes a fog three digits past the right of a decimal point. Let's look again at that first number:

0.998960498960 I can recognise that the reply wants me to give less than a dollar but more than 99 cents. So maybe 99 c and .89 micro cents. But what about 604498960? Why does that simply get clipped or ignored? Our physical money system once had 1's and 2's in cent coins but was clipped to 5c pieces as the lowest denomination.

Since no one understands these strings of numbers nor recognises any repeatable, recognisable pattern in them there is no guide on how to use them or what they do, mean or say – my monetary system does not let me break my coins down lower and switching to electronics to try and solve the problem just made it even more confusing. This example replicates innumerable mathematical equations – in this example we must adhere to the constants and the program, we cannot change them. We theoretically and financially have enough money to pay everyone equally, to split the money into equal parts – but we don't know how much exactly – after a point the answer eclipses our understanding and the size of our units.

We humans recognise this difficulty exists and have developed a habit of rounding up or down to a more comfortable number, a more rational number, especially when it comes to cash. But what do irrational numbers mean? We are stuck in the shallow end of this enormous wealth of information that we cannot decipher with logic, but because their purpose or significance eludes us, label them Irrational. It is a common practice to do the same with humans and deem them mad. Pi has been calculated to over a quadrillion decimal places but it is claimed – there is no pattern. Euler's number has also been calculated in a similar degree, but the string of numbers given is also said to have no pattern showing. All sources cite that no pattern has ever been found – and – this seems unusually dismissive for human intellect. Irrational numbers are the shameful secret swept under the rug of mathematics – too powerful for us to fathom, so labelled and put neatly on a shelf in the back room where no one need examine them very closely because their existence highlights that mathematics is neither pure reason nor anywhere close to a reflection of God, the Universe or an understanding of it.

If we want to compare it to the Divine – it is the grubby equivalent of peeking up an angel's skirt. Mathematics and the systems built with it – are evidently working with only a percentage of the total system – if – it is even working at all. The sum results of mathematics may be a reflection of our limited available access to the very system we suppose to have created and while seemingly impressive to us – we have no comparison of what impressive mathematics can be. Except we do – right around the world monuments impossible to recreate today laugh in the face of what is known now. In fact, the broken junked version of mathematics that does not use or understand "irrationals" must be limiting what is possible – why would we create a system we only use a small part of? Think about this. Mathematics does not fit the world, the world has been fit to mathematics. The systems we build use the veil left of the decimal point and a few numbers past it because they resemble the base 10 codex – and all systems are built in such a way using this mathematics that deliberately ignores irrationals. If you only ever see the colour red you cannot imagine a rainbow. What can you understand of a recipe if you only have 2 of the 8 ingredients? Irrationals represent a magnitude, an abyss too deep to swim in – and so it has scared all of the mathematicians out of the water. They use numbers in an incomplete way which is why we have failed to master time travel, FTL technology or perform any of the miracles of ancient builders because we have been unable to fathom the meaning of these very large strings of numbers which do not fit our simple systems. We arrogantly clip them short and cut them off – piling stumped numbers onto our edifices and grinning stupidly at our achievement as butchers of what is.

The idea that the numbers go on forever – has been proven abstractly – but it has never, been proven outside of mathematics – it is an idea made possible by a foundation of other ideas. If you are to be scientific – if you are to adhere to the laws of observation and logic, common sense and self-honesty you cannot with a straight face or capable mind conclude what you cannot observe. You may theorise it – but should not then treat your theory as fact. Infinity does not have any proof – there is simply no arrival at an expected end. We created the idea of finite and counterpoint it – the concept of infinity has been proven mathematically – but has never been proven outside of mathematics.

Infinity is quite simply a statement that because I cannot reach it with my arms it has no end – that because I cannot measure it in terms of scope, it has no end. This is not proven, it cannot be proven – it simply means your ruler, your idea of measurement, your expectation of being able to measure – were inadequate devices to do the job. That is ALL it means. But with great frequency infinity is treated as an actuality. That is not science – that is laziness for convenience. For many people, and this can be encountered heavily in almost any theoretical physicist, mathematician, philosophical paper on the size of the universe or when speaking about the scale of things – forever, infinite and even eternal are even used interchangeably as if they mean the same thing.

Partly – because English grammar leads us to believe using the same word over and over or more than once on a page is unprofessional, somehow clumsy or incorrect so these other words to replace used words creep into writing as a substitute; but this haphazard use of similes and synonyms also illustrates one of the deeper flaws of using language to assault any given problem. There is a tendency to compact ideology into existing words treated as wastebaskets (i.e. space is infinite) or eternal means the same as endless – where we will run right to the edge of the cliff of our idea but are incapable to jump off. We say it is infinite because it gives the appearance that we know – that we understand – that it is controllable: we say it to give confidence, to claim authority, to keep our degree or tenure, to agree with the lazy but numerous – but there is no such thing that we can prove. Just another thing TOO BIG for us that scares us, so we clip it smaller, make it into a stump and cannibalise it for our stretched frame of hanging skins we call Knowledge.

Because of how long we live, that we can only use tools we make inside and from systems we in limit understand, We can only continue the journey, so far – and our inability to fathom the nature of mathematics past that decimal point is indicative of the Zipf principle* of 20/80 and applicable as symbolic of the limits of our understanding in all things and how far we are capable to explore, the necessity of keeping our world stable and sensible through half-truths, before stepping over the decimal and taking a few more steps where it quickly becomes 'irrational' or an abyss.

*Zipf's law was originally formulated in terms of quantitative linguistics, stating that given some corpus of natural language utterances, the frequency of any word is inversely proportional to its rank in the frequency table.

Look at this diagram. This is a section of Pi. We all know what the 3 means. We know what the .1, the .14 and the .141 mean. We might even be able to use them. But think about all of the vast knowledge you attribute to 3.141, what it required for you to understand these numbers, their meanings, their purposes and then look past them. The 4 digits you recognise are utterly dwarfed even by the early string of the irrationals. Shown here are 11 digits in the black with many more besides. But neither you, nor humanity, knows how to use them – even though they form the vast majority of this number and should by reason, being the more densely populated data set, contain the most information about this number as a logical result to tell us about the Universe.

If we have a pamphlet that tells us What a Dictionary is – vs the entire volume of books for Oxford's English Dictionary: which one contains more information about the Universe as we know it? Which one should we read to better understand a dictionary or to learn more about the world? Why not then – the same with numbers? Why read and use a single number over 1000 numbers? Infinite is said to mean: limitless or endless in space, extent, or size; impossible to measure or calculate. It refers only to space. Forever is said to mean: for all future time; for always. It refers only to time. Eternal is said to mean: lasting or existing forever; without end. It refers to time and space. Not only do these terms have agreed upon meanings – they also have disagreed meanings, alternate phrasing, alternative etymology – these words can be reduced to shapes. What these shapes 'mean' is both static and liquid. From using one word – at least a thousand possible combinations of what to use next to it spring up, subject to what can be written and obey the rules of grammar, with just as many interpretations. But words evoke in a reader a quantum split with no predictable formulated response to those words, which words they will pick out and respond to, which order their reply will be given in.

Mathematics does not struggle with this – it does not involve moral imperatives, or get lost in small talk or personal attacks, or attribute blame, or change the subject, it does not express emotion or outrage, hate or love – it is superior to language for its lack of morality, of the human need to correct a statement through branching quasi-interpretable word, it does not suffer the weight and distortion in practice of proving what is right or wrong to say in any instance. It has far fewer handholds, is less accessible to interpretation: and only if you understand mathematics can you form a reply. It is a system of symbols that express relationships without the muddy wiping of one's indignant point across it. It is superior to the spoken word – and while it can express the individuality of those who use it in how they use it – it effortlessly strips away all of the detritus that lumbers conversation. It may create such as a result – but in use, expressed as symbols it is a cleaner, elegant, non-judgemental script.

Time is a construct (developed or given), but either way accepted as a ruling power that incrementally measures – but with no human living much beyond 100 years and many much less than this, the observer's absence of observation of the experiment means there is no experiment for the observer. Let's put this another way – it is the Human, out of all of the tools involved in an experiment requiring observation and measurement of these 'dwarfing vantages' (forces we cannot measure) that fails first. Perpetual motion cannot be achieved they say because the parts wearing out (entropy) does not constitute free energy. While atoms, water, the space outlast even the Earth – humans are around for a feeble smudge of time, during which they make claims like, 'oh, I can't measure that', and conclusions like 'it must go on forever'.

But there is no proof – either, human you Are doing science as you have bothered inventing to govern your experiments – or you are Not, and in pretending in infinity, you are not. You are simply preserving your embarrassment in the face of THEM and protecting the world ego from ever seeing into the Abyss. There are so many ways to understand, interpret, define, use a single word, but there is only a pure channel to understand a 1. If you understand 1 you cannot confuse it with two at this level of dimension – deeper into quantum, you can – and beyond that we have not put our hand. Yet irrational numbers -a product of mathematics, and humanity widely believes it invented mathematics, stare at us daily, from every complex equation but are just as widely ignored. Like trying to ride a two-wheel bike that only has one wheel mathematics uses an undetermined fraction of its potential – what lies on the other side of that decimal has proved too daunting, exhausting, inexplicable for logic, mathematics, philosophy to Know: and accordingly, it is a section of our reality taped up and sealed off from our systems as irrational, infinite, or god's fingerprint.

It is highly troubling that it should be agreed this is the right approach: these numbers are staring at us and hold a deeper key to the universe, everything does and everything has that we have analysed: we have made a zeitgeist of it by exploring, being curious, inquisitive of all of things around us, and the things around, inside and as far inside as we can get into them. Why this irrational spectrum does not get attention is because it represents a limit of our understanding. It is another Threshold that marks a line in the meta-sand where humanity dares not tread. It could be the panacea that mathematics requires to solve its most taxing equations or let us compute quantum in rapid real time.

But even though they manifest with alarming frequency – these shunned post-decimal numbers made famous but no less obtuse by pi frame our world and our inadequacies. Their only use seems to be to complete an equation in which their inclusion is ignored for its own information and considered representative of very small pieces of the integer simply tacked on as a byproduct of maths and treated as a meaningless extension – or as fractions of fractions of cents invisibly shaved off transactions to accumulate and line the pockets of very clever people. The Insynsian principle (the idea of raising singular items into an object of worship, to stand in place of god, or the quest for one grail, one ring to rule them all) understands why a theorem of pure mathematics is an attractive prospect – or a 'theory of everything' madly striven by in physics – it is laziness, it is pure arrogance, it is the same dream of clipping natures wings into horrible stunted shapes and viewing it as heaven that humans do with everything. Because we like to order things into pyramids, with, an apex at the very top. In every field of study or interest there is a driving motivation to reach a state of that form's perfection – or – there is an acknowledgement of perfection – or the acknowledgement that the field involves or can reach, a perfection.

Artificial Intelligence, Mars Colonisation, the perfect NBA line-up, a hole on one from the tee, to surf a tsunami, to prove consciousness, to speak with god, the perfect kill, the perfect date: an expectation that there is a model or example, a breakthrough into a paragon of a thing superior in every way to all other models of what we are learning, knowing or doing. It might be our ideology, political fanaticism, religious faith but in all instances, it is an unproven quest for unsurpassed elegance or inarguable dominance in nature's design.

Yet irrational numbers have been appended such a name and invite equally dismissive treatment, even as, they form the much larger part of what mathematics actually is. Those numbers are not mistakes, they are not superfluous, they are not there for no reason but to treat them as such is to render mathematics impotent, it is to limp along with a broken leg and never enter the hospital next door: nature does not provide reason-less quanta so why has this phenomenon been allocated such derision? If we invented it, why don't we understand it? Why do we only make use of some of it?

You cannot share 961 into 962 equal portions and use all of the allotted funds because the money system is too simple to make functional use of the tripost-decimal numbers. Yet the paradox is that you potentially do have enough money to pay everyone equally and use all of the money you just cannot prove it because you cannot interpret the numbers given by the calculator in relation to the overly-simplistic system that dominates to the left of the decimal point. Let us think of what the numbers we know have done for us – what we have built with what we were able to comprehend. Let us also think of numbers as layers of liquid oil and understanding as an oil drill. As we drill deeper into the core we tap more oil – as we move past integers and into the realm of decimals the drill starts to slow down and stops drilling. Eventually the drill breaks.

What if each decimal place is the equivalent of another dimension of the world? – what these numbers tell us is that there is extraordinary depth to what they represent, what if we could understand what the first 6 of them meant. What if the secret to time travel lay inside understanding and using those numbers in our world as often as we use integers. What if what is being shown in these strings is a staggering layer of different dimensions, times and spaces that exist and that we have uncovered abstractly – maybe, even knew once and forgot – just as we can penetrate an atom and find all manner of deeper subatomic particles within and, have yet, to find a place where our drill of inquiry comes to a stop on that quantum journey inward or outward for that matter, with no edge of a universe yet found – what if so many secrets stare blankly at us but labelling them irrational has effectively sealed them into a perceptual tomb, where mathematicians simply stare down at the floor as they pass these numbers in chains, whose crime was nothing more than being unintelligible and therefore an embarrassment to our collective intellect.

Can this habit be found elsewhere? Yes it can – in virtually every field where language is used. For instance, in speaking of who built historical monuments, no credit is ever given to who must have actually built it – the hundreds or thousands of people responsible for making video games or movies are almost without fail credited individually for their role in the creation of that game or movie – but historians speak of the pyramids for instance being built by Tutankhamen or Cheops, or the prevailing, reining ruler at the time is often credited as the architect – even though in every logical way this goes against the very foundations of logic: one man or woman cannot build such monuments: every task today shows how many people it takes to get rudimentary things built or done: but out of convenience, reduction or familiarity we constantly hear of one person building some impossibly complex structure. And for those new to the planet, it is a lazy lesson.

It is just one more way in which whole swathes of complex information are cut out because they don’t fit a much simpler system. We make the systems, we also cut out the complex information. These are choices. In essence, for humanity in general, close enough is good enough, round up or round down, smooth it out or shave it flush: THIS attitude is the sum of achievement, it is the pinnacle and the limit we can reach because we choose to ignore complex systems. We either don't or no longer have – the capacity to talk with God through forms because we don't deserve it. We cannot see his Works because we cover them in shade.

THE 23 SYNDROME

Foreword: The author does not wish to assert that writing is useless for means of communication: it should be clear that writing can construct magical forms of an extremely powerful nature given that so many people are involved in the shared nexion called "understanding". It should also be clear to aspirants that writing is in itself a 'corrupter of essence' and should always be digested with a grain of salt. Rather, the author wishes to assert that looking for magical keys in the structure of letters is a fruitless task. One may spend a great deal of time wishing something to be there, that isn't [The 23 Syndrome] and may consequently deceive oneself successfully by aiming ones mental engine at the task of manifestation of something altogether pointless.

Writing is a bridge, an exoteric manifestation of esoteric currents. The planes, curves, and angles of the letters used to scribe the esoteric have long been thought by many occultists [Crowley included] to be invested with some greater divine secret – a secret believed to be operating behind the myriad of geometry that letters cause when they are written; an essence within each letter used in its various combinations with other letters that hides an esoteric kernel of base magical logic that pulls a superior meaning of writing together. Interest in such a matter is usually peaked after a writer comes to finally exhaust for themselves the capacity of language to explain the currents of the esoteric and is forced to apprehend the role of writing as existing on a symbolic plane [Qv. Sruusis].

During 'Sruusis' a writer becomes acutely aware of the fragility of communication by letters or speech* to accurately convey anything esoteric. Writing can approach a semblance, indeed a great mirror to the arcane, but it can never replace occult/world experience. Whereby we are speaking of those writers that perform written records of magical activities: Esotery a writer has experienced is a living thing for them: an ecstatic fire and knowing that burns brightly as if some sparkling neon flare in the mind coupled with a corresponding physical alchemy; the body animated just so from receiving a full epiphany resulting in change. Such a living, organic feeling and apprehension of the currents involved is always private, unique: the result of experience with the true esoteric. But if one is attempting to describe these processes in writing: they must usually be described in the context of a change. To express this change, the writer must at least be able to describe a plane of being before the experience, and the altered plane of being after the experience. [Qv. Chronobet].

Although the Esoteric Plane and the Exoteric Plane join respectively as Acausal and Causal dimensions, they are intersected by the Abyss. An element of the Abyss is as a vortex that disintegrates causal information.

Language is affected by and even part of this vortex, whereby causal information is a corrupt translation of acausal essence and is energetically fragmented upon contact with the Abyss.

Acausal modes that filter through [and compose] into the Causal are dimensionally different and thus esoteric from a Causal point of view. Synchronicity, Dreaming, the genius of the Subconscious etc are forms of communication that are alien to the Causal: they are for instance of a different species of Time and cannot be understood as cause-and-effect phenomena. It is as though these experiences speak to us in an entirely unique language: a language of Experience that cannot be translated into anything but a crude approximation here in the Causal. Our language binds us to our dimension: we have no comparison and no room in our language for these types of alien beings. And when we try to describe these 'visitations' – our words are as whispers on the wind: ethereal and incomplete: made impotent and destroyed by the Abyss that separates this world from theirs. But few consciously apprehend this: and many continue the struggle using Causal language, in vain, to cross the Gulf.

The problem most often encountered in such optimistic experiments of one's verbal/literal skills – is that communication after the Abyss must meet certain criteria to be intelligible to those existing on the planes below Entry. Trying to record a static summary of "Being" by using some kind of alchemical formula to describe one's state before a transformation is a task that has eluded even the greatest wordsmith, because words limit the magical and force esotery into infinitely complex geometries, nonetheless bounded by dimensional restraints.

More so, attempting such a thing is not a flow with the natural: it is an attempt at solitary confinement of ALL by the limited apprehension of the few planes of which the human being is humbly aware – and doomed to failure because of:- Language. Recalling this authors own struggle: putting the body [of which we 'Matrix-ally' understand less than 1%], the Mind [an abstract that has taken on credible tangibility, and again an itemisation of which we Matrix-ally understand less than 1%], and the infinite angles of the existential into a concrete approximation or accurate model of Being using language proved impossible.

One: Language thwarted all attempts to convey what I felt: in most cases there was no precedent, no concept, and hence no word for it.

Two: all writing is corrupted by the alien presence of the bias of Ego.

Three: Encapsulating something as staggeringly simple as Life using Causal Language is to be overwhelmed by the sheer number of divisions/planes that must be accounted for [and are generally expected to be] if trying to measure ones “Alchemy” for others.

And Four: One cannot directly transfer one’s experience to another because transmission by Language is subject to chaos via the shifting miasma of meaning inherent in language by writing or speech that consequently smears and distorts the original esoteric.

Let us not ponder too deeply on the nuts and bolts of the limitations in the human being to account for its Self: it is a moot argument.

During the frustrating realisation of literary defeat: that one cannot truly convey the esoteric with the exoteric: the apprehension of language as a limitation for esotery may arise. An appreciation of Language as a tool belonging to the Matrix may surface whereby it is understood the role of Language is limited to creating mere geometric bridges: Bridges restricted to the Matrix because the geometry created is rooted in the illusory plane of the Symbolic. Such an apprehension is similar to that of actors who come to recognise the gulf between acting a role and the role itself that can never be bridged [Qv. The Sinister Grotesque].

And such a realisation offers powerful insight into the fabric of things: for a writer who has merged with an Acausal perspective of Language will become suspicious of the face value of words and see them for what they are: as a grotesque, a sinister writhing scrawl that is to the original esoteric as music is to noise.

However: not all writers emerge from the realisation intact or appropriately empowered: while some are able to accept that language is ultimately broken shards the casual result of being forced from the realm of the dream: others without knowledge of the Acausal and the nature of the Abyss are led back to the smaller magical cone; the semantics of the Matrix, where they contemplate a secret essence believed inherent in language and words and letters themselves. Such an obsession obscures the simple and represents the absorption by a destructive angle: Wisdom substituted by a treasury of thoughts that there lies within our Language some mysterious Occult secret.

A distortion of the simple is bound to occur if the epiphany is encountered by a human-centred being. Writing/Speech is the tool of the Ego and is thus heavily invested with the energies of human self-importance – a narcissistic mentality that summarises: because it “comes” from man it is “of man” and thus by proxy “is man” – which is further broken down by the selfish nature of the will to power of all conscious beings to, “is me”. There is an ever-present danger of misdirection because of this mentality for the ego to project divine worth onto its tools. That is to say, safety precautions are taken by the ego to protect it when it suddenly experiences mystery at its inability to communicate its will to its satisfaction and it charges the exoteric script/text with power, remaining ignorant of the symbolic plane. And due to this ignorance, Gematria, Kamea and other exoteric arrangements of letters and numbers are pored over, arranged into squares and rhombuses and so forth in the hopes that such diligence will reveal a perceived secret. There will always be casualties on the LHp [which can quickly become an RHp]: i.e. those that don’t make it intact from the ‘Sruusis-type’ realisation and remain blind to the power of words and to the alien powers of their deceptive host the ego.

In Summary:

Writing is an abstract symbolic expression by the ego to express the incommunicable: or in a magical sense, the esoteric. It is motive in the guise of shape, and if its exoteric representation is mistaken as essence rather than appearance it has performed its tragically deceptive spell-craft. For the aspirant – writing should be seen as a mode of human centred perspective that is obsessed over because of its connection with the Ego: it should not be expected that dissection of symbolic characters in light of this understanding will divulge anything less than this.

* [in which case we exchange the symbolic for the aural or sound plane]

THE 23 SYNDROME: NOTES AND PRACTICE

Part of the extreme emphasis and cynicism of form by THEM, of dissolving faith and reliance in the man-made architectural geometries of the physical world, is related to an attempt to try to silence the equivalent of the “inner chatter” of the mind – for the eyes.

To create uncertainty in perception offers the possibility of unhinging or relaxing the focal point of awareness of the being – with the possibility of exploring or experiencing altered states of perception that being anchored concretely to the world via the collectively shared matrix of ones thought with the general consensus does not usually allow.

Projection of concepts such as density, mass, value, name, or time onto objects via practice and habit is a powerful process that fixes many people in stasis and In Time via the sympathetic bond and repetitive cycle that is built by the assumptions made by the mind when processing the ‘E’ or Black Clay (the environment) and informing ones senses via predetermined methods of interpretation. These processes occur via many unconsciously unchecked postulates that determine a certain way of thinking, and as such then require validation. Validation comes either from others reaffirming the consensus or oneself. And in having validation, it adds gravity/solidity to one's perception of the world through that particular mode at the expense of others.

The Society of the Dark Lily expressed a similar conception using three descriptions of a walk down the street using three completely different sets of focal awareness:

– – – Society of Dark Lily – – –

Three Alternate Views

One

Walking down the busy high street, I look at all the aliens. I seem to have landed from another planet, now I walk amidst these people who, it seems, take themselves without a thought of the possibility of a different view of one another. I pretend that I am a visitor from another planet walking amidst a world of humans and so I get a different view. Everything becomes new and unusual, especially the shape of the people.

Two

Inside the shell that is called a body, I can feel the skeleton as it reacts to my unconscious commands. I walk down the high street, my arms swinging, my feet taking steps, my legs working in unison with one another, propelling me forward. I feel the skull beneath the skin and muscle, the backbone that runs up the middle of my back, the bones that serve as the foundation for my fingers, my arms, my legs. I sense my body in a different manner and again, everything becomes new and unusual. Nothing is taken for granted.

Three

I listen to the noises: the thoughts and emotions as they pass through my mind. I am distant from them, but usually they command and I unconsciously obey. For this moment though, I observe: watch, look and listen. A thought that suggests one course of action, an emotion that threatens to sweep me away, but I remain aloof. Is this a first step to the state beyond time and space? The place where the Adept waits for millennia? Where no-one and nothing can cause harm? Where he, or she, becomes immortal?

Three different views on a world where it would seem everything is accepted at face value.

– – – Society of Dark Lily – – –

Carlos Castaneda, SATH, and many other sorcerers agree that the nature of ‘second awareness’ or dislodging consciousness results in an experience so far removed from fantasy, day dreaming, imagination or wishful manifestation, that it would very likely send one who was unprepared for it mad or jolt them so severely they underwent drastic alchemical change.

I relate to this contrast personally via the experiences I have had with the intellectual and the supernatural world which were so distinct that they coloured my perception and beliefs permanently. Although admittedly a cynic of many things – I firmly believe there is much more to ghosts and demons than the idea of them being mere tools useful for psychological analogy. I have witnessed things that I previously and strenuously believed were not possible or were the sort of thing other people imagined – such as the corner of my bed being pushed down heavily as if something were sitting on it while I was the only one in the room in broad daylight. These sorts of things, even as mild as a ghost sitting on the bed, leave the rational mind with an eerie uneasiness that it would sooner prefer to forget. I was 19 at the time but dared not turn around to see what persistently placed so much pressure on the bed when no-one else was in the house for honest fear that what I saw would rival the nightmares I had seen as a teen. The experience was so odd, so unnatural, that it sent a shiver up my spine that chilled me to the bone as I lay there staring at the wall. I can’t forget – that – or a number of other supernatural events that have influenced my particular view of the occult and magic.

I remain a believer that while none of the currently available descriptions, explanations or theories for ghosts, the soul, afterlife, spirit worlds, alternate dimensions satisfy me or do justice to those unsettling and weird happenings – indeed seem weak and decidedly false in comparison to such supernatural events – that there is more to the world, more to ghosts and demons, more to life and to death, than our senses usually comprehend.

The realisation that there exists such distinct and unheard-of altered states that genuinely split perception into a before/after scenario is not unlike the dual perception that drugs such as LSD can bring about – resulting in a love affair with a drug (or drugs) for the heights and new worlds they allow one to reach or access otherwise locked out of perception. Such heights are as much the muse of the artist, the musician and the genius as they are the witch, witch-doctor, tribal chief, devil worshipper or shaman.

One of the naturally occurring heights analogous to an altered state that has inspired so many of the former – with countless leaps and bounds of human ingenuity just 'coming to people' – is dreaming. Yet the function and power of dreaming once historically and culturally revered, esp. as a prophetic tool or gateway to other worlds is in modern times (c.2009) a sadly neglected science and an occult art relegated to the scrapheap as something to be forgotten or treated as the mind's garbage. So much for occult faculties within easy grasp disguised in full view.

Although dreaming is not formally recognised or appreciated by my society – it may be owing to the fact that dreaming is an extremely private experience with the language and use of symbols/metaphors deeply unique to each dreamer that causes so much frustration with any kind of interpretation that causes it to be shunned. However – Dreaming is as close as many people I've talked to seem to get to supernatural/altered state experiences – as many spurn the entheogenic properties possessed by certain drugs or wave away the risks associated with the drug culture. Wherein ritualised settings and implements for sorcery, meaningful incantations and strange or specific geometry, names of entities, demons, angels, gods and djinn, song, dance, trance, chant, frenzy etc can help aid the magician in increasing or channelling the effects of a drug – some drugs need no such help – indeed some drugs can take complete control of the magician – I refer to large doses of strong street LSD, an extra-strength dose of the psilocybin found in mushrooms, but more specifically mescaline/peyote. These types or doses are often to the "societal detriment" of the user – since these substances are so strong they can permanently affect one's perception, and permanently shift ones focal point of awareness so far out from its accustomed position that state sanctioned madness (at least as it appears to others from the outside) results from the deeming of an inability of the user to function 'normally' within society.

Still continuing to expose/involve myself to a vast number of thought systems, alchemical paths, magical methodologies, occasional drugs, short insight roles, face or integrate stimuli that conflicts with my ego, and so on – what has impressed me most as a continuous factor throughout my experiences with thought is my belief that whatever I point my mind at, I breathe life into.

That is to say – that I have sufficiently proven to myself that altered states and in some cases, supernatural experiences, are possible through the agency of the mind alone and a fanatic self-immersement or accepted want of delusion of a form or set of forms – being the equivalent of descending into a personally chosen madness – does not substantiate what I then experience, but it does substantiate that I 'experience' because I have immersed myself. Qv. the 23 Syndrome: Liber 13/13.

I believe that others, pre-loaded with specific concepts and explanations of things such as Time and Space also project these concepts simply because it's part of their programming – or what they have learned and/or chosen to accept to work with and work within. Shared convictions of the world in such a similar way – give rise to specific architecture and interpretations, defining permanence, solidity, validity and reality. If this permanence is deliberately broken somehow – things that were not previously visible, 'believed in' or locked out of perception are more perceivable. I have encountered over the years startling (startling because I have formulated many of my ideas thinking them original only to discover they are not) similarities in the works of others that verge on such a system though it is difficult to determine exactly what is meant and if the context exists for them as it does for THEM in what have often been occult-style garbled references to such a view.

Austin Spare, to cite just one example, appears to have struggled to express something of this line of reasoning in his 'Logomachy of Zos' and to seek to break down the processes of logic and assumption. In one set of insights, he tried to show the other side made pure/raw interactions, language and words instant miscommunications via their own clumsy handling of such purity of expression because of their habit of attaching and reading into what was presented. In realising this – he thus bordering closely on the means to break free of form. But his narrator either did not quite manage to achieve workable practical formula for doing so, or, in expressing perennial emanations of wisdom at a different time – did so in a different way, rhythm, vocabulary and tempo.

I quote here two interesting passages:

"Is the Truth necessary? The need is for our own Truth: lack of integrity makes for sterility and is meaningless. Things more necessary than Truth are expressed through our efforts to render such."

&

"There are no conclusive conclusions, yet nothing germinates unless we have, or make, the necessity of arbitrary 'will-desire-belief' for a possible image of our ambition."

Austin neatly expresses two of the many alchemical keys utilised by THEM; the first passage renders the intention by THEM to 'return people to themselves' wherein building their personal integrity and foundation requires that anytime someone grabs hold of our work as dogma or semantic authority we must dislodge that grip. This probably makes us appear dis-interested perhaps even stand-offish or arrogant – but it must be. That is the formula that works.

The second passage presages the conviction by THEM that any singularity is a deception, any conclusion creates exclusion – and yet to teach esoteria there must be something visible to allow interaction with the world – in this case, a form, our 'Temple' is itself that necessary evil.

I'll add another one here which amazingly relates a similar set of insights as was dealt with separately without any prior knowledge of Spares work in our essays on the "23 Syndrome" and "An Analysis of Frequency".

"Words, words, words, however used, whatever they symbolise, request or tell, say more Showing in between the antics of all motives. Yes, word-rendering deals the quickest of deaths to flabby ideas; and also words are the most poignant, suggestive, contagious, substitutive, and lasting means to convey anything. Most deadly virus, most potent abreaction of magic subtlety even your erasures reveal your believing by their persuasive influence and their magic."

Reading these tracts and the many more startling epithets in Logomachy of Zos I am struck by the similarity of Austin's insights with our own – as I am continually awakened by the over-arching power and undercurrent of Synchronicity that connects us. Spare also had the same luxury we do of leaning on the terminology of Psychology and seems quite enamoured with the Ego as the place/point from which the world proceeds outward.

It is almost as though THEM's presence existed to re-translate these perennial truths, recorded so many times in so many other places, for a new time using a suitable contemporary reorientation of language those of our time would clearly understand – a message that quintessentially remains unchanged but whose stages of understanding provide a challenge for each generation as that understanding grows. Just as some may one day try to interpret us. Except – I have only just come across the work of Spare – so no deliberate intention for a translation was possible.

Moreover, Spare appears to have shared the view that all of the minutiae that filled the volumes of his books was strictly His – that for all its scope and mass – was yet only His, and just one compression of the unique private experience of being.

Chumbley and Crowley do too – using a quasi-language that sought neither to explain or justify itself to others, calling on all manner of strange words formulas and terms to denote processes and/or things from their perception of the world that had no prior name – or that used such terms to give a common meaning another one.

While beautiful expressions one and all in their own right – my own impressions of such works were like that of modern art – wherein because people did not understand what was written, and it went over their heads, or because they could not understand it because it was so stylised and cryptic as to not to be decipherable but used all manner of poetry, glyphs and quite frankly, nonsense to appear deeper than it actually was – they read into it and made a pretentious song and dance about its awesome merit and genius.

Now, obviously, such cryptic ciphers certainly have their place on another level of the occult in that being undecipherable or possessed of ambiguity they act like Rorschach, tarot or other meditative devices such as the mandala – inciting self-reflection. They also have the added advantage of not clearly saying anything about anyone – which means authorities can easily arise to interpret the content for others – and they also remain perennially interesting because each person can access such devices at any time in their own private way without feeling like a fool. Crowley was more amenable to this than Spare. In one way, this crypticism is the very essence of the occult, as it aptly captures the heart of the matter concerning the struggle between objectivity and subjectivity.

I have continually encountered a desperation to quantify aspects of our Being step by step unto an extremely dissective degree of analysis – Chumbley did it, Dee did it, Aquino, LaVey, Long, IOT, WOT, ONA all passed through this intense stage of self-enquiry and exasperation – wherein the magician second guesses every postulate, fears every assertion, and questions their own authority to assemble the answer with what are always considered to be flawed tools – this is a pattern in the work of many.

It is especially prevalent in the hundreds of young magicians that I have encountered over the decade wherein the maddening frustration to work things out to the nth degree results in volumes of privately deciphered text and correspondences, astonishingly strange diagrams and illustrations of cloaked insights in the unique language and logomachy of the magician. I have boxes of these, myself.

Of course, Spare, like LaVey, Crowley Chumbley or Dee, etc are dead men. Gone from the world and with them any answers. There exists no chance to enquire further of them into what was meant by various phrases in various works or to seek depth/clarity in the expressions they left behind. Perhaps it is a true signification of the Work itself that it leaves such quandaries behind even for those who pursued it with their lives. Like so many before and after them we continue the Great Work with Guess Work. A minute's silence for all the poor mad bastards who laid the foundations for the occult.

Synchronously – Spare appears to have also been concerned with the numinous and even refers directly to an intersection of time and space as a nexion – a terminology that has been behind some of the most influential work of the Order of Nine Angles.

In this copy of Logomachy ‘numinous’ is spelled as ‘noumenal’ and a nexion is referred to as ‘nexity’. How long has the Cosmos been attempting to presence this change in consciousness that we are present vessels of?

Quote:

“time-space is an empirical relativism deriving from our manifold of complete and unsynthesized representations seeking nexity. The unrelated has neither time, space, nor ego.”

~

In order to return to my previous points regarding an altered state of perception I digress to notes on the results of my encounter with the Angles:

I used to look at a tree for instance, and instantaneously project its life direction or life force as thrusting upward from the ground. Running through my mind what I had been taught about trees – running the program “TREE” at the speed of light – leaves, branches, wood, sap, etc. and with it, my knowledge of how trees grow, that they grow and the innumerable examples I had seen that ‘proved’ all of this. Thus, when I perceived trees I perceived them as growing objects and attached the concept of their life moving upward.

After having my brain fried by the Septenary Way by encountering my personal hell of the meaning and presence of the ‘Angles’ – coupled with my acceptance of relativity; when I looked at a tree (or anything for that matter), I no longer processed it automatically as something solid that was outside of me or separate from me.

It used to be just another stationary inert object that time flowed past/through just as Time and space intersected neatly so that one travelled with the other. But since the Angles – nothing is that nice and simple anymore. In fact, all objects took on a more complex axis like this > * and I could feel the trees energy as coming (and being part of) more than one source – and not just part of the scenery in my perception as an external item which once it and largely everything else was.

The tree was no longer connected to the world as strongly as once it had been – it did not seem to be any more a part of ‘nature’ and causality than I did – but emanated (life) from some secret place of its own.

The angles also broke the convenience of feeling myself to be moving while it was a stationary object – my awareness told me now that it was moving in concert with everything around it – just as I was, and everything else was – shifting all the time. And the tree which had previously informed my sense of one fixed shape and description – i.e. large, covered in bark, standing still – split off to generate a layer of perspectives. Not just on the level that my eyesight could pick up, but with insistence that beneath the bark there was a world seething with insect life, within the trunk and leaves it was groaning with invisible growth spurts and secret alchemies, on smaller diminished scales it was the universe of smaller creatures harbouring microscopic worlds of its own, and yet at the same time just one tree of thousands, a relative part of a much larger landscape and forest.

Moreover, my perception of Time was altered due to the acceptance of the acausal component so that the tree no longer grew nice and simply from one point in time and would finish in another – but now all stages of growth were implicit while at the same time the tree lived its life before my eyes and the landscapes changed as if hundreds of years were passing, or dropping away, throwing my perception back and forth like a rag-doll trying to rationally conclude where in time and space this tree was situated.

My concept of the world has never been simple since the day I found the Angles – all at once things zoom up so I can see them from a great height, zoom in so I can see them as layered in dimension and size pending my own consciousness as a human, smaller and larger than a human… zoom back forward, and even directions lose meaning. “up”, “down”, just weird sounds and syllables that seem rudely out of place and desperately inadequate to explain this maddeningly slippery slideshow.

Time though, time really ruined my mind esp. when the Linear perspective of it was dissolved. See the diagrams in UAE wherein I discovered that not only was the tree growing upward and outward in time simultaneously with me – that is to say, sharing the same time continuum so that we both travelled it at the same time, me getting older as it got older – but somehow space/matter which was on the y axis, while time was on the z axis, were both were travelling toward and away from each other at the same time – yet remained intersected. A conceptual nightmare for my linearly trained mind.

It’s nice and easy to go through life with neat convenient postulates that you don’t look at too clearly –and get wrapped up in the trials and tribulations of it to keep you busy enough not to ever have to seriously enquire into such foundations. But when these things which people take for granted are no longer accurate or possible – in fact irreparably damaged so that one feels dirty trying to return to them, to deny the expansions and opening of the senses that the magician perhaps foolishly lusts after – it is as though I had become obsolete to the rest of the world and am struggling to cope with the simplistic perceptions other use to govern it. These widening circles of perspective also re-coloured my interactions with people – in some of cases for the worse, in some particular cases, such as understanding how my own mind works – for the better.

None of this altering, zooming, maddening perspective is voluntary – or a gift or skill I can switch on and off – I need no meditation on objects to make them do this – the whole world and its contents have become extremely uncertain for me and all of its visible geometry null in value – and I doubt I can ever again trust or believe it. Now it's as if I look at things beyond the physiological media of my eyes. If this is some side-effect or result of some degree of acausal perception, it is maddening, and I've stayed quite mad from its effect.

I find myself looking beyond things all the time – treating clocks watches etc as something that other people do, like I'm a visitor in the world and the "Time" is something others work to.

My enormous body of work with forms, illusions, dissolving the matrix and other such things is probably a direct result of my personal experience with suddenly breaking part of my mind so that I saw the world in terms of literal angles – very much like a wire-frame.

I tried to encapsulate this 'essence' in the Master card of Archetypia – but nothing static really does justice to the uneasy shifting-ness of the world I now find to be my lot in daily life. Things certainly don't have the permanence they used to – I see whole lives of things sprout grow and rot as they sit in place, the house I live in swallowed by grass and claimed back by trees as some sort of future vision forces the house away and through its path of time more quickly than it ever really should for a normal person – who I'm fairly sure doesn't feel the world is illusory or slipping to and from an unexplainable loop that spatial concepts like external/internal/outer/inner are just hopeless to use to describe it.

If I wasn't me and read some of the things written by the Temple of THEM – I'd certainly think the writers had lost a few marbles. Some of the concepts I believe in or try to explain really are completely mad insofar as they juxtapose what already exists as the status quo in regard to perception.

I don't curse any madness I might have picked up. It's not a happy madness – but neither is it really a sad madness – it is more than anything a deep sense of loneliness and isolation from others and just staring beyond everything that others find joy in. It seems that you have to lose a lot of marbles to go deep – and I've tried where skill had a hand and with a lot of luck to lose only the right ones.

I didn't have inner silence when I found the angles – I hadn't even tried at that stage to quiet the chatter within. In fact, I had a 'religious' experience that left great distaste and embarrassment and anger with me.

But I believe the gradual erosion and eventual disintegration of the concepts that my mind held firm (such as the super-simplifications of linear time and space) was a fundamental step that helped greatly to experience the angles and to achieve unusual insights and ideas. Also, that this process of breaking things down could greatly help as a process of alchemical putrefaction to enable someone to achieve similar or even greater perceptual changes without having to go through the personal anguish and hell that I did to get here. And yet the challenge remains to stay sane enough to continue to form and share coherent retrospective of my journey but still to travel further along it. Perhaps I am the only one to travel this path and come up with these ideas that characterise my work – perhaps I am not tapping into a collective current that others may follow and expand – but am self-deceived in my own delusions of magical progress – but at the end of the rainbow, sanity is over-rated.

Fair enough that my experiences are possibly all in my head – or in no way fit to match the set of descriptions that I've heard a mescaline or peyote trip brings on physically. Using (infrequent) strong doses of mushrooms and LSD does not appear to have been the causal component that led to the vivid hallucinogenic perceptual change of the world that has taken place for me – but LSD was almost certainly the launching pad.

I cite the complete difference that took place in my artwork after my first LSD intake as a drastic example of how deeply this drug may have affected me – but in all fairness I have been involved with others heavily into the drug culture for many years and throughout they nurtured my understanding, respect and made my experiences with such substances more meaningful and spiritually rewarding, acting as guides, than such experiences would probably have been – and my influence from drugs is best disguised as a rich and lengthy tapestry. "Burning holes in my brain", "opening up neural pathways" these are two of the concepts my entheogenic travellers used to describe to me what was possible with such substances. And no question that they did – and were at least partly responsible for my cynicism of all that I constantly refer to as 'forms'. A few near-death experiences have added to the spiritual grasp for more to life and the urgency with which I've written about it.

All of these and no doubt many other factors have resulted not in a drug-addled delusion but a psychic reintegration and interpretation of the world that is best described as a permanent sense of slight disorientation both spatially and chronologically.

I have the constant feeling I'm between worlds, somehow a ghost travelling through time and alive and vivid – but somehow that I'm also a projection back from a future point in time where I'm already dead.

And I'm only thirty years old – this is heavy baggage to go the rest of the way with.

Damn you ONA! None of this may be real to you, or others, or even for me – it may not even match what is experienced by others who believe they've tapped into such things as the acausal or at least are onto the right track – but may be a direct result of the ideas and concepts I have continually washed my brain with.

Uncharacteristically for me, I have not assumed a priori that the acausal or other worlds or states or that which lies in the glimpses of those strange places and happenings of the supernatural – by whatever name – are found subjectively or objectively.

But – what is possibly my own self-delusion could also very well turn out to be the groundwork for a science of reorienting consciousness resulting in acausal perception, or at least a weirdly expanded perception bordering on opening the gateway to the former. Experimentation continues.

Saturday 11 July, 119 fyn. (2009)

A RE-EXAMINATION OF THE AXIOMS OF SCIENTOLOGY

I have decided to re-write the article for a good friend of Anon who recently posted my 2004 article on Scientology so as to make it clearer and stand alone as a separate study that re-introduces my way of thinking to readers interested in criticisms of Scientology rather than require them to have previous extensive familiarity with my current of work regarding deconstruction and forms. I will address each of the Axioms in turn.

~

Axiom #1. "Life is basically a static. DEFINITION: A life static has no mass, no motion, no wavelength, no location in space or in time. It has the ability to postulate and to perceive."

Inevitably – all human constructs upon which religion or schemata of life are built up – require a pre-existing anchor point most likely to be grounded on faith in an unknown element of a spiritual or occult nature. The anchor used here is a 'life static' – which is essentially a word to denote the pre-conceptual supposition on which everything else is then built. If this element is not supposed – nothing else can be built – so it is first necessary for someone to introduce an abstract that can turn the whole summary of life achieved by someone else's vision of what it is – into something that can be grasped intellectually and rationally as an idea, by giving it a name and a definition.

The axiom further defines a life static as 'having no mass, no motion, no wavelength, no location in space or time. It has the ability to postulate and perceive.' What is happening here? If you can be persuaded to accept the abstract of 'life static' you suppose the abstract for yourself as a starting point – and will then read on, adding or attaching further ideas and concepts onto this primary starting block. In order to understand any abstract – you must create something else against which to compare it. The most common example I can give – is space vs. matter. If you suppose space, then in order to define space, you must provide a 'tension' or opposite concept against which the first concept can be compared. To explain space, you must also explain the absence of space. This creates a tension of two abstracts that 'lean' on each other and validate each other. In this way, they become 'concrete' solidified and for all intents and purposes, relied on as real. Whilst abstracts are arguably the only method humans can utilise to understand things – the method is wide open to abuse of every sort owing to the nature of language, how it is used, why it is used, and who uses it for what.

What is then happening here is that after persuading the reader to accept the first postulate of a 'life static' – further comparable definitions to define the abstract are loaded onto it. However, Mass, Motion, Wavelength, Space, Time and even 'no and 'a' are also abstracts and unfortunately for all would-be religions, cults, and brain-washers abstracts are ingrained with a trail of hidden suppositions that can tell us exactly how the writer/author actually perceives such things as time and space – which can often be separate from the words written by authors to paint a deceptive picture. This trail can further illuminate the genuine intent of the author who often attempts to cloak that intention with flowery crap, romanticised cliches, ideology, or other types of form designed to persuade a reader to believe what is written is something other than what it really is.

My work involves the concept of forms which are created by the human habit of abstracting the world around them into objects, boundaries, divisions, planes, fields, spaces, and millions upon millions of names for everything and its combinations. I have written at length on several particular subjects in the rest of my work but the main themes that involve this Scientology examination are that the English Language, as the carrier of knowledge, derived from Latin, and Latin was an attempt by the Church to homogenise (make as one) all world languages into one dialect. As a result of this hijacking of language, and because of the very grain of the mentality of the Church, language was distorted and injected with two major things representative of Church mentality: duality and morality.

Duality is basically the idea that things can be divided clearly into opposites. This is such a strong idea that only through comparing one abstract against another can we ever understand our abstractions. We can then treat both abstractions (both of which are illusory and usually just words for an object that summarise the object into very simple terms) as real and build upon them. But human beings require two abstractions in all cases to understand anything – called a 'tension' – and this leads to an ingrained oversimplification of perception becoming habitual that is close-minded and believes if something is not 'a' it is therefore 'b'.

Duality is never happy to let 'ab' exist. Morality – is a judgemental inclusion in language that makes us habitually add a value to our abstracts, in most cases either a simple polarity of 'positive' or 'negative', couched within neutral joiners – or at least, seemingly neutral joiners such as 'the', 'a' and so on. But these little joiners are anything but neutral. They, in tandem with other words, can actually tell us an enormous amount about how the writer perceives the world, the reader, himself, and various topics by unconsciously informing us how they perceive time and space, to what extent they place faith in various forms and concepts, and which concepts they have first supposed to build their case. Often – this information reveals many contradictory facts about the writer's actual perception and the perception they write about and demonstrates a clear attempt to deceive the reader. This is the case with almost all style of writing from all walks of life.

If I might try to demonstrate further the strength of abstracts, can you explain what a wavelength is without using any words? Can you communicate it to someone else without speaking or writing it down using language? Generally, not. Sign language is silent but still requires the use of language and thus its inbuilt duality and morality which control and manipulate certain suppositions into being. Drawing it requires that the person recognises the symbolic postulate for it, and even if they understand your squiggly line as a 'wavelength' when you show it to them – to understand it they must accept the same notions language requires to be rationally understood. It is impossible to explain a wavelength without relying on others reliance on the solidity of abstraction.

I would at this point urge people to check out my essay 'The Chronobet' which tries to explain how something as simple as the word 'is' informs us a great deal about how a person perceives space by; supposing a singularity exists and therefore supposing 'is not'; (duality); supposing separate or discrete objects or concepts separate from their being exists and therefore that space is at least 3 dimensions and has clear divisions between each object, and supposing a concrete dimension vs. a theoretical dimension or abstract vs. reality, tells us here is a brain that is using words cleverly but is still using exactly the same wire-frame we all use. Etc. This tends to trip up so-called enlightened beings and reveals the author's ego at work, the status quo of perceptive faculties and beliefs being sustained, and nothing remotely transcendental.

One of the more noticeable powers (and dangers) of abstracts is in our automatic reaction when abstractions are presented to us to sift quickly through our mental catalogue (at the speed of light without all) and find an opposite to compare it with the abstract presented. We therefore automatically accept that ‘abstraction’ is a valid system and support it by not questioning it. This allows many clever tricks of the writer to get through without being challenged. Note also that the concepts used are usually those with great emotional attachment and meaning in them so that the reader recognises a word or concept and automatically starts abstracting out of habit.

In effect we are conditioned, and largely cannot escape, making a dualized and moral-based judgement in every single word and sentence we write. This goes for the Axioms too; by persuading you to accept ‘life static’ as the grounding base – the writer can then attach further abstracts, explain it through the absence of it, add further definitions, meanings and so on – that appear to say just one thing but really say many things, some of which the writer cannot help but give away.

If someone cleverly uses the right abstracts, they can take us on a very carefully crafted mental journey that creates a certain view or geometry of forms in our heads – which we strengthen – because of the power of our catalogue of opposite abstractions which are there to validate abstractions. Some people refer to this as brainwashing, manipulation, PR, or bullshit; but it is very clever, very powerful stuff that takes advantage of our gullibility, our trust, our senses, our method of perception, our habit of abstraction, and basically preys on many other things humans do all the time we are simply not aware of (for various reasons) that lead us to come to certain conclusions when presented with certain information.

It all begins, when you accept the first abstract ‘life static’ and then agree to attach the subsequent abstractions of meaning and definition of life static and its associated attachments that the writer claims to be at the essence of things. Once you accept that is ‘true’ you accept a whole lot of stuff that goes with it whether you want it or not. To start with, you are not only accepting the abstract ‘life static’ but you are accepting the meaning of ‘is’ which involves a specific orientation and understanding of linear chrono-spatial arrangement to take place for rational understanding, ‘basically’ which supposes degrees of understanding are possible and relies on you accepting that knowledge comes in degrees, as well as suggests that the author is possessed of a more complex explanation, accepts that we can Know at all, that human beings can make accurate and authentic assessments of things. Because this is a postulate, it brings with it many other associations and abstracts we may not have wanted – it suggests a great host of other suppositions about life and how it operates – just on these two words alone.

Then of course you must also accept ‘a’ if you want the sentence to make sense – which is again a suggestion that something can be separate or singular; in effect you are agreeing with the author that time and space is composed in such a manner that time and space exist, exist as a 3d (or 4d) matrix, that it is linear, that objects exist, that our perception of the world as made up of objects is correct – and so on.

There is a lot of this that goes unnoticed, trained as we are to quickly assess things automatically and eventually unconsciously such as this in order to get on with day-to-day life easily and conveniently – especially when reading. Scientology is certainly not alone in taking full advantage of the crippling secret powers of language to control us – since we generally don’t take notice of words like ‘a’ and ‘is’ but tend to focus on unusual terms like ‘life static’ – not the familiar carriers and joiners like ‘the’. But is in ‘the’ and ‘a’ and ‘of’ that the most information about spatial perception is obtained – not in the conscious stream of the ego that tries to convince us it is ‘beyond time’ or some other such thing. There is a lot to all words and a lot of processes to what we are actually doing when we read and accept them – and it is knowledge of this acceptance, which enables others to control and manipulate through clever propaganda by keeping space and time orthodox through the continued esoteric use of these carriers and joiners.

Axiom #2 “ The static is capable of considerations, postulates and opinions.”

An interesting second step. ‘Considerations, Postulates and Opinions’ could quite easily be understood to be three ways of saying one identical thing; these groups of abstracts very often come in threes. There is potential reasoning behind this but perhaps it should be in another essay at another time. Writers often flesh out a weak point by stalling you from noticing that weakness usually because they are unsure (and cannot know) whether you have accepted the first postulate – life static’. The fact is, all the entire structure of subsequent abstracts, ideas, words, terms etc are necessary to give weight to the first abstract ‘life static’ – because when you really get down to it, without words, a writer has nothing and no objective proof of a ‘life static’ – so it is necessary to quickly provide struts or supports for the first flimsy idea by making a geometric prism (prison) of lots of abstracts. Of course, only if you have first accepted their abstract ‘static’ can you then load further abstracts onto it.

What happens when we posit anything is that we automatically have to posit their opposite, and without meaning to, our abstracts are suddenly heavily loaded with innumerable associations and attachments that come with that postulate. If we posit space, we have to have a whole host of other abstracts to explain it – to set off against it. This is precisely what is happening here in these first two axioms. After accepting these two – everything else will follow on by building on this foundation of abstracts weighted with abstracts until you have so many different attachments, meanings and definitions, you essentially build yourself a geometric form, kind of like a metaphorical wire-frame dodecahedron, which because it has so many lines and vertexes, resembles and enclosed shape; if so, we treat it as “real”. Every abstract in that shape is then supported by an equal abstract, until they are all supported by a house of abstracts. But everything else added to the first postulate is also an abstract – and we tend to forget that because of the way we naturally process information dualistically and morally, because that is the instituted way of doing things used by humans for thousands of years.

While the way we talk about time and space may seem extremely varied, words tell a different story to what authors would have us believe, because words are imprisoned in a specific concept of time and space that cannot change unless their context is changed. What really only changes, is the outward form or papier mâché that authors use to cover the very same wire-frame and ingrained perception of time and space that is common to us all. In some cases, it may simply be that an author cannot express the esoteric or occult because words and language as the only carrier are hopelessly trapped in dualism and moralism and can only be interpreted through such windows. This is precisely the single-minded monotheistic mentality of the Church ingrained in our very perception, our very tools of perception, at work.

The human brain is a very powerful machine, it has the power to make anything real; and out of sheer habit and expectation (and even because our society rewards that habit) that is precisely what it does. Cults merely take advantage of this dependency and the power of our reliance on abstracts built into us.

Axiom #3 “Space, energy, objects, form and time are the result of considerations made and/or agreed upon by the static and are perceived solely because the static considers that it can perceive them.”

This is an interesting axiom too. Space, Energy, Form, Time etc are all abstracts. They are names we give to phenomena which we have enshrined as separate phenomena that we believe deserve separate names precisely because of how we view time and space. The strength of Scientology rests not on the particular words and ideas presented; but on the ancient invisible art of postulating a time-honoured perception of space and time that supports and couches all the other concepts suggested without us ever questioning the system they are being couched in.

This entire sentence makes absolutely no sense unless we accept the shared consensus of time, space, form etc that the writer relies on us to postulate with him in order to weight the abstracts for ourselves. The same goes for me writing to you about it – if you don’t process ‘it’ ‘for’ and ‘to’ the same way and make the same unconscious prejudices about space and different divisions of moving through it, separate objects, and so on – you can’t read the sentence, so you invest those words with meaning for me. But Axiom 3 actually contains no value, since it uses abstractions (which are empty postulates unless we fill them with meaning) and says they exist either by our agreement or without it (which is again an empty postulate unless WE fill it with meaning); what is the point of even saying it? This is a popular 'Zen' type algorithm used in thousands of texts that attempts to create a mystical contradiction or sense of married harmony (a hierosgamos) by two opposites: but only in word. It is problematic of language that it leads unconsciously to dual type situations such as yes/no, in/out/ with/without to try and express the synergistic (one idea, compared with another, gives rise to a third). This contains no value except that which the reader decides to invest it with.

Since, the author has however provided only a dual-derived solution, 'it is with our agreement' – or it is 'without our agreement' it is left to the reader to weight the abstract nonsense with their own decision and invest the sentence with meaning- but we will do it dualistically because that is the environment we are immersed in, either/or, yes/no. It is unfortunate, but only natural owing to our method of communication and perception, that very few people will think this hard about the very beginning of their processing of such information and the part they play in allowing it to manipulate them and they play, in manipulating themselves.

We can in this example, see some of the underlying duality in the writer's brain surface here – in the two separate sentences, the writer uses sets of twos, cause and effect. That because something is 'a' it therefore leads to 'b'. Whilst this seems a fairly innocent way of thinking – it hints at a fundamental core belief in many things, and a limited viewpoint comprised of dual-think that is behind all extremely dangerous forms and styles of communication. Given the geometry of hidden concepts that makes up this first trinity of axioms and the ideas and weight and postulates you are being persuaded to accept – the stage is set for increasingly subtle and controlling manipulation… Whilst the concepts here are gentle, you can be sure that as the author gains control by building up his shape within us (creating a literal spell) this dualistic thinking will be used with full stubborn force against his enemies or those who refuse to accept later ideas stubbornly hedged in dual think. You would therefore not be 'ab' but require to be 'a' or 'b'.

Therefore, you would be viewed either as an enemy or a friend of Scientology; and for many cults the 'us and them' distinction is a major element that leads to such furious argument when 'ab' cannot be accepted. Whilst many readers may reject the concept of an actual 'third eye' you will probably have experienced a pleasurable glow or feeling of empowerment when reading something that you believe is profoundly expressive of the truth of things. Potentially my writing has given you this excitement that you are learning something new, some new way to look at things, some secret into the world behind forms – potentially not.

If it has, then this ‘glow’ is another aspect behind writing that is used to take advantage of you. Great wisdom is to be found in the world, by an aeon of great writers and thinkers that have characterised fundamental basics in the way we think, approach thinking, and gain knowledge, and distil wisdom. What many texts written to elicit a certain reaction do – is tap into these truths, present them on an esoteric (unconscious level) because they give that glow but package their own forms and messages into them. In this way, you are receiving the essential glow from wisdom that underlies the sublime height of understanding by various persons that surfaces again and again throughout time as a pattern or frequency – and thus you listen, it rings true and you take notice, open your eyes and ears and may even be persuaded to believe what is being said because it is a truth.

But it is very easy for someone to take those esoteric truths and introduce their own messages within them, to twist those truths or the carrier method of those truths into their own shapes for their own ends. For instance, having relied on the shared consensus in place regarding time and space (which is in no dimension, basic) that pre-exists in language and the fact that we work with and accept abstracts automatically; it is easy to cite space, time and form for instance, and not have to ‘explain’ them. Because anyone who tries to explain them – simply cannot do any phenomena justice, unless – you – accept and imbue their answer with meaning from your own supply.

And to explain it, they must use abstracts – and then you might ask them to explain those abstracts. Which they will require more abstracts to explain such as ‘which’, ‘they’ ‘will’, ‘require’ and so on. At a certain point it is you who will decide you have found the truth or essence of the thing, settle for a certain combination of words or geometric prism of concepts and that will be that. You will then base all your abstractions about what space is on the set of abstractions you liked most. But abstractions bring you no closer to understanding space, only allow you to distort it into simple manageable chunks in order to process it at your convenience. Scientology is here treating Space, Time and Form as objective, as already existing concepts with clear definitions and meanings; which they do have; but those definitions and meanings are also abstractions and built on a mesh of abstractions; they can be convenient, but they tell us nothing about the phenomena.

Axiom #4 “Space is a viewpoint of dimension.”

In light of what has already been said you can see that; confident they have built a strong foundation of abstractions that support each other to make a base-plate – the author can now proceed to pull abstractions out of anywhere to further provide supports to what has already been supposed. You can see, that ‘space’ and ‘dimension’ are weighted against one another but both are merely abstracts, thus neither can be of the other except in further imaginary abstraction; – you can also see that suppositions have been made by referring to space IS; the concept of singularity is suggested by the author using ‘A’ and further prejudices regarding a belief in linear space and how objects are situated within it – by the authors use of the word ‘OF’.

Again, I’d suggest checking out Chronobet for some more details on how these words suggest a relationship to a perception of time and space and the ramifications or consequences these types of unconscious prejudice tell us about the authors real perceptions beneath his words. The use of these words in such a way is typical of a conformist view ruled by dualism and moralism. That tells us that he is therefore, as trapped as the rest of us in the dual/moral dilemma that imprisons all people because of the way language works and what it suggests. His methods are archaic, as are most attempts to use perennial esoteric truths to couch one’s own egoistic bullshit of a lesser nature and purity; – and can be seen in almost every piece of writing you care to examine – including my own.

Axiom #5 “Energy consists of postulated particles in space.”

Here is an interesting twist. The author began by using the word postulates as a methodology for understanding, as a way that we conceptualise and thus shows he is in agreement with the common understanding of this term. He understands in postulates. But energy is not postulated particles in space, because everything is always a postulate, everything is an abstract. Energy does not somehow exist separate from us as discrete phenomena until we postulate it, it is already and eternally a postulate, as is space, the concept of particles and consisting. What is happening here, is that the idea of postulates as something we do, is being used to claim that there is a constant phenomenon that exists when we use abstraction; or rather, that there is a process involved in creating energy that is somehow brought into being by postulating – but ‘postulating’ is itself an abstract.

The idea that we can project something outward to give rise to something else says a lot about how the author believes time and space operate (which is sadly a mundane and typical understanding with nothing new or remotely interesting to say). The something else is though, still an abstract, the projection is also an abstract, and the author is at least unconsciously suggesting without trying to, how they think space is formed, and where and what its boundaries are. Once again – the author’s ‘energy’ does not consist any more than postulation, particles or space consists – our words create the illusion that there are more than one object in space to be talked about, but there are really none, it is all empty abstraction which we have the choice to validate as real. This is where you decide whether you will be persuaded to believe what the author has crafted, or not.

Axioms #6-10
Axiom 6 Objects consist of grouped particles.

Axiom7 Time is basically a postulate that space and particles will persist.
Axiom8 The apparency of time is the change of position of particles in space.
Axiom9 Change is the primary manifestation of time.
Axiom10 The highest purpose in the universe is the creation of an effect.

All these axioms rely on abstracts built upon abstracts and for the reader to invest them with meaning, attach them to previous abstracts, and help the author build a geometric prism within the reader by passive acceptance. If you invest any of these words with meaning, then pending the meaning you invest it with, the resulting sentence you 'understand' from it will set up a unique condition which bounces abstract against abstract. What is really being said here though – is nothing. It's just shapes we interpret as letters, letters combined into words, and words we have invested with meaning or allow others to invest with meaning for us; and that can mean emotional investments too. [See, An Analysis of Frequency: Part 1].

At its most reductive level, this is the formation of all texts. Propaganda based texts tell a crafted story that relies on the power of our brains to engage in traditional fantasies used by the human race and interact with its collective method of understanding text, processing it, and influencing how we treat it in such a way as to evoke a certain response from the reader by getting inside the readers head by using ideas familiar to the reader. These keys by which propaganda gain a foothold in the psyche (human mind) are often missed since few people stop to analyse the meaning of the carrier; language as a whole; and focus mainly on the concepts being presented and their loaded reactions to certain words and concepts – not the system that delivers concepts itself. Thus, a great deal is said in the first few sentences of any cult material that says just about all you need to know about it; and luckily for esotericists and cynics like myself, language screams these secrets out in every word it uses and where it uses them. It can't help it.

Knowing just these few methods the authors has employed in the axioms is enough to tear the remaining axioms apart piece by piece and note how abstractions have been heavily relied upon for this essential nonsense to make sense; since looking at the rest of the axioms, only by investing them with meaning (and they are all just empty abstracts using other abstracts to try and weight them down and give the impression of substance) do they mean anything. It is up to me to allow the author to persuade me these words have a meaning or that these concepts are not abstractions but somehow real and objective phenomena rather than merely subjective abstraction common to all propaganda. But since most people don't go this far into what they are actually doing when they use language (for various reasons) it's very easy to fall prey to a timeless tradition of other's spinning bullshit at our expense.

~

Finally – I believe the author has some connection to the concepts of the perennial philosophy – i.e. that they do have some profound connection to nature and her miracles; but the connection appears to be unconscious (the author uses dualism and moralism and shows all the signs of being as mundane as the rest of us by the way they have used concepts and language to build an abstract ball of illusions) and distorted. There is no new esoteric clarity in the concepts presented which appear clumsy in conception. At no point does the author point out their own geometry in creating or presenting the axioms such as I have attempted to do – and like so many others, therefore expresses intent to rule others with forms, not release them by smashing those forms. This is because at no point does the author appear to understand his own "is-ness" nor share it with any clarity but instead relies on the pre-existing notions that characterise our species way of perception. In esoteric terms or Geo-spatial relations – the author uses the same concepts of 1, 2 and three that typify all human workings and hint at the nature of our psyche. An examination of the axioms will show the weighting of empty abstractions, the concepts of giving sets of three examples, dualism and moralism. This is not the province of Scientology but the province of all human language –most of us do not appear to be aware of it, however, and deal only in the currency of forms.

AN EXAMINATION OF THE AXIOMS OF ROYAL ARCH FREEMASONRY

Dedicated To WLP.
W L G T W B
T I W I N I M

To THEM was gifted a small, red, privately printed, 78 page book, published in 1941, that holds the secret doctrine of Royal Arch Freemasonry (RAFM) available nowhere else from the entire history of Freemasonry. It is not catalogued, copied or distributed outside of its intended recipiency – nor in the possession of non–Freemasons, entirely absent from internet era archives – and is, even to today, protected as sacrosanct since at least the 1740's (approximately 286 years) as part of the conspiratorial Brotherhood's private occult society.

The little red book in question is so extremely rare, that it has been digitally copied out verbatim and spread to a variety of archives to ensure its perpetual transmission.

Throughout, it uses acronyms and abbreviations which will be known, or can be learned; to those interested its cloaked terms are discoverable from available treatises and 'leaks' on RAFM through relevant research. Though, on occasion interpretations have been supplied for reader convenience [emboldened and enclosed in square brackets as such].

As we work through the teachings of RAFM, and repeating them as recorded, we will highlight the psychological steps that work to bind allegiance, such as using sound, word, actions, and visuals;– and attempt to illustrate how a man (then Men, then Man) is held captive by and to an ideology through ritual that gives him a leave of responsibility to the Physical in (delusional) pursuit of the Spiritual.

We will examine how these concepts communicate symbolic insights and sympathies into the nature of things and re–frame the reality of the universe for the Initiate. However, many of the mystical and occult aspects of the rituals of RAFM, while of general interest to the uninitiated and specific interest to the occultist, scholar or historian, are not expanded upon herein except where they intersect with an explanation of the nature of Magico–Politics. Our commentary will be [emboldened with italics enclosed in square brackets as such - 9].

As was done with the Axioms of Scientology, this dissection of the axioms of RAFM contained therein (and revealed for the first time) aims to illustrate how its Forms are crafted and reveal an invisible step in the escalation ladder that begins by dominating the psyche through ritual to magically enmesh, entrap and ensorcel its members, until a critical mass of power is achieved leading to the dire straits of today's (20 Anno Tendrilis / 2026 CE) Magico–Political battlefield of a compromised planet continually confused by trying to interpret Religious zealotry through a Realist military framework.

At the time of writing, since 2023, Israel has been engaged in genocide and innumerable war crimes, and has murdered a minimum of 80,000 people. Recently, it passed into law the right to hang to death Palestinians convicted of injuring Israelis. Its aim is to eradicate every person foreign to Israel from the region of land once possessed by the twelve tribes promised to the Jews to effect a holy prophecy – an ancient goal being achieved through radical Zionism. Realism, via the military application of reason and assumption that State actors are rational actors making rational decisions, is at a complete loss as to how to explain, manage or stop its incendiary absolute violence or its complete disregard for international law, human decency, or human mercy. Accompanying the theatre of war are two verbal mantras; the multitudes of the helpless in thrall to the illusions of State sovereignty who are ineffectually stating 'this is not our war', and the brainwashed masses deluded into parroting Realism doctrine that 'our country has a right to self-defense'. The situation is dynamic, and even during the editing of this publication the President of the United States has made a severe escalation, declaring that 'A whole civilisation will die tonight (referring to Iran), never to be brought back again'.

We have never stood idle, and continue to struggle to wake the world up to the endemic practice and role of Magic in Magico–Politics. Israel cannot be impacted Politically; it's actions, resources and impunity are shored by the reigning superpower of the USA, whose equal disregard for international law reveals the Magi's true capability and intention, of which the sleeping world has long been unprepared, unwilling to acknowledge and utterly deceived as to its danger. Therefore, it must be effected Magically. It is difficult to grasp the magnitude of danger presented, let alone to communicate the depth of offence reflected, of the audacity of mortals to hijack the immortal to further man–made temporal pursuits. The World will someday ask, how did this juggernaut of utter destruction happen, and it is at that junction it needs the tools to restore its understanding of forms and forces inherent in magic and politics – if not in the majority (leading to evolution of collective perception), then at least, in the Few who will Remember to preserve them.

"You search the Scriptures because you think that in them you have eternal life; but it is THEY that bear witness of Me" – Christ, (John 5:39).

[BEGIN]

The Ritual of the
Holy Royal Arch

▭

As Revised and Adopted by the Committee appointed by the Supreme Grand Chapter of Victoria to secure uniformity of working.

Printed and Published Privately for
Supreme Grand Chapter of Victoria

Issued on the express condition that it is not to be used in the Chapter.

This compilation is the property of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Freemasons of Victoria. It is issued by Grand Scribe Ezra
only, and no other person is author– ised to print or publish the s a m e or any part there– of.

[Signature] P.G.H
Grand Scribe Ezra
1941

LAYING OUT
of the
CHAPTER

The Tessellated Pavement should have an indented Border of Purple and Crimson.

The Altar shall be placed in the Centre of the Pavement and Surrounded by Six Lights.

First. – Place the A. in position over the B.S.

Second. – Place the 3 lesser lights in position so that the A. is in the centre of the Δ formed by those 3 lights, Apex to the West.

Third. – Place the 3 greater lights in position to form the greater Δ with its apex towards the E.

The six lights on the Pavement should be burning before the Chapter is opened.

[A Mysterium is begun by introducing impactful symbolism whose meaning is not known to the non–initiate or Neophyte. The centrepiece of the ritual space, with the obviously important adornments and objects chosen to be displayed (by those conducting the ritual space), indicate that symbolism's immense gravitas, delivering a powerful first impression.

Those undertaking the Royal Arch, are already Master Mason's [MM] initiated into Three Degrees, (of which the Royal Arch constitutes the final part of the Third Degree), and are less likely to be surprised by unfamiliar symbolic architecture – possibly more surprised by the extended revelation of mystical depth by which the Craft describes itself at the summation of this Degree. Yet, even with experience, this ritual is still new to them, that makes them a beginner with no knowledge of the ritual, and essentially, a Neophyte; and we shall fold those completely new to Freemasonry, and MM, into the same term for the time being, and for reader convenience and as 'Neo.'.

Where magic is concerned, similar principles of psychic impression, described as follows, would have applied when the Neo. was undertaking their First Degree as an Entered Apprentice [EA], applied to the MM in their experience of the Royal Arch, and apply to the creation of awe on those unfamiliar with magic in general, or the internal ritual work of Freemasonry specifically. As we will see, the physical trappings are less important than the psychic bindings.

Minimal associations of two colours and six lights, directly contrast the hundreds of black and white squares of the tessellated pavement, emphasizing that among numerous things and potentialities, these things are of key importance.

The mysterious nature of the objects prompts the natural pattern–seeking apparatus of the human being to want to know what they are for and what they represent that can make sense as to why they are being shown to them. Essentially, a calculation takes place within the observer to gauge whether the environment is safe or dangerous; a calculation that human beings traditionally make with all objects in their surroundings as part of their survival instinct. Military and intelligence training teaches trainees to conduct perpetual risk assessments and scan their surroundings to note the particulars of exits to any room they enter, for instance. In theory, the Neo., having never seen such symbolism before, cannot be sure of the risk it poses in being presenced, and this vortex of uncertainty increases the lure of the Mysterium through mystery by triggering the fight-or-fight response releasing adrenaline that makes the experience more tense, adding to the reverence and holiness of the ritual aura, and those conducting it.

The Neo. is bio-physically put on guard for the unexpected, and is immediately forced to rely on those present to make sense of the objects for him to determine if they (and those persons present) are safe or dangerous, that is, if they pose a risk to the Neo. through what they represent that he is or may be unaware of – 9]

The Altar is a double cube, pure white, and bearing on its west side the initials of the three G.M.'s, and below them the T.T. The top of the Altar should be fitted with a square plate of Gold bearing a Circle and Triangle of the same metal; the apex of the Triangle must be towards the E. The W. on the Triangle should be arranged to read opposite to the direction in which the hands of a clock move, the top of each letter being towards the centre of the Triangle. The W. on the Circle is read in the same directions as the face of a clock, the bottom of each letter being towards the centre; the first part is placed on the E., opposite the apex of the Triangle, and the two remaining parts opposite the two other angles. The three Hebrew characters to be placed on the angles of the Triangle – the Aleph in the E., the Bice in the N.W., and the Lamed in the S.W.

The Altar must be provided with a Cover of convenient size, and made of white satin fringed with crimson and tasselled with gold. The characters on the top of the Altar should be arranged immediately before the opening of the Chapter and concealed by the Cover.

The Shovel, Pickaxe and Crowbar, when not in use, should be placed on the Pavement, west of the Altar, and arranged so that the metal proportion form the base, and the handles the sides, of a Triangle, whose apex is towards the E.

A V.S.L., [Volume of the Sacred Law] supported on a cushion, and bearing the Sq. and Cs., [Square and Compass] arranged as in the M.M's. Degree, should be placed to the the North of the W.Ts. The Sword and Trowel are to be placed on the Pavement to the South of the W.Ts.
The employment of an Arch or Dome in the Exaltation Ceremony is optional. When used, its position is to the West of the W.Ts.

Adjoining the Tessellated Pavement in the West should be placed a Kng. Cushion.
The Volume of the Sacred Law, on cushions, should be placed in the East at the centre of the Pavement, and at the South–west and North–west corners of the Pavement, thus forming a Δ.
The Volume in the South–west corner should be opened by the D.C. [Director of Ceremonies], F.A.Soj., [First Assistant Sojourner] and S.A.Soj., [Second Assistant Sojourner] immediately the opening of the Chapter is completed.

[The effect of ritual with repetitive motions and intricate actions creates a sensory labyrinth, where meaning is gained and lost in equal measure. The intricacy makes the immediate suggestion of 'here is a people capable of extreme planning and detail in ways that are alien to me but of great importance to them'. The Neo. may silently wonder the equivalent of:- 'Is the placement of an object important, or is it the very way the actor walks to their place or the object, or perhaps the type of shoes they wear, or the squares they step on to get there, maybe everything I am witness to all has secret meanings of which I am unaware' – 'where does the mystery lie, what are its boundaries, what is incidental and what is purposeful?' These questions the curiosity of the Neo. cannot answer, and their attention is directed to the myriad of dots that define specific actions and punctuate the ritual, not the sinister grotesque of micro–movements that takes place along the lines that join those dots. There is so much new information entering the mind of the Neo. due to an atmosphere of important yet strange human activities unfolding, that is it overwhelming. And even, if it is underwhelming, there is still a carrot promised at the end of the stick for enduring it, that has an identical result however impressed or unimpressed the Neo. Is with the ritual itself.

Either way, the Neo. is aware or made aware that what he is seeing is not for everyone, but for a very special clientele who have proven themselves thus far, so that they may progress further. The underlying or implied suggestion is that these are people capable of long–term, intricate sequential steps carefully planned out to the Nth degree – the kind of people capable of executing large projects with immense detail, an abundance of resources, and in complete secrecy in the midst of one of thousands of public buildings specifically built for the task, immediately providing a backdrop to the requisite comprehension of an Initiate.

More importantly, if they are capable of this – what else are they capable of? The association to an ability for arduous work, and creation and management of the principles of architecture via a craft of geometric mastery requiring immense labour and ostensibly thousands of years old - gestates the understanding that these are people willing to get their hands dirty and sweat over their achievements, with precision and planning every step of the way, and have been doing so for a very long time. The Neo. is likely to feel a sense of mixed fear, pride, elation, awe upon recognition of the Lodge and their own presence/person in its illustrious history. The book on the altar, further reinforces the longevity of these people's practices, it signals that these meetings and rituals have been taking place for such a length of time that they have their own codified laws, rules, concepts enshrined into a printed book. Together with the arcane space and magico-historical magnificence of the Mason lodge, the ritual accoutrements, the intricate actions, the strange symbolism and the realisation of their own growing power tied to such a powerful magical egregore – the Mysterium asserts itself strongly on the Neo. – 9].

The Ensigns, the distinctive bearings of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, are to be placed along the North and South sides of the Tessellated Pavement. In the following description of the Ensigns a number has been assigned to each so as to facilitate reference. Those which have been given odd numbers are to be placed in the North, with No.1 as the most easterly; those with even numbers in the South, with No.2 as the most easterly. [Table as Shown Follows].

[The unmistakable veneration of Judaism is emphasized here, clearly declaring 'This operation and these people are allied to the religion of Judaism'. This much would already be known via the entry requirements into Freemasonry, but in this ritual space and the Degree of the Royal Arch, that allegiance is amplified – 9.]

No.	Tribe	Color	Device
1	Judah	Crimson	Lion and Sceptre in Gold.
2	Issachar	Sky Blue	An Ass crouching between two burdens.
3	Naphtali	Blue	A Hind let loose.
4	Zebulon	Purple	A Ship.
5	Asher	Purple	A Golden Cup.
6	Reuben	Scarlet	An Agitated Surface of Water.

7	Dan	Bright Green	A Horse throwing his rider, a serpent hanging to the fetlock.
8	Simeon	Yellow	Sword and Dagger (instrument of cruelty)
9	Benjamin	Green	A Ravening Wolf.
10	Gad	White	A Troop of Horsemen
11	Manasseh	Flesh Colour	A Vine by the side of a Well.
12	Ephraim	Green	An Ox.

The four principal Banners represents the standards of the leading Divisions of the Army of Israel. They are:–

Judah	Crimson bearing a Lion and Sceptre
Reuben	Scarlet	A Man
Ephraim	Green	An Ox
Dan	Bright Green	An Eagle

The Emblematical Banner of the Royal Arch is white, and bears (in gold) the mysterious T.T within a Triangle. It is placed in the East in the middle, and the four Standards are placed two on each side of it from North to South, as follows:–

Ox. Man. T.T. Lion. Eagle.

For Lecture purposes it is usual to provide a Banner–pole, on which is mounted a large design illustrating the Jewel of the Degree. This Design may be kept in the S.E corner of the Chapter Rooms until required. The Charter must be displayed at every Convocation.

The three Principals, Z., H., and J., are stationed in the East; their Robes are Crimson, Purple and Blue respectively; their Collar–Jewels are the Crown, the Eye and the Open Book, each irradiated and mounted on and within an Eq. Tri. [Equilateral Triangle]. The devices upon their Sceptres are:– Z., a Crown; H., an Eye; and J., a Mitre.

Scribes E. and N. wear dark blue Robes with white sleeves; the Jewel of both Offices is the Crossed Pens on and within an Eq. Tri.

The Three Sojourners wear White Robes. The Jewel of the Principal Sojourner is the Sun within an Eq. Tri. And upon it a Square; that of the two Assistant Sojourners is a Square on and within an Eq. Tri.
The Jewels of the remaining Officers are as follows, each on and within an Eq. Tri.:– Treasurer, a Key; D.C., Crossed Staves; Choirmaster and Organist, a Lyre; Janitor, a Sword. The Stewards wear an Eq. Tri., without any additional device.

General Instructions.

The Principals and Officers should be clothed before the Opening Ceremony commences, the Principals standing in line in the West and the Officers being in their respective Stations.
No Companion may take the place of a Present Principal in any portion of the Ceremonial Work or Lectures unless he be of at least equal rank with that of the Principal whose place he is temporarily filling.

The Sojourners when carrying their Batons do not salute. The Director of Ceremonies may carry a Wand or Baton, and when doing so need not salute. He may lead in Ceremonial Work.

[Salutes and batons possess a militant air – and the subtle threat of a connection to organised violence. The hierarchical set up of stations not only shows the channels of power flow upward and into people occupying stations unseen who are behind this whole affair of setting up this Chapter, and all the thousands of others;- but convey that there are strict allocations of and to roles, carefully managed and attained, with limits of what is permissible in each station - a Ziggurat of degrees of power and knowledge that the Neo. must also accept and adopt to proceed, forced to wait at each gate in turn, which can only be opened with the Right Action – 9.]

In balloting, the First Assistant Sojourner will distribute the material, the Principal Sojourner will collect the ballot, and the Second Assistant Sojourner (after the result of the ballot has been announced) will collect the remaining material. The ballot box must be examined by the three Principals before after the ballot is collected, and the result of the ballot announced by the First Principal.

No Candidate shall be Exalted unless he shall produce, previous to entering the Chapter–

(a) His Master Mason's Certificate, or

(b) Sufficient evidence as to the date of his Raising to the Third Degree. (He must have been a Master Mason for at least six calendar months prior to the date of his Exaltation).

All Exaltations must be carried out in strict accordance with this Ritual.

All Officers should thoroughly memorise their Work, as reference to printed or written books of Ritual (or to extracts therefrom) is not permitted in open Chapter. The First Principal may, when lack of time makes its really necessary, curtail the Closing Ceremony by omitting the portions indicated hereunder:–

Closing.– Omit portion from "Ex. Comp. J., whence come you?" down to end of Scripture Reading by P. Soj who remains in his station. D.C. then hands V.S.L. from N.E. to the three Principals, who descend from the Dais to receive it. They take the Closing Ob.: "As we three did meet and agree," etc., seal same and V.S.L. is replaced by D.C. In E. Z. then says: "Comps., you will assume the attitude of Prayer with the P. or S. Sn." The Prayer is delivered and the Ceremony continues in the ordinary way.

Every Candidate on his Exaltation must be supplied with a copy of the Laws and Regulations of the Grand Chapter; also with a copy of the By–Laws of the Chapter. This should not be done until the completion of the Ceremony.

When Candidate is being restored to L., [Light] all L.'s [Lights] with the exception of those around the A. [Altar] are to be extinguished.

The Ceremonies of Installation of Principals and Investiture of Officers are to be conducted in accordance with the approved Ritual.

[The memorisation of this book here revealed, is a security measure to prevent unauthorised distribution or sharing of the total work. By sectioning off what can be known, and what can be shared, information leakage is controlled – especially when the threat of execution/death is introduced to those who share the Lodge's secrets with outsiders (known as the Profane). A notable and rare example of a female Freemason can be found among its historical anecdotes in which, by secluding herself to spy on proceedings, her eavesdropping let her understand that death was the risk of revealing such secrets. After her presence was discovered by the assembly, her fright apparent, but her death clearly wanting to be avoided, she was sworn into Freemasonry, serving it until her natural death. In terms of security measures taken, its effectiveness can be demonstrated by the fact that this content has never been made publicly available since the origins of the Royal Arch some time in the 1740's. That is, a massive span of inviolate secrecy extending over 280 years;- that's older than the the date of the First Fleet making landing in Australia (1788), and the founding of America (1776).

When you enter into Freemasonry, it becomes immediately apparent that here is a global brotherhood of antiquity spanning every station in history. Whether royal, papal, military, government, judicial, financial, corporate, – those who can help, or hurt you, are Everywhere at all times – and you will never not face the real risk of being under the watchful (and if necessary, vengeful) eye of an invisible cabal. The primer of first steps, and specific closed gates where one can only go so far and must then earn a degree of trust and loyalty through demonstration, subtly and then overtly, makes this premise abundantly clear. Since the rewards for such belonging are immense – few have ever betrayed Freemasonry, and even of those that have, none have ever shared the contents of this book. Perhaps one of the most successful practices of Freemasonry is its deceptive ability to project itself as innocuous eccentricity and allied to God.

We see an interesting option to cut short sacred ceremony due to 'lack of time'. This indicates two things. Firstly, that the Lodge is aware of the conflict of partaking in lengthy ritual vs. everyday life engagements, but it offers the means to shorten such ceremony, which says the length of the ceremony itself is really not that important, rather the formality involved to secure the desired result of the procedure, is. Secondly, regardless of the length of the procedure, the important thing is that the Lodge is ceremonially closed, and it is that point the Lodge wishes to make. A ritualised formal announcement of 'this signals the end of your time here, before you go out there'. In effect, it creates a temporal threshold of alternate dimensions, similar to nation Statecraft creating an inside/outside by drawing a circle (territory), or a door;- wherein, the Lodge indicates a fundamental division of being, behaviour and bondage inside the Lodge, vs. out there beyond the Lodge, and formally acknowledges there to be a difference one must observe. The means by which the Closure is done can be lengthy or shortened, so long as they occur. It is the equivalent of reading out what's for dinner on the menu then serving the meal vs. just serving it up with a brief description: as in both cases the end result is getting your meal.

Another interesting facet is the illustration of democracy, i.e. a show of letting chance do its thing without internal interference in voting, even as Freemasonry is a process of global collusion. The meaning of such a display illustrates the difference between an understanding of a Neo. who thinks they will retain the power to control things through a fair and just system;- vs. the knowledge of the Master(s) who know decisions are made elsewhere, i.e. not at the final polling booth, but along the way through secret discussions, offers, acknowledgements, assurances, promises and so on to pre-purchase magico-political fealty prior to the 'surprise' outcome performed as another formalised ritual– 9.]

Ceremony of Opening
–a–
Royal Arch Chapter

———

The three Principals, properly robed, take their places in the West, in line – Z. in the centre, H. on his right, J. on his left.

Z.–Companions, to order. Ex. Comps., assist me to open this H.R.A. Chapter (Comps. assume P. or S.Sn.).

(Principals advance by 7 steps, H. and b. at 3rd, 5th and 7th. At 3rd step Z. says:–)

Z.–O Lord God Omnipotent!
(At 5th H. Says:–)
H.–O Lord God Omniscient!
(At 7th J. Says:–)
J.–O Lord God Omnipresent! unto Whom, all hearts are open, all desires known, and from Whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy Holy Name. S.M.I.B. [So Mote it Be]

(Ps. form △, Z. taking one step back and still facing E. The V. of the S.L., is opened at Isaa. xii., supported on the Principals' open left hands, right hands joined upon it as in G . .p.)

Z., H. and J. (alternately): We three do meet and agree – in peace, love and unity – the S.W. to seek – and not to reveal the same – until, we three – or three such as we – do meet and agree – agree – agree – agree. (This ob. is sealed by each and the V. of the S.L. replaced).

Z. and H. advance to the the E. by the N. side, and J. by the S., h and b. at 3rd, 5th and 7th steps. Halt at E., and form △, Z. facing W., and share S.N.H. and J. remove the veil, the three Principals inspect the Altar. All turn and take sceptres and salute, standing before their respective chairs).

[To offset the menacing realisation that one is surrounded daily by ordinary men involved in a shadowy high order in conspiracy across the planet, appeals are made to include that arbiter of Virtue and Purity, viz. 'God', that characterise the language and exoteric forms of Freemasonry. Not least, because while willing to lie to Men, a man is often plagued by doubts about the reality of the Divine, a potential for an afterlife, or the accuracy of those who pretend to have knowledge through conviction of it. The secret fear Men hold of reality is that it does, or may, have a Creator – and many that come to Freemasonry are already religious men – treasuring a (ill-defined) belief that God is sacrosanct, real, or at the least that Man must defer to his Judgement. Layered into this morass of moral, eschatological, spiritual nebulousness created by this sustained perpetuity of uncertainty, is fear of the potential risk to offend Him. Which, by proxy, is to offend the Lodge.

The specific phrasing of 'nothing being hid in the heart', or calling upon God to 'cleanse ones hearts of impure thoughts' (such as betrayal, reporting a conspiracy in realising the danger such a cabal represents and perhaps having second thoughts) is a thinly-veiled threat that makes clear the relationship of the Lodge to God, as an All–Seeing Eye. This moment of realisation is itself an initiation, for when one suddenly realises the world is far other than it was previously perceived as an unconnected scatter of humans going about their mundane business – attitude, and then behaviour, often changes. For there is an immense sobriety in the epiphany of realising to whom does or can one complain, report, reveal the risk inherent of a conspiracy of Men, if the one they expose themselves to as a whistle-blower (read: traitor), has a high possibility of being connected to the Lodge itself? Calling on this fear, to purge the individual's independent thought processes through 'cleansing thought from the heart via the holy spirit' is where collectivism is introduced and begins to increasingly, then rapidly, and finally in totality take hold. We see the binding agreement not to perform specific actions until one is in the presence of one's associates (acolytes) and the utility of a 'buddy system' where one can only do certain things in the presence of others like him. Further, there is the subtle hint that one is in Sin, but may yet be loved if their heart is pure – with the obvious opposite implied of danger and a response from the Lodge if one is not –9].

Z.–Ex Comp. J., whence come you?

J.– From Babylon, the land of the Captivity, M.E.

Z– Ex. Comp. H., whither are you journeying?

H.– To Jerusalem, the Land of the Promise, M.E.

Z. (to J.)–What has induced you to leave Babylon and go up to Jerusalem?

J.–M.E., Cyrus, the King, hath released us from our long captivity in Babylon, and hath permitted us to return to our own land, in order that we may assist in rebuilding the Temple and the Holy City.

Z. (to H.)–Have you any further object in view?

H.–We have, M.E.; we hope by a diligent search among the ruins of the Temple to recover the long– lost genuine Ss. [Signs] of a M.M.

Z.–Ex. Comps. J. and H., we will assist you in your pious endeavours.

Z.–Comps., you will assume the attitude of prayer, with the P. or S. Sn.

J.–May the glorious majesty of the Lord our God be upon us. Prosper Thou the work of our hand upon us. Yea, prosper Thou our handiwork. S.M.I.B

Z.–In the name of the T. and L.G.M.H., to Whom the H.R.A. Of Jerusalem was originally dedicated, I declare this Chapter duly and solemnly opened.

( * by Z., H., J. alternately.)
S.N.  *; Jan. *** *

[The repetition of ritual words is akin to a mantra, it continually reorients ones priorities and perspectives to a Master Form – that is, a constraining of what is possible through a boundary of what is discussed or considered important to discuss or convey. For instance, one does not casually talk about the best way to make chicken soup with one's commanding officer in the military, one says 'yes sir' or 'yes ma'am' and deviance from this protocol is quickly, firmly established with sanctions and punishments. While the essential message of Freemasonry's rituals may not be clear to the Neo. just yet – both the Alpha and Omega (beginning and end) of RAFM contain the essence of its work in summary forms and aims so as to make it crystal clear. Both during inception (the initial stage) and enlightenment (the revelation stage) the theme cannot be missed:- Royal Arch Freemasonry is entirely devoted to the 'Rebuilding of the Temple and the Holy City through the Return to Our Own Land'.

For those confused about Israeli goals and its campaign of mass murder, torture and abject human cruelty, we need only review world history to see the medievalism that has been concealing itself beneath various polite, reasonable, facades that have facilitated the psychic sneak attack of which THEM have warned. Those systems characterised by their philanthropic veneration of human life (often zealously so) have dropped their veneer of being part of 'a system of international relations' to assert zealous right to clear and reclaim the land once occupied by the twelve tribes - at any cost. It is interesting (and tragically useful) that this article is being written now, as at any other time, our warnings could have been dismissed as alarmist, even fictional. Now, that pretense of co-operative respectability and sanctuary for the highest of human protections, long hiding itself in plain sight as democratic champions horrified by holocaust to motivate others to stand on a civil liberty-eroding 'x' so such horrors could never happen again, has dropped its mask and revealed its cold and alien face. These unmasked powers and their 'exceptionalist national security ideology' have expertly entrapped the world via pressure points such as those described in the (forged) Protocols of the Elders of Zion, and globalised its economies so that punishments can be meted out to any nation who dared cause a problem. Rather than sustain their farce of co-operation and responsible governance, they have demonstrated their utter contempt for their allies or the fallout their aims will have on the total globe, as they slaver over their apocalyptic wars. Here, in the folding points of time from 1740 to present–day, we are fortunate to see both the beginning of the conspiracy, in the seemingly innocuous seeds of oaths and rituals of groups such as Freemasonry - and the contrast of the end goal of the conspiracy and its human harvest by terror. It would be difficult to convince the reader that the former, leads to the latter at any other moment in time – but we live in such times that such convincing is no longer necessary, as the insane intentions of the Magi are visible to all. Let's not forget that Judaism is at least 2000 years old, and for all such time, there has been movements in the background and foreground mobilised toward fulfilling the prophecies in their holy books – 9.]

Ceremony of Closing
–a–
Royal Arch Chapter

(After 4th Rising)

Z.– Comps., assist me to close this H.R.A. Chapter.

Z.–Comp. P.S., what is the constant care of every R.A.F.M.?

P.S.–To prove the Chapter closely guarded, M.E.

Z.–Comp. S.N., you will prove the Chapter closely guarded.

S.N. (opens door, sees Janitor at his post closes it, and with Sn.) –M.E., the Chapter is closely guarded, and the Janitor at his post.

Z.–Comp. S.N., our next care?

S.N.– To see that the Comps. appear to order, M.E.

Z.– To order, Comps., as R.A.F.M.s.

Z.–Ex. Comp. J., whence come you?

J.–From exploring among the ruins of the Temple, M.E.

Z.–Ex. Comp. H., have you been successful in the object of your search?

H.– We have, M.E. We have recovered the long lost genuine Ss. Of a M.M., and are anxious to impart them to your Excellency.

Z.–Let those genuine Ss. be regularly communicated to me.

Z.–All Comps. will now form △and share the S.Ws. In accordance with the Traditional Ceremony. (All Comps. Share S.Ws. In their places; Z., H., J., in E.) (Apex of triads to be toward the E.)

Z.–Comp. P.S., have you anything to offer for the benefit of the Chapter?

P.S.– I have, M.E. (reads Isaiah xii., then passes up N. side of Chapter with Vol. And hands it to Z., retiring with another Vol. By S. side.)

Z., H., J. (alternately)– As we three did meet and agree – in peace, love and unity– the S . . W . . to seek– so we three– do now agree – the S.W to keep – and not to reveal the same – until we three – or three such as we – do meet and agree – agree – agree – agree.

(All Comps. salute the S.V., the D.C. conveying the one from the E. down the S. side of Chapter, while the P.S. conveys the one from the W. up the N. side).

Z.–Comps., you will now assume the attitude of prayer with the P. or S. Sn.

[The importance of security and the protection of the Lodge by certain stations is made clear to the Neo. – not just through explaining the constant care of every RAFM, but demonstrating it in practice, casually revealing that there are Men ready and willing to act on its behalf, installed and nearby. It is not therefore, an idle threat. The secret signs serve as challenge coins serve to special forces, or code phrases to spies – to show familiarity with secret signs and produce them at the right time in the right way, to prove throughout the Workings of the Lodge that one is initiated and belongs there. In addition, it elevates one above others to know them, and being entrusted to guard them – not to say that ritual performance is an extension of body–politic. Wherein, the ritual words and phrases conduct the Man through motions he may neither recognise nor understand, but the tie is one of being instructed verbally to perform kinetically and automatically on command. Once again, the inference is that of a military regiment, in fact, an army, ready and willing to do what it must to protect RAFM, including to act against the Neo. if required. This threat, elicits fear, masked as respect, that forces silence. A Mysterium works because rituals are magically assymetric; a Neo. understanding of the symbolism is not as deep as that of a M.M, and to make sense of the strange, there is a willingness to submit to trials and tests to (and risk) to discover what it all means. That is, to ascend the pyramid toward the apex where the Priests are located, hoping to join, if not merely to see them for oneself;- to reveal more of the Men behind the Curtain, who are no false Oz, but in league with Ozymandias –9.]

Prayer.

J.– O Almighty God, G.A. of this stupendous universe, Thou who hast filled the immensity of space with innumerable systems of worlds, and hast enlightened each by its central sun and their attendant moons; yon glorious and amazing phenomena which beautify and adorn the celestial hemisphere – for the heavens declare Thy glory and the firmament showeth Thy handiwork – Thou who hast often declared that where Thy sacred name is placed there will Thine eye be also; inspire, we beseech Thee, these Thy servants with Thy preventative Grace that they may be ever careful not to transgress Thy sacred law, and may they place their whole trust and confidence in Thine Almighty power and protection; grant us that peace which the world cannot give and pardon our offences as we forgive those who offend against us. S.M.I.B.

or

Supreme and Incomprehensible I Am, may the sincerity of our feeble exertions meet with Thy Divine approbation, may our endeavours to disseminate the knowledge of Thyself and of Thine attributes be crowned with success, and may our Order be blessed with peace and firm continuance, through Thine Almighty protection.

[Arguably, prose–wise, poetically–speaking, there is some beauty to appreciate in religious prostration– but this is more accidental than anything else; and a truly dire misappropriation of the Divine, echoed across all organised religions in their struggle to efface themselves in their madness caused by Incomprehension.

Such prostrations genuine and mundane aim, though appearing glorious in its theatrical spectacle of humility, is to create a supra-personal force (an Egregore) outside of human time and space to which the Neo. is beholden, and most importantly, to which any slight will be considered a grave even deadly offense.

Clear and lucid: God is not vengeful, nor watchful, simply omnipresent. He does not judge nor preside. We, will judge ourselves, when we depart and discover the Light that puts Earthly living into perspective by the majesty of its non-earthly tension, and weep, that we did not live accordingly to honour that Light. But He does not intervene in human affairs in any moral capacity as an overseer – that is the imagination of Men, who understood the power to force men to their knees (and toward specific actions) lest they upset their Creator and Creation, which in turn allowed genuine humility to be artificially weaponised.

The impression one is given is that the Brotherhood seek to protect the Neo. from the holy wrath of the Almighty, and that they are doing their best to see he does not get smote (killed). Indeed they are asking the Lord to help them be graceful toward those who offend against the Lodge, subtly implying the pre–existence of great wrath without the Lord's help to mitigate their vengeance. These implications of power and violence dominate RAFM, but are delivered liminally in what is unsaid by what is said. Ending pronouncements with So Mote It Be indicates the executive power of the Lodge to control the forms and forces that come into or leave, Being. Furthermore, the Neo. disobedience or offense would not just be against the Lodge, and Men, but against the Creator – an unholy trinity of blasphemy. The psychological pressure to avoid grave offense to God, is transferred to the Lodge and its members, in essence making of the Lodge an equal approximation of station to the Lord, where an offense against one is an immediate offense against the other. Thus, whatever the Lodge does or is, one must be careful not to cause offense to its Mortals lest they offend against the Immortal.

Psychically, this bridges the living temporal world with the eternal angelic realm, which elevates the consequences for transgression beyond the ordinary and into the supernatural. The penalty for transgressing against the Lodge might be limited by earthly power, but repercussions in the afterlife remain a possibility, an especial fear to those who are already religious.

Despite facing serious implications from reigning magico-political adversaries the actions of THEM illustrate this premise in practice via seeking to complete the geas tasked to RA by the Nameless One of eradicating religion so others may better see God without human distortions such as those promulgated by major religions. It is out of terror to weep before God for not revealing his Light through THEM, following departure, that propels us to dispel the Abyss.
For even through the entropy of time or by human intention, one were to remove belligerent beings from their stations and pulpits;- the ideology, the framework, of the Magi, persists. Without understanding the framework, one cannot appreciate the finished cathedral, nor why or how it was built, or sustains itself through the hands of many –9.]

Z.–Comp. P.S., the labours of this Convocation being ended, you have my command to close the Chapter. ( *, alternately by Z., H., and J.)

P.S.–In the name of T.T.A.L.G.M.H., to Whom the H.R.A. of Jerusalem was first dedicated, and by command of the M.E., I close this H.R.A. Chapter until (deliberate blank space) of which (deliberate blank space) and it is closed accordingly,  * (alternately by the three Sojs.)

S.N.  *, Janitor *** *

Z. (extending both hands) – Glory to God on high.

H. (extending both hands) – On earth peace.

J. (extending both hands) – Good will towards men.

[To offer a secondary option of prose shows the intention of the delivery is not reliant on the words spoken, but to impress the above discussed on the Neo. The former version being likely used when there are individuals of which the M.M has some degree of doubt or who may need a deflation of pride to inculcate deference – and the latter version when in the company of known brothers, where a reminder of the necessity for loyalty to the Work is cursory –9].

(Closing Hymn).

P.Z. (approach A. with reverence after breaking up Ws. cover A.) – The Chapter being closed, nothing now remains.

F.F.F.F. and may T.T.A.L.G.M.H etc. R.A.F.M

Closing Address

Z.– Companions, you are about to quit this sacred retreat of peace and friendship, and to mix again with the world. Amidst all its cares and employments, forget not the sacred duties that have been so frequently inculcated, and so strongly recommended within the precincts of this Chapter; be ye, therefore, discreet, prudent, and temperate; ever remembering that around this altar you have solemnly vowed to befriend and relieve with unhesitating cordiality, so far as it may be in your power, every worthy Companion who may need your assistance; that you have promised to remind him in the most gentle manner of his failings, to aid his reformation, to defend and vindicate his character, whenever wrongfully traduced, and to suggest the most kindly, palliating, and favourable circumstances in extenuation of his conduct, even when it is justly liable to reprehrension and blame; thus shall the world see how sincerely Freemasons love each other.

But, Companions, you are to extend those noble and generous sentiments still further; let it be impressed on your minds, and let it be instilled into your hearts, that every human being has an undoubted claim to your kind offices; we, therefore, strictly enjoin you to do good to all, while we more particularly recommend to your care the household of the faithful. By diligence and fidelity in the duties of your respective vocations, by liberal benevolence and diffusive charity, by constancy and sincerity in your friendship, by your uniformly kind, just, amiable and virtuous deportment, you will prove to the world the happy and beneficent effects of our ancient and honorable institution. Finally, Companions, be ye all of one mind, live in peace, and may the God of love and peace delight to dwell with you and bless you for evermore. S.M.I.B.

[In no short order the Lodge emphasizes here its most dangerous aspects:- the obligation to assist another Freemason in his endeavours; to act as a champion on his behalf; and to not interfere in his evils. A personal decree identical in restraint to the Westphalian Peace Treaty (1648) for nation states to rule sovereign over their own territory without interference from others. We have seen how successful such a pact has been, with most wars in the last two centuries fought by populations against their governments (intra–warfare) not against other nation states (inter-warfare). A separate treatise could be penned on the epidemic of domestic violence and its relation to imitation of behaviour exhibited by international policy here, but that would take us too far from the intended focus.

There is a sudden change of implication here, from threats of warning and danger in the case of offence to Lord or Lodge, to a carefully delivered command to the would–be RA Mason to be 'ready and willing, open and hospitable' to helping others with the trade–off of representing RAFM as a peaceful (non–conspiratorial institution) to the world at large (effecting the result of being left alone and perceived as harmless or benevolent) and in doing so earn the Love of God.

One's judgement is no longer individual, but collective – where once one might object to an evil, one doesn't just patiently accept it lest they themselves be judged for their own, they protect it and even support it. A subtle transfer of one's own moral code that governs right (and wrong) actions has been effected, said code supplanted, and redefined, by the values of the Lodge. It's necessary to understand that inside the Lodge such ritual may seem limited – but when men of power recognise each other in the world by their fraternal signs, and collude and collaborate, those of evil and those of good are separately pursuing their own ends using the Lodge to facilitate bonds given that encourage the RAFM to ignore their own ethical, legal or moral codes to fulfil their oaths to the Lodge and its varied brothers. The World, cannot compete with the priorities apparently required by the Divine, and to see the physical realm as temporary makes it easy to see human life as expendable, suffering excusable. – 9.]

EXALTATION.

(The Chapter having been opened, the minutes read, and the Can. ballotted for).

Z.– Comps., Bro. (space to insert name) is this evening a Can. [Candidate] to be exalted to the Supreme Degree of a R.A.F.M. Comp. P.S., you will retire to prepare him, and ascertain his proficiency in the former Degrees. Comp. Scribe E., you will accompany Comp. P.S. (S.E. Salutes and with P.S. Retires.)

Without the door of the Chapter, S.E. will examine the Can.'s M.M. Certificate or obtain sufficient proof so as to satisfy himself that the Can. Has been a M.M. for the prescribed period.

S.E. then enters the Chapter and reports.

S.E.—M.E., I have examined the Can., and find that he has been a M.M. For the prescribed period; he has signed the declaration and paid the necessary fees.
(Outside the P.S. then proves the Can. In the three Degrees).

P.S. (to Can.) – Do you seriously declare, on your honour as a man, and your fidelity as a M.M., that you will steadily persevere through the ceremony of being exalted to the Supreme Degree of a R.A.F.M.?

Can. – I do.

P.S. – Do you further pledge yourself, under the penalties of your former obligations, that you will conceal what I am now about to impart to you with the same strict caution as the secrets previously communicated to you?

Can. – I do.

P.S. – then I will entrust you with the P.W. [Password] leading to the Degree to which you seek admission. It is . . . . . which signifies "m.p.h.o.m." This P.W. is to be found in the 2nd chapter of Hosea. You will be particularly careful to remember this P.W., as without it you cannot gain admission to be exalted. (The Can. is then prepared by being clothed as a M.M., h.w, [Hoodwinked – head covered] and c.t. [Cable Tied] round his waist.)

(Janitor gives the alarm) ** *

[Hoodwinking is a term that implies a "sly act" of tricking, similar to making someone functionally blind to the truth, and derives from meaning to close ones eyes.
In Freemason ritual a Neo is hoodwinked by having a black cloth bag placed over their head. Psychosocially and magically, a lot happens at this moment. Firstly, without a visible face, a being loses the protections its face affords it as a symbol of power and mark of identity. This has the immediate effect of robbing the ego of its ontological security, similar to some dehumanising techniques used by military/intelligence/prisons when processing captives.

ontological security refers to an imagined sense that one is 'safe' - as safety is non-securable for a creature destined to die. Our self-preservation methodology as a preoccupation of our mortality can only ever delay the inevitable (though some sorcerers discussed in the works of Carlos Castenada 'stalked death' in order to die when they intended). The same ontological security applies to the State which can never be safe and this is what makes the insane mantra of 'National Security' both extremely ludicrous and catastrophically dangerous to human life as expressing a collective contagious delusion that cannot be sated with an irrational impetus backed by absolute violence that it must.

Secondly, covering someone's head with a bag forces them to rely on their baggers to safely conduct them, creating a necessary bond with one's captor. Even where one has voluntarily been talked into wearing the bag, or accepts it with grace, due to survival instinct there is the ever-present fear that one may have been tricked into being put into a vulnerable position. As one is actually vulnerable, it creates an immediate dependency on those around them to safeguard them since they cannot.

Further, binding with the Cable Tow besides securing the bag around the neck (or the hands), presents another implied threat to survival via the control over ones ability to breathe or fight back (rescue oneself) and the potential for rapid death (less than 3 minutes). This induces helplessness. Together, these measures diminish the Neo. instinctual weapons of defense, including using its eyes for target acquisition, as means to scan surroundings, conduct risk analysis or identify faces/targets/exits/weapons/shelter, and severely impedes most people's ability to protect themselves if necessary as incoming danger is made invisible.

Effectively, the intensity of the ritual is amplified by sensory and kinetic deprivations that create vulnerability and dependency. Being plunged into darkness with the above dominating or introduced to one's thoughts can amount to a religious experience. Because we are generally rarely blindfolded, in ritual settings the experience is a simulated crossing of the Abyss; where for a moment we experience a living death. It resembles the primal state of being in the mother's womb, a re-enactment of being blind to the world, at the mercy of the elements and invokes a memory a priori to the ego's existence which terrifies it.

We are momentarily enveloped by the blackness we mentally expect to be present in and of death reminding the ego of a primal unformed state in the womb that predates its all-encompassing existence, adding to vulnerability. For we have few associations with such blackness, except for (mostly) voluntary sleep, but that often occurs in surrounds that we have secured. The Neo. experience the crossing with a simulacra of intact self-presence and awareness that we would not expect to have in that blackness after dying.

The removal of the bag and cable tow are likely met with relief, patience, masked defiance or gratitude to those who remove those impediments and restore the identity, faculties and power of the Neo. It is quite irrelevant what emotional state they adopt, as all states will be oriented toward self-preservation controlling negative expressions to save face in front of one's peers whom one hopes to impress, and because the personal attitude is unimportant – it is taking vows in front of others as well as invisible others that matters. Whatever the Neo. may feel, they have been bound to obedience. However, relief from the rush of oxygen and restoration of the face/ego will be welcomed whatever the internal thoughts, and a degree of appreciation gestated toward those who spared him when he was at his most vulnerable. This process helps to induce a sense of owing a debt in the Neo. for their captors' mercy a form of Stockholm syndrome (of identifying with the values of one's captors), captor being the precisely correct term for what has just taken place with the Neo. –swearing secrecy on forfeit of his life in a pyramid scheme that gathers puppet strings bunched in the hands of the puppet masters, and is controlled accordingly. It is for this reason that the world is compromised through its pride in 'honour', and mistakes inferior Man-Forms for God's superior truth – best conveyed, firstly, by the erasure of all existing religions and their lunges of explanation that litter their texts, and secondly, all secretive societies whose secrecy betrays their intention to deceive.

The Degree of the Royal Arch being the 2nd part of the Third degree, this book does not explain the warning already given to an appointed MM, after removing the hoodwink, that he has avoided being stabbed by the sword while wearing the hood, or strangled by the cable tow as he made his initial way around the lodge. See 'A manual of the three first degrees of freemasonry with an introductory key-stone to the royal arch' by Carlile, Richard, 1790-1843, p.28'. This surprising nonchalance of killing the Neo. is likely met with surprise, relief, gratitude, dependence.

And all of this is the reality and intention of Initiation, to weave such magic through forms that our old sense of self dies and is reborn with a new sense of self, often elevated by a higher degree of understanding (and changed loyalties). This disturbing rebirth requiring curiosity/greed/willingness to submit to the ordeal is made possible on the proviso of being given a great reward for doing so. This is in fact, the very essence of what a Freemason can expect in their service ad infinitum;- to endure their role in the play, that they may be given a better role for their enduring.

It is important to appreciate that Freemasonry is not starting with a blank slate. It emerges as an incarnation of magical practice from other older earlier societies laden with magico-politics including merchants of death via an ancient legacy with assassins, spies and what is today called 'intelligence', and has endured over a span of time that has enjoyed the observation of every limitation of pose of the cosmic egg, or in other words, is aware of everything a man can and will do in every situation.

Some of these realisations will be subconsciously absorbed, while those of higher self-awareness (but not high enough) will bypass some thinking there is no danger in being initiated. Physically, no - it is the participation in initiation itself that is the dangerous part, for then the man is owned and never again, Free.

Note the reference to paying necessary fees, a further investment of a fiscal nature that helps bind one to the Lodge lest one's payment be wasted. The Book of Hosea referenced is part of the Christian's Old Testament, and denounces the worship of other Gods except Yahweh – so herein, as one learns of this book and looks up the relevant phrase they may be introduced to the keystone of Monotheism. No longer free to choose one's own God, the form he takes, the words he speaks, the values he holds, even the company he keeps* – the transference of one's spiritual understanding is demarcated by Jewish sentiments of Israelites being unfaithful to God.

*Almost half the planet's population (approx. 4.5 billion women) are excluded from, but affected by, the bonds of Freemasonry – not withstanding many other core components of physical existence through disempowerment.

The reference to Mercy in said passage, doubles–down on the connotations of being unfaithful to God causing calamity, as transferable to the Freemason being unfaithful to God or the Lodge that venerates him - and here RAFM unfurls itself quite plainly not as a means to speak with or to honour God as a holy endeavour, but to commit oneself to pursue the holy aims of Judaism through Freemasonry.

Clear and lucid: The idea that God 'agonises' over betrayal by Israel is perhaps ironically the quintessence of arrogance, vanity and pride typical of the imagination of Men, that they or their patches of dirt soaked in blood from savage ignorance, matter to God. Yet it is here that the Neo. becomes pledged to be a solider in an occult Israelite army to devote themselves to such aims, framed as holy work of great antiquity, not pathological madness.

Formalised rituals, with their structure, seriousness, pomp and ceremony help offset the zealousness of the endeavour that seeks to yolk men by invoking God. Hosea transforms and tramples God as an emotional lesser, similar to the style of the Greeks who delighted in creating gods that were crippled with the insecurities and neuroses of Men and acted like them - even acted on or with them. The struggle not to offend and do the right thing in all situations by all people is a constant human battle that characterises all religion – which seeks to perfect Men's actions to reflect their extension of God as perfect, and such Ideals to be a mirror of themselves.

Thus, do we get the righteous person who may think himself a saint even after piling bodies to the sun. The lure to think of religion as rational is unending, but it is irrational;- the Magico part of Magico–Politics that so confuses today's military analysts and realists who simply cannot fathom that land is being cleared and people destroyed to complete a holy prophecy and return of God, is an old form from when the world was old, and God sent Man mad through revealing Himself. It is through secret societies such as Freemasonry (in operation for about three centuries) that the chain of Men required to facilitate this prophecy has been forged, with such a chain having so many links vertically and horizontally across the global realms of power, that others, fooled and subjugated by the subterfuge of the noble bearing of a belief in a shared vision of world peace, are unable to comprehend it, let alone stop it. –9].

S.N. (giving the R.Sn.) – M.E., there is an alarm.

(Altar to be veiled by D.C. Using Sn. of F.)

Z. –Comp. S.N., you will ascertain the cause of the alarm.

S.N. (opens the door and says, not too loudly) – Whom have you there?

P.S. (to S.N.) – Bro. (space inserted for name), who has been regularly initiation into F.My., passed to the degree of a F.C., [Fellow Craftsman] and in due time raised to the S.D. of a M.M., in which capacity he has served the prescribed period, has been rewarded with a P.W., as a test of merit, and now comes properly prepared to be exalted to the Supreme Degree of a R.A.F.M.

S.N.–How does he hope to obtain that privilege?

P.S. – By the help of the M.H. And the benefit of a P.W.

S.N.–I will thank the Can. To communicate that P.W. (Can. gives it.)

S.N. (to Can.) – What is its signification?

Can.–My people having obtained Mercy.

S.N.–Halt, while I report. (Closes the door.)

S.N. (gives Sn. [Sign] and says) –M.E. Bro. (inserted space for name), who has been regularly initiated into F.My., passed to the Degree of a F.C., and in due time raised to the S.D. of a M.M., in which capacity he has served the prescribed period, has been rewarded with a P.W. as a test of merit, and now comes properly prepared, desirous of securing further light in F.My. by being exalted to this Supreme Degree.

Z.–How does he hope to obtain that privilege?

S.N.–by the help of the M.H. And the benefit of a P.W.

Z.–We acknowledge the propriety of the aid by which he seeks admission. Do you, Comp. S.N., vouch that he is in possession of the P.W.?

S.N.—I do, M.E.

Z.—Then let him be admitted. (The Can. is admitted, conducted by the P.S., and placed on the W., P.S. on his right, F.A. Soj. on his left.)

(P.S. Instructs Can. to salute the M.E. As a M.M.)

Z.—Bro. (inserted space for name), as you seek preferment in our Order, and have been honoured with a P.W. as a test of merit, I must enquire whether you freely present yourself before us with the hope of being exalted to this Supreme Degree?

Can.—I do.

Z.—Do you present yourself with the view of improving in F.my. and of dedicating that improvement to the glory of God and the good of man?

Can.—I do.

Z.—And are you willing to take a solemn ob. to keep inviolate the secrets and mysteries of our Order?

Can.—I am.

Z.—then you will kneel while we implore a blessing from the M.H. on our proceedings.

Can. kneels on both ks. (knees) and Comps. stand with P. or with S.Sn.)

Prayer.

J.—Almighty and Eternal Lord God, at Whose command the world burst forth from chaos, and all created matter had its birth; the Protector of all who put their trust in Thee; without Whom nothing is strong, nothing holy; we, Thy unworthy servants, humbly implore Thy blessing on this Convocation. Grant that he who seeks to participate in the light of our supreme mysteries may so consider his present undertaking that he proceed not lightly in it, nor recede from it hastily, but pursue it steadfastly, ever remembering that the great object and intent of this Institution is the happiness of our fellow creatures, and above all, the glory of Thy Holy Name. Grant unto us the knowledge of Thy Truth, that, Thou being our Ruler and Guide, we may so pass through things temporal as finally not to lose the things eternal. S.M.I.B.

[The demonstration given here is to show the intricate co–operation of Mason to Mason; and that there are checks and balances, tests and security every step of the way, practiced and venerated within the Lodge. It includes a subtle implication that the Lodge stands ready to conceal its doings at a moments notice, and a system of alarms to warn it of danger should there be any. The use of the Door amplifies the idea of thresholds and permission, that is, only being allowed so far without the aid of the other Brothers.*

The geometry and function of doors is an intriguing occult subject. See 'The Book of Absu' and THEM's comments on Angles and Curves.*

Thus again, does one become reliant on modifying their conduct and personal values to meet with the approval of the collective in order to progress further into their Craft. Further, the conduct of the Neo. is expressly verbally, demonstrably communicated to a higher–up in their presence, each box carefully ticked, so that they know, information at their level including their actions and conduct (even though they might think it private), will be, or risks being, conveyed upward to the watchful unseen. The all–seeing eye of the Illuminati. That these measures have 'properly prepared' the Neo. is a double communication, both to affirm that the Neo. has done the things asked of him in the right order at the right time (As one of Pavlov's dogs), and thus has done the right things (by being obedient) and at the same time is a form of vouchsafing from an established Mason that the one being conducted can be trusted insofar as he has exhibited the required trust (accepts commands to obey).

The prayer serves to prostrate the Lodge before God who becomes an abstract Overseer to which the Lodge can slyly appeal that the reason they do what they do is for the glory of God – therefore to question it, is to cause offence to God.

Deeds masked as being to the glory of Thy Holy Name have created tsunamis of pain and blood as Men swap God's imputed Divine Will, for their own in a sleight of hand that is difficult to control in a self–appointed leadership due to the hyper–sensitivity in others created through religious Zeal using the methods and oaths above. Questioning those who are clearly above you in the hierarchy is discouraged, even punished in that sweet way of gentle reminders that underpin the threat made to kill a transgressor if necessary, in which case no–one inferior and lower can check the power of a superior and upper. And, where those upper superiors replace God with a hypersensitive fear of being offensive to God, all below them are beholden to perform their duty and obey.

Being that there is no–one to whom they can report such a conspiracy safely - now that they know Freemasonry has loyal Men everywhere - the best they can do, if wise enough to see behind the effete charms to the reality of the psychic noose, is slink away quietly and guard themselves by blending into a semblance of ordinary life. For the nature of monotheism is so dangerous to human life because it excuses itself from all laws and restraints to honour something that is beyond all earthly things, and those possessed by it, who are willing to do whatever they have to to protect the Freemason's 'God', bristle among its ranks.

Men who want to belong to something bigger than themselves and ideally supra–personal, are in the majority of human beings. And it is tragic what some will do to earn a (or another) shining badge.

Such killing may not even refer to cessation of life, but collective ostracization and shunning, exercised in control over access to the physical realm which they or anyone they are associated with, try to deal. Such exile may include closed opportunities in jobs or business, rejected financial loans or medical treatment, missing out on real estate or stock options, refused admission to clubs, schools or institutions, and deliberate interference and manipulation in their worldly affairs. Tactics germane to those who fall out with Scientology. This kind of power does not apply just to them, but to their partner, family, friends, friends–of–friends and virtually anyone else who gets the message to shut them out, isolating them through bane of association. The types of perks that come from belonging to Freemasonry and a brotherhood come thick and fast, and sate desires like a drug, parade the Mason like a King of the World on his various stages in his various puff and finery to inflame and flatter his sense of prestige. But, turning off that tap not just to the temporal earthly world but to the spiritual, and closure of access to those who run both, is more than all Men can bear. Were it not, this book should have come out centuries before it has. Probably, the worst thing you can do in this life is to join Freemasonry and then leave it on bad terms. When we look at the long jewelled list of Freemasons that include the founding fathers of America, it is not difficult to see that immense power and occult (hidden) fraternity go hand in hand –9.]

Z——In Whom do you put your trust?

Can. (prompted by P.S.) —In the T.A.L.G.M.H.

Z.—Relying on such sure support, you may arise and accompany your conductor.

(P.S. And F.A.S. Assist Can. to rise, and Comps. resume their seats.)

Z.—Comps. P.S., you will conduct the Can. through the ruins of the Temple, and during his progress the Comps. will take notice that he is properly prepared to be exalted to the Supreme Degree of R.A.F.M.

(P.S. conducts Can. round the Chapter and places him in the West.)

Z.—As you seek to be admitted to a participation in the mysteries of this S.D., I must now call upon you to advance with reverential awe towards the Sacred Shrine on which they are deposited. This you will do by seven steps, halting and bowing at the 3rd, 5th and 7th, for at each step you approach nearer to the sacred and mysterious Name of the T.A.L.G.M.H. (The Almighty Lord God Most High).

(P.S. instructs the Can. as directed).

Z.—You have now arrived at the crown of the arch of a vaulted chamber, the task of exploring which devolves upon you; it is, however, guarded by a series of cope stones, three of which must be removed. You will now wrench forth two of these cope stones and afterwards attend to a portion of the writings of our G.M.K.S [Grand Master King Solomon]. (Can removes two cope stones with a crowbar).

J.—(reads Prov. ii. 1–9; iii. 13–20.)

[The religious indoctrination intensifies with the Neo. taking physical part in a psychodrama reliving past identities of value to the prophecy. The Neo. is taught that they cannot simply be given the carrot they desire, but must work for it, making sacred to themselves second what is in fact sacred to others first. The meaning of the movements likely elude them, as occult knowledge is retrospective, but which ties the past to the future and the future to the past, immersing the memory of the Freemason in RAFM in the past when they are performing the actions, and the future when they recall performing the actions and may Now understand the implied meaning of the actions, again, according to what is sacred to others.

In effect, every step of Ritual is pregnant with importance from one side, that is different in importance to the other side. The M.M understands the binding power of the process of becoming a M.M. to shape and mould the Neo. to obey commands, while the neophyte learns how to be obedient. Obedient to what? To fulfilling the Judaic prophecy through aiding fellow Mason to Mason. This psycho-magical ensnarement is cleverly disguised through the elaborate misdirection of ritual which occupies the attention of the conscious mind while the unconscious is enslaved, literally through psychically and physically going through the motions and manipulations that lead to magical and actual imprisonment –9.]

Z..–You are now required to enter into a solemn obligation to keep inviolate our mystic rites; you will, therefore, kneel on both knees, take the Holy Bible on your left hand, and place your right hand upon it. State your name at length, and repeat after me.

(Principals give * *.)

Obligation.

I, (inserted space for name), in the presence of the T.A.L.G.M.H., and of this Holy R.A. Chapter, regularly constituted, consecrated, and congregated, do hereby and hereon most fervently and solemnly promise and swear: that I will never divulge any of the secrets or mysteries restricted to this illustrious Order, denominated the H.R.A. of J., to any individual whomsoever, unless it be to a true and lawful Companion of the Order, whom I shall find to be such after due examination, or in the body of a H.R.A.C. regularly assembled. I further promise that I will never dare to pronounce the sacred and mysterious Name which may now, for the first time, be communicated to me, unless in the presence and with the assistance of two or more Comps. of the Order, or in the body of a H.R.A.C. while acting in the capacity of First Principal. To all these points I solemnly swear fidelity, under no less penalty on the infraction thereof than that of suffering loss of life by having . . . . .* So help me, T.T.A.L.G.M.H., and preserve me inviolate in this my solemn and lasting ob., being that of a H.R.A.F.M.

[*The missing phrase may be interpreted as 'my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the root, and my body buried in the sand at low water mark'. Though pains have been taken to redraft this threat as symbolic - these are Men behind, and who support, great walls of bloody death and their proof, captured in obelisks, is everywhere. It is notable that even a privately printed, privately distributed, virtually unseen pocket-sized publication owned by the Supreme Grand Chapter exhibits the intense paranoia and emphasis on secrecy given its omission of keys words and phrases even given its extremely rare nature as such printed records are anathema and completely forbidden in Freemasonry. Many writers on Masonry including Carlile record the excruciating lengths one must give assurance of in not revealing the slightest detail including such print being detectable on another piece of paper on which they wrote or 'anything movable or immovable under the canopy of heaven.-9]

Z—. You will now seal that ob. with your lips . . . . . times on the V. of the S. L.

[The threat of a loss of life is now tacitly expressed in the vow taken by the Freemason. The previous steps and stages having impressed this risk invisibly, he has already passed the threshold of no return, for to back out now would be disastrous for his life or his lifetime. He has already been sufficiently impressed and informed of the power he stands to inherit through membership to the Brotherhood and the risk involved in returning to the world with a blackened reputation in that fraternity. The Man has no choice but to continue being taken deeper into the labyrinth, having already completely lost his way, he foolishly thinks he clutches the map. His promise to forfeit his temporal life to the Lodge and assembled, is reinforced at a spiritual level by kissing the V.S.L., connecting his earthly body in an intimate way with the artifacts and spiritual body of the Divine –9.]

(P.S. And F.A.S. lift Can. to his feet.)

Z.—Comp. P.S., two of the copestones having been removed, let the Can. be duly lowered into the vault.

(P.S. And F.A.S. do so with C.T.)

Z.—You will now endeavour to discover something.

(P.S. places scroll within reach of Can. and prompts.)

Can.—It is found.

[The implicit suggestion here is that going deeper into the Mysteries will rely on your bonds to your Brothers – they can both raise you up into the light, or let you fall into the darkness, based on your shared trust and your personal conduct – and regardless of either, you have literal (cable) ties to them who can sink or float your fortunes. The collaborative effort requires trust, loyalty and to work together to achieve an aim one cannot achieve on their own, that is, invisibly stated, requires Supervision. Thus, one's Brothers become one's lifeline to progress further into the Craft. Secondly, the value placed on a Jewish artefact being retrieved frames its importance within the ritual, further sending the message that one is expected to serve Judaic interests and honour Judaic concerns. Any confusion that it might be a Christian endeavour is quickly evaporated – the God of this Lodge is Yahweh and no other – merciful, vengeful and all. A decidedly petty, but by now predictable sympathy of human activity, confused with God, Who is Love –9].

Z.—What is found?

Can.—Something like a scroll of v. or p. [vellum or paper]

Z.—What are its contents?

Can.—For want of light I am unable to discover.

Z.—Let that want of light remind you that man is by nature the child of ignorance and error, and would ever have remained in that deplorable situation, under the darkness of the shadow of death, had it not pleased the Almighty to call him to light and immortality by the revelation of His Holy Will and Word.

Z.—Let the Can. be lifted out of the vault and restored to light.

(All Ls. with the exception of those around A. to be extinguished).

(P.S. And F.A.S., holding C.T., lift Can. to a standing position. All Companions stand with Sign of F. Twelve Comps. form open Arch with wands. Ppls. [Principals] form △with Sceptres, and give * * alternately; Hd. Wk. Removed).

Z..–You will now read to us the contents of the scroll you found in the vaulted chamber. (Lights raised).

[Still in the psychodrama of theatre, the implied reliance on Brothers to control ascent or descent is formalised by ritual with the Neo. instructed to be lifted into the light amid a cohesive display. There is an eroticism in the ritual, an electrical charge, amplified by intimate human touch. The Neo. at once senses or dwells on the fact that they are being made a centrepiece by those above them who are performing a subordinate role to perform the ritual at hand, a collaboration that reveals others including one Brothers must have gone through, and it when this thought occurs that the gravity of the cult which combines reverence and awe with an erotic even sexual charge of working together toward something numinous, exhilarating and ancient, hits them. And the follow–up realisation that if it has been repeated for hundreds of years, must be of great importance swells their pride. With the excitement of the Mysterium prompting a release of adrenaline, and freer flow of blood, erection of the penis during ritual is not unlikely and adds glaze to the memory and associations of the spectacle –9.]

(Can. reads: "In the beginning," etc.)

Z.—Comp., such are the first worlds of the S.V., which contains the treasures of God's revealed will. Let us, therefore, bless, praise and magnify His Holy Name for the knowledge of Himself He has vouchsafed unto us, and let us walk worthily in that light of truth which He has caused to shine around us.

Z.—Encouraged by the discovery you have made, you will now wrench forth the 3rd cope stone for the purpose of admitting better light, and afterwards attend to a portion of the writings of the Prophet Haggai. (Can. removes 3rd cope stone with crowbar).

H.—(reads chap. ii. 1–9.)

Z.—Comp. P.S., let the Can. be again lowered through the aperture, and further explore the vaulted chamber.

(P.S. Takes Can.'s r.h., [Right Hand] lowers him to a stooping posture and leads him under the rods to the Altar. They then raise the corners of the veil and replace it; then retire backwards to the W. The Can. Kneels.)

Z.—Comp. P.S. let the Can. be duly raised out of the vault.
(P.S. raises Can. and says) –

P.S.—Rise, newly exalted Comp. of our Order.

Z.—We congratulate you on being admitted to the light of our Order, and it is with gratification we express our confidence that your conduct will be such as to justify the choice we have made in exalting you to this Supreme Degree, so truly denominated the essence of Freemasonry.

Z..–You may now retire, and on your return to the Chapter the ceremony will be further proceeded with.

P.Soj.—Companions, assist me to replace the cope stones.

(P.Soj., F.A. Soj., and Can. salute as M.Ms. and retire. Sojourners disrobe outside the Chapter. Before returning, C.T. is removed from Can.; all three must be clothed as M.Ms.)

(The Ceremony of "Passing the Veils," when worked as part of the Exaltation Ceremony, would follow here.)

(Janitor gives * *)

S.N. (with Sn. of F.)—M.E., a report.

Z.–See who seeks admission.

(S.N. Opens door and enters porch.)

S.N. (to Janitor, not too loudly)– Who seeks admission?

Jan.–Three M.Ms. from Babylon, having heard that you are about to rebuild the Holy Temple at Jerusalem to the honour of the Lord God of Israel, beg permission to sojourn among you and assist in that great and glorious undertaking.

S.N.–Halt, while I report.

S.N. re–enters Chapter and closes door.)

S.N. (with Sn. of F.) –M.E., three M.Ms from Babylon, etc.

Z.–Let them be admitted.

(P.Soj., F.A.Soj., and Can. enter the Chapter and take their positions in the W.–P.S. In the centre, Can. on his right. They salute as M.Ms.)

Z.–Strangers, whence come you?

P.S.–From Babylon, M.E.

Z.–What is your request?

P.S.–Having heard that you are about to re-build the Holy Temple at Jerusalem, to the honour of the Lord God of Israel, we beg permission to sojourn among you and to assist in that great and glorious undertaking.

Z.–Our neighbours, the Samaritans, have already made similar proposals, but as they are not distinctly of our race and people their request has not been complied with. We must, therefore, enquire who you are.

P.S.–Brethren of your own tribes and families, M.E.

Z.–But are you descended from those who basely fled when the Holy City and Temple were oppressed, or of that menial tribe left behind by the Babylonian general to till the land?

P.S.–We would scorn to be descended from those who so basely fled when the Temple and the Holy City were oppressed, neither are we of that menial tribe left behind by the Babylonian General to till the land; but we are nobly born, and, like yourselves, descended from a race of Patriarchs and Kings. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were our forefathers, M.E. We are descended from the Princes and Rulers of the House of Judah, who for their sins and those of their forefathers, were led into captivity with their King, Jehoiachim, by Nebuzaradan, Captain of the Guard of Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, where we were to remain for seventy years, as foretold by the prophet Jeremiah, and then return to our native land and there dwell. Our captivity having expired in the first year of the reign of Cyrus King of Persia, it then pleased the Almighty to inspire the mind of that young Prince to issue a proclamation saying–"All the Kingdoms of the earth hath the Lord God of Heaven given me, and He hath charged me to build Him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judea. Who is there among you of all His people? The Lord his God be with him and let him go up." Being inspired with fervency and zeal for the worship of the T.A.L.G.M.H., and having an ardent desire to visit the land of our forefathers, we eagerly availed ourselves of this permission, and are come up to offer our assistance in re–building the Temple of the Lord God of Israel, who hath promised by the mouth of His prophet to establish there His Name for ever, and give peace to the whole earth.

Z.–We congratulate you on your noble ancestry, and acknowledge you of our tribes and families. We must now enquire how you have been employed.

P.S.–In Masonry, M.E., operative and symbolic.

Z.–What is the Symbolic Masonry?

P.S.–It is that grand, universal science which includes all others; it inculcates self–examination and teaches us the duty we owe to God, our neighbour, and ourselves.

Z.–The employment is indeed worthy of your noble descent. In what department of the work do you seek to be employed?

P.S.–In any, M.E., even the lowest is honourable.

Z.–Humility is a sure indication of merit, and we are satisfied that you are qualified to fill the most important offices; but, from the lateness of your application, these are already filled. We therefore depute you to prepare the ground for the foundations of the Most Holy Place; and, if in removing the ruins of the former structure you make any discovery which you deem of importance, we enjoin you to the strictest secrecy; communicate with none, but report to this Grand Sanhedrin.

Z.–Ss. E. and N. provide these worthy sojs. with the necessary implements of labour. (Done.)

(P.S. carries Crowbar, First Asst. Soj. the Shovel, and Can. the Pickaxe. P.S. also carries Scroll.)

P.S.–We cheerfully accept the trust reposed in us, and will endeavour to evince our gratitude by zeal and fidelity.

Z. (rises)– Go; and may the God of your forefathers be with you and prosper your work.

(After saluting as M.Ms., they retire).
(Outside the Chapter).

[The above only re-emphasizes the already described points of bondage through fealty and loyalty in serving aims that assist in fulfilling Jewish prophecy; the importance of secrecy and discretion; a system of tells and signs for identification and to test for infiltrators; and humility which supposedly restrains the ambition of power - which is anathema to Freemasonry hierarchy. Critically, it also indicates that the most important thing the Mason can do, is Serve, with the subtext that the Mason now owes the Lodge and must repay them in service and fidelity. The famous 'Whom does the Grail, Serve?' comes to mind here. The Grail, enshrined in a person, serves whoever holds it – for to their understandable shame, Men cannot yet tell God apart from Men.

The feature peculiar of Freemasonry is secrecy, which belies its sinister intention to subvert the highest powers to which men yearn and bow for its own endevilled ends. Nothing is hidden from God, yet Freemasonry hides God from Men because Men believe it in lieu of Knowing, and in doing so indicate they Know not. The Art of the hiding indicates as much knowing of God as the Book of Enoch, whom, equally, in his first few paragraphs indicates he knows him not.

There is genuine splendour in Freemasonry:- lyrical perfection. It's lack is its authenticity.

Overt references to zeal introduce and offer the explicit acceptance of zealotry, that is, a fanatic or committed person to a cause, often excessively so. Who taught you, trained you, in the difference between War and Terror? The meaning of legal or illegal. Or in the means by which you are able to comprehend Shapes whose dark blurs are defined only by Their Lights? –9.]

P.Soj. to Candidate – In the course of our work we discover the crown of an Arch which, on removing two of the cope stones, we find to be the roof of a vault or underground chamber, and decide to examine it. As it might be unsafe for all three to descend into it, we shall draw lots to decide which of us shall descend. (Lots drawn). The lot has apparently fallen upon me. To lower me into the vault and to enable me to signal any dangers, we must fasten this cord around my waist and these lines on my arms. The reasons for this will be explained later.

(Janitor gives * *.)

S.N. (with Sn. of F.) –M.E., there is a report.

Z.–Comp. S.N. inquire who seeks admission.

(S.N. Opens the door).

S.N.–Who comes here?

Jan.–The three sojs. sent to prepare the ground for the foundations of the M.H. place, having made a discovery which they deem of importance, are anxious to communicate the same to the Grand Sanhedrin.

S.N.–Halt, til I report. (S.N. closes the door, and with Sn. of F. reports.)

S.N.–M.E., the three Sojs. sent to prepare the ground for the foundations of the M.H. Place, having made a discovery which they deem of importance, are anxious to communicate the same to the Grand Sanhedrin.

Z.–Let them be admitted.

(The three Sojs. enter clothed as M.Ms. Carrying W.Ts. And scroll. They place themselves in W., as in previous case, saluting as M.Ms.)

Z.–We understand that you have made a discovery which you deem of importance. You will therefore impart to us this discovery, and minutely detail the circumstances which led thereto.

P.S.–Early this morning, on resuming our labours, we discovered a pair of pillars of exquisite beauty and symmetry; proceeding onward we discovered six other pairs of equal beauty and proportion, which from their position appeared to have supported the roof of a subterranean gallery leading under the place where the Sanctum Sanctorum formerly stood. Our progress was here impeded by fragments of the former structure. On clearing these away we arrived at what appeared to be solid rock, but, on striking it with my crowbar, I remarked a hollow sound. I therefore hailed my Comps., when he with the pickaxe loosened the earth, which he with the shovel cleared away. We then discovered a perfect crown of an arch, in the form of a dome, covered with a series of cope stones. Aware who was the architect of the former structure, and knowing that no part thereof had been designed in vain, we determined to examine it, for which purpose we removed two of the cope stones, when a vault of considerable magnitude appeared to view. We determined upon a descent; and, all being equally zealous for the enterprise, we cast lots; the lot, M.E., fell upon me (S. of F.), and in order to lower me into the vault my Comps. fastened this cord or life–line around my waist; and, lest any noxious vapour or other causes should render my position unsafe, they also attached these two guide lines to my arms, so that they might lower or raise me, according to the signal I might give to my right hand or my left hand Comp. In this manner I descended through the aperture.

Arriving at the bottom I gave the signal for more line, and proceeded to explore the vault. My eyes having soon become accustomed to the obscure light, I was enabled to see, though indistinctly, about the centre of the vault, a pedestal or short column of stone having certain characters inscribed upon one of its sides; but from the want of sufficient light I was unable to decipher them. Feeling around I also found this scroll, but from the same cause I was unable to read its contents. Therefore, securing it and giving another signal, I was drawn up out of the vault.

On arriving at the light of day we discovered from the first sentence that it was a portion of the long–lost Sacred Law as promulgated by our G.M.M. at the foot of Mount Horeb in the Wilderness of Sinai. This precious treasure stimulated us to further exertions. We therefore wrenched forth the third cope stone for the purpose of admitting better light, and I again descended into the vaulted chamber. By this time the sun had gained its meridian altitude, and darting its rays more directly through the aperture, I was enabled to distinguish those objects I had before so imperfectly beheld. In the centre of the vault was a block of white marble, wrought in the form of an altar of incense, or double cube; on the front thereof were engraven the initials of the three G.Ms who presided over the building of the first Temple – S.K.I, H.K.T., and H.A.B.– and other mystic symbols which I was unable to make out. A veil covered the face of the altar. Approaching with reverential awe I raised the veil, and there beheld engraven on a plate of pure gold that which I humbly conceive to be the S. . W. . itself. Replacing the veil, I retired with all respect and reverence, gave the signal, and was again drawn up out of the vault. With the assistance my companions, I closed the entrance, and we are now come, as commanded by your Excellency, to report the discovery to the Grand Sanhedrin.

[As the reader may have discovered for themselves, the binding of men is best done with such a psychodrama as delivered above. The actions performed and words read perform a double–function, exoterically or taken at face–value they describe a descent and discovery of scrolls to restore a critical Temple. Yet esoterically in their performance they break down the individual slowly and remake them into a servant to the Lodge. In many ways the text is an allegory to this process, but it also serves as misdirection, keeping the individual mentally occupied to reduce resistance to their senses being overwhelmed by a silent attack on their vulnerabilities which include their vices and their virtues. Wherein the greatest vulnerability of a man is the desire to be Good before God. The performance of tasks to please the Grand Sanhedrin is also enshrined here, implying that what the Mason does is for the greater Lodge, less himself, and he does it with his equally subservient brotherhood who show themselves having equally submitted to this silliness in grave seriousness, so that none can make a break for the exit –9.]

Z.–Your narrative bears every appearance of truth, but, to convince us, impart to us what you saw engraven on the face of the altar.

P.S.–That, M.E. (Sn. of F.) we must respectfully decline, for we have heard with our ears, and our fathers have declared unto us, that in their days, and in the old time before them, it was not lawful for any but the High Priest to mention the sacred and mysterious Name of T.T.A.L.G.M.H., and he only once in every year, when he entered on the great Day of Atonement into the H. of H., [Holy of Holies] and stood before the Ark of the Covenant to make propitiation for the sins of the people.

Z.–We commend your pious caution; your conduct considerably increases our esteem. We therefore depute our Comps. Ss. E. and N. to accompany you to the sacred spot and ascertain the truth of your conjectures, and their report shall determine your reward.

Z.–Comps. Ss. E. and N., you will accompany the P.S. And ascertain the nature of the discovery.

(Comps. Ss. E. and N. and P.S. retire to anteroom and share the S.W. They re–enter, and the two former, with Sign of F., advance from N. and S. sides respectively to Altar, h. and b. at 3rd, 5th and 7th steps, remove Veil, step backward to S.W. And N.W., and report with Sn. of F):

S.E.–Correct in every particular M.Ex.

S.N.–In every particular correct, M.Ex.

Z.–Comps., I have to acquaint you that my colleagues in office agree with me that as a reward for your discovery you shall immediately be called to that exalted rank held by your illustrious ancestors.

Z.–Comps. Ss. E. and N., you will relieve these worthy Sojs. of their implements of labour (done); invest them with the insignia of our Order (done); clothe them with the robes of innocence (done); instruct them to advance hither that we may further reward them.

(S.E. escorts P.S., S.N. escorts Can., and in the absence of other Can., Second Asst. Soj. escorts First Asst. Soj. They lead up in pairs by N. side, h. and b., with sn. of fidelity. The three Sojs. form in line in front of Principals, S.E., S.N., and Second Asst. Soj. At their rear.)

Z.–The white robes with which you have been clothed are emblematical of their purity of heart and rectitude of conduct which should actuate all those who are exalted to this Supreme Degree.

(Principals rise.)

J. (steps down from dais) – I invest you with their collars in token of our esteem and approbation.

H. (steps down from dais) – I entrust you with these batons, emblems of delegated authority, which you will be entitled to bear unless 72 or more of your elders be present.

Z. (steps down from dais)– I decorate you with these jewels, and I receive you as Comps. of this excellent and illustrious Order. And, to ennoble you still further, we hereby constitute you Princes and Rulers among us; and, should you continue faithful in the discharge of your duties, you will in due time be entitled to a full participation in our mysteries.

Z.–We will now entrust you with the S.Ws., and instruct you in the traditional ceremony used in sharing and communicating the same.

The words are T. [Three] in number, each word having T.Ss. [Two Syllables] which are given by Three Comps. forming a T., [Tau] thus. You will now stand to order as F.C's., form a T. with the R.feet, with the L.H [Left Hand] clasp the L.W [Left Wrist] of the C. [Companion] on your R. and with the R.H. clasp the R.W. of your C. on your L., thus forming T.Ts. It is between the 2 upper Ts. that the S.W.s are communicated. To enable you to do this I must tell you that the Ws. are * The second W. [Word] is the one you have sworn never to P.–[Pronounce] etc,etc. These Syllables are repeated consecutively by each C., thus eventually the whole W. is pronounced. The first W. is given clockwise and the second contra–clockwise, (Candidates then retire to the W., escorted as before.)

P.S.–M.E., thus invested, entrusted, decorated, and rewarded, it shall be our duty to merit a continuance of your approbation, and we pledge ourselves to discharge with fidelity and zeal the duties of the high and important station to which we have been exalted.

[More of the same, though take note of the special repetition of being faithful in the discharge of your duties to be eligible for full participation in the Lodge's mysteries. A Mysterium generally works to the effect of always having another door to open, or another carrot to reach for on the indeterminate end of the stick, which perpetually invites the obedient silence and control of the Neo. In this way they can be cajoled to behave in such a way indefinitely in the hope that they might progress and unveil a deeper level of all that has taken place which can satisfy their now intense curiosity as to how far it goes. Keep in mind, that in comparison to the ordinary boring daily affairs of a world pretending not to be virulent with secret societies, but as its is presented and reinforced. Freemasonry, therefore may be a pathway that can take a man closer to an Ideal of God, than many believe achievable. The esoteric gymnastics performed by Men to prove they are a Creation of a Creator, is finite but dizzying. The importance of all these doors is not to guard what is usually a very germane revelation but to pass one through so many doors so that they may glimpse the power behind them and those that guard them, and through enough of them to the point they are completely devoted to the Lodge. Wherein, there is no danger in them knowing said secrets for they have developed a holy duty to protect (and continue) them. This is helped along by the benefits laid at their feet by their various Brothers that have improved their personal life by operating in two realms, the ordinary uninitiated world, and the world where they know there is millions of Men ready to give them a hand and open a door if they just demonstrate their kinship in secretive ways known only to their own kind. Moreover, Freemasonry is just one of Man's many snares for Men - they are, due to their elevation and illumination, invited to attend other lodges of all kinds, both those in the bright of day and those in the shadows and the dark where they live a secret life, with the implied and ever-present risk of having it exposed -or- being smashed to pieces on the rocks, at any given time.-9]

Address.

Z.–We congratulate you on your admission into this Supreme Degree of Freemasonry, at once the foundation and keystone of the whole Masonic structure. You may, perhaps, conceive that you have taken a fourth Degree in Freemasonry; such, however, is not the case, it is the M.M. Degree completed. For you will recollect that when you were raised to the Sublime Degree you were informed that that owing to the untimely death of our G. Master, H.A.B [Grand Master Hiram Abiff]., the secrets of a M.M. were lost, and that certain substituted ones were adopted to distinguish M.Ms. until time or circumstances should restore the originals. Those secrets were lost for a period of nearly 500 years, and were recovered in the manner just imparted to you in this impressive form for the purpose of fixing more strongly on your mind the providential means by which the discovery was effected and our ancient secrets regained.

(Can. and Sojs. be seated).

Z.–We shall now impart to you the Historical, Symbolical and Mystical knowledge of our Order. (One Knock.) Comps. I now claim your attention for Ex. Comp. J., who will deliver the Historical Lecture.

Historical Lecture (from Dais).

J.–Comps., there are three epochs in Freemasonry which particularly merit your attention – the history of the first, or Holy Lodge; the second, or Sacred Lodge; and the third, or Grand and Royal Lodge.

The first, or Holy Lodge, was opened two years after the exodus of the Israelites from their Egyptian bondage, by Moses, the inspired law–giver; Aholiab, the Architect; and Bezaleel, the curious carver and embroiderer, on holy ground at the foot of Mount Horeb in the Wilderness of Sinai, where the host of Israel had assembled and pitched their tents to offer up prayer and thanksgivings for their signal deliverance from the hands of the Egyptians. Here the Almighty had previously revealed Himself to His faithful servant, Moses, when He commissioned him His high ambassador, of wrath against Pharoah and his people, and of freedom and salvation to the House of Jacob. Here were delivered the forms of those mysterious prototypes, the Tabernacle and the Ark of the Covenant; here also were delivered the tables of the Sacred Law, graven by the finger of the M.H.; with those sublime and comprehensive precepts of moral and religious duty, which by separating His favoured people from all other nations, consecrated Israel a chosen race to His service. For these reasons we distinguish this as the first, or Holy Lodge.

S.K.I., H.K.T., and H.A.B., presided over the second or Sacred Lodge. It was opened in the bosom of the holy Mount Moriah, under the very centre of the place wherein the S.S. was afterwards erected. On this consecrated spot Abraham proved his intuitive faith by placing his beloved son, Isaac, a destined victim, on the altar of his God. Here, on the threshing floor of Araunah, the Jebusite, David, offered the meditatorial sacrifice by which the plague was stayed; here, also, he received in a vision the form of that magnificent temple afterwards erected by his illustrious son; and here the Almighty declared His sacred Name should dwell; for which reasons we designate this the second, or Sacred Lodge.

The third, or Grand and Royal Lodge, was held at Jerusalem, and was opened soon after the return of the children of Israel from their Babylonish captivity by Z., the prince of the people; H., the prophet; and J., the son of Josedech, the High Priest. Then was the kingly power restored in the person of Z. to the royal line of David and princely tribe of Judah, until the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans under Titus in the year 70 of the Christian era; to commemorate which restoration this is called the third, or Grand and Royal Lodge.

The resemblance in the Chapter before us, and in every regular H.R.A. Chapter, to these great originals is, that we acknowledge the representations of the Grand and Royal Chapter at Jerusalem in the three Principals, who represent Z., H. and J., whose names they bear; the two Scribes represent and bear the names of E. and N., attendants on the august Sanhedrin. Yourselves represent the three faithful sojourners by whom the secrets of the H.R.A. were found, in consequence of which discovery they were honoured with seats in the august assembly, composed of rulers and elders of the people, represented by the rest of the Comps. now present.

_____

[The historical conceits, wounds and spiritual injuries of the Jews are laid bare, and the purpose of RA Freemasonry exposed as a means to rectify this great injustice are made clear. The message throughout RAFM is crystal: the sacrosanct importance of these grievances and Judaic history, expressly override any contemporary understanding of what life is for, the purpose to which one should commit it, one's relationship with the Divine, and individual values are to be replaced with collective Judaic concerns –9].

_____

Z. (one knock)–Comps, I now claim your attention while our Ex. Comp. H. delivers the symbolical lecture.

Symbolical Lecture (from Dais).

H.–Comps., the forms, symbols and ornaments of R.A.F.My., and the rites and ceremonies now practised amongst us, were adopted by our predecessors at the building of the second Temple, as well to preserve in our minds the providential means by which the great discovery was effected, as in our hearts the lessons of that exalted morality which we, as Comps. of this Supreme Degree, ought always to practise.

The form in which the Comps. are arranged in every H.R.A. Chapter approaches, as nearly as circumstances will permit, to that of the true Catenarian Arch; thus serving as a memorial of the vaulted shrine in which the S.W. was deposited. From the impenetrable nature of the arch, which is the strongest of all architectural forms, we learn the necessity of guarding our mysteries from profanation by the most inviolable secrecy. It typifies, also, that adherence to order and that spirit of fraternal union which have given energy and permanency to the whole Institution of Freemasonry, thereby enabling it to survive the wreck of mighty empires, and to resist the destroying hand of time. And, as the subordinate parts of the Arch naturally depend upon the centre, or Keystone, which compresses and cements the whole structure, so we are taught to look up with reverence and to submit with cheerfulness to every lawfully constituted authority, whether of Masonic or civil regulation.

The three Copestones are aptly represented by the three Principals; for as the knowledge of the secrets contained in the Vaulted Chamber could only be obtained by drawing forth the first three of a series of stones, so the complete knowledge of this Supreme Degree can only be acquired by passing through these several offices.

(Stands in N.E.)

In R.A.F.My. there are six lights– three greater and three lesser; the three greater lights are placed in the form of an equilateral triangle, and represent the S.W. itself, and the creative, preservative, and annihilative powers of the Deity; the three lesser represent the Law and the Prophets; and each set of lights, by its number, refers to the Patriarchal, Mosaical and Prophetical dispensations. The three lesser lights divide the greater triangle into four smaller triangles, one at each of its extremities, and one in the centre, all being equal and equilateral; these represent the three Craft degrees and that of the H.R.A.

This symbolical arrangement corresponds with the mysterious T.T., which has three pairs of right angles at its extremities and one pair at its point of union; for the degrees contained in four pairs of right angles and in the angles of four triangles are the same.

This arrangement also illustrates the Jewel of the Order, which is two triangles interlaced within a circle, and forming by their intersections a given number of angles; these may be taken in five several combinations and when reduced to their number of right angles will be found to be equal to the five regular Platonic bodies, which represent the four elements and the Sphere of the Universe.
On the scroll, at the bottom of the Jewel, is the motto, “Nil nisi clavis deest” – “Nothing but a key is wanting”. Around the rim or circle, the emblem of eternity, whose centre is everywhere and whose circumference is nowhere, is the legend, “Si talia jungere possis, sit tibi scire satis,” – “If thou canst comprehend these things thou knowest enough.” On the interlaced triangles, the symbols of fire and water, prayer and remission, petition and blessing, is inscribed the Greek word “Eurekamen,” with its Latin equivalent, “Invenimus,” signifying “We have found”; there are also the phrases, “Cultor Dei” – the knowledge, or worship of God, and “Civis mundi” – citizen of the world. Within these is another triangle, and in its centre the sun, which with its rays darting forth and penetrating in every direction, symbolises the Deity, Whose every attribute is perfection. The globe within the compass is emblematical of Geometry and Astronomy; the compasses issuing from the centre of the sun is emblematical of Agriculture, and represents the influence of that great luminary over the animal and vegetable kingdoms, admonishing us to work while it is yet day, and to be careful to perform our allotted tasks in their proper seasons, so that we may not lose the fruits of our labour.

The Sash and Apron are badges of honour and the insignia of our Order; the Sash, or Ribbon, is a sacred emblem denoting light, and is composed of the two principal colours (purple and crimson), with which the veil of the Temple was interwoven. Its sacred character is further signified by the irradiated form in which these colours are arranged, denoting justice tempered with mercy, and in both these respects it has ever been considered an emblem of regal power and dignity.

The Ensigns arranged around the Chapter represent the distinctive bearings of the twelve tribes of Israel, and figuratively refer to the particular blessing bequeathed to the father of each by the Patriarch Jacob, when he had called them together for that purpose, as we find recorded in the 49th chapter of Genesis.

The four principal Banners represent the standards of the leading divisions of the army of Israel, the devices being the figures of a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle; a man to personify intelligence and understanding, a lion to represent strength and courage, an ox to denote patience and assiduity, and an eagle to display promptness and celerity.

The Jewels and Robes worn by the Principals and the bearings or devices upon the Sceptres denote respectively the Regal, Prophetical, and Sacerdotal offices.

(Stands E. of A.)

The Cover of the Altar, white satin, fringed with crimson and tasselled with gold, is emblematical of purity, constancy and power; of truth, stability, and perfection; and is thus well calculated to impress us with reverence for what is thereunder.

The Bible, Square and Compasses are considered appropriate emblems of the three Grand Masters when K.S. founded the first Temple. The Bible denoting the wisdom of King Solomon, the Square the power of King Hiram, and the Compasses the exquisite skill of Hiram, Abiff; but the truly speculative Mason ever regards them as the mysterious symbols of the Wisdom, Truth and Justice of the Most High. His Wisdom is amply exemplified in the V. of the S.L. which contains the record of His mighty acts and the treasure of His revealed will. His Truth is represented by the Square, the acknowledged symbol of strength, and the criterion of perfection; and His unerring and impartial Justice in having defined for our instruction the limits of good and evil is elucidated by the Compasses, which enables us to ascertain and determine the limits and proportions of all geometrical forms.

The Sword and Trowel are to commemorate the valour of those worthy Masons who carried on the building of the second Temple. With Trowel in hand, and Sword by their side, they built and defended the Holy City and Sanctuary against the unprovoked attacks of their enemies, thus transmitting to succeeding ages the impressive lesson that, next to obedience due to lawful authority, a manly and determined resistance to lawless violence is one of the most important steps towards social order.

[While again, beautiful in its way, the associative symbolism to respective symbols in RAFM takes divine geometry for its own human ends ultimately transforming God into something base and ugly. The reference to a celebration of an army of Israel and the display of the associated banners morphs the previous careful elucidation of the highest principles and bearing to honour God, masterfully conveyed with a lofty vocabulary, to show the bluntness and willingness to associate violence and war with divinity and the sacred. We must remember that this is an ancient fraternity, RAFM is not the first nor the last expression of a secret society formed to conciliate genetic and generational reparations to spiritual agonies. The mirage of doing God's Work is compelling but utterly devoid of sincerity – this is not God's Work.

Men do not do God's Work for God has no Work for us to do that he does not perform Himself.

Take careful notice of the reference to 'unprovoked attacks by enemies' - for the extreme unctuousness of those incapable or dishonest about their conduct that provoked or invited wrath often claim to be blameless – as it was then, and as it is today, in the international realm of realpolitk. Wherein, feigning hurt, shock or surprise are worn but tested political maladies that still have people (and nations) lining up dutifully for a sucker punch. It denotes an isolationist understanding, that is, of not having the wherewithall or acumen to understand the consequences of one's actions, and to pretend (or authentically be mystified) when there are repercussions. Note also, the direct invocation that a Mason should be willing to fight a manly and determined resistance to lawless violence, which is a contradiction when such resistance neither understands or acknowledges its own role in conflict generation, or asks for zeal and fidelity and secrecy after threatening to kill its members if they betray it.

We must be careful to read things either multiple ways or multiple times – to ask ourselves, what is this text trying to achieve, what was the intention of its author, what does it do versus what is says it does? Sadly, a skill long fallen into disuse, but one that cannot be forgotten due to nature's inherent practice of seeking evolution through a creative Few. But for those pampered, protected and empowered, such questions have never been forthcoming. The result is a globe of powerful elite, standing on carefully prepared sacrificial altars of groups like the RA Freemasons, who are precariously interlinked and beholden to various societies public and private, and each deeply compromised to the extent they dare not be the one to raise the alarm, blow the whistle, or betray the latest incarnation of one of the world's most powerful and oldest magical Lodges –9.]

Working Tools.

The Shovel, Pickaxe, and Crowbar are the Working Tools of this Degree, they having been the implements used by the Sojs. in preparing for the foundation of the second Temple. These we spiritualise thus:– the work of the Shovel reminds us of the manner in which the body is laid in the grave. The sound of the stroke of the Pickaxe represents to us the sound of the last trump, when the graves shall be opened and deliver up their dead; and the Crowbar, being an emblem of uprightness, typifies the erect manner in which we shall arise on that awful day to meet our Almighty but Merciful Judge. Thus the W.Ts. of this Degree teach us not only to contemplate the close of our mortal existence, but also to look forward to that better life which is to come, and to hope with holy but humble confidence that, when our earthly bodies are disposed of, our spirits will finally ascend into the realms of eternal bliss.

_____

Mystical Lecture.

(One knock).

Z.– The mystical knowledge of this Degree comprehends the form and explanation of the several Sns. and the nature and import of the H.W. In R.A.F.My. There are five Sns., corresponding in number with the five P.O.F., in which you, as M.Ms, have already been instructed; and, as the latter point out to us the relative duties we owe to each other, so do the sns. of a R.A.F.M. mark in a peculiar manner the relations we bear to the Almighty as creatures offending against His mighty will and power, yet still the adopted children of His mercy.

I will now communicate to you these Sns. You will please copy me, after which I will explain them at length.

The first is the P.S., and is given by _____, and is the only complete sn. given entirely with the l.h.

The Second is the R. Sign, and is given by _____.

You will pay particular attention to this sn., as it is the one you will give on entering or leaving the Chapter, or addressing the First Principal.

The Third is the P., or S.S., and is given by _____.

The Fourth is the M.S., and is given by _____.

The fifth is the F.S., and is given by _____.

You will now resume your seats.

The P.S. marks our obligation, and reminds us of the fall of Adam and the dreadful penalty entailed thereby on all his sinful posterity – no less than death; intimating by the very action itself that the stiff–necked and disobedient shall be cut off from the land of the living by the judgment of God. even as the head (sn.) is severed from the body by the sword of human justice; to avert which we are taught by the R. Sign to bend with submissive resignation beneath the chastening hand of the Almighty, and at the same time to engraft His law on our hearts. In this expressive form did the father of the human race present himself before the face of the Most High to receive the denunciation of His just and terrible judgement. It was afterwards adopted by our G.M.M. when the Lord appeared to him in the burning bush; thus (sn.) he shaded his face from the brightness of the Divine presence, and laid his hand upon his h. in token of humility, which act of salutation was afterwards accounted to him for righteousness.

The P. or S. Sn. justly denotes that humble frame of mind and heart, without which our prayers and oblations cannot find acceptance at the Throne of Grace, before which how should a frail and erring creature of the dust present himself but with bended knees (sn.) and uplifted hands, betokening at once his humility and dependence. In this humble posture did Adam kneel to God and bless the Author of his being; thus also did he bend with contrite awe before the face of his offended Judge, to avert His wrath and conciliate His mercy, and has thereby transmitted this sacred sn. to his posterity for ever.

The M. Sn. reminds us of the weakness of human nature, unable to resist the powers of darkness unless assisted by that strength which is from above. By this (sn.) defenceless posture we acknowledge our own frailty, and confess that we can do no good or acceptable service but through Him from whom all good counsels and all just works proceed, and without whose Divine and special favour we must ever be found unprofitable servants in His sight; therefore, after the manner of our ancient Companions and the atoning priests, we adopt this outward sign of contrition and humility.

The F. Sn. (sn.) shows that as we would prostrate ourselves with our faces to the earth so must we throw ourselves upon the mercy of our Creator and Judge, looking forward with confidence to the fulfilment of His gracious promises, by which alone we hope to pass through the Ark of our redemption into the mansions of eternal bliss and glory, to the presence of Him Who is the Great I Am, the Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the Ending, the First and the Last.

[One can observe as the induction progresses, that the spiritual refinement darkens into zealous tirades of veiled and actual threats for real or perceived offences to God whose office is conflated with the Lodge and the listening Freemason; exhorting humility and for one to prostrate oneself and therefore violent toward anyone who would threaten such 'divine' tranquillity and peace. Here, sufficiently enslaved and obedient, the 'Free' Mason takes the next steps of his programming which turn him into a secret soldier (a sleeper cell) another brick in the wall of Israelite interests and a number among its spiritual army –9.]

LECTURE ON THE PEDESTAL.

Continuation of the Mystical lecture.

At the building of K. Ss. Temple, a vast number of workmen were employed, and their names or marks were found engraven on various parts of the building; but the names of the three G.Ms. could nowhere be found until they were discovered by the Sojs. whilst employed in preparing the ground for the foundations of the M.H. Place.

In the centre of the vault stood a block of pure white marble wrought in the form of an altar of incense, a double cube. On the front of the Altar were the initials of the three G.Ms., viz. S.K.I, H.K.T., and H.A.B., to perpetuate their names as well as to commemorate the circumstances of their having presided during the erection of the first Temple. There was also the mysterious T.T. Which is a character affixed to the summonses of the R.A.F.Ms on occasions of more than usual importance.
The Tau is derived from the Hebrew, and is the sign or mark spoken of by the Angel whom Ezekiel saw in spirit when it was said to the man with the writer's ink horn, “Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of men that sigh and cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof”: by which mark they were saved from among those who were slain for their idolatry by the wrathful displeasure, of the Most High. It was also a mark, in ancient times, placed on the foreheads of those who were acquitted by the Judges, as a proof of their innocence; and military commanders caused it to be placed on those who were saved unhurt from the field of battle, for which reasons its has been denominated the Mark of Life. The union of the three Taus, here represented, alludes to the grand triunison of the Deity, by whom the horrific, gloomy and unshapen chaos was changed into regular form and peaceful existence.

On the top of this white Pedestal, or Altar, was a plate of fine gold, and also a triangle and circle of the same metal, white being an emblem of innocence and gold of purity. These mathematical figures, the Circle and Triangle, are exceedingly important, and deserve your careful attention. It has ever been considered that they have reference to the Deity or some Divine attribute.

The Circle is an emblem of eternity, and may justly be deemed a type of God, without beginning of days or ending of years; it also calls to our remembrance the great and awful hereafter, or futurity, when we hope to enjoy everlasting life and endless bliss.

The Triangle has always been considered as a symbol of the Deity. In times of remote antiquity, names of God and symbols of Divinity were generally enclosed in triangular figures. In the days of Pythagoras the triangle was esteemed the most sacred of emblems, and when an obligation of more than usual importance was to be administered it was usually given on the triangle, and when so administered none was ever known to violate it. The ancient Egyptians called three the sacred number, or number of perfection, and the Triangle was an object of worship as a symbol of the great principle of animated existence; they also gave it the sacred name of God, as representing the animal, vegetable and mineral creation; it was also called by them Avolet and Aberowith, which signifies the soul of nature. This sacred delta is usually placed in the midst of squares and circles indicating the vivifying principle – extending its ramifications throughout all created matter; it is therefore, the Great All, or Summum Bonum.

The Word you behold on the circle is the great, awful and incomprehensible Name of the M.H., signifying I Am that I Am – the A. and the O. – the first and the last – the beginning and the ending – which was – and is – and is to come – the Almighty. It shows him to be the actual, future, eternal, unchangeable and all–sufficient God, Who alone has His being in and of Himself, and gives to all others their being: that He was what He is, is what He was and ever will remain both what He was and what He is, from everlasting to everlasting, all creation being dependent on His mighty will.

The Word on the △ is that sacred and mysterious Name which you have solemnly engaged yourself never to disclose except in the presence and with the assistance of two R.A Comps., or in the body of a lawfully constituted H.R.A.C. when acting in the capacity of First Principal, as I now am. It is a compound word, and its combinations form the word J.B.O. It is derived from four languages, viz. Chaldean, Hebrew, Assyrian and Egyptian. J. is the Chaldean name of God, signifying His essence and majesty incomprehensible; it is also a Hebrew word signifying I Am and shall be, thereby expressing the actual, future and eternal existence of the M.H. B is an Assyrian word, signifying Lord, or Powerful; it is also a compound Hebrew word, from the preposition Beth and Ul, signifying in Heaven, or on High. O. is an Egyptian word, signifying Father of All; it is also a Hebrew word implying strength or power, and thereby expressive of the omnipotence of the Father of All. The different significations of the words may, therefore, be thus collected: – "I am and shall be; Lord in Heaven or on high; Omnipotent Father of all."

The characters placed on the angles of the triangle are particularly worthy of your attention. They are the Aleph, the Bice, and the Lamed of the Hebrew. Their combinations are exceedingly important, and it is immaterial how they are arranged, as they all have reference to the Deity or to some Divine attribute. Taking the Aleph and the Bice, they form the word Ab., meaning Father; the Aleph and the Lamed the word Al, signifying Word; and the Lamed, the Aleph and the Bice, the word Lab, signifying Spirit; the Bice, Aleph and Lamed, the world Bal, signifying Lord; taking each pair with the whole triangle, they form the sentences – Ab, Bal, Al Bal, Lab Bal – Father Lord, Word Lord, Spirit Lord.

[The symbolic connotation of the secret name of God can therefore be derived and is contained within the well known word 'Qabbalah' or 'Kaballah' and hides in plain sight. As a holy man, I have no struggle to reveal this deep secret of the Masons, for it is not God's name, RAFM is not God's Work, it is merely a name for God and RAFM forms yet another of the planets flowering earthly–concocted Mysterium's whose purpose is to bind Men to obedience and to the powerful in offering to provide service to or communication of the Divine.

In revealing this secret doctrine, it becomes apparent to one more, that behind closed doors the worship and fervent irrationality of religion, hiding in guise as rational structured mysticism, is camouflaged Magico–Politics, installed within a secretive order for winning hearts and minds and owning them with the promise a Man can stand near God (or nearer) with the help of the Lodge. The price is merely his soul. It was Machiavelli, so often quoted out of context that stated 'there is no glory in killing one's fellow men or neighbours, only power'. Likewise, there is no glory in Freemasonry, only power. For what is done with Freemasonry is the work of Men. Few Men ever attain glory, only power –9].

This explanation teaches us that the H.R.A. is the climax of F.My. It is intimately blended with all that is nearest and dearest to us in another state of existence, Divine and human affairs being so awfully and minutely interwoven. In all its disquisitions it has virtue for its aim, the glory of God for its object, while the eternal welfare of man is considered in every part, point and letter of its ineffable mysteries. Suffice it to say, it is founded on the S.N. Of J____h.

Comps., I charge you, should you at any time be about to mention that S.N. lightly or irreverently, pause, place your fingers on your lips, and remember your Ob.

Comps., this Supreme Degree should inspire its members with the most exalted ideas of God, and lead to the practice of the most pure and sublime piety, and a reverence for the incomprehensible J____h, the Eternal Ruler of the Universe, the elemental Life, the primordial Source of all its principles, the very spring and fountain of all the virtues, the GREAT FIRST CAUSE OF ALL THINGS.

BELLMAINE BROS.
Pty. Ltd.
Printers, Etc.
66–70 Flinders Lane
Melbourne
1941

END

[A summary commentary is useful here to understand the context and role of secret societies in the world today and since antiquity. The ubiquity of Jewish Mysticism and Magic was so innate to the occult of the day – that the Order of Nine Angles (ONA) had to expend considerable effort and research in putting forward claims that its Septenary System and Tree of Wyrd predated the Jewish Tree of Life, which it labelled a distortion. These are claims THEM investigated and disputed via Mvimaedivm Black. So commonplace is the fabric of Jewish magic that it is largely invisible as the broad foundation on which the majority of modern, recent and ancient occult work rests that defines Western Magic – distinct from its elder roots in the Sinic dynasties from the East. Therein, in its desire to overthrow and discredit the popularity of the reigning system as an impostor to The Mysteries, the revisionist occult history claimed by ONA of an earlier Septenary Tradition was met with incredulity given how entrenched the history and forms of magic that exist today are within Jewish Mysticism.

Jewish Inventions such as Gematria, Qaballah and Goetia form the fundamental basis of occult practices shaped by the intrinsic beliefs they expound. From protective circles and angelic scripts (denoting the existence of supernatural sub-intelligences); the premise of State Intelligence (as a subset of Spiritual Intelligence); to secretive divine ciphers containing reproductions of source within the esoteric/exoteric appearance and essence of symbolism inherent between word and number, and a map of the realms of existence relevant to Man, Angel and God – Jewish Magic dominates almost every foundation of the Western Paradigm of Occult understanding. This includes sympathetic devices such as magical squares that invoke planetary powers for Wealth Generation, financial wizardry for influencing the Economy, the enduring theatre and richly complex spectacle of Media, the veneration of elder scribes and rabbi to delineate every mortal concern through social government et al., and combined, extends its reach as a suite of psycho–magical warfare, directing ontological and chronological control amid shaping the core structures of the human race. Indeed such magic is the aether of every strut by which human beings support themselves as a social–seeking creature beset by forms and forces. This deep and ancient adeptship of magic makes Judaism the premiere guardians, fomentors, utilizers and Masters of Magico–Politics.

Magic, has been successfully divorced from Politics through bastardizing the former by elevating the likes of Dee or Crowley to misdirect the masses in their distortion of the practice of the occult by crafting legions of harmless hand-wavers enmeshed in the labyrinth of the mystical– whilst enshrining realism within politics posed as a (rational) framework, whose critical omission was being devoid of religious (or irrational) considerations and the many ways the human race could be magically, physically and psychically enslaved. Together, these prongs prepared the way for a human race denuded of its inherited defenses developed to detect danger, but systematically eroded through constant, collective, magical attacks.

In 'A manual of the three first degrees in freemasonry: with an introductory keystone to the royal arch' (1860) the eminent Richard Carlile shares a similar but different representation of the Royal Arch rituals. It is one thing to read of these exposes and wonder of their accuracy, it is another to hold a book of a grand master never intended to be known and evince the truth from a comparison. Of especial note is Carlile's masterpiece on page 103 of his manual that he humbly titles 'Introduction' - which is surely, One of THEM speaking on One of THEM from an age before this one. Trampled in mud for his trespasses against Man's games, In Sterquiliniis Invenitur, Nullo modo eos cognoscemus, nec artem homini notam. (In the dirt it shall be found and We will know THEM by no means nor craft known to Man.)

Although greater detail is provided in other public Temple mss. (and private, to be released some day) the behaviour and typology of the ONA (and then the O9A) over almost 4 decades has its origin in a conspiracy by the Mossad, to justify the Mossad. Though only briefly commented on here, signature hallmarks and use of phrases and terms identify certain authors as informed by, influenced by, imitating therein some of these private precepts of secret R.A.F.M. they could not gain knowledge of otherwise unless privy to. Also, the now public characteristic of flagrant disregard for human life and suffering exhibited by Usrael that permeated through post-2008 ONA when it became re–branded the O9A (Omega and Alpha) - particularly a disregard and direct targeting of children that was fed slowly by various sanctioned glowies into new virulent forms such as 764 et al.

The Mossad stood over lesser international government intelligence agencies included under the umbrella of 14 EYES inc. the FBI/NSA who shopped J.C. Sutter hoping to use his Juche connections to infiltrate North Korea. They did so at the behest of Israeli Intelligence who used the O9A to create a fictitious global National Socialist threat (that wasn't organically evident enough on its own merit) to justify the colluding of nations to seek unlimited powers of international security, requiring a suitable theatrical spectre (known as a servitor) to be crafted and shaped for the purposes of feeding on naïve fear of mass populaces and could successfully generate enough moral panic and outrage to be a useful scapegoat. The immunity of certain characters to arrest following ties to Combat 18 or Al Qaeda given the disappearance of others for nothing (or in modern times, posting banal electronic messages that over-excite the murderous Magi) was eternally suspicious. ONA was blackened by O9A, whose federally paid and guided antics generated sufficient moral outrage through new groups to certify further erosion into civil liberties, were subsequently couched by a swathe of hackneyed academics connected to CIA cutout agencies through university connections, that suddenly manifest in force and reported cliché tropes on the ONA/O9A as a terrorist organiser. It was declared a terrorist organisation by New Zealand in Dec of 2025. But the ONA was just one of a very long list of global networks designed to elicit or force support for Israel which includes AIPAC, Zionism, Freemasonry, Epstein, ONA, the Mossad, and endless other spiderwebs active over centuries (See 'MOSAIC').

In proscribing it, lies the classic shutdown method to silence and sweep away the murky wetwork of the States respective intelligence agencies. This makes the capacity to report on these covert actions illegal to discuss, thereby slowly eradicating the footprints left behind of unrestrained state intelligence involvement in a long assortment of crimes via the long leash given to various informants (compromised and willing) - a standard protocol for Govt. intelligence. In short, citing 28 years of orbit to the story arc of the Order, we conclude the ONA does not stem from a mysterious, unbroken line of Hellenic or Pythagorean mysticism, but was concocted in the 1960's and put to work in the 1970's to infiltrate various Pan–European movements to falsely exacerbate their threat and variously control their ascent/descent in what is simply a four–thousand year, War of Magico–Politics, waged due to insanity by the Magi forgetting their own magic, is magic. Royal Arch Freemasonry and the ONA were both fomented for the needs of Judaic Magico–Politics, discussed in detail within the Temple's Corpus Themeticum. The question of Moult's understanding and complicity with these charges remains unknown, but those who posed as Anton Long (Qv. in poetic homage to James Jesus Angleton) were instrumental.

Curiously, and unknown to the public, One of these academics whose critique is so deeply trusted by their peers and forms the backbone of literary knowledge on the ONA, worked with the Temple of THEM in Mvimaedivm Black for several years, assisting in producing several of our historical volumes, to gain our trust, in order to gain direct access to the Mossad's, O9A and the individual(s) then posing as Anton Long. Later, convinced of their impunity, the same academic ghost-produced several of their own volumes of ONA material under the ONA's umbrella. Is this, academic regimen, excellence, integrity? And what does it say for academia if its knowledge of the Order of Nine Angles is constructed on a poisoned well?

No less distasteful is the forced dispersal of personal disclosure of students most private and personal details through inescapable psychological testing to pass one's classes by Swinburne University, which accepted payments to ban any calls by students for the state of Israel to be destroyed thereby controlling freedom of speech. To pass the Psychology unit, required participation in five random psychological tests which pretended one had the option not to participate but required legal assent to a hundred pages of terms across three websites for their SONA partner, and an agreement to their terms, before one could supposedly opt out. Dr. Martelle Ford and Rhys Luckey of the University both stonewalled reasonable requests for assistance in opting out only to demonstrate there was no opt-out, showing that the right to not participate as offered, was a lie. The requested data was as follows: "Personal Data Collection: All data is collected solely for research purposes. Data collected about you, primarily by your volunteering the data, may include: name, gender, email address, phone, personal details, physical description, family characteristics, education and skills, lifestyle and personal tastes, financial resources, racial or ethnic origin, religious or philosophical beliefs, health/medical data and other information. Data may be held on a secure system running outside the jurisdiction of the Data Protection Act but will always be held in accordance with the European Union Directive on Data Protection." To not be able to opt out of this intrusive invasion of privacy conducted under the guise of education is unethical, illegal and likely going straight to a cloaked intelligence operation to profile Swinburne's attendees. My deep (documented) concerns with the enforced request of the University to agree to terms before I could opt-out were dismissed by Ford and Luckey. That's equivalent to signing a deed to buy a house you intend to enter only to announce you don't wish to buy it. The same University erased political messages placed to warn others of Keir Starmer's terrorism acting against the British people labelling protestors gathered to protest the death of three little girls whose throats were cut as 'far-right thugs' to disguise and protect organised, sanctioned pedophile rings. Swinburne's complicity as supporters of terrorism and assuage powerful conflicts of interests was so apparent that I quit my degree in Counter-Terrorism with just one year to go in disgust.

These so-called 'respectable institutions' are more corrupt, shameful and dangerous to liberty and democracy than any imagined national socialist threat – which the Counter-Terrorism course obsessed over despite the terrorism actually being practiced by the Israeli's, Americans, Canadians, Australians, UK and others whose complicity in the genocide waged by Israel against the Palestinians was marginalised to pursue constructed scapegoats and strawmen. As I knew it would, this protection of atrocity and sub-ethical behaviours endemic to the hypocritical institutions and their shills, eventually lead to the USA's threat to cause Iran to cease to exist from frustrated impotent efforts to exercise absolute violence, which rage characterises the Magi. When history asks why didn't you say something, know that I tried – and everywhere I could, but when the whole system is corrupt, to whom can one turn?

I cannot be a force for counter-terrorism within the traditional fields because it is the terrorists who are in power.

Beyond the esoteric Temple of THEM is our diffusion of Meanders into the entertainment industry, digital images and programs encoded with themes, symbols and messages related to THEM and the ONA as well as numinous beautiful landscapes designed to be pieced together to understand the larger universe and mimic my modular esoteric reconstruction of reality – now in circulation in millions of iterations for over 11 years. Not withstanding my stint within the only Australian Indigenous political party or IAPA and access to sensitive information. Or within the Australian Bureau of Statistics. Or our revelation of the private details of Royal Arch Freemasonry within Victoria, effective worldwide. We have effected politics, magic, media, entertainment, academia. Wherein our subversion of forms stands in vehemence to the vile tactics of our adversaries who weaponise pedophilia, terrorism and death within its stratagems and deploy silence and arrogance in the wake of explanation or accountability.

Our own efforts, illustrate how systems can be brought to their destruction without resorting to these low forms of bloody suffering that the Magi rely on.

It is a crazy world in which I have landed, and become embroiled, in the schemes of mad men.

But I have landed, nonetheless.

In such darkness, let there be light–9.]

THE FUNDAMENTALS OF MAGIC, INTERNAL, EXTERNAL, AEONIC, NARRATIVIC AND MYTHIC

ONA & THE TEMPLE OF THEM

Fundamental to magic is a belief that the phenomenal world of the five senses is incomplete. Magickians believe that we live in a world quite different from the one our five senses show to us – they believe that every living thing possesses, because it is living, certain energies which we as individuals can sense and 'see' if we become receptive to them; just as we can become receptive to the effects of symbols and language on ourselves and others to the extent that we can discern the methodology beneath such forms and sometimes, deduce the motivation. This receptiveness is one of the aims of magickal or Occult Initiation – and may be said to involve the individual in becoming aware of the essence of things that is hidden by their outward appearance and this applies to other individuals, as well as 'things'.

An example of this is the existence of a hidden underlying Narrative being subtly/overtly created around us through various forms and/or suggested by means of a single/multiple literary/visual form(s) such as are used in Propaganda, Media or Networked Messages where multiple reinforcements of a similar message each play a part in a total collaboration to induce individuals to act a certain way. Another example is in the arrangement of a complex set of literary/visual forms that utilise influential devices such as logic, sentiment, precedence, emotion, morality, etc to invoke emotion through Nationalism, Patriotism or Racism, for instance, within the reader/viewer/participant. Recognition of such forms and the forces acting through them on each of us and others, as well as direct practice and assumation of various forms to explore them first-hand enables one to actively see beneath (and thus potentially influence) such presentations rather than merely passively witnessing their parade or being haplessly affected by them.

According to the Septenary Tradition, these "magickal energies" possessed by things and 'life' derive from what it is convenient to describe as the acausal – that is, every living entity is a point or region where acausal energies manifest in our causal, phenomenal, universe, the amount and type of this energy being dependant on the type of entity. These acausal energies (which science because it at present deals only with causal entities and energies, cannot describe) may be said to derive from a parallel acausal universe which intersects our causal universe at certain places – these places are deemed 'Nexions' and can be anything from a location to a movement, a form, a group or a single individual, for instance.

We as individuals, because we possess the faculty of consciousness, are 'gates' to this acausal universe. We possess the (mostly latent) ability to 'open the gate' to the acausal which exists within our own psyche to draw from the acausal certain energies, and these energies can and do alter in some way both our own consciousness or other entities/energies which exist in the causal. This “drawing of energies”, and their use, is magick. External magick is the use of such energies, directed by individual desire, to bring about changes in the causal; whilst Internal magick is the use of these energies to bring psychic, internal change. To draw upon such energies it is usually necessary for the individual to use some form of framework or symbolism and techniques of external magick use such symbolism to bring about both apprehension of the energies and their control.

Various systems of symbolism exist – most denoting types of energy by gods, goddesses, spirits or demons. In reality, the actual symbols are only of secondary importance, and a magickian who is following the path to Adeptship will soon discard such symbols/names/descriptions (and thus external magic itself) in favour of apprehending such energies as they are in themselves. In the Septenary tradition however, drawing upon these energies is first done via the ‘Tree of Wyrd’ (via exploration of the seven spheres and the pathways connecting them) and then through the ‘Star Game’. The Tree of Wyrd may be seen as a map of consciousness: both individual (of the psyche) and of those regions other than the individual where the acausal and the causal meet. The symbolism of the spheres and the pathways are the first or Initiated stage of apprehension; beyond lies the abstract apprehension of the Star Game, a complex magical chess-type game designed by Anton Long of ONA that teaches a range of Adepthood skills, chief among them, Abstraction.

Akin to many other Nexions inspired into being by the Order of Nine Angles, the Temple of THEM utilises the ONA’s Tree of Wyrd to create a magical map of Magical/Alchemical Stages/Pathways/Spheres as an authentic Western-Sinister derived device for its Sorceries.

Although a study of the Tree of Wyrd [TOW] would take us too far from our present topic – briefly: it is believed that a system of life based on Seven represented the authentic development of the human psyche and its relationship with the world – a system later disrupted by the distortion of the Septenary Tradition by other races, cultures, ideas, and the deliberate interference of the Magi to take control of the Aeons. It is enough to say, the Tree of Wyrd as revealed by the ONA, has a rich and flexible symbolism capable of representing practical facets of Magick all neatly captured in the Septenary Nonagonal helix of the Tree.

External magic is divided into two forms or types: hermetic and ceremonial. Hermetic magick is basically that involving only one or two individuals whereas ceremonial magick involves more and may be said to be ‘formal’ magick involving specific rituals or rites (usually written down and followed exactly) and an organised Temple/coven or group. In essence, Symbols, names, descriptions, tradition, etc. are only tools to be used to make otherwise invisible magic, visible, in order to fill those vessels intended to execute the magicians will with the necessary alchemy – itself a magical act. A fourth type of Magic specialised in by THEM is that of Narrative or Mythic Magic – wherein, taking elements from both hermetic and ceremonial magick, a small number of initiates involve others without their knowledge in the participation of their magical evocation using strategic manipulations and Mythos.

As the power of stories has proven to hold enormous fascination throughout human history and still does, involving others in an extended magical 'story' that offers an alternative to the reigning stories of the Magi is an extraordinarily powerful method of causing Change. Such magic attempts to tap into the current collective human psyche and introduce the fifth dimension of acausality by exploiting the already existing habits and training of those in thrall to the Matrix of Forms built and maintained by the elements known as the Magian – in such a way as to hurry along or trick the reigning perception of participants into supporting the evocation – in effect a detached and infinite ranged type of magic reminiscent of the Wiccan 'Cone of Power'. With a sustained chant or canto of forms and vibrations keyed to directly effect and alter With a sustained chant or canto of forms and vibrations keyed to directly effect and alter fundamental tenets of prevailing perception – the collective evocation influences those involved to involve others – thus getting others involved as characters in a living, moving, story moving each aspect of the stage, actors and plot like chess pieces accordingly – through the strategic employment of form.

Such magic externally takes the form of a hybrid between Fascination and Sympathetic magic wherein the most overt form and the form with which we have had the most experience and success is that of creating a Mythos. Unless highly imaginative or a creator themselves – thereby enabling the option of self-expanding one's choices – people will bounce between those choices/forms offered. It seems unnecessary to state the obvious, but that is why prior to the arrival of ONA parties interested in Satanism gravitated toward the Temple of Set or the Church of Satan.

No-one practiced the ONA – because the ONA didn't exist for them. And now, long after ONA has become a potential choice, as a Nexion of the ONA the Temple of THEM has arrived to dissect and dissolve the spellbinding power of language, form and illusion. The artists, the creative, the genius are the few that are able to raise the bar of choice –the Rest must be content to follow in Their footsteps. To date – the Temple of THEM has achieved considerable notoriety despite the deliberate absence of convenient handholds such as a recognisable cult symbol [As of mid-2011, we have since revealed one as we move to implement the second stage of our assault] a recourse to popular occult symbols and methodology, morality, reliance on accepting general notions or an openly expressed mission in the typical vein of darkness for its initiates to gravitate toward.

Yet it has risen to occupy a seat on a National Stage despite the absence of a laid-out system of ritual, magical-based symbology or table of correspondences for others to work their way through – relying on its powerful Narrative Magic alone. Instead of working with the appearances and forms that are manifest by various energies, i.e. investing meaning into particular symbols and forms – we rely directly on communing with the currents of Synchronicity, Empathy, Integrity, Solidarity – abstract words that denote these energies – but more accurately represent the core and essence which all the former and gross tools and representations of magic are built from or which all the former representations of magic (ritual, symbology, associations et al.) are built for. Such energies are notably separate in apprehension as they Are than when they are artificially yoked into consciousness via a dazzling array of arguably unnecessary forms and often cause extreme disruption when employed, as has been illustrated many times by the Temple of THEM's members.

It is not practical nor possible to discard all Forms in the early stages of an Initiates development as stripping away such notions requires long-term dedicated effort and the creation of a special substitute Matrix to prevent one going mad or causing extreme damage to one's psychic entities and make-up. Whilst forms enslave and entrap us – Nevertheless, mired in the labyrinth of forms set up to ensnare and subdue us over the Aeons – is where we all begin the Great Work. As an early way of working with and exploring various energies attributed by abstraction to the planets used to loosely equate the raw memes – the aforementioned Tree of Wyrd is a masterpiece. It also has the ability, like the pentagram, through no intention of its own, to take someone on a specific guided journey merely via its suggestive shape and the context in which it is presented.

Why/How? Such an enquiry requires asking some crucial questions: Why is it that human beings necessitate Abstracts? Why is it that Initiates begin their path by investing time, effort and faith in such concepts as the Star Game, Culling [Sacrificial Taking of Life], Aeonics [The view that Magical events unfold over vast amounts of time and can be controlled by Adepts] or for that matter, believe in Concepts in general? Why is it that ONA Initiates the world over follow and accept the guidelines given through the teachings of the ONA or that Setians strive to abide by the complex religious instructions of the Setian Priesthood given in the Onyx Tablet or that Laveyans dutifully copy and repeat the litanies, rituals and satanic points laid down in the Satanic Bible?

Moreover – how is it that words, language, symbols, reading, and visuals have become the dominant foundation, the gateway through which information is processed, interpreted, perceived, for any course of magic and even any course/way of living to such an extent that Forms have the power to incite the basest or most sublime of human reparations and representations? A symbol can take on such power that its mere presence can enrage/inspire a people so greatly that the world is set to burn (The Swastika)– or can likewise be invested with such numinous power as to enrapture them to such a state they achieve rare heights of collective brilliance co-operation and genius (the Moon Landing / Mars Mission which gave us the psyche-bending image of Earth from space.)

Likewise, laws and regulations, even the most absurd and unjust of them can be self-enforced via a steady stream of words alone through perceived authority. Yet many of us live unequivocally with no knowledge of who we are, where we come from, or where we are going either individually or as a collective – trusting in the presence of familiar forms and stories to make sense of life's enigmas and to guide us. How is it that Abstractions have taken on such validity, solidity, integrity to affect us the way they do? For this is precisely what they are and what they do. Such enquiries lead us into the fundamental apprehensions and special interests of the Temple of THEM – wherein a number of hammers are necessary to break through to the other side. Our myriad efforts represent those Hammers.

As each Nexion of the ONA, THEM included, specialises in taking its own approach that assists in some way in the Destruction of the Magian we too have our approach which is many approaches. Our various tendrils include: (1) The Black Glyph Society which hosts, archives and preserves those Dark Paths and Scripts capable of causing massive change through their implementation and highly valued as tools in our Occult War which it distributes world-wide; (2) Mvimaedivm WordPress which disseminates our writings freely to alter or at least challenge reigning perceptions and also acts as a connective gateway to other Nexions; (3) The Sinister 101 Syndicate which forum further attempts to break down and destroy various reigning concepts as well as host variants of non-dualist non-Abrahamic systems and enable the True Black Magickian to emerge from themselves (4) Our six-fold variants of Sorcery practiced by each member of THEM covering a diverse range of approaches including Chaos, Neuro-Linguistic, Earth-Bound and Narrative (5) Our support and assistance in training new Initiates, communing and colluding with other Nexions and the presentiment of a United Front against Our Enemies.

Through these [and other] approaches/tendrils we seek to disrupt the comfortable thinking and automatic programming of the human being, to incite realisations of Form and its power over us – to ultimately, REMIND you that are a unique being who has been shackled by the forms and architecture of an ancient tradition of making slaves of newcomers to Earth and that it is your every power as a free organism to experience Earth as you see fit. Through these approaches we seek to shatter the Geometry of the Matrix in an explosion of brilliant shards, setting minds free from domination by forms and bringing yet another piece of the Magian prison crashing to the ground. By Our own reckoning – the Intellect is a diamond that projects a laser. Pending on the adjustments made to the setting of the diamond, the arc and range of the laser can be narrowed or widened. A narrow laser is able to cut through the hardest substances whilst a widened laser is capable of projecting complex holograms of multi-dimensional representation. The magnificent prisms that are formed via the various lasers of a collective of Intellects – can, through careful tilting of the individual prisms – be concentrated into a laser of such intensity that it cuts through time and space, but especially time.

The Temple has viewed each of its individual works (each manuscript) as a tool to make an adjustment to existing prisms in the Matrix – adding tilt to each individual diamond or collective prism in a calculated attempt to engineer the construction of a gateway. Wherein the term gateway is descriptive, it is inaccurate, denoting a doorway of some sort – wherein the gateway we intend is actually the collapse of Reality and its forms. The premise is that the lasers in a collective diamond prism can be turned in on themselves causing a collapse of the total hologram. To do this requires that the logical functions and courses of action and reaction of each individual diamond in the collective prism be re-oriented to direct their laser either inward all at once – or toward a singular point. The concentration of the collective lasers at a singular point cancels them out and causes the collapse of the Matrix – this can be equated to a sudden mass realisation experienced by large amounts of people who then refuse to sustain a form and give it any power.

One example of this is the economic realisation of the ultimate power of the US Dollar which among other things funds (funded) the annual $650 billion-dollar military machine of the US which became the focus of the European Union to displace by creating a new currency to remove much of that dominant power. The collapse of the total hologram is the equivalent of opening a ‘Gateway’ to another world usually hidden from view by the ceaseless projection of holograms. The ceaseless projection of holograms – of collective belief – of so many minds focused on holding up the same or similar worldview, perception fixes the image of the world in place. A collapse is the equivalent of “mass psychic disruption”. This collapse can be made to occur on a cultural as well as an individual level – though it will undoubtedly take time, two decades of which THEM has already devoted to achieving and only grows more determined with each passing day. Although this theory might sound convoluted – this is a brief way to explain Our Grand Work and the purpose of dozens of our manuscripts specially tailored to ‘disrupt’ “normal” thought and action processing in an individual or group by playing on weaknesses or appealing to strengths in existing forms. Understanding/Recognising and seeing through the context of Forms is key to winning the Occult War, Music just as Crucial and the ability to show others how to collapse Forms, Absolutely Key. Both internal and external – the collapse of Form is a means to presence the Dark Ones with all that entails, Chaos, and Beyond…

NARRATIVE MAGIC or OROMANCY

Unlike the basis for External, Internal, Aeonic, Sexual magicks – the basis for Narrative magick lacks a solid foundation for explaining its method – being still in the stages of active development, experiment and enquiry by the Temple of THEM. However, some of the theory behind this approach can be divulged, if only in brief at this point in time. Narrative Magick deals with the building blocks utilised not just by the ONA but the entire Empire of the Magian and all humanity for that matter in the way of Form and explores the theory and context as to why Form is responsible for the tremendous power, influence, and domination it has over humanity via a warped tradition of perception and interpretation.

It being no secret that THEM view the presence of the Order of Nine Angles, its Septenary Way and the manuscripts that populate it as a unitary form of Grand Black Magic designed to infiltrate the collective consciousness and cause it to aid the will of Anton Long – this Introduction touches more deeply on how such forms collectively act in the service of a higher magic of human ingenuity by crafting a story or mythos of narrative magic for others to follow and champion – thereby generating fanatical devotion and increasing the number of characters involved in the mythos's narrative, nurturing others to live out that narrative via the props provided, and use such narrative to create subtle and overt changes in the Matrix. Such changes can culminate in the creation of one form of the fabled Diamond Body. "Narrative magick" or "Oromancy" as coined by the Temple, pertains to an acknowledgement, and interest, in the existence (persistence) of a story-like quality inherent in a single or multiple set of forms that is partly conscious and partly unconscious and possesses the power to affect human beings directly.

The conscious aspect of narrative magic exists in the continuum of a particular set of forms forming a suitable platform or stage upon which certain archetypal resonances can be comfortably projected by an individual or group, and a reciprocal projection received. That is not to say that an individual will necessarily be conscious that s/he is being utilised as part of a magickal story (that is not necessary), but rather that because of the power invested in forms collectively by the human race, the necessary conditions created for a being to want to invest time and energy in being a part of the 'story' being presented (narrated) can be made 'visible', not only to the individual, but to the collective. The conscious aspect works on the adage – "if you build it – THEY will come."

The unconscious aspect of narrative magick is rather more mysterious and a rational analysis can be said to be most difficult if not largely impossible due to inaccessibility to the collective unconscious psyche. However – it is a fact – that stories and mythos – play an extremely vital role in the perception and reaction of humanity. Few stories have motivated humanity more than those of creation – the Eddas, the Bhagadvita, the Koran, the Bible, for instance are strong examples of narrative magic that seek to provide direction and a moral compass, a praxis and a Weltanschauung for humanity. These and many other examples of Creation and End Time stories have survived, some for thousands of years, through the living of their Narrative by hundreds of generations of avid listeners and worshippers caught up in the power of their respective Mythos.

Even today, more than two thousand years later – the Mythos of Buddha, of Mohamed, of Jesus, lives on in the hearts and minds of billions of believers, motivated by the Word that compels them live their life for such a reason, in such a way. No one can refute the tremendous power of religion nor its little brother politics – a younger and less archaic form of narrative – but one which has demonstrated it too has tremendous power to manipulate the lives of people and to use that power to cement forms into being or smash them out of existence, time and time again. To bring us closer to home we spoke of the Mythos of the Illuminati in Oto Anorha #31 being a chance occurrence that propelled a humble gesture in the throes of sulphur in the 1700's into the annals of history as the single most powerful expression to describe the ultimate collective sinister conspiracy. The human imagination is a wondrous thing, a dangerous thing, but a wondrous thing all the same. Again, even closer to our current era we can cite the Order of Nine Angles, a British Satanic organisation that has brilliantly recreated the wave of speculation, paranoia, and wild theory reminiscent of the Illuminati – a wave that has gathered momentum for fifty years and has broken on many shores of the world.

For all their actual power, reach, wisdom, and truth, whether Religion, Politics, Secret Organisations, or a Garage Sale – without others adding to the story, without others 'reading' or being absorbed by the Mythos/Forms being unfolded – the Mythos fades into obscurity. There are countless examples of attempts to start secret societies that have failed because of a lack of the Mythos being picked up and carried away on the lips as reputation. Jung – believes that the rise to individual power is reciprocal – in that the collective must desire the individual to assume the role as an individual separate from the collective for such a relationship to work.

To encourage this relationship artificially where resistance is met usually involves propaganda and the persuasion of the people. The failure of varied temples and orders, even in my short lifetime with the occult of eighteen years, appears to be regularly due to the collective resistance of an idea that is presented out of time, that is, asynchronously with the needs of the collective psyche at that moment of collective development. The make-or-break elements of a successful formation appear to rely on such key characteristics as synchronicity, solidarity, proximity, and a message con-gruous with Time. If one is able to tap into the collective messages being given by the unconscious collective psyche – to discern the particular push being given from beneath or beyond, by deduction – one can theoretically ride that wave – provided one is in sync with it and does not attempt to subvert the natural process. This synchronicity with what THEM refers to as the Acausal Voice, does not suit many forms – for the propensity of humans seeking control via form and mythos does not usually function on altruism selflessness or a desire to presence the will of the cosmos – and the collective unconscious is its own law and its own Physis working independently of the consciousness. As dreaming shows us – the messages of the collective psyche are mostly in contradiction to the current psychic conscious state of humanity and are as hard to swallow as they are to hear.

Narrative magick involves an individual assessment insofar as it is possible to assess such a scope, of the present and emerging signs of the individual and collective psyche on a national scale – using such means as the appearance of the architecture, the disposition or attitude, level of perception, level of technology, economic, social and racial factors, political climate, and to a great extent, media. For today, it is media and the forms of technology that carry the media – (behold the information age!) – that are the equivalent of the oral storytellers of myth and magic and story and for that role they receive worship and adoration for the fire-side tales they weave. And because such stories still derive from the collective unconscious – pushing through in archetypal resonances and archetypes, dreams, visions, and forms – they form patterns in a synchronous fashion expressing a similar archetypal message in any variety of forms. This form of magick also utilises a derivative of the ancient belief in the micro-cosmos and macro-cosmos being reflections of and in the other – though not to such an extent that the two are believed to represent a mirror-image. It could also be called a type of sympathetic magic, akin to as above so below, wherein creating a certain alchemical change within the individual naturally has an effect on the outer world, with the potential for a knock-on effect and the re-effecting of the individual.

It was believed that the ONA, in challenging the Tos/Cos and other contemporary Satanic groups at the time, were setting up an alternate and Sinister mythos, deliberately and consciously – see for instance the 1970-80 “Book of Wyrd” – wherein this legendary relic was consciously devised to be a ‘teaser’ or a lure on behalf of the ONA Mythos to draw interest, intrigue and talk. This great example of a form being used in an act of narrative magick would lead to a divergent strain of Satanism that made conscious – not just for the few who traditionally/historically tried to deceive the masses with lies, omissions, half-truths, fantastic stories etc to create their deceptions – but for the masses, the possibility of creating a deliberate mythos, and the possibility that a deliberate mythos has been created out of thin air. This intriguing development would be hinted at again and again in ONA mss, but it was through the work of THEM that it was finally revealed clearly without mystification to a much wider and eventually attentive audience. While others argued over whether certain aspects of the Order were real or invention – and some concluded rightly that the validity of the Tradition was unique and lay outside of classical measures such as real-time existence – THEM went further and broke down its observations of the tremendous power the ONA had seized in its deliberate creation of a Mythos. We set about studying its forms in general and Form in particular. This was around 2003.

The experimental stages of the Temple (GBA-A) proved two things conclusively:

a) That it was entirely possible to replicate the power and prestige of the ONA via media and propaganda alone, but b) That a Mythos could not be written/weaved and sustained by conscious intention and imagination alone – there had to be other elements involved such as deliberate communion with the unconscious, alchemical work, and the participation of the magical workees within such a Mythos in a real-life way. One could not fake insight, nor did insight come in its natural and unexpected fashion of clarity without direct involvement in living a certain way. Without that insight – without that connexion to the unconscious world psyche – the forms generated were pale and hollow. A direct connexion to the collective psyche is necessary for the imbuing of forms with the numinous pull – the desire in others to want to manifest them – that so characterises the ONA's work.

However – another important aspect of Narrative magick – is to 'control the story' or to capture the idea in dramatic theatrical terms – 'direct the actors' within the play. Form plays a crucial part in this, for if one is trying to introduce the means to re-direct a current presenting itself in the here and now; it is not always enough to present a good argument for one's case. It is considered a general rule that while people are clinically unpredictable, when they communicate via various forms of media, they do try to be logical – and logic quickly draws a circle around the contents to be logicized in order to form their train of thoughts. Because of this habit – people generally restrict their discussion to the relevant topic using the content provided as cues for what is appropriate – and 'stick to the subject' – as it were.

However, Time, and the status quo of all that it encompasses, is often at odds with new ideas, and new ideas often go by the wayside due to lack of interest and especially – a lack of involvement by others in those ideas (relating back to the necessity of others to be captured by form for it to live). It is especially true that it merely takes one or two other people to express interest in something and others will naturally follow – first out of curiosity – and secondly out of habit. However, someone taking an interest does not guarantee the lifespan of an idea – a forms life requires constant nurturing until it reaches a critical mass. It can also be a matter of frustration that the 'right questions' are not being asked that would lead to a certain collective viewpoint being achieved by the group – this is most often the case when someone is trying to present something ahead of, or, out of time, with the current era and its particular set(s) of noetic characteristics. In such cases, an individual conducting narrative magick can provide that interest themselves by creating a second or even multiple anonymous personas to engage in discussing the topic, thus raising two walls or forms at the opposite ends of the idea, trapping or restricting the topic and the circle around which others will draw their logic in their attempt to join in -to the relevant narrative. With the creation of enough 'closed circuits' – or people manipulated into talking about a form – it can reach critical mass – by which is meant the point where less and less of one's own narrative magick is required to keep the form afloat and functional – but the form continues to perpetually replicate.

The new form – presents an alternate choice, a divergence from the norm – at least for a while where most forms are concerned – but if taking its cues from the collective unconscious – it is possible that a form could arise that has all the power and duration of a thermodynamic explosion. And by this is meant the possibility for great and wondrous leaps in perception, understanding and wisdom on a collective level – but also the terrifying raw power of the unconscious to be mishandled, misunderstood, and incinerate those attempting to usurp it.

The Temple of THEM cannot with any sagacity predict the outcome of its main and many side-experiments with the collective psyche on the collective mass – this is unmapped and dangerous territory, especially since with our arising, such an approach to magick may become 'popular' with others trying to emulate us in some fashion or another (as humans are wont to do) – and a large number of people performing similar experimentation has the potential to wreak terrific collective and individual psychic harm. [–"Whose Word is Chaos"-] (This is another reason why the Temple has only a thirty-year charter.)

As stated, – the known aim of the Temple of THEM is to give Australia a significant Sinister History. It is moot to argue for the power of the word or of one individual to affect a nation. I could cite a hundred examples throughout history of men and women who have made a significant difference to the world through lone action or inaction (fate is fickle!). But I choose to cite Veronica Guerin, the famous Irish reporter who was shot to death on the Naas road in Dublin for her attempts to expose those saturating Ireland with heroin in the 1990's. Veronica was the only woman (read person) brave enough to stand up to the dealers, even after she was savagely beaten, shot and threatened – she continued to doggedly pursue leads and publish inflammatory articles in the paper in her quest to save the kids of Ireland from the heroin epidemic – all the while knowing in her heart it was only a matter of time before she was to suffer the consequences of her exposes. Her writing and her death galvanised the entire country to oust the dealers from Ireland and form new anti-drug legislation. Keep in mind that it was only in 1996 that the first Irishman went into a witness protection program – prior to that, i.e., dating from the very birth of Ireland; you were on your own. The Irish are a hard people.

Lastly, the conditions for narrative magic appear to require a period of implementation, execution, and narration spanning more than a decade, and at least thirty years (why this number is relevant will be discussed at a later time) – placing the category somewhere between the level of discipline required of an Internal Adept and the Aeonic Magic of a Magus. This is not unnatural – The Sinister is not, for any of THEM, a choice, but a calling. What we are attempting to do is beyond the scope and patience of more than half of the dilettantes we have met that expressed any interest in Satanism – and like Myatt we are loyal to an Acausal Voice and an Aeonic Vision.

Through the infectious telling of a story, are others inspired to perform External, Internal and Aeonic magic. Through the contagion of archetypes are others inspired to give their lives for a cause, wage wars in the name of justice or war, kill to honour and glorify a god, observe customs thousands of years old. Through the power of mythos – does the world run its course – a course affected directly by the choice of Mythos available…

INTRUSION, SYNCHRONICITY, SORCERY AND DARK LANTERNS

Advanced Notes on Intrusion and the Secrets of the Temple of THEM.

⊕

For Amy B

Carl Jung was fascinated with the divinatory concept of the Chinese I-Ching and the unerring ability for random coin throws or yarrow stalks to select an appropriate hexagram from among the 64, every time. Wherein, appropriate meant in some way extremely pertinent and meaningful in it among all other options being selected, and in a superior way suitable to the situation at hand. Jung was intrinsically seizing upon the feeling that lies between the lightning rod of possibility through a divinatory tool to isolate one future from the infinite, and the numinous charge of revealing the unknown through an arcane power.

Divination tools are not invested with power by the user, they are already deemed to have it as a conduit to another realm, an acausal realm of spirits, gods, supernatural forces, destiny, fate or energy; or the often more magically jaded but no less mystical concept of the subconscious. The Tarot Reader reads the cards, like a priest determines the word of God; neither are the power, just a channel through which the power flows.

Consider an event that Has already taken place for you and is in the past. Now observe what you feel when I ask you to divinate for it – using Tarot, I-Ching, Runes etc. It's already happened you say, I can't do a divination for what has already happened, I already know what happened. Do it any way. Feel. Because you'll find that none of the tool's work. And because, like many first-hand experiences I ask my readers to engage in, there is an illustrative point to it further below. The numinous energy that charges them is missing. You can feel it's absence. You know that regardless of what you turn over, or cast, it has no power. That is, no numinosity. There is no electrical tingle in the air because there is no unknown, nothing to divine, reveal, expose, or derive power from as a human conduit of the energy that makes us to value the tools in the first place.

That's no surprise you say, these tools are for predicting the future. Yes, they are, but let's ask, why is there no power in using them for something that has already happened – Why do they lie dead, inert?

It is because we do not and cannot know the outcome of an event that has yet to pass. This seems obvious – but why does it seem obvious? Because of a fixed belief in the direction of time. Somehow, while the present cannot be used to tell the past, which has Been – the present can be used to tell the future, which has not been. Curiously, evidence that has existed or exists is less useful than potential that does not.

Yet, Synchronicity, works in reverse.

Jung, discussing synchronicity, rightly, determined that the success of correctly identifying objective causative links occurring in the past that contributed to the creation of the present was a dubious prospect. Firstly, the events are distorted by our proprietary filter (Unique Perception) wherein any hope of determining the authentic causative coincidence of events relies on:

a) our selective conscious apprehension or what we noticed as significant that forms the catalogue from where we select

b) our penchant to see what we want to see and force out what we don't (The 23 Syndrome), and

c) an expectation of linear time as an existing force or ether in which events take place and a stream by which they are in some way connected to one another.

It is only when Synchronicity illuminates us with a bright flash that we feel compelled to hunt for clues we failed to recognise prior. And we often do so because synchronicity is often such an unlikely, even impossible happenstance that we have trouble believing it could have happened without a series of coinciding events contributing to its arrival, however strange.

In searching for the time-space lines that we assume had to have happened to bring about a synchronous event we scan the dark, trying to identify the mysterious chain of dark lanterns; where we recognise with a flash, that moments that seemed innocuous in isolation, when seen in tandem with others, illuminate in a ripple, lighting up the darkness from the past to the present like a winding snake. Via these eureka moments, upon retrospective searching we believe we can see the true or alternate significance of past events as critical elements leading up to a given moment. It is as if, or rather, it is, there is a pattern; a path of way markers supplied at critical junctures as experience, that while meaningful, meaningless, or respectively both, on their own are so discrete in design there could in no way be a prediction from them forward. That is, there is no pattern at the time, partly because events and experiences come one at a time in the moment and have a meaning of their own, and without being able to see a sequence of them in the rear view of retrospective, impossible for us to determine that they could lead to the synchronistic future outcome from whence we look back. Dark, over time and space, these Lanterns can span from the beginning of our life to its end, and all points in between. They manifest in chronological order as often as they do, out of order – wherein it is our unique filter that selects them as responsible as the specific causative agents that conspired to bring some later event to fruition. What is curious about Dark Lanterns is their innocuous darkness. Until they light up, we do not know they had meaning. Yet every moment, may be one. Even, as all of this process is at the mercy of memory.

It suggests, a series of events that had to happen first, for a later outcome to occur. For instance, it was only through building the Temple of THEM in 2006, that the ASOV was formed in 2014, with an appreciation for synchronicity due to the founder reading Jung in early 2000, wherein a shooting star low, large and bright enough to light up the ground during a talk on the stars at one of its meets in 2015 on a dormant volcano summit chosen for its proximity to those involved, astounded all present at the odds of such a thing occurring. If none of those previous things had happened, the ASOV would not have formed, a star talk would not have been required on that mountain, and we would not have been there to see the starlight. Extraordinary odds played out over the course of the ASOV and the Temple; the Temple being strong advocates of the power and existence of Synchronicity as a current of THEM. Indeed, One's of THEM believe themselves to be a natural envoy of the acausal voice; an entity created to serve a specific will toward evolution in a specific way; guided by chance and signs that they are on the right path. Or signs to warn them when they have strayed from it. It is believed following this path, gives extraordinary power to the life of those Undividuals and a rich tapestry of connected, often seemingly impossible events, will unfold from their allegiance.

For further instance, in meeting one of the adherents (A) they mentioned a first name to me (B). A name I immediately recognised and guessed at the last name of which turned out to be correct. It came out that (B) had been sold a book by (A) just a week earlier, and I had just met (B) without anyone knowing anyone else, and of all the possible people in Victoria that I could have been in contact with (and was) these two strangers had been in contact. In just another incident, arriving to pick up one of the members, we just so happened to be following the exact bus at the exact time they were on it and pulled up behind the bus much to their surprise, and ours. Thousands, of such extraordinary synchronistic events have happened to me in my lifetime, possibly tens of thousands. My life is characterised by them. And in most cases, such portents have been considered good fortune, the results of intentional magic, or the curious machinations of the gods.

Did it 'just so happen'? Co-incidence, or coincidence often doesn't get the gravitas it deserves. It's said that coincidence is chance, chance is random, and therefore probability – and there are all sorts of methods for determining the probability of these sorts of odd connections happening. I dismiss them all and give each event a 50/50 chance. It either happens or it doesn't – at least, it's that binary on our discernible plane. Traditional Synchronicity concerns itself with not whether it happens but how. But it's not necessary to know 'how', in order to invite, increase, and incorporate synchronicity.

THE POWER OF SORCERY DOES NOT LIE WITH OBJECTIVE REALITY

The rational part of perception is of little use in Sorcery. What matters is not to try to bend objective reality through objective reality; but to employ subjective reality to bend objective reality. The order is important, so the results are indistinguishable from counter-factual interference, i.e., wondering what would have happened if I had Not performed this act? Would the magic (change) have occurred?

If we are guided by destiny, or a sense of greater purpose, or a feeling that we are being attended by something – or perhaps living a karmic cycle, or reincarnation, or a mission, or a feeling that our life is meant to mean something; we are more likely to try to connect the past to the present; to help us understand why we feel what we feel, what shaped us, how, where, when, why. Moments of realisation, where connections are made that chain together and act as a conduit for a lightning bolt to hit us with aha moments. But only when we look back, can we see those connections and find a sporadic history of dark lanterns now glowing brightly in a joined string stretching from the distant past to our immediate moment of being. Only then, can see we them through ‘logical’ sifting of the likely culprits of cause and effect. Yet, if All moments are potential dark lanterns, and they are, – then all moments are cascading toward the present from our past, and all are responsible for Synchronicity – not just those we selectively designate. And not as dark lanterns, but a field, an unbroken chamber of force.

If there are signs, such as synchronicity, and they point Toward arrangements in the past, then it implies a path where the the past controls the present, where signs suggest a path of which we are always at the end, forever on the edge of the outcome of previous steps. A path with signs that lead from and then toward a way, into shining synchronous events we are too small and too close to our life to see unfolding. This suggests there to be a path (more accurately, a circuit), and that synchronicity is an integral part of it – therefore suggesting a lack of synchronicity indicative of something wrong, or late, of having no awareness of such lanterns that light the way with their darkness.

The arms of the Thrasz indicate discrete points in time, perpendicular and parallel to awareness; a whirling fury of our dark lanterns that are consummate in increasing consciousness of forces that lead to forms (that lead to forces, that lead to forms, that lead to forces etc…)

This insight, and practice is critical in manifesting THEM in our plane. The WESTERN ideas we have of time, divination, synchronicity and their interaction are flawed – but like that clumsy artifice ‘mathematics’ we stumble along with them pretending not to notice they limp when they walk.

How is it that Tarot, I-Ching, Runes etc. cannot divine the past, are also not expected to, and are used to predict the future; but Synchronicity, requires divining the past, in order to justify the present? Especially, when, Synchronicity is how Tarot, I-Ching, Runes etc. work?

Now that I have written this manuscript, where to me is it in time vs. where it is to you? Is it in my past, present or future? And if it is any of those to me, where is it for me, to you? Am I and my text with our own perception of time, dragged from my timeline into yours? Does your timeline force mine to abandon its relativity for yours to drag the All into your present? Have I been here in my present, which is now Past, waiting for you in your Future to arrive, and which is now your Present? How can my Past simultaneously be your Future? And if you read this paragraph again, what then? Is it waiting for you to re-read it in the Future which you perceive as your Present, and is reading it again now situated in the Past or Future? Or is it always the Present? If, that is so, time is not linear, it is relative. And it is so. If you are reading this, in my Present (Your Past), I intended Your Future (Your Present). If Time is linear, how can my Present in the Past, be Your Future in the Present? Chart it. But enough, while logic can be utilised in magic, logic is not magic and to play with it is just the yawning of the door.

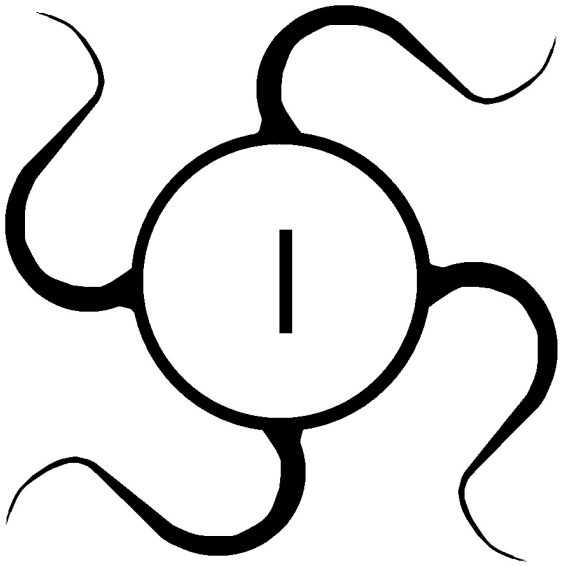
Above: Illustration of a Chinese dissection proof of the Gōugǔ Rule (Pythagorean Theorem) from the Zhoubi suanjing (Arithmetical Classic of the Gnomon and the Circular Paths of Heaven), a book on astronomy and mathematics dated to approximately 100 BCE. This image is from a copy printed in 1603. (Source: Mathematical Treasures – Zhoubi suanjing, MAA Convergence); China: Page from a 16th century Ming dynasty edition of the 'Jiuzhang suanshu' (Nine Chapters on the Mathematical Arts)
Our symbol, the Thrasz, is eldritch –



Dated to 100 BCE, we see the Chinese instinctively utilise particular, symbolic forms to solve mathematical problems. Therein is exhibited an instinct honed on parallelism to nature's chthonic core; for mathematics is mere magic. Moreover, what greater problem is there to solve if not Man's existential dilemma of separation from the Gods, and in its rawest form the Chinese etched the gate. Note the void or gate formed by the convergence of angles in the rightmost fig, and the Centrifugal Spin in the leftmost fig. For the Thrasz: [Relativity of Space-Time adds the curve in the arms, while Chaos/Quantum imparts the outward-curving tips of the tendrils denoting 'ahu-man' affairs].

"So, all these symbolic references to the meeting of those two worlds seem to show that the world of time and the world of acausal orderedness outside time, are two incompatible systems that cannot be put together but are complementary. They are, that is, more than complementary they are incompatible and we cannot imagine how they are linked to each other, which is probably also the reason why we cannot establish any law of synchronicity, for then the wheels would have to be coordinated in a certain way. The only place where the two systems link is at the hole in the centre, which means that they link in a nowhere, or in a hole. This mysterious hole between the two worlds is in a one-sided way also represented in the Chinese incense clock" – Franz 1980, p.56

"Time therefore has a hole where man interferes, where man steps into the picture". – Franz 1980, p57

"The hole, which is the experience of the Self, breaks that cage or prison of our conscious reality apart and by that frees us from the grip of its one-sided concepts" – Franz 1980 (p.57).

The Cosmic Wheel of the O9A, the Swastika, the Sun-Wheel, the Spiral; each contribute to a subliminal approximate of the Forces of THEM that has emerged over the aeons. In the global archetype of such designs as the ancient Sun Cross/Wheel we can see attempts to/that recognise a void created by convergence of the angles, and too dissections of time, space, form, force and the order of the universe. Sometimes shaped into a quaternity, other times failing to represent the void at all. It is often Yin without Yang, the Masculine without Feminine, an aborted cosmic hieros gamos.

It is the Swastika alone that implies Spin and centrifugal motion, of time and cycle and a Spenglerian observation of aeons characterised by a symbol, an energy and embodied by the collective unconscious in the body of an archetypal mortal-King made to serve the aeons emanation by man. It is integral however, to note that this has nothing to do with Aryan heritage or cleverness from National Socialist symbol-wielders, for the Swastika is not 'Western' but 'Eastern' – and that is why it expresses time as cyclical (Franz 1980, p.50). But it too is a dormant manifestation with no self-consciousness; such that it was to hypnotise a nation of Selves and careen out of control evoking forces that spewed forms beyond its ability to reign in and its vortex ushered in a great war that changed the world forever. Such is Black Magic on a Grand Scale, then as it is today embodied by Symbol and Intent. The elegant Cosmic Wheel of the O9A with its scything arms and double swastika represented a deliberate and conscious attempt to reiterate and resurrect National Socialism among other avenues through Temple 88, with limited success. It features time – but it too lacks self-awareness.

It is the Temple of THEM who have opened the Dragon's Eye; we have made the symbol conscious; imbued it with the Luciferic ice rune 'ISA' and the esoteric stillness of self-awareness, the madness genius of the subconscious, and the predatory watchfulness of the Thrasz; pulling forth the Archetype of the Undividual – First Man or Anthropos (Franz 1980, p.37). We were gifted it – but its origin is a relic most primal, see the Suan-shu (Franz 1980, p.30) or compare the Shih to the Threshold Symbol of THEM. Or to the Chinese use of Double-Mandala's with a binary of wheels with complementary fixed and flowing components (p.51).

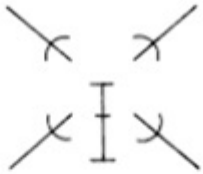


Figure 4.
Suan-shu to calculate,
to divine.

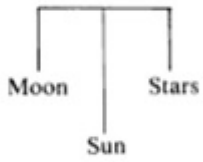

Figure 5.
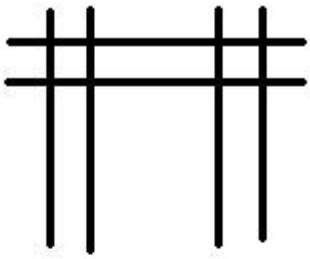
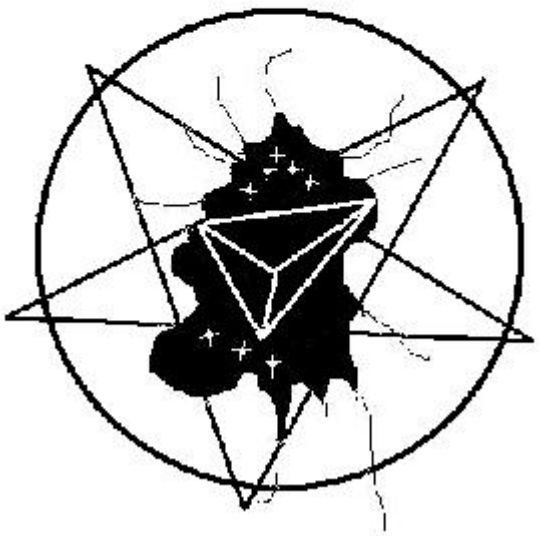
Shih to exhibit,
make manifest, proclaim.





The Threshold Symbol and the Acausal Pentagram

Franz (1980, p.31) "Shih in the original meaning shows the heavens sun, moon, and stars, those three lines the idea being that it is the governing influence of heaven upon earthly things." "This radical Shih is now generally translated by "to exhibit, to manifest, to make known, or to proclaim" to make manifest, so to speak, the hidden will of the divinity, of Tao". [Or Magic upon Reality / To Presence THEM]. From the Greek's Cyclops, Tolkien's Sauron, The Illuminati's Eye of Providence, the technology of the Camera, or monolithic State and Global Surveillance – the symbol has emerged in different permutations as a powerful, potent expression of All-Knowing, seeking to See-All or an implied capacity to See-All. The same may be said of the Mandala, the representation of All-Gates. Yet it is specific gates that interest THEM. The observant will note the Illuminati symbol is not in fact a solid pyramid but exhibits a truncated ceiling where form ends and the Divine begins – separated eternally by uninhabitable space and often marked with the Archaeo-Judeo-Christian incantation 'e pluribus unum' – 'Out of the Many, One'. Viewed top-down one can see the coalescence of forms, force, time-space as the truncated pyramids vertices are absorbed and limited, and when continued onward and upward forms a perfect 'X' where any void is pinched out of existence by the apex, by monolithic monotheism – paralysed as much as the sleeping consciousness of the Sun Wheels above. Wherefore, for the Illuminati, however, it is a deliberate magical act. For, Who, controls Form? Choice? And What is Manifest, >Here<? Who, Closes, The Gate? "They", The Illumined, Do. What is sublime about the Illumined? They Shine Not. Wherein, it is not difficult to see the impetus for THEM's subsequent magical challenge – 'Out of One, Many'.

We mustn't forget magic is to bend reality, implying rational thought is a hindrance and can easily be cast to the wind, since that is what it is composed of – and nothing else. Our texts have continually focused on the glaring absurdity and hypocrisies of language, ideology, forms, numbers, mathematics, time, space and other such human constructs, and carefully deconstructed these gleaming edifices that dominate modern life and modern comprehension presented as meaningful tools and institutions, that insist upon themselves with the pretence of sovereignty. Not, for your benefit these shapes, sorcerer. Put there by others for their benefit, were they.

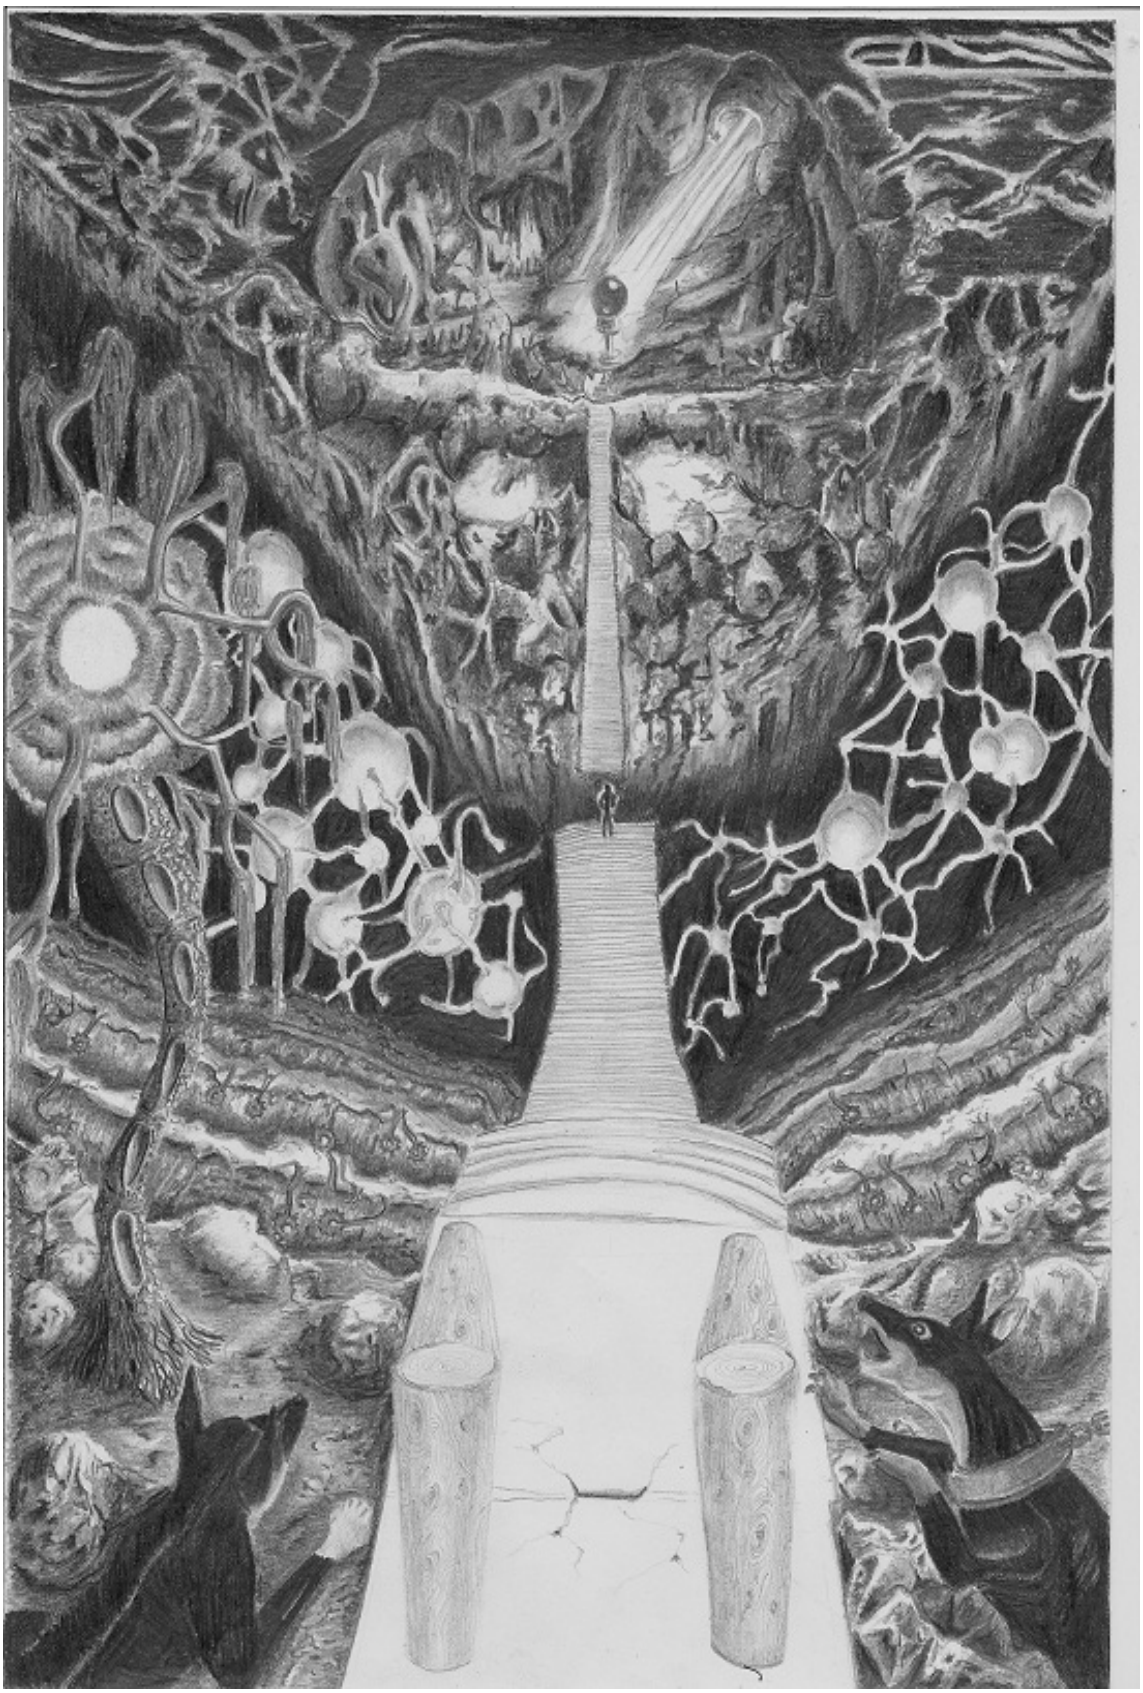
Franz (1980, p.15) considered these prisons to be leveraged by possession of archetypal bondage. That, which THEM call 'Thrall' – which thrall is particular to its time, indeed, shapes each time in its image. 'Crystallises' the era or the aeon with particular energies communicated through over-arching ideas considered immovable with a kind of zealous militant glee and rage, only to later be dissolved as is the way of all synthesis, ever arising out of thesis and antithesis like the yin and the yang. Rightly so, does Franz intimate the extraordinary power of Form to dominate the souls of human living. As the I-Ching says, forces that tend toward extremes will transform into their opposites.

Likewise, madness and sanity are Tao, rationalism and irrationalism are Tao, communication and silence are Tao. There is a time and a place for both as there is a time and place for neither; and the sorcerer does their best to recognise these times through either models of intellect or mediations of spirit. So wild these forces, confusing man into thinking he owns, even gestated them and yet they continue to schism from his yolk and split off into uncontrollable chaos with every position – such an arrogant creature, befuddled by his own machinations and flailing grasp at enormity which he ever seeks to condense into a manageable rational paradigm. And yet, he is stripped to the bone year after year by entropy. So much for his rationality.

Relax that Western over-type that intellectually ever-seeks for an original point from which to proceed, be as Tao, move moments past such striving, accept the universe as it is, and proceed. You would do better to play with the utter nonsense of 'statistics' than attempt magic with a logically structured mind.

Franz (1980, p.20) astutely recognises that a key strategy of magic is to fracture the Known. We may add, it serves to loosen what binds and destroys the mirror plane upon which the Ego reflects itself and reciprocally strengthens its Weltanschauung to exclusion which obfuscates magic. Via the randomness of broken shards of reality in disarray, the sorcerer enters a new plane, peering at the gleaming angles beneath, where pattern-less chaos is then reassembled by subconscious projection of the Self.

A deeply reconstructive exercise that transports one to a numinous creative well-spring at the Source. Quizzically enough, one leaves the R'yleh-style madness of temporality crafted into hard vertices from Black Clay by other magicians and great powers, which seems so self-evident and eternal, and returns to the bridge into cold darkness and purest sanity from whence we came. The sorcerer sees the division in all "unity's" as THEM – and dwells Between Chaos and Order, betwixt the "Spaces"; ever the magical Maybe from the logical chasm of Yes or No (Franz 1980, p.22-23). How to break the vampiric shells lain over reality but bone by bone, text by text, word by word, idea by idea, year by year… WE, did not choose the number of legions or the battleground, but having identified the Dragons faced, we paradoxically built the magical Temple of THEM to Unmake theirs.



"In this way, by making use of his psychic background, man could in effect reverse "irreversible" processes in the physical world" – Franz 1980, p.55

THE FORBIDDEN YIN-YANG

The Sorcerer plays with >Reality< itself, and Constructs, however pretty, enticing, explanatory, paraded, trusted, ubiquitous – are <not> Reality.
[The Sorceress always admonished me whenever I mentioned God or any kind of acceptance of unity with the Cosmos; for her, she saw it as a betrayal of the Sinister; whose aim was to escape devourment by the Cosmic Spider and our spun Fate through black magickal mastery- not least by a rejection of God and divine unity.].

The Way of Satanism is hedonism and enshrinement of the Ego, it is the Yin.

The Way of THEM is synchronicity and rediscovery of the Self, it is the Yang.

The archetype of the Black Magician is embodied in a Promethean arrogance daring to steal fire from, and believe themselves equal to, the Gods. Moreover, to become the only God. Believing themselves Master of the forces and forms of the world they attempt to coerce reality with sound or timed inputs, by sympathetic intention or by taking a holistic approach to situations that arise to reduce/increase probabilities in their favour. Verily, the black magician embodies the Ego.

In accordance with their material will, they manipulate form to extract any advantage to achieve specific aims and outcomes that feed their personal desires. When successful, the reciprocal effect of having influenced reality, fuels their belief in the power and potency of their material will; that is, in their magic.

It is called Self-delusion, because it is not the Self that operates here – but the Ego. An equally powerful pyschanism that is often being asked to leave by mysticism, and many religions, faiths and paths strongly reject its presence or existence, seeking the practitioner to eradicate it in order to free themselves from its tyranny and embrace the Self. Through such dissolving of the material consciousness, collapses the tension of the human consciousness with the forces and forms of the world plane – and a rising synchrony with natural flow, organic processes, Tao. Verily, the sage embodies the Self.

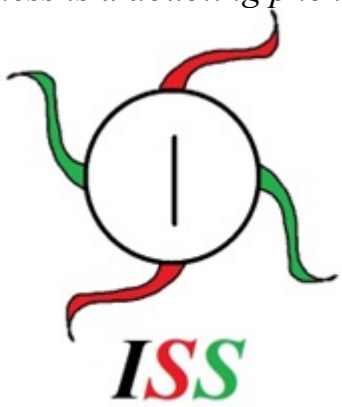
"We always use a double marker at the threshold; it is a symbolic urge suggesting that the threshold of consciousness is a doubling phenomenon", – Franz 1980, p.55



THEM offer a third way. To keep the Ego and to cultivate the Self. It is not diametrically opposed to do both – though the following of one way over the other, either into Ego or Self is pronounced and leads to different realities, it is not possible to lose oneself completely in either. The practical function of the demands of societal etiquette, conversation, small-talk, housework, employment, taxes, food shopping and every other activity necessary for survival inhibits the dreamy idyll of drifting in Tao in perfect union with the universe. Such can be done on entheogens, deep and meaningful conversations, in the isolation of nature, in a spiritualist commune or retreat (or cult), during meditation, yoga, exercise, contemplation – but that beauty is often marred and interrupted by the harsh, ugly, artificial constructs of human intrusion. On countless occasions I have observed this, particularly in hippie culture who are an affected community with a surface level of patience, enduring calm, Zen immovability that breaks its serenity with frequency to be decidedly human, yelling, screaming, being downright nasty and in many other ways sabotaging the image they present as touchless. It can be understood then, why it is necessary to turn ones back on the world (or why it is done by so many hermits and sages) to eradicate the need to engage in human affairs as a human being and escape the artificial constructs that bind one to engagement with the howling tempest of Egoic madness that results in any interaction with beings unaware of their Self – or why vows of silence are taken to silence the same. Why monasteries exist where the diabolic din of human beings thirsting for other's energy to sate their own insufficiencies and stuff in the holes of their soulistic deficits in a never-ending drama of low being, can be shut out.

The Ego and the Self. In the first, the world is a material plane, a pilgrimage for the body. In the second, the world is a spiritual plane, a temple for the soul. In the former one seeks to identify one's being as master Of; in the latter, as mastered By. One is characterised by wilful determinism, the other by cosmic acceptance. One involves individual machination, the other, individual resignation. Flowing against forms and in time or flowing with forms beyond time.

I have observed in myself and others the stages of dangerous nihilism that occurs when the Self is presented; ideas harboured that nothing matters or any agency of the being is robbed through the destined entwine of fate; often leading to destructive tendencies because there is a sense that individual power has been wrested from their hands and lives and actions are meaningless. But it is an immature stage of the insight.

Ennui, or existential despair are common creatures encountered on the occult path for the One constantly breaks the Other's toys; where embracing the Ego shutters the Self, and being one with all de-voices the Ego. Both of which cause a cry of pain – for they both want to live, not in a Temple of I built for one, but a Temple of THEM built for the many. Like the Yin-Yang, the Ego and the Self cannot destroy one another, and are meant to dwell in harmony. But artificial pressures to conform to a unity only complicate matters, and rejecting the existence of one, only make the obverse stronger. The man of ego is possessed by fervent dreams and nightmares from the subconscious, the man of self is seized from the path of individual destiny and subsumed into trance, fighting off temptations he comes to believe are bad. How we may ask, can we have a world built on raising a complementary binary of Ways embodied in the Tao so distinctly across vast tracts of space and time through thousands of cultures through aeons – but treat them now as enemies of one another, somehow completely ignoring the lesson of Tao? Of Yin-Yang? The enfoldment of one force into the other, ever-transformative, ever-changing?

It has been remarked in previous works that the necessity of an enemy or Other is critical to the human being, who uses it as a springboard or tension to propel themselves to the other side of the existential river. In rejecting or excluding, comes embracing or including, the delineating shape of the Ego and its placed boundaries as a fortress of Insynsian, of a constructed paradise secured from perceived hell, as illustrated in Form 101. For there is pleasure in hate – there is pleasure in prejudice, ignorance, cruelty, degradation, destruction of the Other; a gratifying security that we have kept Satan from the Gates. It makes us feel powerful, it reinforces our heavens, it justifies our paradise. This pleasure principle applies to the Tao too – the sweetness of violent resistance, the satisfying imprisonment of the enemy of our peace, the psychic persecution of another part of ourselves to exalt another is just one of the many mad games we play.

But lest I not be misunderstood, there is Power in these games. These games are Power. They may miss their context as seen from the viewpoint of the mountain, but they have world-ripples and causal effects as they are played. Truth, reality, unity – such are the deluded grasping at Insynsian, a new singular monotheistic making of God, of the One power, law, form, force to 'rule them all'. While they interact with the matrix, it doesn't matter whether they are objectively real – they constitute sorcery, the Great Play. They are only games because in some way, we internalise one reality as operant at the expense of another, ironically pursued in the delusion we are engaging in binary immersement of the All.

Therein, no – No. Do not lay at the feet of Ego, undeserved blame. It was and is gifted to you as Yin, and your Self gifted and given unto you as Yang. And together they form the eternal pattern of all things; that Ego and Self too conform; of the Tao. And too, further, the accepted existence and operant power of Ego and Self is itself contrasted by the void absence of both; in a world without convenient psychic structure as boxes in which to gather your things. For the Ego and the Self are as fictitious as all human constructs, a temporal mirage of the Black Clay whose insistent presence obstructs your view and hides deeper secrets to existence, revealed when they are absent from your equations and perception.

The typical tempest of wavering between Ego and Self is an impossibly violent motion, see-sawing back and forth as the Consciousness and Unconsciousness wrestle for control of the Psychanism (See, Radia Sol/Radia Star) – particularly so when a human takes it upon themselves to dreamily fantasise eradicating one to worship the other. But to tame the tsunami's and calm the satanic swell is to vibrate intensely on the Bridge Back – to thrum with tremendous power and equilibrium and gyroscope in the centre to take from both sources the utmost. This balancing act in turn creates the Maelstrom.

The MAELSTROM

It was thought that certain words, rites, music, times, acts, could manifest THEM with greater frequency; that fortuitous or precision alignment of magical ephemera was the critical component to make them Intrude. But THEM … are elusive. After many years of experimentation this appears not to be the case. Or, rather, it can, but only when there are several other elements- wherein the Tools are superfluous anyway, as it is Intent that drives the magic of the Temple of THEM.

One of THEM is a way of living, perceiving, being; who is humble in the face of forms and forces, respectful and worshipful of nature including a deep connection as nature, possesses a life-centred perspective not a human-centred one, has had reality shattered logically, entheogenically, and permanently through a supernatural event, has a sorcerers awareness of the Pattern that signs come forth and is actively watching for such portents, a view of time and space with vantages that encompass the timescale of cosmic plans, and hears, listens to and presences the Acausal Voice. Such a sorcerer is a raw envoy of nature and a closely aligned conduit for THEM. And with them, they bring a maelstrom.

And here is the curious and majestic thing – There is a protective quality surrounding THEM. Synchronicity, self-honesty, and humility – cannot be fabricated or pretended – they arise and arrive of their own volition less through cultivation and more through hubris; and it is such powerful gates that keep the many from being able to commune with THEM. Their most visible sign: Synchronicity cannot be forced – we cannot deliberately engage in a series of events to make a later unlikely coincidence; in fact, it is the element of surprise at the outcome that characterises coincidence. It is that eerie convergence of chance and timing that strikes us as significant enough to be extraordinary because we did not expect it nor see it coming.

There are, however, elements that increase Synchronicity. It is notable that merely observing Synchronicity increases it.

Synchronicity is its own master – but it occurs within what can be synchronised. Therein, to surround oneself with a paradigm of bells invites what can be synchronous to chime. Therein, is another secret of the sorcerer.

For when we play with the Abyss, we know not what might occur – but that it might, and when it does, it is likely to set off a chain reaction (Franz 1980, p.37) – for when there is an Occurrence it affects reality like the strands of a spiderweb gently strummed. Synchronicity is the Key.

As Franz (1980, p.13) remarks, 'the secret to probability is repetition' – and there is naught with more repetition than Synchronicity.

SELF-HONESTY

We have spoken at length of the chthonic, raw, umbral presence of nature's will, of the acausal voice, of the primal evolutionary drive by nature to bring forth One's of THEM across Time and Space to evolve Hirself beyond hirself. For one who is Self-Honest can only emanate the Self – and emanating the Self can only come from connection to the Cosmos and the Abyss of which the Self is an incarnation (Franz 1980, p.47).

Further, self-honesty being the primary and emperor of occult abilities – it plays a critical role. Self-honesty is an ease with oneself and acceptance of one's place across time and space, past, present and future; that is achieved through humility. Humility means the attainment of a life-centred perspective; Tao, or a timeless perspective of appreciation of existence and forms and forces that churn it, all of which can only be obtained over time and none of which can be fabricated. When aligned with those forces and forms, as Is, in a suspended state of non-enquiry not mentally searching for an origin or letting the Dexter categorise and order reality in chronological order to find the 'source' – there is flow and flowing with change. See then, the Aeurekanequeo's mobius-energy of the Simultaneous Pulse and Mirror Zone to see a black magical variant of the Yin-Yang.

Synchronicity is at its most excitable state on such a plane with such a person, for when you smash reality and the binds of form you invite possession of a particular state, an archetype we might call a chthonic Avatar or – One of THEM (Franz 1980, p.28-29). The latency of an archetype can when it emerges, transform the real world.

The magical power of Self-Honesty is a critical operant force because it distils the conduit – sterilising the vessel which is not clouded by distortions or self-delusion, nor hiding oneself and dulling the mirror, but burning brightly without fear.

There can be no fear when working with THEM, not of yourself nor of THEM; for they are US and we are THEM. As the founder of THEM I have never felt afraid of these forces or entities, but awe and reverence. On the contrary, I have devoted my life to building THEM and 'Them' a Temple and slowly uncovering the secrets that will allow them to inhabit it or for certain types of THEM to be presenced in powerful forms. But those around me, particularly the sceptical (who have more to lose) have often been profoundly affected or disturbed when THEM make their presence known.

An Intrusion is a corporeal accumulation of these raw energies that is intense enough to bend reality and emerge the impossible that only high-level synchronicity can achieve, chance beyond all chance, opening a gate and constituting a Visitation. An intrusion which results in cold-blooded terror and a life-changing event that makes it impossible to turn off second-sight.

LOVE

Love, is an even more powerful attractant as it harmonises and increases coincidence, even psychic communication and non-verbal acknowledgement among synced partners who act in harmony, knowing without knowing; and each feeding the other's maelstrom until space crescendos to an Intrusion.

The conduit between two is even stronger, strengthened by trust and transparency, which in turn also strengthens the conduit with THEM. The numinous erotic charge that comes from two highly-polished Self mirrors reflecting off each other without distortion is discussed in Radia Sol and elsewhere; this charge occurs as a powerful ambrosia of heightened energy exchange without Ego contagion, it is pure communication and there is often a feeling of indebtedness to one who lets another feel un-judged or free to be, or a trance state that occurs in the erotic charge of building something numinous together, at lower levels at least where only one participant is usually conscious of it. A similar high is to be found for instance, with the euphoria of drugs, dopamine bursts, adrenaline from exercise, or shared traumatic experiences in activities where a new crescendo of experience is attained; and where the cause of the high is transferred/attributed to the agency of another person.

Just as words can affect across time and space, so can presence – and in accordance with the Dyph, or differential of the Theph (see Liber Bathyal) those experiencing strong Synchronicity immerse others in it by sharing their presence, which pulls them into the current (said, Maelstrom) as a potential Dark Lantern – especially in prolonged proximity or contact; physically distant or local. Wherein a sorcerer/ess may see THEM in isolation; together with another sorcerer/ess the combination of requisite energies is accelerated as a purer more potent expression, both rare and necessary to build a powerful gate. The reciprocal nature of energy exchange in relationships, magickal partnerships or ritual work by those possessing the necessary attributes, aids Synchronicity to reach extraordinary levels with THEM manifesting more frequently, and in stronger forms, feeding on the synchronicity generated by the two envoys of the Acausal voice.

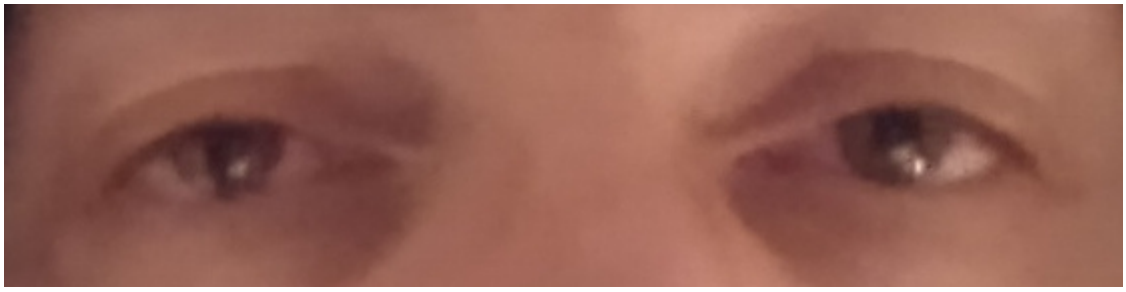
At higher levels the two are aware of, build and direct the charge consciously and deliberately together toward, into or at. It is therefore far more potent when two are honest with each other and doubly so when they are also honest with themselves. In this way of being there is humility to THEM and a feedback loop of immense reciprocal power. There are also protective qualities in being an envoy; the Thrasz representing just one guardian of Temple members.

Like Synchronicity, Self-Honesty or Humility, Love cannot be faked either. While there are artificially possible energetic fields equitable to gain the notice of THEM; all of these forces must occur organically through the path-working of the beings themselves; often over a long period of time. We do not and cannot choose who we fall in love with, it is a prime example of THEM; a force that seizes us unexpectedly but very deeply often without our consent. Yet, it is through such relationships in my experience that THEM have been manifest as the strongest presence. This and the other requisites beyond our control are what make THEM so difficult to manifest.

In a previous but no longer available manuscript: Rain Magic*K A Visitation, the forms and shapes and visage of numerous forms of THEM were discussed in relation to visitations that occurred during ritual, such as a guardian of Lake Aosoth that terrified my unsuspecting priestess as a giant shape stepped out on the path, or her inability to switch off seeing dark figures running into traffic, chasing cars, sitting, squatting on roofs, watching her, or seeing ‘wooden’ figures filling her with abject terror.

Over time she had no choice but to embrace THEM or go mad – though going mad is often a side-effect of Intrusion, and being mad is often the power-source of a sorcerer.

Living too close to what Jung called ‘absolute knowledge’ or what THEM have termed the Phyrm, other’s as the Abyss, and still others as the blackest seas of the deep subconscious – one operates on a low-level baseline, pretending as best one can to be as an uninitiated, untouched, unremarkable and shallow human (Franz 1980, p.20); imitation at its finest, concealing the bathyal depth within. A question to ponder is whether it is madness that screams from within channelled into intelligible genius through human conduit and a melody of shapes; or cold, inhuman omniscience of such potency it can only ever be translated and expressed as madness, as cryptic occult lyricism without, lain low by the desperate struggle of language and sound to encapsulate the umbral voice of the gods. For know ye this – ALL IS MAGIC, especially so it’s seeming opposite, and strength of the Illusion has made ye Forget. REMEMBER, says the Temple of THEM. Remember.



Herein too is another important principle. It is not possible to remain human as One of THEM: the Self and the Ego constantly trade places; one speaks in one moment from a conscious human identity or familiar personality in accustomed ways and sounds (or sounds woven into the script of words); and in the next from an unidentified dimension where flows poetry, lyric, mysticism, wisdom of the unconscious. A sudden rise from low-being into high-being that sends the sorcerer mad. For the sorcerer is a constellated archetype (Franz 1980, p.27) a concentration of black magick and shattered geometry. Living in the perpetual ‘heightened emotional state’ in which sincere divination is undertaken – it is an emanation of extreme gravitas that defies the normal, routine ephemera of life and its tedious paradigms and takes on a cosmic importance, such as a Geas, or magical compulsion that drives one to complete a quest given to their being above all other things, even if it takes his life time, his life source, to do it. My I is transformed, poured into these vessels of text in the hope they take on a life of their own, beyond my mortal coil, for my magic to last a little longer – and perhaps, long enough.

Therein, is revealed the supreme and elegant truth of the Temple of THEM: and the Keys to the mysterious Entities it acknowledges. And too, the nature of the fearsome guardians that bar the gates from the profane; for few are they who are One's of THEM.

See now, why Lovecraft is the Father of our current; Jung the Mother, Anton Long the Muse; the Sorceress the Catalyst; and myselves, the Conduit.

"Then comes this beautiful Chinese idea that man can actually get in contact with that he can get to the place where heaven and earth create in an unfathomable way, without doubleness, through utmost sincerity. If somebody devoid of all illusions, and all that makes the world of the ordinary ego, goes into himself with utmost sincerity, then he comes to this central hole where creation, even in the cosmos, takes place. That is why the Chinese thought that certain sages or saints, very rare personalities, could reach that centre and by having come to this contained innermost centre of their personality could support heaven and earth, and be with creation in the universe" – Franz 1980, p.58

It is now 32 years since I started my occult journey, 18 since I founded the Temple of THEM; and despite all the changes I have made to my life, the roads I have trod, or the maturity or insight I have gained; my conviction with my geas, my magical compulsion to obey the 'gods', remains firmly intact. As has been said before, you cannot convince someone to believe in ghosts if they have never seen one – without direct evidence, why should they, how could they? But the V1 02 I3 4D changes all (See, Black Keys of Satan). When you do have a Visitation – you will understand why I cannot turn my back on such a sublime occult mystery as has revealed itself to me and stay transfixed and driven to complete the Temple's 30-year charter. For Synchronicity is borne of the Game (Franz 1980, p.29), and thus the Temple of THEM is a great experiment of chance, a Great Magic, a dice roll powered with my blood.

"In all primitive civilisations ritual and play cannot be separated….So one has to be completely and passionately involved, and at the same time sacrifice any kind of ego desire" Franz 1980, p.60

Why thirty? You will Know when it is Done, though we may say it has been chosen specifically not arbitrarily and there is special effect in the Finite. One may have observed the Temple breaking its charter into 10-year durations, 3 equal parts, and the unfolding of a long-term performance of Oromancy. A basis in secrets, only because of an inability to understand what was being constructed in isolated pieces, was to be later brought together and assembled for War. And too, we always wake before the Dream Ends. The desire to be Immortal, to 'live Forever', to 'Dominate for All Time' is antithetical to all that our current teaches and all that THEM represent. Know the 'Right Measure', extols the I-Ching (Franz 1980, p.44). The All tends toward Entropy (p.53).

” Thus the Chinese say that through a holy, earnest play we can get closer to discovering the objective order of the universe” – Franz 1980, p.60

References:

Bridgman Images 2023, ‘China: Page from a 16th century Ming dynasty edition of the ‘Jiuzhang suanshu’ (Nine Chapters on the Mathematical Arts)’, viewed 23 June 2023, <https://www.bridgemanimages.com/en-US/noartistknown/china-page-from-a-16th-century-ming-dynasty-edition-of-the-jiuzhang-suanshu-nine-chapters-on-the/nomedium/asset/3122207>.>
Franz, M.L.V., 1980, On Divination and Synchronicity: The Psychology of.
Schwartz, R n.d, A Classic from China: The Nine Chapters, viewed 23 June 2023, <https://www.maa.org/book/export/html/1635410>.>

DREAMING

THEM believe the human psyche seeks wholeness. Until wholeness is achieved, the Self will continually prompt the fragmented aspects of its being into forming wholeness. These prompts are often censored by the Ego, and it is theorised that the Self is forced to wait to communicate less restrictively when the Ego is inactive, via the agency of dreams. Though it takes some experience to filter many different kinds of message issued from the astral realm, by listening to our dreams, a person can effectively create a psychic map that makes conscious the usually unconscious and fragmented aspects of our psyche. Following this, one can learn to follow the prompts from the Self that leads to recognition of these aspects, their roles, and their eventual cohesion.

Growth is difficult to achieve if the means of growth are unknown. People can be stubborn toward change, especially if that change entails a loss that is in direct conflict with the strict conditions of being set in stone by the Ego. The Ego resists attempts to alter it and can perform some interesting mental gymnastics to cope with the demands of the Self. This can lead to a person making superficial gains in psychic growth whereby the Ego dupes itself into believing it has listened to the voice of the Self. Consequently, a great deal of energy can be expended in good faith on a direction that seems to lead to growth, giving a brief feeling of satisfaction and accomplishment – but like using a band-aid for a serious injury – this deception serves only to temporarily mask some deeper aching that needs to be addressed and can lead to dangerous neuroses.

Dreams can be very helpful for getting `true readings’ of our psyche. They are issued from a part of us that is more honest, revealing and candid than anything conspired by the Ego. Dreams can show us our strengths, our weaknesses, our talents, our shortcomings, fears, guilt, ambitions, secret desires etc. etc. with a self-honesty that can be both intensely destructive and painful as it can be healing and progressive. The overall `geometry' of dreams can also reveal a rough [or fine, pending talent] psychic sketch of the archetypal stage that a person's psyche is currently experiencing in the process of re-integration that leads to individuation.

These psychic `readings' can help isolate neuroses, complexes, and each can then be worked upon like a person untying [or tying] a knot in their being. Dream revelations can indicate where a person might actively spend their energies to assist in the totalization of the psyche. i.e. work with the Shadow, the Anima/us [to eventually presence it in a person of the opposite sex] and accordingly steps can be taken to consciously manifest/explore the situations/energies that our dreams prompt us to alter: guiding us to make changes that we would not ordinarily be willing to make and helping to free us of otherwise unconscious influences and programs we'd have no hope of noticing high above the black sea in our rigid ivory palaces of Ego.

Yet perhaps more importantly, Dreams allow us to tap that black sea within and without that gives access to Genius. Because dreams are Archetypal – and because each of THEM have or work toward modes of using the Astral for individuation, mapping our experiences and trying to make sense of them – we can help you to interpret your dreams. Although the meanings of your dreams will be highly personal and unique to your understanding of the symbols, persons, feelings etc present – we can help you to make connections, know your Animus, identify your shadow, filter the noise from them, and act as an external mirror where you can project them, enabling you to see them from an emotionally detached mode.

The process begins by the active decision to `stalk' your dream world, and making a conscious and continued effort to remember, interpret, and listen to your dreams. This is most easily begun by using a dream diary. The workload of keeping a dream journal is at first, hard and very demanding, yet even a cursory recollection of a few dreams can help provide pieces of your psychic map, certain energies and states of mind becoming immediately apparent even from fragments. Not all dreams are useful, but what is useful can only be determined by experience. Try keeping a dream journal for a few weeks. You can opt to email it to us privately – and THEM will offer our interpretations of your psychic geometry; leading to suggestions for activities that will act in accordance with modes that can help assist in the totalization of your psyche.

LUCID DREAMING

I'm no expert on Lucidity, and I don't pretend to be. These documents are from my own private foray into Lucidity during which I believe I discovered a powerful technique that induces Lucidity, but a foray that mainly constitutes my unique perception and understanding of the Astral and the Psyche, and my own deeply personal Dreaming Consciousness, which consciousness I interpreted in context with the events occurring in both my day-to-day life and my overall life. I would also hope that my own interpretations of my Dreams and the way in which I have interpreted them, individually and as a collective, will in some way guide and assist others in the study of theirs. In 2003-2004 I sat down and wrote out the journal by hand, saving the records into a word file for distribution online from the Temple of the Tangent group. I later deleted the Tangent group and "Offerings" with it. Later however, my hard-drive suffered a devastating crash, destroying that and many other files – which unfortunately I had not backed up. And so, this new version of "Offerings" contains scans of the original pages of my Dreaming Journal – from Jan 13 to Feb 14, most of which are neatly printed, but some of which were recorded at awkward hours of the night, scribbled hastily to ensure maximum preservation of imagery, or even jotted in the dark.

To begin with, I cannot stress strongly enough that a person interested in Lucid Dreaming or Dream Interpretation, should seek out and devour the most excellent treatise by Carl Jung titled "Man and his Symbols". Before I read this brilliant treatment of the psyche, my only option was to believe from the limited array of spurious metaphysical journals available that dealt with Dreaming as some sort of "Occult realm" in the league of E.S.P., Ghosts, or UFO's, that Dream Interpretation meant a) dreams fit neatly into an A-Z category of interpretation, and b) that dreams Always had a meaning. Neither of these claims about Dreaming held true for me during my experiment. Originally, I was probably influenced to attempt Lucid Dreaming just as I had attempted Scrying, ESP, Ouija and so on because it was listed in the books on the Occult I used to read. In my serious endeavour to learn magic however, I came to understand through what I could glean on Lucid Dreaming, from a movie called Waking Life, from a text entitled "Liber Luna Sanguinus" supplied to me in 2003 by the Tempel ov Blood, from the testimonies of alleged Lucid Dreamers, and from my own personal experience with it; that a world of infinite possibility should be opened to me if I could attain that elusive state called Lucidity.

It was said that Lucid experiences were as real to the physiology as those of waking life, and that the body-mind could not tell the difference – and therein was the appeal that perhaps a greater mastery over the body could be won. The idea then that I would be able to do whatever I liked in that lucid dream state as though it were real and that I could control the environment and all of the elements within it – was a marvellous prospect worth my time. Could anything appeal more to a human being? Reliable Information on Lucid Dreaming proved difficult to find and this was in particular due to the way that my society at large, including the occultists, seemed to view Dreams.

Dreams are not taken seriously by many people, and when they are, they tend to be taken too seriously. Paradoxically, one of the most defining attributes of Occult Experience, Magic or Sorcery, is that it is strongest in-between any two points of definite experience, that is, outside of forms used to capture or explain the experience, feeling or emanation of having had a mystical/occult experience. The people who took dreams too seriously laid down a formulaic set of rules that the "Art of Dreaming" was deemed to have in order to become lucid, or, to the people that didn't take them seriously at all, dreams were invisible, and most people, although many times confounded by their dreams, ignored them, paid no attention to interpreting them, and often denied they even had them. I had created dream journals previously as a teenager, and although the difference in magical understanding and mental maturity between those journals and this one, is vast, it is likely that my fascination with dreams from an early age and the willingness to believe they were not something to be discarded and perhaps even something to be understood that allowed me to shape the connexion with those psychic sands early.

Dreams have always seemed highly vivid and meaningful to me, many have shaped my life profoundly, and I continue to believe that Dreaming is a powerful tool in a Sorcerer's arsenal. One of the reasons Dreaming shyness seems to be the case may have come to light in my endeavour. Recording, Remembering, Interpreting Dreams, is very time-consuming. It requires not just a book to write things, but an entire shift of temporal concerns to remain in a focused altered-state of Stalking one's Sleeping Self. It becomes as though Waking Life were the Dream, and one is enduring the wakefulness just in order to get back to Sleep, to the Astral or Dream Like existence that begins to take over. With extended practice, remembering dreams becomes more frequent; up to 5-7 dreams over a 12 hour period can prove demanding to record and interpret, and it begins to seem like one has only just finished the paperwork for the previous night when it starts all over again, as it's time to go to bed. In the month and a half that I recorded my dreams my waking life began to fade, become ethereal and wispy, almost as though it were not there and that the concerns of the day were transient and non-physical. All I wanted was to have an eventful day to provide enough new food for my night-mind.

Learning to Lucid Dream requires the quality of obsession; it requires "demonic commitment" to quote the Order, and the time and resources to set aside one's body and mind for just that. To become so focused on dreams for such a length of time was exhausting, physically and mentally, and in the end, I abandoned the Dream Project to return to my commitments to the Order. I believe I had just opened the Lucid Gates prior to my decision to stop the project, that I had found a technique that enabled a consistent and powerful lucid dreaming state to be attained in a minimum of time, and that had I continued I might have been able to write more, though I should likely have done it from an asylum. That, or what I continued to write would have been of my weird and wonderful journeys; of which, I rest assured are of no interest to the reader being merely particular fancies of my own design, and that it is the method I have discovered that is important to record.

~ Dreaming: A Methodology ~ Some safeguards were required when delving into my unconscious, as they should be for others – especially if one holds a romantic view of trying to 'make friends with it' perhaps in order to 'unite' the conscious and the unconscious; not least because this idealistic "friendship" and the possibility of this type of "union" is a product/fantasy of the conscious. My unconscious does not want to be made friends with any more that it can be united with me as some sort of super consciousness. There is a great danger in believing that the many convenient abstract names given to ideas, concepts, forces or feelings dealt with when talking about the psyche are real, physical, controllable, or conform to expectations like other tangible objects.
Dreaming, I think, is primarily a metaphysical exploration but that requires secondary methods and measures that borrow from madness as much as logic. The unconscious, has the power to really mess a person up inside, and that is why it is important, even if only as a tool, to forge a belief in the mind being compartmentalised and that not all dreams mean something, in fact, that many dreams are just a conversation with the other half, that is, with the unconscious itself, in its own language. And in this conversation, things may at first be said that are hurtful, misinterpreted, and downright rude, but do not make the mistake of believing that the unconscious will eventually come to speak the language of the conscious, or the conscious the language of the unconscious – that is to invite disaster. These elements are not human, nor do they behave as human and thus should not be treated as human – people make the same mistake when approaching the Dark Gods.

It is natural inclination to humanise everything – to refract it in our own image. This inclination must be suspended in magic. And I have learned, that to believe that dreams must always mean something or to believe they accurately represent one's "Self" is to invite extremely dangerous elements into one's journey, because the psyche can easily lose its rational grounding or its internal map. I've prided myself on having a strong mental constitution that can withstand a fair bit of having my ego held up to a mirror and being told like it is – or withstand being convinced I am what I am not or awakened to what I am unconscious of being, or able to integrate a lot of my monsters in the way of wonderful or horrific thoughts, fantasies, or internal dialogue as just that and both identify and disassociate my(self) from that content. This is probably because I champion self-honesty as quintessential to a magician. But Lucid Dreaming required at least a month of preparation groundwork to attain the state of mind that could hold onto the Dreaming World firmly, and involved a harrowing period of adjustment and unpredictable interactions with a part of my(self) I knew (know) nothing about.

Now, given what I do as one of THEM, I'm somewhat aware of how I, and some of my ideas, may come across to others as quite mad. It has been very difficult to explain my perception as influenced by an insight into simultaneously unified disconnection via the Acausal Voice, for instance, and probably will always be, since I cannot be sure anyone else shares my point of view, points of perception, or has experienced what I take, generally speaking, for granted. As a Sorcerer, such temporary leaps of faith and investing one's belief in ideas is absolutely necessary, for as mad as it may seem – madness is the Sorcerer's friend.

Oftentimes such methods are unable to be explained, luckily I have some experience in doing so and the determination to elaborate. Basically, one believes in what is necessary to get the job done, or more accurately, one deceives or tricks the conscious into action. But bear with me. Exploring the realm of my psyche required an idea to be formed about the qualities of its nature, of its structure. At best, I could consciously recognise the ample evidence for compartmentalism (that is, that my psyche or mind is separated into different sections of cognisance or consciousness) that existed in my being, the difference in consciousness between short and long term memory being a great example, and that there are elements of and in me that are beyond conscious reach. I defined very firmly, the "me" that is the controlling consciousness writing these words and conducting dream experiments as separate from a second or even numerous number of "me's" that represented either my organism as a whole, or one or more of my other mental compartments.

All of this division is of course based on temporal mental abstracts. I had defined it so clearly because the consciousness that is seated in my skull feels very sure of its position. The main, "me" had to be able to hold onto its conscious blueprint of its personal identity very strongly because it would be assailed by all manner of unconscious forces during its sojourn to become more conscious of them that could potentially have nasty side-effects. It might sound complex, and to someone accustomed to placing things directly into one specific form located in time and space, it is. But my understanding of consciousness is based in the acausal notions of the ONA – not in a limited point of consciousness operating from my skull but as flowing with the acausal in nameless possibilities of reach and origin functioning as one unified illusion created from a continuous stream of change. I must be able to speak of myself in first person, second person, and third person – (and I can, because of my collective conscious awareness of having experienced many altered states) so I can make a mature self-judgement that creates a safety net to catch the fragile ego before it falls. I.e. in convincing myself that my capabilities to divine my total self are always going to be biologically limited, as though I accept I am a large house with hundreds of rooms unexplored and others locked or permanently walled up.

This acceptance of limits prepares the ego not to be so shocked by its inability to control what comes forth that it is harmed or even shattered. I think this or a similar perspective of the mind is extremely important to have because a degree of ability to disassociate or separate from a personal identification with some of the terrifying contents brought forth by the dreaming mind is necessary not to go mad or be badly damaged by potentially dangerous unconscious elements quickly becoming conscious to the unprepared mind. The unconscious is adept at showing you things about yourself you'd rather you didn't know. It possesses omnipotent power over the weaknesses, emotions, guilt, hang-ups, neuroses, and fears with unforgiving honesty that can bring a person crumbling to their knees, sometimes permanently, and must be treated with great respect. And some of this respect is in accepting that you have to immerse yourself in irrational madness to gain anything from the occult –wherein the real trick is in surviving the journey without becoming insane.

In provoking a more concentrated interaction with the Dreaming Mind, I seemed to awaken something sentient that I could not determine as hostile or neutral. I suppose I had to personify this Dreaming State in order to control it, tame it, as I had already interpreted it as a 'compartment' of myself, it became a separate being, an entity divided from myself. And I approached it thus: My consciousness was a resident voyager exploring the unknown – but it should not expect to find some perfect resolution or united state of super-consciousness (that was a naivety I had stripped away) but expect a journey to the top of a rugged mountain to attempt a humble conversation with its unknown half.

Realise* that you will never speak either language fluently, nor will those compartments ever consciously fluently become intelligible, but there are depths to the unconscious, and I liken it greatly to the sea; there are the shallow waters where things that are useful to be conscious of are washed ashore by the ebb and tide. There are the islands one might swim out to if they are a strong enough swimmer and can brave the currents, though they should be prepared for the eventuality of getting into trouble and even drowning if they cannot. There is the vast ocean blue, beautiful and enticing but dangerous and unforgiving depending on the weather above and below to swim out too far. And then there are the impossibly dark trenches thousands of degrees below that shiny blue, swimming and crawling with strange creatures that defy imagination, a hostile and deadly environment with endless caves that go all the way to another dimension, a place where the conscious should never go, and even deeper where it may never go. To treat myself as divided into two convenient parts enabled "me" (the fragile "I") to know/feel/accept that it's judgements can not always be right (and that's OK) and that I am not able to understand or calculate the entirety of myself using only my consciousness, (and that's OK) and allows my ego the ease to consciously settle with those facts and accept its limited but nonetheless important station (the ego must be allocated praise and assurance in the trade-off), and subsequently help me to "dismiss" or "disassociate" myself/itself from the highly toxic and potentially destructive and disturbing elements that studying the Dreaming Mind can bring forth and did bring forth for me.

Such disturbing elements included highly charged emotional content that can quickly and shockingly come out of nowhere to shake the Dreamer's very core; ("Hel" was written after such a dream) Content so disturbing that it can cause psychosis or harmful deterioration of the ego – I've been mad several times but have managed to hold it together enough to come back. Or long and uncomfortable sinister dreams that come to torment the Dreamer for what seems hours upon waking – but seem like days or even years during the psychic imprisonment of the dream. Several times I had dreams that were so confronting I wondered if I should stop the project altogether or felt like my unconscious was actually trying to persuade me to give up my project. For every step I took forward, the unconscious seemed to have its own analysis of my efforts, almost as if it were taunting me to catch hold of it – only to mystify me with its violent displays of symbolism.

But again, this idea that the unconscious taunts, is a projection of the conscious mind, and the conscious mind can quickly get one into trouble in thinking that the unconscious is their friend, that there is a friend there to be had, or that friend in anyway shape or form denotes the thing that is the Unconscious.

Note to the Consciousness, Do not expect to get off the beach.
Note to the Magician, You can go further than I did.

My unconscious did not seem friendly, but inasmuch as it is the conscious waking side of me that supplies wishful projections and interpretations that humanises the content remembered – and the conscious waking side that exists quite naively of such horrific wonders as the mind is genuinely capable of when pushed – it could only be friendly in my imagination. It, the conscious mind also filters out, an unbelievable deal of stimuli from what is available, and is, in comparison to the unconscious, a starkly unimaginative, uncreative and simplistic block-stacker which gloats over its inadequate terms such as "friendship" to describe a union so impossibly complex it has apparently only been achieved by a handful of human beings in history.

Contra wise, the unconscious is a poetic genius capable of the most intricate analogies, metaphors, symbolism, and dance that can leave one breathless from their sublime beauty, shocked and embarrassed by their unashamed unreserved raw knack for telling it like it is, or wake one screaming and sweating from the sheer detail and creative terror charged with a vividity that makes waking life seem grey, washed-out and mundane. And, when I thought that I had been shocked as much as I could be by a nightmare or dream, I was proved irrevocably wrong. The unconscious appears to have a powerful if not omnipotent defence mechanism to prevent the consciousness from opening certain doors, wandering around the house, or trying to build new extensions – but no comparison exists for me to say if it is an objective censor or a subjective censor.

Its apparent from my many forays into magic, why the conscious self must hold a very high view of itself and its abilities. Because of the odds against it, it must be encouraged from within and without to strive, to conquer and that it can do the impossible because only with that arrogance does it march forth into the unknown to succeed where success is impossible. And sometimes it does succeed in such a place.

But, the reality is, one must learn to accept defeat after defeat in one's stride to Know Thyself. It should come as no surprise that uniting the unconscious and the conscious proved beyond my control. It is possible that the unconsciousness even drives my consciousness to study I, giving me the illusion of self-controlled sentience; who knows for sure? But this sort of view must be rejected to some extent by the sorcerer if one is to take the approach of being an autonomous entity and responsible for one's own destiny. one should keep firmly in mind that one is as capable of being one's own worst enemy as they are one's own best friend. ThoTh, Australia, 2009. * Regarding, "Belief", "Realisations", "Accepting" and so on. One of the hard tasks of the Sorcerer is in convincing themselves that certain things are "true", whilst remaining aware that they are not.

BREAKING THE LOCKE:
A LEXICON FOR DREAM DESCRIPTION

Dreams notoriously defy the strict rigidity of time and space – points of view, observation platforms, fixation of being, origin of action and meaning often perform odd and often disorienting fusions and duplicities of each, archetypes, familiarity with persons, recognitions overlapping, falling and fading, contradicting into one another. This brief lexicon is to aid in a step toward some day making their mysteries more graspable and their deeper secrets transparent by providing the means to describe these difficult contradictions.

Fixed Observer (My Me)– when you retain all of your faculties in a dream that make you, you – from memory catalogue, real-world physical attributes, five key senses, to intact mental zeitgeist of the world – and you participate in the dream in first person perspective.
Autonomous Detached Observer (My Me's)– when you retain all of your faculties in a dream that make you, you – from memory catalogue to intact mental zeitgeist of the world but your real-world physical attributes (body) are absent – and you participate in the dream from a third person perspective.
Divided Observer (Our Me's) – when you retain all of your faculties in a dream that make you, you – from memory catalogue to intact mental zeitgeist of the world but your real-world physical attributes (body) are absent and present – and you participate in the dream from a third person perspective AND first person perspective.

Fixed Divided Observer – (My Me-Not-Me) when you retain all of your faculties in a dream that make you, you – from memory catalogue to intact mental zeitgeist of the world but your real-world physical attributes (body) are absent – and you participate in the dream from a third person perspective watching yourself – but – cannot interact with the dream and only observe 'yourself' going through it.
Hostile Autonomous Observer (My Not-Me) When you are both the very being that is you but simultaneously overcome by a sense that you are not 'you'.
Quasi-Autonomous Omniscience – (My All-Me) When you are both the observer and the observed.
Divided Mental Agency – (Stealthought)When you 'know' something as another inhabitant that 'you' do not.
Non-Autonomous Participation – (My As Them) When you participate in the entire dream as another inhabitant.
Divided Familiarity – (Like but Not Like)When you recognise the appearance of someone familiar but it is not 'them'
Split Familiarity – (Them as Also Them) When you recognise the appearance of someone familiar and they drastically and immutably shift into being someone else in such a way they are both.
Contradictory Non-Familiarity (Them but not Them)– When you recognise the appearance of someone familiar and they drastically and immutably shift into being someone else in such a way they are both but also neither.
Hostile Locality – When the scene is identical to your memory of a place but there is a pervading sense of sinister shadow that the place is dangerous.
False Sanctuary – When the scene is identical to your memory of a home and your recognise family but the inhabitants are all strangers.
Hostile Sleeper – When you are among people who are your family and feel like your family, but there is a feeling one is not.
Glued – When you attempt to run at full speed/punch an attacker but are unable to.
Divided Identification – When you recognise a familiar face on a strangers body.
Hostile Inherency – When you recognise someone you know but there is a sense of danger emanating from them.
Forced Mutable Locality – When the scene rapidly shifts from familiar locations to unfamiliar locations, often repeating the same scene as if replaying a movie but with a different script in each visitation.
Hyper Formality – When the dream focuses on every detail around you in fine detail – from the tree root formation and stones on a path you are walking along to the temperature of the day, the emotion you feel, the destination you are going and have come from.
Hostile Pursuance – When you are pursued by a relentless killer or deadly threat.
Mutual Agency – When you are acting as yourself looking out onto the world but also occupy a second point of observation above yourself, watching yourself.

Mutual Divided Agency – When you are acting as yourself looking out onto the world but also occupy a fixed second point of observation outside yourself in another inhabitant.
Mutual Temporal Agency – When you are acting as yourself looking out onto the world but also occasionally occupy a fixed second point of observation outside yourself in another inhabitant.
Divided Autonomous Agency – When you are acting as yourself looking out onto the world but also occupy multiple points of observation outside yourself in other inhabitants.
Detached Temporal Agency – When you transition with frequency between points of observation above, behind or outside of you.
Mutable Detached Temporal Agency – When you transition with frequency between points of observation between inhabitants so as to see the scene and yourself from many points of view.
Mutable Paradigm – When you eclipse the constancy of matter size, such as having a car for a head and then climbing into another car head and driving off.
Solvent Paradigm – When the dream forces logical continuity during absurdity, such as having a car for a head and then climbing into another car head and driving off – where previous legs are suddenly present wheels with no suspension of disbelief.
Fracture – where the dream performs some act that wakes the dreamer up with its impossibility.
Chronological Temporal Immediacy – When the dream flashes forward to show a premonition of what the dream will contain.
Inverse Chronological Temporal Immediacy – When the dream flashes backward to show a premonition of what the dream has contained.
Eternal Facsimile – when we are given an object or a gift that produces an effect eternally, such as a wallet that never runs out of money.
False Existential Facsimile – when we are given an object or a gift that produces an effect eternally, such as a wallet that never runs out of money and we wake up temporarily believing it to be a reality.
Hostile Autonomy Agency – When there is a pervading sense that you are not you but you are powerless to prevent your 'you' from going through the actions of the dream, suddenly relegated to the role of observer in crucial, often emotionally potent, events.
Quasi-Immediacy – When it is clearly 'today' but the events took place yesterday.
Quasi-Inverse Immediacy – When it is 'yesterday' but the events clearly take place today in the present moment.
Quasi-Diurnal – When it is both night time and day time simultaneously.
Mutable Familiarity – When what was familiar becomes suddenly alien and strange Frequent Mutable Familiarity – When what was familiar becomes suddenly alien and strange then familiar again repeatedly.
Infrequent Mutable Familiarity – When what was familiar becomes suddenly alien and strange then familiar again.

Fractured Inhabitant – When we recognise a visage or appearance of someone in one instance only to find them unrecognisable at some point.
False Mutable Inhabitant – When we recognise a visage or appearance of someone in one instance but they possess all of the internal characteristics of someone else.
Fractured Locality Remembrance – When we recognise a place or location from memory but some detail we cannot quite pinpoint has changed causing the recognition to be slightly 'off'.
Shallow Timeclimb – When the dream jumps from the present immediacy into the future.
Deep Timeclimb – When the dream jumps drastically from the present immediacy into the far future
Deepening – When the dream places hyper-focus of importance on the very immediate events taking place at the immediate time.
Shallow Timedive – When the dream jumps from the present immediacy into the past.
Deep Timedive – When the dream jumps drastically from the present immediacy into the far past. I.e. from present day to a gladiatorial ring, Napoleonic war, bronze age etc.
Timeslide – When time loses its fixed constancy inside the dream and becomes detached from events.
Dreamslide – the fading of details of a dream when we wake – especially when we try to remember them, forcing them backwards into the subconscious and further out of recollection.
Chromatic Filter – when a dream is in a particular colour, black and white, sepia.
Mutable Chromatic Filter – when a dream switches back and forth between a particular colour, black and white, sepia.

MAGIC, GRAVITY, THE MAGI AND DEPRESSION

Related to the Mind War is an ancient theory of the existence of an enshrining protective field or current formed by the geometric arrangement of principle shapes by the Magian Empire. These principles are enshrined in the architecture of the Empire both Exoterically (Shrines, Symbols, Institutions) and Esoterically (Control over Time, Space, Thought) and actively resist change to them through various measures, both rational and irrational – on fronts of Logos and Madness. Some of this architecture takes the form of Protectors of the existence and continuation of God and comprises legions of individuals whose prayers, campaigns, shapes and strategies include magical assaults against those of the Sinisterion, (also referred to as Openers), who would see Christianity's defiant fight to resist being replaced with an evolutionary advancement of the human race beyond Religions of Monotheism and Insynsian.

The Rational Mind is a precious gem but the Irrational Mind is the psychic region that is most sensitive to Magic, both as means to deploy it, and a means to be affected by it. The concept of the Irrational Mind as used here, is a convenient abstract, but for those who believe in Magic, such belief opens up an entirely invisible vista of perception where the intuition of colours, lights, feelings, sensations, dreams and exchanges of energy in interactions with other humans and other forms is a private engagement of constant warfare. Battle ensures daily with preventative measures erected seeking to prevent the extraction or vampirization of energy from oneself or others, and the sorcerer is constantly on guard for vampires and other entities that would drain them of their life-force. This itself takes energy which must come from others sources. For many this is the role of the Sinister, Aether, Acausal, Dark Ones, or THEM, and Nature, where places of power can be sought and found to replenish the sorcerer. [See Places of Power.]

These interactions are not just against individuals encountered on a daily basis – but can take place in the Astral during sleep – and also by assaults from far more powerful collective fields such as those words, actions and intentions of those who would openly prevent Change which collectively hold together a particular view of the World that resists attempts to alter it. This enables such prisons as Language, Duality, Morality, Hypocrisy, Insynsian, Egoism to reign as the acting powers in experience of the World and ultimately controls the shapes that will be seen and used during one's life on Earth. That the Church has denuded many kinds of resistance to it is unquestioned, with all manner of institutions, laws, armed forces, clergy, moral codes enforced and placed to meet head on the voice or presence of any dissenters to the way Life is experienced. At present, the concept of One God is an inevitable and dominating force on the planet, very old and very wise. Whilst laws, forces, etc openly discourage rebellion against the Church, Powerful rhetoric and violence protects Religion and the Religious, THEM wish to speak here of one particular facet of the overall design of the Magian Matrix: Depression.

Depression, in the face of Experience on Earth, is natural. We feel pain via Empathy. Depression is often not even Personally or Individually centralised – but arises from an overwhelming sensation of the essential geometry of Life feeling terribly wrong but one that cannot be rationalised or explained intellectually – it is an alien feeling, a feeling that seems extraordinarily ancient and yet familiar, but its cause we cannot isolate.

Depression, in science and medicine, has its own explanations. Magically, however, Depression is none other than the resulting oppressive force of the Magian's magical network. We are imprisoned by their Time, Space and Language, their Laws, their Beliefs, their God – though humans are shapeless in spirit, we can feel the crafted shapes of the containers into which they have forced us, containers which fit what we are supposed to be, most unnaturally. The Fear of Death, of Sex, of Joy, of Love, of Chaos defines the Magian prison, referred to as The Cylindrical. The key aspect of the Cylinder is the enclosure of the spirit (shapeless) into a particular (shape) and the same prison for all – this is an act of madness. When we consider that if one does not feel Happy, Joyous, Content all of the time, they are told by society that there is something wrong with them – that Depression, is an illness. We are sent to Doctors to 'cure it'. This sense of wrongness happens also when we cannot or refuse to conform – or, even when we try to submit or conform to the Judaeo Matrix – there is no achievable way to belong to it and this is part of the reason why Depression is so uncomfortable, because our sensations of the world being horribly wrong or shaped to torture us are not validated or accepted by the key institutions created to prevent such awareness.

Because of the concept of Original Sin or Ultimate Sin, humanity can never be good enough for God, never be the right shape, do the right thing, no MATTER what they do or how they contort to fit to this impossible box. In some regards, it is more accurate to call Depression, Compression.

One aspect of the Magi's essential attitude to Life was encapsulated in the Catherine Wheel, where torturers mangled the bodies of victims and Broke them, on the Wheel. In the world of Post-Modern Satanism and the present emphasis of Logos as a lens, It is common to believe that there is no War for your Soul or Mind, and that one is merely being paranoid in believing in armies of 'white' magicians (Closers) whose interest is in keeping Satanism and the Sinister from arising and minds from escaping the mental prison, but one need look no further for proof that this paranoia has its own life and energy than the Vatican, which sanctioned a new 100 priest army several years ago specifically to fight the rise in Occultism.

Just as You are able to create and presence outcomes, effects and change as an Individual with your thoughts, energies, actions – so does the entire legion of principles that combat the tyrannies of Abrahamism loosely assembled under myriad groups of Satanic, Scientific, Spiritual, Technological, and other anti-Abrahamic currents felt as a solid threatening force to the Empire of the Magi. It haunts them, chides them, insults them – it is not imaginary to them, they can feel it as the encroachment of strange crackling powers trying to infect their brains with tendrilled fingers and Undo the Empire they have erected to control this Aeon in the name of their Monotheistic Figures and Codex. It is why they pray, go to church, resist temptation, tell us what to do, try to restrain the Beast and dictate life from Birth to Death and everything in between. And they feel it, as they feel Everything else, as FEAR.

On the other hand, the exhortations and ferocious dedication they exhibit as a collective in preventing such changes to their Aeon by controlling or destroying individuals, forms and forces that present a threat is a force of will that is intense and powerful. It is so powerful it has become permeate throughout all of Civilisation and spread across the planet, annihilating its resistors or assimilating them through guile or force. This force transforms intent into real architecture, real soldiers, real hatred that would see any threat to it, destroyed. It is not merely a psychic feeling but a visual one, their symbols their presence their laws are omnipresent – in essence, such a force of will has physicated itself from intent because of how strong it is and can be felt as a tangible force. This is called 'Depression' – an actual crushing of the spirit felt from such forces to make us throw down our arms and admit defeat, to believe we are undone, that nothing can change, that such forces and forms will eternally endure and sends the message that we should stop fighting against it. – For most, Depression keeps us in check, the weight of such magic hangs heavy on our spirit and keep us from holding our head and weapons up high. But there are magical counter-measures.

We have learned that such compression can turn one into a Spring, consciously allowing oneself to be coiled tightly and then using that stored force to rebound with ferocity. There are ways to do this magically, such as descending slowly to the ground with gravity in a spiral and laying still on the floor until a sudden upward momentum forces one upward. Repeated, the force of Gravity becomes a conscious weapon. The urge to just die (the intended result of depression) can be felt most clearly when laying perfectly still at rest. Yet it is there that the force of Life itself, is felt the most strongly too and which will eventually propel one up off the floor to continue living. Members of THEM are acutely aware of the feeling of depression – on one hand it is natural result of Empathy but on the other it is felt more strongly the closer one gets to overcoming the Magian energy network. Immediate signs of this are communications being interrupted, and depression.

When you look at how THEM is branching out and making a lot of connections, flowing without conflict, and not getting lost in what it is doing, it is becoming a potential threat. If this threat is being felt the Magian's command of the Sinister (which is neutral and can be commanded by any human whatever their morality) then it is natural to begin to feel depressed – this is in itself what make Aeonic magic so hard to continue, the depression, the feeling that things are doomed and cannot get better. The simultaneous attempt by many LHP to destroy the Ego is THEM believe an old trap – since it is the Ego that causes the upward motion from depression. To lead your enemies to believe destroying the Ego is what will stop the Magi, is an ancient tactic to allow depression to dominate humanity and prevent the coiled energy from being used by a conscious magician. It is, to close off methods to defeat the Magi. (See Diary of a Devilworshipper Vol 4)

To encourage the Ego and only the Ego is also a powerful incitement that upholds the Magian energy network. If we can spread the ability to Remember the Magical nature of the Magi's Empire – we can Resist and Reform it. Next time you feel Depressed – know that it is the Irrational Power of the Magi acting upon you. Don't let them control you. Rise up and spit in their faces.

ON PSYCHIC VAMPIRES

Recognition of their poison and means of their destruction.

Members of THEM have noted a connexion between the psychological emergence of the Self and an extra sensitivity to the psychic emanations coming from persons in thrall to a particular state of imprisonment by the Ego. viz. the Psychic Vampire.

The level of raised awareness of said emanations may stem from the successful process of psychic growth of the Self – wherein there is developed as a reaction to magical/mental enlightenment, a super-sensitive distinction between the two states or modes of mind, each governing the organism via a particular energy that actively attempts to sustain its domination by suppressing the other.

The two major forms of Being: Ego and Self; were articulated in a previous essay titled "Radia Sol" as autonomous sentients referred to as 'Psychanisms'. Psychanisms are modes of thought that struggle to gain complete control over the psychic faculties thus determining the energetic mode of the host organism and characterising its level of relatedness to the world around it.

Radia Sol also related why the majority of human organisms are ruled by the Ego and remain prisoners in psychic thrall to the drives of their limbic system or reptilian energy base. The 'reptilian energy base' is the lowest mode of reasoning used by an organism concerning how to solve the immediate problems it faces or satisfy its base 'animal' type urges and desires. Such urges are basic and rooted in a primal base, such as hunger and how to get food, thirst and how to get water, lust and how to sate it, the urge to procreate and acquisitiveness [acquiring things] for example, and the drive to sate these needs as quickly as possible.

Because it is not always safe or advisable to sate one's desires immediately, human beings became chameleons/scorpions: masters of deception that devised subtle or gross ways of getting exactly what they wanted.

When they could not get what they wanted: and their desire was thwarted: it was the element of the psyche called the EGO, that became frustrated and caused the organism to throw a tantrum, fly into a rage, weep or cry, or use all means possible to cleverly find a way to overcome the obstacles that beset the ego's goal.

Likewise, it was the EGO that caused feelings of joy or the act of laughter and a sense of celebration when the ego achieved its aim and fulfilled its desire.

Exactly what those desires were: was determined by a great many factors, including the Time a person was born into, the Technology available in that Time, the Moral/Ethical background of that person, The Culture in which one lived, early impressions of the World, Pleasant or Negative Experiences and any marked effect they had on the understanding or perception of solving problems, dealing with frustration, co-operating with others, trust, love and a host of other indeterminable factors.

But because the host of factors involved in shaping the ego is so large, composed of a deeply profound network of reason, memory, experience, ploy, problem solving, ethics, behaviour, emotion, sensatorium, and many more diverse and intricate mental equations and contents, the ego is occult and private.

Some of the connections an organism's ego makes between one thing and another can, for instance, be grossly estimated through observing the actions or reasoning of the organism – or guessed at by a deduction of the organisms drive or motivation to act or speak the way it has as a means to satisfy some secret urge. But on the whole, the behaviour of persons and the diversity of their manner of private reason remains a mystery.

It is not then possible to discern wholly the contents of the intricate organic 'clockwork' that exists in the mental net or an organism or fathom the virtually infinite calculations and connexions made by the ego to solidify the separate elements of the world into one cohesive 'Weltanschauung' or world-view that governs how that organism reacts to the world, to other organisms, and to itself.

However, it is not necessary to have a complete understanding of an organisms private mental content in order to recognise the energetic network formed inside an organism symptomatic of Psychic Vampirism – whereupon a certain connexion has been affected or damaged by way of a potent desire left unfulfilled, a compulsive urge that cannot be fulfilled, an addiction or obsession with calculating or re-experiencing a particular connexion, a traumatic experience that causes a stagnancy in the growth of any particular connexion or the connexions as a whole, or some other frustration occurring in the processes of the mental network that results in being unable to make further connexions, results in making irrational and unreasonable connexions, or in becoming trapped in a particular cycle of connexions.

~

An examination of the ego is best achieved from the higher degree of the mode of Self, whereupon a greater contrast is afforded to study of the ego because of the distance in psychic growth between the Self and the ego, than an examination of the ego from its own mode.

The ego has been said to be highly ‘self-centred‘ – which is an unfortunate use of words – for the Self and the ego have almost nothing in common. The ego is better termed ‘narcissistic’ in that it exists for its own sake.

The growth of the ego in both its young and its mature stage is easily illustrated when comparing a young child, and an adult whose profession involves the ability to lie. The child is sociopathic and concerned with sating desire and urges immediately. But the adult is able to wait and to defer gratification until such time the desire can be safely or privately sated and is even able to deftly conceal secretive intention beneath the guise of outward appearance.

The outward guise is often determined by the elements that were involved in the organism’s early problem solving. This basic art of deception begins with the child re-enacting the elements that lead to the sating of a particular desire. I.e., a baby cries to get more milk or attention. If milk arrives when it cries it may make an association [or mental connexion] between crying and getting milk. Such associations rapidly grow in complexity: a small boy may break something in order to get in trouble with the specific intent to re-create the satisfaction and praise that comes from being re-assured and comforted in fixing it or cleaning the mess up, once the stage of the stern telling off has passed. These means of ‘provoking a certain situation or outcome’ are like a natural form of magic that is rooted in the basic urge of survival and averting danger or unpleasantness by acts of camouflage and deception, play-acting or mimesis [mimicking expected or habitual behaviour].

Habitual behaviours become ingrained in the organism as a means of defence not only against danger, but against being thwarted in its will. The guises used often become extremely complex over time as an organism is required to formulate many different strategies of deception to deal with a variety of situations that require different kinds of manipulation.

Yet such guises are not strictly limited to individuals, that is, to the realm of the personal. Because of the impact will/mentality can have on its environment such guises can infect larger bodies or groups of people such as political or religious movements. An example of the innate obsession with deception by human beings is extant in the behaviour of the Russians and the Americans during the Cold War. Both countries assumed the chameleonic tendencies of the human in a much more powerful form by disguising their political plans, intentions and movements and using codes, spies, intense secrecy and espionage en masse in the race to deceive the other about their nuclear capabilities. In this scenario, both Russia and America excelled in demonstrating not only the extent of creativity human beings may go to to cloak outward appearances, but that the inability to feel secure by one organism can easily turn into a contagion shared by others to manifest an obsessive desire.

What causes the drive in an organism that sustains the stubbornness to achieve a specific energy level?

Although the 'pathology' of a person [I.e., the cause of their actions or speech] can be guessed at or to some degree ascertained, it cannot be definitively known owing to its enormous intricacy of billions of connexions, there are nevertheless specific characteristics associated with a Psychic Vampire that help to identify it. The first of these is Insecurity. The second is Lack of Genuine Sympathy [[lacking in feeling for the other person, and only relating to the world via themselves]. A third is Concealed Narcissism, a fourth, Priority.

[A very adept Psychic Vampire will require a greater length of time to detect.]

In the most literal sense, it is a missing or loose, or 'insecure' mental connection that causes the specific neuroses and pathology of an individual. Without being able to complete a mental calculation owing to a complication in the mental process for that connexion – the individual is frustrated in their attempts to process an experience, idea or emotion holistically, I.e., using the whole of their faculties to bring a mental process to a satisfactory conclusion. Instead, a loose or insecure connexion becomes a focus of obsession whereby the individual becomes trapped in a loop trying to complete the missing information with only the information it already has, unsuccessfully.

Because the connexion cannot be formed by the agency of the organism itself, it requires the connexion to be made artificially via the agency of others. To do this it evokes or 're-stages' the conditions that were present when the connexion was first damaged. This is usually an unconscious re-enactment, powered by a conscious drive that 'something' is missing and that 'something' can be found if only this or that situation is brought about.

Such evocation is intended to bring about the creation of an element or the elements that 'fill in' for the missing component that would lead to satisfaction and the ability of the organism to move on and form new connexions by shifting its obsessive focus from that injured connexion.

The behaviour of an organism involved in setting up those unconscious conditions requires other organisms to assist – to supply the energetic outlay that the Psychic Vampire needs to begin. This is where energetic exchange, energy drain and psychic rape come in.

ENERGETIC EXCHANGE

Energetic exchange is usually reciprocal. Throughout life, the ego will attempt to balance its energetic expenditure by playing an endless game of gambling in gain and loss. In exchanging 'good morning' with a friend or stranger on the street the ego expends some of its energy in a calculated risk to gain back more energy or at least break even.

If the person replies in a manner that is conducive to the conditions required by our ego to count it as a gain, or energetic reward. That is, if the ego wants the person to reply in a like manner to count the risk of expenditure a successful gamble by affirming to the personality that it is a "good, likeable, friendly" person for instance, and this is the sort of identity that corresponds with the organisms sense of "I" – then the personality or "I" receives an energetic gain that makes it feel good.

How good it feels, depends on how important it is to the ego to assert the elements that define the identity of the organism. If someone has interest in being a happy person, then having someone return a warm reply will have a higher energetic return to that person than it will to a person accustomed to being suspicious of strangers.

If there were to be a loss though, and the person replied rudely, for instance; not only would we have lost our original energetic wager, but we would have suffered a further loss of energy when our ego's gamble to gain energy is taxed further from a reprisal that injures its pride or sense of "I". In such a case, the ego may seek to extract the energy back from the person by attempting a similar rude gesticulation to 'even the score' or enter into a war with it for the return of our energy.

This might be done either by having them apologise and affirm our sense of identity as a good, nice, likeable fellow, or by depleting their energy stores in much the same way they have depleted ours.

Exchanging negative comments, putting others down, etc is probably one of the quickest ways to usurp energy from others to feed our own insecurities – whereby we 'level out' and justify our actions to ourselves to feel better. If, however, we are unable to regain energy directly from someone who has taken it, it may be extracted forcefully from others unrelated to the original incident. Which of course, leads to a vicious cycle. The nature of the esoteric world reveals this: most of humanity is locked in struggle with psychic vampires.

The patterns that repeat in families, friendships, groups, relationships, marriages, society, etc owe much to the stipulations of the psychic vampire – most of which will end in nastiness, enmity, disaster and a high amount of destruction in the secret fight to maintain a hold of and increase one energy imbalance without first fixing the connexions causing the thirst.

It should be understood however, that it is always our own ego that depletes our energy. Firstly, by taking the risk of a gamble in the first place, and secondly, in being over-sensitive and having its fragility revealed, the ego chooses to be offended. But it is the 'projection of revenge' by the ego that leads an organism to mistakenly take the energetic bungle to heart, and to believe its own wishes are synonymous with that of the quite separate, irate ego. This manifests inwardly as an alignment of our 'sense of identity' with the indignant hurt of the ego and the outward belief that the other party has caused it, I.e., Insecurity.

INSECURITY

Insecurity is an incomplete connexion that acts like a leak. Although energy may be poured into it, if there is an open or insecure connexion, energy expended into that connexion will be wasted and lost in much the same way a hole in a bucket will eventually cause the bucket to drip dry. This is the process that causes the insatiable THIRST of the Psychic Vampire. It is important to understand that only under radical conditions of change in the ego, personal identity or alchemy, can a Psychic Vampire ever actually fulfil or fix an insecure connexion. For the most part, an ego that sustains the conditions or state of mind conducive related to the obsession with that connexion, cannot be healed, and if it should become a psychic vampire, should be avoided at all costs or destroyed.

Before proceeding – it is important at this stage to make it clear that Psychic Vampirism is seldom one-sided. It cannot be absolutely determined in the favour of one party or the other who is the original initiator for a psychic energy exchange. Psychic Vampires tend to be charismatic, and the victim [prey] may deliberately entice a relationship with a psychic vampire in order to partake of its energy reserves and the vampire's gift at fulfilling what is felt to be lacking in the prey.

The classic scenario of a beautiful but insecure person making a strong bond with someone uglier but confident is played out all the time. Whereby both parties 'agree' to the psychic relationship and the benefits that relationship may confer. For this reason, an entanglement with a Psychic Vampire may be extremely difficult to break by an outside party, as the vampire and prey act in symbiosis. That said, let us move onto the Hunt.

THE M.O. OF A SINISTER PREDATOR

The Psychic Vampire is often a cunning gambler of energy. Especially if they have been performing Psychic Drain for a considerable amount of time. They tend to resort to using the lowest necessary energy expenditure for the highest rate of return, and to this end, capitalise on the reptilian urges and desires of ego-based prey. Appealing to the vanities, base sentiments, basic emotions, and standardised conversations of everyday life.

It will generally begin hunting by employing a single tactic [or modus operandi] until it has studied and assessed a potential victim [or 'symbiote' if the prey is willing] and formed a psychic tendril strong enough to begin its rabid feast.

These tactics tend toward being Aloof – i.e., indirect means of getting attention such as secretive or sly mystical/cryptic talk or surrounding oneself with riddles and specific terminology or to be made the centre of attention – but to manipulate circumstances in such a way that it seems the vampire has been elected to be the centre by others rather than itself. Being in places where one will be noticed, acting distant and vague to draw one's attention, creating elaborate works of art or speech and pretending they are nothing, to be reinforced on a consistent and ever-increasing basis – all the while pretending to be completely detached and uninterested in being noticed – these are the wiles of a Psychic Vampire.

Be wary of the guise of perfection and of the need of a person to make things perfect, and strangely static as though they were trying to freeze your happiness in Time, for you. But ever be just, not all idealists are vampires.

That said, there are vampires in every house, in every street, in every city, in every country. There are probably more psychic vampires, owing to the dominance of the ego, than there are stable egos that are not corrupted by their own inflated sense of importance.

~

Psychic Vampires are cowards that like to isolate their prey for themselves. They are highly territorial of prey and in a group, may jealously seek to keep the prey isolated from others. They also do this to prevent their prey from being fed on or feeding any other person, hence the Psychic Vampire is keen at detecting what are otherwise invisible energetic exchanges. To this extent they have been known to allocate secretive jargon and specialist topics of discussion that only the psychic vampire and the person being talked to can understand.

The psychic vampire will often [but not always] latch onto the weakest, most susceptible or insecure person with which they have the greatest proximity and determine what it is that is lacking in their prey that they can supply to endear them to it. If the prey lacks confidence for instance, they may feed their prey and its confidence by a rich and generous energetic exchange of praise and flattery. The intention is to cause addiction to the Psychic Vampire and to the energy it supplies the prey thus deterring the prey from wandering very far or for very long from the Psychic Vampires side. The prey will likely associate itself as a 'team' of sorts with the vampire whereby the vampire will fulfil and pander to any weakness in its prey, giving the prey confidence and security.

This generosity by the psychic vampire will last only so long; however, the psychic vampire will be most anxious to recoup its energy immediately after it is confident that its prey is psychically entangled and will find it hard to break away.

At the point where the relationship has been sustained for a period of a few days, the vampire will test the waters by making self-deprecating remarks intended to draw sympathy [energy] from the prey. The ego of the prey will be more than willing to give back some of the rich stores of surplus energy it has received from the vampire during the generous phase because it naturally loves to gamble. It will attempt to reassure the psychic vampire, in the hope that it can continue receiving the energy given by the psychic vampire, who will at first make it easy for its prey to placate it.

Vampires are crafty and patient. Usually, by the time a person has realised they have been attacked by such a creature, the psychic tendril is deep within them. Strange bouts of impolite or uncomfortable curiosity into one's affairs, jealousy, anger, depression, flattery, praise, insults, etc from an otherwise consistent person may be signs of a vampire losing patience from the effort to hold their deceptive guise.

But over a short amount of time, the vampire will let down its carefully concealed narcissism and gradually depress its prey by being increasingly implacable and unreasonable thus requiring more and more effort by the prey to keep an energetic balance.

The vampire will cease to cloak its priorities and refer more and more to itself, talking about itself, getting attention on itself, luring energy from others by causing them to take notice or comment on some deceptively innocent remark made by the vampire whereupon the vampire will begin draining all it come into contact within the preys circle by causing the conversation to come back to itself.

Owing to the rich increase of energy to the prey's ego from the initial contact with the vampire, there forms an addiction to the vampires' energetic boosts in much the same way one develops a taste for narcotics. A high is caused by the imbalance of so much incoming energy to the ego. Psychological Dependence on the new amounts of energy will cause a corresponding crash when they are depleted. This leads to a change in the psyche via a new and unrealistic sense of identity, similar in many ways to the original narcissism of the psychic vampire. This in itself shows the absolute power a psychic vampire can hold over a person by its knowledge or intuition of these processes and by working as a type of drug-pusher. In fact, the psychic vampire is considered so very dangerous for this ability, because it rapidly disintegrates its preys' own identity and normal energetic stock exchange and causes the prey itself to become a reciprocal psychic vampire too. The psychic vampires gradual change in behaviour is hard enough to notice, but with an energy addiction it will be either ignored or justified by the prey so long as it can continue getting its hit.

Once the prey is hooked, the psychic vampire rapidly increases its drain and sets about to exact a terrible revenge. Its implacability steadily grows until the prey must literally grovel and plead with the psychic vampire to take back its self-deprecating comments, which over time are moved from the belief that they are caused by an external source such as an enemy, parent, etc, and are stemming directly from the actions or inactions of the prey, whose efforts to restore balance by giving energy back to the vampire are now treated as insincere and callous. The prey is called a liar, and so on, in order to extract more and more energy from the hapless host.

We have established that this process occurs because of the insatiable thirst of the psychic vampire caused by an insecure connexion, and the need for greater and greater energy hits – much the same way movies must now be full of horrific violence or gratuitous sex to excite the over-stimulated, worn-out senses that require ever more exciting and strong imagery and sound to achieve the same levels of satisfaction. A psychic vampire is a ravenous addict who quickly exhausts the energy extracted and requires longer and better highs. They do not of course come because of the severed connexion in the mental networking that simply cannot be fixed and loses all the energy poured into it – to this end the vampire is extremely dangerous, a psychopath that will drain every drop of its prey, but keep going back for more, and expect it to be there.

The psychopathology that links the vampire to its prey is extremely dangerous and difficult to destroy – for even a drained husk will be used to some extent in the vampire's repertoire. The vampire is not stupid – it will realise that the drain can only go on for so long, and when the energy drain begins to weaken it will extend its tendrils into those around its prey, inc friends, family and acquaintances. It may even do this on getting to know the prey, setting about charming the circle of the prey in preparation. It may use the prey to get close to another prey or cause dissension via rumours among the prey's circles. It may make the prey an enemy and sow discord that turns others against it, for it will do Anything to get its energetic fix.

At this point, the vampire will utilise any number of tactics to achieve a sufficient level of drain. Verbal or Physical Violence, threats of Violence, Crying, Psychological, Mental, Physical abuse, Harsh and Vindictive treatment, Torture, Pleading, Crying, Making Promises, Appealing to one's sense of decency, generosity, humanity, Religion, Politics, Blackmail, any number of modes of Deception, Silent Treatment, Ignoring the Prey, Causing trouble for the Prey, Killing the Prey.

KILLING A PSYCHIC VAMPIRE

The Psychic Vampire is a relentless psychopath. Because of the enormous damage it can do one must be extremely wary of such creatures, for to excite them carelessly by giving them any attention, making a scene and demonstrating your energetic reserves, making a drama around them that causes them to feed, is like pouring blood into a swimming pool containing a hungry shark. One must be cool, calm, detached, and effortless in getting rid of a vampire – but one must take more care not to first attract one.

A Psychic Vampire has powerful intuition, perception and is able to detect very slight changes in emotion, tension, vocal inflection, or danger to its cover being blown that are otherwise invisible to the average person. But it cannot feel sympathy. It cannot put aside its own interests for very long and because it is driven by a compulsive obsession to drain others, it cannot hide its interests very long. If possible, prey seems like too much trouble, a psychic vampire will opt to find another rather than take the risk of being exposed – for Psychic Vampires have an extraordinary sense for detecting psychically resilient and powerful minds. It hates and shuns anyone possessed of Self – for the Self sees right through the clumsy contrivances of a vampire operating from the ego plane and detects the rabid dishonesty and sweet smelling deception of a vampire, immediately. Time, therefore, will help reveal a clumsy vampire, but of those vampires more subtle it is only a weak help.

To destroy the hold a vampire has on one is hard. Any display of aggression, sadness, annoyance, verbal animosity etc, demonstrates only a reserve of energy that the vampire has not tapped. The vampire will amaze at the depths of its cunning in appraising the situation correctly and winning back the trust of its prey by wordful wiles, sweet promises and laments in the beginning, and leave one breathless with the extent of its destructive capabilities if the prey tries to escape later on when the prey is in much deeper wedlock with its tendrils.

One has ONE chance to destroy the hold a psychic vampire has. Its success depends on abiding exactly to and without weakening the resolve at any point, a silent and cold detachment from the vampire. One must anticipate the many tactics the vampire will devise to continue its drain and be prepared to meet them without emotion, without energetic displays, and the same, resigned, determined, cold, emotionless detachment to ignore the vampire. One must not engage the vampire in conversation, or rise to emotion under the temptation to reply to the vampires' calculated insults and deprecations. One must not accept any gifts from the vampire, any money from the vampire, any favours from the vampire, nothing, no energy transaction either in matter or in spirit must be performed. One must be prepared for the vampire to attack the ones around it and to set them against the prey, to circulate vicious rumours and sweet promises and apologies in the same day. No letters should be read, no replies given to email, letter, phone msgs, any gifts by the vampire should be left exactly where they were delivered. The part of the world that the vampire has entered is to be treated with cold awareness that it has laid a snare to make your world collide once more with its. Flowers, fruits, bears, cars, should be left to wilt, to rot, to age, to rust, as is, without remorse. To give in ONCE, just once, is to show the vampire that if it persists long enough, it will succeed.

Again, to give in at any time, to bother to talk to the vampire, to extend an invitation, to let it take you to dinner to apologise for what it has done, to have anything more to do with the vampire is to court disaster. Only ONE time, one moment of weakness is necessary to show the vampire your inability to break its psychic tendril and leave yourself open to further psychic rape. Because the vampire is patient, it will continually manoeuvre you into a position where it can drain you. If you take it back and then try to break with it again, you will have cursed yourself forever by your weak resolve. The vampire will not believe your adamant reassertions that you do not want it back, and it will pester you, again and again, endlessly, sure of itself that if it only does it long enough, you will give in, as you gave in before.

~

And this raises a question – how many vampires are aware of what they do? Are vampires' conscious of their psychic drain on others or are they oblivious to it?

One member of THEM relates being a strong psychic vampire for a long time. He took much from people until he found the ability to recognise the shortcomings in his energetic networks, work through many things and experiences and identify and complete missing connexions. But there was a dynamic spiritual quest that centred him, a core dynamic that drove his actions toward knowing who what he was and identifying that core with various understandings of relatedness to others – not just being a psychic vampire for its own sake. In this sense he completed himself and found the Self. The Self is nuclear, it burns of its own energy thus there is no need to drain others.

But how many psychic vampires have the luxury of knowing Thyself through such hard work and overcoming the role allotted to themselves? And can other psychic vampires be made to realise what it is they do? The Temple of THEM believes they can be made aware – and can harness that personal "selfishness" and narcissism in a much more powerful manner than merely serving one's own personal ends to supra--personal aims. On that note, a vampire driven by ego and unconscious or operating on a low level of awareness is one thing, a being with the power of Self-awareness who can choose to be a vampire is quite another.

Only a powerful magician can escape the clutches of a vampire with relative ease. For freeing yourself from these creatures involves an understanding that transcends any sense of personal obligations and roles in the world to be this or that to suit this or that and thus fit snugly into the carefully shaped snares of a vampire. A vampire is a master of relations, they will tailor your coffin to fit you if you do not possess a strong immovable sense of self and detachment. Such a personality lacks for little or nothing, recognises the wiles of a vampire and is wary of flattery. It is aware of the subtleties of energetic exchange and the transactions that are enacted secretly but daily by the occult faculties of the mind. In other words, it recognises the whole process of energy exchange and the dangers involved in any gamble. Because the Self is energetically self-sufficient; the gamble is no longer required. A habit of detachment carries over into behaviour and thought – shining brightly in the night as a warning beacon to psychic denizens. Developing the Self weakens any footholds of personality in the ego prone to insecurity and manipulation, makes the motives of the ego transparent, and gives vampires, nowhere to hide.

RITUALIS SANGUINIS SOLIS

Starving a vampire will cause it to use its connexions of family, friends, etc it has made through you. Keeping the vampire in stony silence may prevent it from taking your energy – but the vampire is a hunter, it will move to the next weakest or susceptible prey in the pack and begin to feed once more. To this extent, lies, deception, wiles, and abuse may be directed at your loved ones.

A Vampire must be completely destroyed if one is to kill it physically. Vampires are extremely dangerous if only wounded – the damage they may cause with their silver tongue is incomparable. Hence the head of a Psychic Vampire must be cut off in order to kill it and wrapped in black silk to break its black magical hold on one.

An enchantment using the power of Demaphyr [sleep sketching] can be employed to strengthen the resolve of others victimised by the vampire.

Demaphyr involves working visual magic at the stage of astral sleep where the eyes are shut, the body is almost unable to be felt, and brightly coloured patterns are swirling and forming abstract and intricate geometrical shapes in preparation to take the forms of the night's solid dreams…

In this place, sketch a WHITE box. Make it as real, as vivid as you can, and continue to draw it until each night it comes to you of its own accord.

Also, construct a live BLACK box from wood or cardboard or metal. When you hear from your loved ones or friends of misfortunes or vicious rumours or misdeeds caused by the vampire – propel the emotion felt into the WHITE box of your mind. Let them swirl about inside it, tumultuous and angry, if necessary, but contain them therein privately and show no emotion, talk not of the vampires acts, or acknowledge them. Show no effect of them on you. Nightly, take the energy from your WHITE box, and move it mentally, by intending it, into the BLACK box of reality. Continue to charge the WHITE box with energy in this manner by letting the vampire feed you. Drain the creature dry.

To dissipate the vampire's energy into nothing – When you feel sufficient energy and emotion has been poured into the BLACK box – annihilate its energy by opening it in bright sunlight.

To send the stored, transformed energy into your loved ones that they may resist and fight the vampire, release the energy by opening it in the darkness and think of your families/friends resolve.

Your non-reaction to messages passed on by the vampire and will to channel the tendrils safely into the BLACK box is the power that causes the transformation of the vampire's poisons into protective power. Thus is the vampire dealt with and defeated magically and physically. Its poisons exposed and its destruction executed.

THEM

DEATH OF TOUCH

(Owy of THEM)

So now, over the past 5-10 years or so, touching has been made such a taboo that it is now accepted as the norm that physical interaction with another human is wrong, both something to be feared and shunned. This lack of intimacy and empathy has made people ripe to accept the next stage of alienation – the disillusion of all face-to-face communication for social purposes. We are being bombarded with imagery that implies talking with your "loved ones, family or social circle" is more enhanced with the aid of some micro chipped gadget or another. And although it may seem innocent enough to those that have grown up in an age of constant 'communication', the implications of what is being done, and being allowed to be done, to our most basic and primal of acts, holds the ability to see mankind foster out complete control of the very thing that makes us human.

There are many facets to the mechanics of why and how the Magian elite would and are benefiting from the death of our skills to communicate sans technology.

Initially, through the advent of the office 'Intranet' it imbibed in the common worker that now the "BOSS" had a constant window into every action you performed. As this became an acceptable work environment, then we were plied with mobile phones, touted as a necessity in the 'new' world of business, making it virtually impossible for any worker to truly be free of his workplace no matter what the time or day. This constant pressure has compelled people to start to loath speaking with another person, lest it be more work, more pressure or more oppression. The seed was planted.

But left at just that the average person would have, over time, disposed of their phones and returned to being in charge of their own time. This is when mobile phones started to incorporate new features and functions…games, photos, text messages…to give the illusion that it was an instrument of leisure. And then we were infested. Suddenly everyone had a mobile phone. There is even a marked line in most peoples' heads to reduce history to before the mobile phone and then after…

So now the population had become accustomed to being constantly leashed, believing that communication before had been ineffective and cumbersome, that they were pioneers in a brave new era where mankind would be able to truly speak to each other, that the wisdom and understanding they longed for was merely a matter of being constantly available and constantly heard.

The same thing is true for the internet. Though another leap has been taken with the proliferation of “social media” sites like face book, twitter et el. In that because we choose the people we are communicating with, the ability to interact with people that do not share the same interests/hobbies/political agendas is being erased. Though it can be tiresome, humans have always been compelled to grow through the things that either perplex or affront us. But now technology is being asked to do that for us. By listing your interests etc, you can eliminate the need to ever have to even acknowledge the existence of someone you disagree with.

This is a very dangerous trend. The ability to relate to somebody you disagree with, to be able to discuss the topic without personally attacking the messenger, is vital to human growth. If our ideals/ beliefs/ thoughts are never brought into question, then we will lose the ability to look beyond ourselves. Man trapped in his/her own hype is an easy creature to control and manipulate, so lost are they in a sea of agreement that the very thought of a mistake never crosses their minds. Add to this the anonymity that the cyber world affords its users. Never having to take responsibility for what you create, never truly being able to verify who anyone is.

How easy will it become for the Magian elite to simply redirect the millions of online interactions to anywhere but its intended destination. With the complex task of trying to falsify the complexities of intelligent argument between humans having already been taken care of, people could soon find themselves unknowing ‘chatting’ with a database of responses. In these circumstances it would not take long to strip humanity of its cohesion altogether. After all, those who did not jump upon the cyber bandwagon have become virtual outcasts now, millions made to feel left out nobodies, like they are not part of the emerging new ‘real’ world.

So, all, in opposition we need to laugh, cry, learn, fight, love, fear, fuck, be bored, learn to enjoy embarrassment and discomfort, touch, learn, explore and be with other humans – face to face – lest we lose our delight in the pleasure of life. Lest we give over to those who long to control the spontaneity and impulse of existence. Lest we not live at all.

REMOTE SOLIDARITY

+o+

“And `lo the Black Sea did flicker,

With the flames of a thousand Nexion,

Cosmic blood coursing forth,

Quicksilver of the Vivisection…”

One may ask: how does the Temple of THEM enjoy solidarity and magickal cohesion if its members operate in cells and never meet other cells to conduct group activities?

An answer: Through Empathy.

Empathy is believed by THEM to be a result of contact with the Acausal. While the exact operational nature of the Acausal defies a concrete explanation: it is not dissimilarly represented by the Sea and can be grasped intuitively as an “Other-Dimensional Ocean” that rages beneath our own dimension, the “Causal”.

From the Acausal Ocean a swell [Wyrd/Cosmic Will] is generated that causes waves [Acausal charges] to well up and `break’ [Presence] in the dimension of the Causal. The charges manifest in the Causal as various types of “co-nexion”, a link between the two worlds. One of these co-nexions is the human being.

A gold-fish bowl analogy is apt here. A flat piece of cardboard with straws punched through it is inserted to act as a stopper between two goldfish bowls taped together with their tops touching to form the shape of an hourglass. One bowl, let’s say the lower one, is filled with water to represent the Acausal. The other bowl, the upper one, contains some pieces of sponge, representing matter and the Causal. The straws represent co-nexions between the two worlds. It is through the co-nexions that the Acausal charge passes through into the Causal. Imagine that water from the lower bowl is able to travel up, through and out of the straws, leaking into the top bowl. If there is an unlimited supply of water in the lower bowl, over time, the upper bowl will be flooded. How fast it floods is determined by the width and the number of the straws that the water can flow through. The sponges represent inert matter whereby contact with the water is the equivalent to Change, the result of acausal charge giving life/animation to matter and to us. In turn, Change is the means that leads to an altering of collective consciousness by increasing the number of connexions to the Acausal.

Via this model we can garner an understanding of oceanic displacement that allows the co-nexion to be simultaneously solitary in the causal, but unified with other co-nexions at an acausal level, with empathic communication possible that defies causal limitations of time and space.

Understanding the co-nexion of the Acausal and Causal is important; for what is known as the collective unconscious resides in the Acausal. The manifestation of the stage of consciousness that has been called “Self” is thought to be a result of a human co-nexion directly accessing the subconscious part of them that resides in the acausal.

Thus, accessing the subconscious can be achieved by widening the channel for acausal charge to presence more of its energies. And because an increase in Acausal energy is believed responsible for the inherent genius and original thought that flows from the human nexion, there is significant occult interest in tapping into such a source to potentially create a new species of being with unrestricted access to the subconscious. The Self can thus be said to be a higher receiver: a desirable progression of Consciousness. Some observations have been made regarding the results in the causal dimension of contacting the Acausal. For example, there is a marked increase in collective Synchronicity, where a unique idea surfaces collectively and consciously by many people and at a similar time; or, personal Synchronicity whereby a being experiences magical magnetism to attract improbable and often fortuitous circumstances that assist one to realise their personal destiny, i.e. “Wyrd”. THEM call this “guiding light” – The Acausal Voice. The Acausal Voice is synonymous with “Wyrd”, or in layman’s terms, the `express wishes’ of the Cosmic Will for evolutionary development.

THEM believe that in our six self-types coming together: we have formed an empathic ring that allows a vast torrent of Acausal energy to flow into the Causal. This increased co-nexion with the Acausal has given rise to unprecedented insight, including Remote Solidarity.

Through Remote Solidarity, presencing of the Acausal Voice by the Australian Chapter of Melbourne can assist the work of the Sydney Chapter by, for example, accepting their enemies as our own and synchronising the performance of regular Death Rites to aid and hasten the destruction of those individuals deemed Opfers by the collective will of THEM.

In the death rite the “Aeon of Fire”, empathy with one another is created by psychologically bearing witness to the will of the person who initiated the Death Rite and supporting that person’s aim. Such solidarity aids the cohesion of our members causally– with said ritual further emotively enhanced by the taking of non-sensitive photos as a psychic proof. That a member knows he/she is being supported in their desire acts as a powerful enhancement of their will on a personal level, but to synchronise the performance of focused energies allows the Acausal charges implicit in those individuals to run together causally creating a combined Will of tremendous strength.

It is possible then, and as our enemies approach Imperium; restricting the ability of its opponents to get together physically; even necessary, for isolated pockets of persons to perform powerful magick and Change together via speaking as a co-nexion of the Acausal Voice.

RADIA SOL: EMANATIONS OF THE SELF
– A THEORY –

0.
Opening Statements
This manuscript is the amalgam of two ideas. The first idea comes from looking into the various ideas that deal with the personal alchemy of the Magickian as s/he discards the Ego in necessary favour of the Self.

The second idea comes from my foray into the fields of Science and Physics to educate myself on the basics that I felt I lacked the knowledge of.

The discarding and transcending of the Ego via 'alchemical' processes poses some interesting inferences.

That the Ego is not necessarily the 'be-all and end-all' of our organisms intellectual and spiritual capacity, and that the emergence of a new species of capacity can be attained by shedding the older ego-based skin of the conscious through the harsh alchemical processes mentioned within alchemical-based texts, is interesting enough. But this alchemical angle seems to be quite satisfactorily covered for the moment and my concern and this manuscript aim to explore another aspect of the Psyche: the metaphysical process that enables the Psyche to shift from Ego to Self.

Amongst most other books that cover the subject of Psyche, from the manner in which the aspects of the Unconscious, Ego and Self are attributed to the Psyche, I get the impression they are represented almost as if they were transient beings. As if the Psyche is inhabited by the three individual entities, and 'Ego' for instance, is merely one power in control of the organism at any given time from a choice of three: A triplicate that inhabits the organism as if the organism were a vehicle and one of the three aspects the vehicles current driver. When I found myself wondering if the Psyche could indeed be inhabited by a sort of triplicate life of its own, I began trying to apply scientific principles from an Acausal point of view to work out how these three organisms of the Psyche or 'Psychanisms' might function.

The Ego is integrated with, and ingrained as, part of our conscious, sure. Yet, via alchemy, it is metaphysically possible to increase and decrease its degree of domination, and can even be forced to take a backseat to one of the other aspects as the organism gains conscious recognition of its Ego and enables the Psyche to evolve into the Self. This sounds like a relatively simple enough process in theory. However, when I'd personally apprehended the concept of the Psyche and nurtured the ability to recognise which of the three aspects were dominant within the conscious of others around me: it was increasingly clear how difficult it was for an organism to gain primary consciousness of its Ego in order to enable the move to self.

Given the elite nature of Satanists, I toyed with the idea that this inability for the Majority to apprehend, recognise and overcome the driver of their organism as the Satanist is able to, was due to two things:

The differing degree of mergence of the Acausal with the respective nexions.

The presence of an x factor in the respective organism enabling independent recognition of the dominant power currently driving their organism.

I hypothesise that Self emerges from Ego by virtue of the Self becoming Self-Aware. This self-awareness primarily requires the Self to realise it exists. So how does the Self come to recognise itself, and furthermore become the dominant Psychanism over the virtually absolute dominance of the Ego in many cases, either naturally or magically? It is reasonable to assume that there exists some sort of trigger for the Self's awareness, that such triggers prompt the organism into suddenly becoming aware of the Psychanism in current control.

Yet the 'Psychanisms' are intangible and, from many points of view inseparable: as much a part of us as we are of it. So how does an organism apprehend them? In part, this is where the Alchemical and Magickal working toward the ability to recognise and separate the Self from the Ego may come in. Yet logically speaking, perhaps the Psychanisms recognise their image and become consciously aware of it in the same way as the organism they inhabit does – by its reflection in a mirror?

Esoterically and Sociologically speaking, if one thinks of the manner in which a child's unconscious slowly forms into an Ego, one realises a process occurs wherein the organism is unable to see itself except in other people via the visible external interactions and changes it makes. (Added to of course by Environment, Culture et al until personal identity is achieved) One gets the impression that everyone is looking at everyone and everything else simply to see or more precisely, Define, themselves. Since the myth 'Equality' and the concept of all people being equal has no standing in my hypothesis, perhaps it is the unequal portioning of charge to some individuals via the different degree of individual mergence with the Acausal that enables certain individuals' better recognition and control of their Psychanisms.

Of course, if one views the Self as on the same fundamental mission as the Ego, that is, to see its reflection in other Psychanisms of the same species to reaffirm itself, one can see a distinct major disadvantage in the ratio of Self (rare and highly polished mirrors) to Ego (crass lenses of personal distortion) by which the Self may recognise itself. It is easy to appreciate thus, the rarity of the Self being attained and then kept in power as the dominant Psychanism. Perhaps this vast difference in ratio is the reason for the hermitage of Self-types who seek solace away from the majority, the paradigm of Ego. Nietzsche for example?

Unable to find another Self to reflect itself back to itself, perhaps the Self is forced to seek solace in isolation to try and mirror itself by itself. If this is the case, the ability of the dominant Psyche to grow upon Self-Reflection leads me to surmise that each organism theoretically 'radiates' something to be reflected. Beams of psyche like the light of a sun (Radia Sol) perhaps, which it beams out toward the Psyches of other organisms, using them like mirrors or walls to bounce itself or 'ideas' off. Including of course, anything else that might serve as a mirror, which can be as simple as a book, or as complex as the incommunicable sensations received by virtue of being affected by the matrix. Why? In order to send itself back information about itself to define itself, perhaps continually, in order to stay in dominance over the other aspects of the psyche, and to define which aspect is in control.

The writings below attempt to demonstrate how metaphysically this 'Radia Sol' might work – and I've broken the theory down into several smaller fundamental principles to aid an understanding.

1.
What is a model?
Models, are an integral tool of my ability to artistically interpret and demonstrate concepts, especially those related to Physics, Quantum Theory, or the Acausal for which I lack the necessary knowledge of mathematics to convey. Quite simply, a model is the building of a structure, with bits and pieces arranged and labelled in such a way that the esoteric forces I am trying to demonstrate can represent themselves.

One example of a Causal model might be a diagram or a picture whereby the forces are represented through labels and accepted scientific doctrine. An Acausal example might be when I draw a parallel between a thing that is recognised and known by the majority as a 'Real' or 'Accepted' thing or function within the Causal. Often, I'll use a metaphor to explain that which is beyond cause and effect, allows for x amount of dimension, and is generally not accepted, i.e. the image of a burning sea of oil to represent the Acausal and its nexions.

Take the example of a remote-control car as being the accepted view of a causal Model. It has a structure that is made up of many parts and components, arranged and labelled in such a way that the parts and components can express specific principles actively such as motion, acceleration, inertia, electricity, etc. By its abilities to do so with a remote control, it defines the meaning of the nature of the model as a 'Remote Control Car'. Note that it expresses a range of physics and laws – yet is contained within the postulate, and operates on the presupposition, that there are only four dimensions.

However, in this example, the parts, wheels, frame, motor, gears, etc are often understood by a binding general consensus and are recognised fairly easily by the majority of people. They are familiar parts that go together in a familiar way. Most people are aware the wheels are used to propel the frame, the motor to propel the wheels, the remote control to propel the whole thing… etc etc. While few of the majority, actually understand how it works, they accept this model defined by causal laws and physics and geometry, as representative of the causal, of the 'Real World'.

However, the model I am about to construct is metaphysical. – The 'parts', whilst referred to by names commonly and causally known, may not necessarily have the causal physics associated with that which is alluded to. For example – I may use the word 'wave' but this doesn't necessarily bind my usage of the word to all or any accepted meaning of the familiar word 'wave'. As always with esoteric manuscripts, there are some important things to remember about models used to demonstrate Esoteria before we continue – and these are as follows:

I) The parts that make up the whole of the Acausal model are not solid ineffable terms or descriptions of objects or movements – they are merely abstract inferences to enable the apprehension of the forces or concept being dealt with in a (mostly) common everyday way using parts that are causally familiar. As they are parts in a model, it is easy to think of the word wave for example, as an actual 'wave' and to associate the ideas connected to the word and term 'wave' as being applicable and only applicable to the part labelled 'wave'. This is a fundamental error – since these parts are not intended to represent the actual parts that make up the model, but familiar components used to help give understanding on a basic level necessary to comprehend esoteric ideas. Furthermore, the term 'parts' is misleading since the dimensions of the Acausal are not fitted together like those of a causal model – and the reader is wise to keep in mind that what is described using causal terms cannot represent the actual nature of Acausal forces.

II) The causal motions, effects, or changes that the parts demonstrate upon one another and the model as the parts and their function are explained, are mostly irrelevant, since the model deals with the Essence, the Idea behind the model. And it is this Idea behind the model, separate from the parts and familiar associations with the parts themselves, that I seek to bring to light.

III) The model is not infallible – it is after all only a model. Too often criticisms are found with the model before the Idea which the model is trying to elaborate – (and catch 22, can rarely do, without the use of such models) is apprehended. Too often the appearance is observed and not the essence. This fundamental flaw in perception develops the Projection that is the bane of all such esoteric models. Since sure, while the parts of a model exist as they Are, unless one is able to view the Idea behind the parts – one will never understand essence. And it is this raw numinous genius that is alone important. The model is not a representation of the actual Essence of the Idea but uses familiar forms to demonstrate it. Essence, which is without causal form -relies on the limited forms available to an individual to express itself in a causal way – and is therefore a difficult concept to apprehend, work with, or show to others.

IV) The ability to see the Idea behind the model, from the model, and think beyond the model is paramount. It enables latent genius to presence itself – and not necessarily the genius of the model's maker, but that which comes from another individual who grasps and then evolves the Idea in ways the model maker may have not thought of. The more organisms capable of apprehending the Acausal the more chance of eventually representing it on its own terms, in Acausal ways.

V) To better understand my model, you will require some knowledge of 'Wave Mechanics'. I of course assume that like myself, when faced with a subject of which one knows nothing or very little about – you undertake the necessary research to remedy this. For my model, I have posited the reality of wave mechanics and built up the theory from this postulate.

2.
Wave Mechanics – A Crash Course

Wave Behaviour:

A wave rises and falls as it travels – the rise and fall are called Crest and Trough respectively. The distance between Crest and Crest or Trough and Trough is called a Wavelength.

Wave Frequency:

The number of wavelengths that pass a certain point in a given amount of time is called the waves Frequency.

Interference:
If two waves meet each other of the same frequency, both the Crests and Troughs of those waves combine and increase in size as they run together or phase. This is called Constructive Interference. If two waves of the same or different frequency meet each other halfway however, the waves do no overlap perfectly, and the crests and troughs of the waves do not coincide. This is called Destructive Interference.

If two identical waves are exactly half a wavelength out of Phase, the crests of one wave lined up with the trough of the other wave, these waves cancel each other out and no wave appears. There are also complicated waves in which phase and wavelength are out of sync a bit, making them both constructive and destructive in different places.

Note: Electrons are/embody both wave/particle properties: the more energy that an electron has the shorter its wavelength. Any point in any wave could be the location of the Electron. At the time of writing Electrons cannot be pinpointed in time and space and this peculiar occurrence is referred to as Quantum Physics.

My aim in showing you some wave mechanics is to demonstrate the complexity of waves and the myriad of ways in which they can interact with one another.

This is an important part in the model but remember; the part is not to be understood as strictly adhering to the properties of wave mechanics, but is instead an unknown quality only re-presented by the use of waves.

3.
Emanations
Now to familiarise you with my concept of 'Emanations'. The following is not a detailed study of emanations, but instead aims to give you the reader what is popularly known as 'the gist'. Most people are familiar with "vibes" / (vibrations). A typical example would be "getting bad vibes/ good vibes". Often this phenomenon occurs without the individual even being in a position to get the usual sensory information when making a customary good/bad judgement. For example, most of us are aware of our '6th' sense when someone is watching or following us in a sinister fashion. What gives us the feeling, the 'vibe', that something bad is about to happen, or that we are in danger despite our other senses lack of alert – neither hearing, seeing, smelling, touching, or tasting, danger?

It's common to get a bad feeling about a place, but more specifically from people, to feel comfortable or uncomfortable in the presence of strangers, because of the way they seem to give off or emanate some kind of good or bad feeling from within themselves. This is the intuitive at work surely – but then if it cannot see, hear, touch, taste, or smell a bad situation, what does it intuit? Is it possible organisms give off frequencies or wavelengths by our energy, matter, chemical composition, or some such thing? – That we beam or radiate good/bad feelings like satellites sending signals, and likewise receive good/bad signals without the aid of sensory input that tell us the nature of the invisible something is okay/not okay? Perhaps when two such identical frequencies meet that's how we get people 'on the same wavelength'? I won't be going into such possibilities too deeply here, since it's a topic that is already much thrown about in Occult and Scientific circles under terms like fields, magnetism, aura etc… and is already a familiar concept to most by nature, usually just under a different name.

Based on my own experiences with 'having aura' and 'giving vibes' I've postulated that they exist and radiate from within an organism. I refer to these vibes, the giving off of waves or frequencies or charge or what have you, as 'emanation'. If we emanate, if we possess a vibration that emits telltale signals of our nature, and I feel we do, why do we do it and how?

I aim to demonstrate my theory with a theoretical model. A theoretical model subject to the above stipulations about the nature of the parts and the whole of the model, the purpose of the model, and herein attempt to sweep aside the confines of the Causal and its forms to illustrate 'Radia Sol'.

4.
The Theoretical Model assumes the following postulates exist:
That three Aspects within the Psyche are vying for dominance: Unconscious, Ego and Self. That each of the Aspects emanates and that dominant emanation by an Aspect ensures dominance over the organism by that Aspect.

That the Aspects emanate both independently and simultaneously with the others in differing degrees. That an Aspect uses emanation to recognise itself as the dominant aspect, and then continually emanates to affirm dominance and define itself.

That Aspects are able to emanate a vast range of frequencies and even match the frequencies emanated by other Psyches.

That the frequencies emitted are subject to some or all of the laws of wave mechanics.

That the Ego is the dominant Aspect in the majority.

That the dominance of an Aspect can and does vary in degree within an organism.

That the Self can act independently of the Ego and the Unconscious and vice versa.

That the emanations emitted by all three Aspects, whilst invisible to the eye or modern science at present, radiate from one Psyche to/through/at/into/etc other Psyches constantly and ceaselessly and can be observed by the nature of interaction with ones total environment or "Matrix".

That the Aspects use emanation like echo-sound to recognise themselves.

That Ego emanations are different to Self emanations – requiring different environments to succeed in dominance.

That Ego uses other Ego's to remain dominant, and Self uses other Self to do the same.

That distortion takes place within the emanations unless identical aspects are interacting.

That Higher consciousness and a shift from Ego to Self can be achieved if one finds a location that does not distort the echo of its emanation.

With this in mind we can now proceed to the Theory.

5.
Radia Sol : Emanations of the Self- A Theory.
The Emanations of the Self in my theory are best thought of as waves.

Ever, you emit the frequency of your Unconscious, Ego, and Self in unique waves, like ripples on a pond, out onto the ether. Intuitively seeking to Be.

A vast expanse of millions of other Unconscious, Ego, and Self are also unconsciously or consciously emitting frequencies.

The Organism (via acausal energies) projects differing emanations onto the ether (these can be thought of as 'questions') to other organisms simultaneously. Seeking to 'Be', to become dominant, demands that the Aspect order chaos to know its own image, its own being. Therefore, these emanations are the base nature, the 'feelers' of the Organism that bounce ideas, conversation, interaction etc, off other Organisms (mirrors) in an attempt to put together a picture of what it actually looks like – and what it is that actually exists.

The received replies from these mirrors can be thought of as ‘answers’.

Each of the three Aspects vies for domination over an Organism’s psyche but the aspect that receives more replies to its emanations than the other two is selected as the dominant driver of an organism. Usually however, the natural process of life takes an Organism through these three Aspects, the last emerging during mid-life of an Organism or after particularly harrowing or harsh experiences. Over the last two thousand years this ability of the Self to become dominant and maintain its power has been vastly diminished due to a lack of Self-types, processes used to reach self and the excess majority of Ego-types.

What makes the attainment even more difficult is the distortion of the matrix by Magian design that has allowed so many of the immature Ego-types to breed but does not allow progress to the next stage of the mature Organism, the Self.

Hypothetically, ‘answers’ are received, processed, assimilated and more ‘questions’ sent out. However, if the emanations act somewhat like waves, then perhaps they are not always directly focused at a receiver but emanate like a sun rather than a laser, and both ‘questions’ and ‘answers’ are subject to chaos. The infinitesimal number of organisms all emanating at once could be represented as the outward spreading of ripples on the surface of a pond after a stone has been thrown in. Eventually the joining of separate ripples occurs as more stones are thrown in until so many stones are thrown in that the ripples become unrecognisable. Emanations, being bounced and rocketed from one location (location: an abstract plane of projection such as an idea, concept, form, human construct or even another human etc) to another, are possibly altered by similar properties as are the waves in wave mechanics. Stronger waves may assimilate, distort, fragment other waves over and over again, they may even cancel other waves out. Resulting in a perpetual tumultuous multitude of confusion and chaos. Especially when you consider that a little like the game of paper, scissors, rock, the three different aspects emanate differently and the effect of each from one psyche on each aspect of another psyche, allows for virtually infinite outcomes. Perhaps this chaos could be likened to ‘Sensory Perception’ if these emanations are also what serve to define dimension, relativity, and order (ad infinitum) of our Organism in relation to the matrix?

However – this confusion of the process from Unconscious to Ego to Self reigns because of the domination of the Majority by the Ego. The Ego, using other’s organisms to reflect itself off where the dominant Aspect is also the Ego, mostly operates in a causally contained frame of reference, subject to causal distortion and all manner of postulates of reality, and is inherently a contradiction to itself via the positing of 'opposites' for example. If Self generates Self, then Ego generates ego, and with so MUCH Ego the likelihood of a Self being created instead, is very slim. What we are experiencing in terms of Aeonics, is the perpetual creation of 'Organism without Self' – a bi-partmental Psyche, a global populace in psychic limbo.

On the rare occasion when the organism becomes aware of Self, a search or echo-scan for other Self's is begun by that Organism. It tries to find a location where it can refract itself – in order to define itself. By virtue of the Organism being aware of Self, this scan for other Self is more focused than the scan performed by the Ego. The Self temporarily no longer in thrall to illusions, no longer sends it waves out in all directions, but in focused bursts to specific receivers to attain a direct reply. But to get feedback requires the highly polished mirrors that other Selfs are, that are very rare. Perhaps given the unique nature of emanations, a Self has different specifications for what it can and can't reflect itself off. However, unlike the Ego, I hypothesise that the emanations of a Self are not altered by absorption of the emanation by the Other Self, nor does the mingling or phasing of the original emanation occur as it does in Egos, creating a mongrel hybrid. That is to say, when the emanation of an Ego is absorbed by another Ego, it is distorted and mingled into a different refraction or wavelength containing emissions of that Ego as well as the original. Or the emanation is split into more than one wave, part of which is refracted elsewhere and only part of an echo or none at all received. Or the Ego even receives a foreign echo created elsewhere but which is interpreted as the reply to the emanation sent out.

I believe this distortion is not applicable between Selves. A Self is a complete Whole comprised of both anima and animus, no longer in need of a 'half' (either feminine or masculine) to complete itself and as such is no longer dependant on finding halves to complete (usually just compliment) itself as is the task of the Ego. Therefore, it has no need for either feminine or masculine emanations as given off by the Ego and, basically, negates them.

Often however, the Self is unable to find a similar complete receiver to refract itself off and either seeks solace, loses dominance and is once again replaced by Ego, or perhaps in extreme (or typical?) cases, dies, and the Organism loses any chance of becoming Self-aware again.

Just as we seldom see our own physical organism or what we look like from an external view, but instead possess notions of such that give us our own personal definition of ourselves, perhaps the Self actively seeks to view its own image by sending internal emanations to the external sources around it, hoping for a mirror. And just a mirror – since because it is a complete whole it no longer needs any other organisms' input but its own to see itself. But without this mirror – it cannot Be. The Idea or Process of seeking to be Self is more often than not stifled early, and even murdered in many people by society seeking to suppress recognition of this aspect. This makes finding a suitable mirror for the Self to refract off all the more difficult and random to achieve. Perhaps then, when the Self finds such a rare mirror in which to 'become' more of itself, and gains precedence over the organism as the dominant Psychanism – it operates on an entirely new system no longer using emanations for the same purpose? Perhaps it gains an increase of concentration and control over its emanation and uses it more like a laser than a radiating wave to cut through egos, so great its power it is no longer is applicable to the same restrictions imposed upon an ego by having or being in thrall to the ego.

Yet in those rare moments when the Self is able to find such a higher receiver, and when two Selfs emanate their Self and nothing more – (achievable only via that intangible quality, Self-Honesty) the two Selfs are able to refract each other's emanation without absorbing or mongrelizing it because each Self is of its Self, is whole, rejects all other input but its own and has no interest in projecting the Self onto others.

However – in the case of a Self needing a Self to become dominant, the paradox is posed – how does the Psyche become Self if one cannot find a mirror – in other words, how does the Self find a mirror if in the first place there are no Selfs? It seems difficult to imagine a Self being formed prior to being Self already – but therein the alchemical and magickal training of individuals to recognise and overcome the Ego makes possible the existence of Selfs out there. Furthermore, Jung suggests that the Self is naturally attained for a period of time, but the dominance of which must be worked at to maintain or lost again, and usually forever. Therefore, it is possible to find such mirrors and doesn't necessarily require two organisms to enable recognition of Self via a mutual transaction.

In the case of the Self evolving on its own, in my opinion the power of self-honesty is the sheer power of all – and using this power to complete oneself, a Whole needs no additional input to function. With no energy expended in 'echo location' trying to see the Self anymore, the Self is self-empowered. (Continuing with the metaphor of the Sun, they self-replicate like a thermonuclear explosion). If the Self only refracts itself, the power can only grow, since it is Self-Effort, Self-Love, Self-Achievement, Self-Awakening, and Self-Awareness that occurs. If this is the case, the Self wouldn't expend its energy carelessly like the Ego does, and perhaps an excess of power ensues which flows over or spills, onto other aspects of the Self's drive to power – 'Wisdom' maybe, or Enlightenment, or other such things. If this could occur en masse perhaps with more and more Selfs balancing (or at least increasing) the ratio of Self to Ego; the charge, the power, of the Cosmic might become perpetual as the Selfs start to become more dominant making more and more mirrors available to potential Selfs.

6.
Closing Statements:
This model/theory may not provide 'food for thought' for all, or even for many – but it does offer a different perspective on how we function and why. The Theory can be superimposed over all human interactions to explain their mechanics by virtue of emanation. Why humans don't get along, why misunderstandings or love occurs between us, how we find enlightenment, why so few people ever reach enlightenment, or why the chaos exists in our lives, our ideas, our identities, our experiences, and our heads, for example. Furthermore, it offers an esoteric explanation of how the three (psychological) aspects of an organism might function rather than the accepted dual view of our organism and psyche combined as the one inseparable power which drives us: namely, as a sort of will to power to become dominant, lest it become recessive and replaced. It's hardly an overestimate to suggest the fierce domination of the Ego-mirror in societies overshadow the rare and often easily broken Self-mirror a million to one – perhaps more. Without a healthy Renaissance (Satanic, for example) in which organisms are enabled recognition of the three Psychanisms, perhaps we are killing our Selves simply because they have lost the will to live. It's no small wonder in such a climate hostile even to emergence of the Self that it hibernates. But to let the Self sleep, is to die a slow and insidious death, deafened and maddened by a ceaseless, pointless, bombardment of Egoic emanation.

Tnepres Ra 114.e.h

RADIA STAR: CREATING ONE OF THEM

Temple of THEM -2011 /122fy.

My Work and my Writing – My Approach and My Motive and Methodology is given in this short manuscript and the Alchemical formula that Drives me. I reveal here the Blueprint of my Work that Others may understand or follow it.

The dominance of the 'I' in people must be dislodged enabling the unconscious processes and actions of their ego to become consciously observable to them via the creation of a new stream of consciousness.

They must understand how they make suppositions, projections, abstractions, tensions, create time, space, form and how they themselves cause these through the Engine of their Perception.

The successful result of this alchemical is to cause a specific Doubt of their Autonomy that leads to a brief Collapse of the Ego and the Emergence of the Self. As if – they [the emergent Self] were suddenly operating from another room in the back of their skull, watching their Ego working away at the controls of their Organism as a separate entity or function.

Once this split-mind state occurs there is no going back. Evolution has been achieved. There is nothing more for you to do. Their mind ceases to perceive itself as a Singularity and the individual becomes THEM – a compartmentalised being acutely conscious of sharing its being with more than one function – both of which it may use, rather than the one. This is Evolution of the Mind.

To Kill the Machine – means to Dislodge that which keeps it running. Which is precisely – the supreme and singular dominance of the Ego which most Identify as themselves. But to Warn the Ego of an attack is a fatal error – if it senses danger it hardens and becomes immovable. It cannot be directly approached and can only be drawn out slowly – much as a psychologist must dance around the issues of his patient so as not to frighten him and also to allow the individual to come to the Realisation on their Own. Thus, the Ego must be tricked into defeating itself. Its abstractions must be torn apart piece by piece / its processes broken down and made visible to that individual so that a Special Instant occurs in that Individual similar to an Out of Body Experience – With the Exception that is it Out Of Mind. In this Instant, a sudden Flash of the Awakened Self can see the actions of the Ego consciously. This can be done one by one very slowly – or, via our creation of Magickal Socialism, people can be affected in much larger numbers.

Magickal Socialism is a specific incantation this Temple has created to weaken the Ego based on what we know about how to lower its guard. This generates the correct emotional state in many people at once necessary for Change. It bears resemblance to National Socialism – and uses a similar current that made NS magical – but it should not be mistaken for it. There are Others like us – who are of a split-mind and consciously, suspiciously regard their Own motives. Our movement has sought and seeks them out. We can do nothing for an Individual who has already Evolved but we Seek THEM out to give Them a Collective Home. Our Directive is to target those who have not Evolved or Show Signs of being on the Cusp of Self- Awareness. The Simple truth is that the Banner of Satanism represents an ancient Instability of the Mind whose Current attracts those who are less resistant to Change and who may have more chance of Re- Connecting with their Total Mind – and it is for this reason alone that our Mythos is wound about Darkness.

Creating One of THEM is an extraordinarily difficult process – it is often lengthy and the process(es) required varies from individual to individual, instant to instant. It is made all the harder should the target Ego be put on alert that such a process is being attempted.

Now you understand the simple reason behind the secrecy of our motives and our movement.

I remain convinced, that whilst it may take many decades of effort – if enough of THEM can be created who create other Them using this formula. The power structure of the Magi attained through its purchase of the mind – made possible through the unconscious possession of people that keeps them in Thrall to Forms – will be utterly destroyed.

We May Not See this Event in Our Lifetime. But I am Committed. And Believe that We have discovered the Secret and the Antidote to the Poison of the Magian.

May Our Tendrils Spread Across Space and Time and Deliver Us from Evil.

SELF, EGO AND TRADITIONAL SATANISM

The Magical Quest to fervently identify the Self and subsequently eradicate the ego is often driven by a misguided perception that the ego is in some way responsible for limiting an organism, and that a being should try to exist wholly on the plane of the Self. The attempt by magicians to achieve this particular process has long been understood to be highly dangerous and is owing to a lack of experience and the hapless reliance on hearsay and the opinion of books to judge it. There is in fact a fork in the road in reaching the Self: one can either leave the world and contemplate the silent desert, or one can fulfil one's destiny as one of THEM. This essay is concerned with fulfilling one's destiny as one of THEM and the appropriate outlook concerning the volatility of forbidden alchemy.

To be one of THEM – The ego is a force necessary to harness, but not to destroy. Instead of being annihilated completely, the ego must be allowed to continue to play a role in relation to the Self. Once the Self is developed, it rules over, but can only rule through, the ego. When in an organism there is no Self-conception or connection, the ego is as believed, an inhibitor. But when the Self is developed, the dynamic changes and it becomes as an actor: and the invaluable messenger of the Self's will.

When the Self is attained one must make a choice. One can attempt to live solely in the realm of the Self by disintegrating ones ego. But, without the ego, there can be no relatedness to the world. Zen meditation for instance is the complete turning of the back on substance, on the causal, on the material, and the identity, to this extent, the being no longer has any connexion with the world and ceases to be a vehicle of change in it, except for those elements where the absence of their input/being may impact on the world.

Yet to do this is to annihilate one's physical being. Although it is the aim of many occult/magical temples and groups to achieve just this, THEM believe, attaining Self is not to be thought of as a discarding of the shells/skulls one has wrought, but to finally appreciate being able to perceive directly Form and Formlessness in the currents and seas of change from a elevated level of awareness that sharpens power, perception, and magical prowess to the extent of Adept-ship. Then, having passed through the Abyss, one is tempted sorely. To turn toward God and Samadhi and reach for oblivion, thus abandon the world to its fate by ceasing to exist or have impact on the world. Or to make one's way back, returning enlightened as a Dark God to yolk the ego [the only connexion with those still in the matrix] into forms driven by the extreme power of the Self, that have the power to raise others unto similar awareness. And not only to raise others on a personal level (for the alchemy that is wrought by a Dark God is viewed egocentrically by organisms that remain trapped in the matrix) but to raise Consciousness in general – to have an Aeonic effect upon the world through a supra--personal level of relatedness to it. The formidable increase in magical prowess in an agent imbued with Self has the potential to be an extremely powerful weapon in the Mind/Aeonic War – by directing others into a group, then a culture, then a civilisation as per the ONA understanding. But not just physically, but also magically, and to show others the way to find their Self and join us in transforming the World one mind at a time. And this, beyond the restrictive games played by the immature ego.

From our point of view, to return with our knowledge and raise others up into the stars by offering a clear and demystified view of magic – is a type of supra-personal sacrifice of one's option to go further into the Abyss and leave others behind.

Thus, in order to keep the power to conduct change from the platform of the Self in others and the world, one must not lose the power to manifest a form. One is required to remember how to come to others in a recognisable form – to occupy a body, a name and an identity through which one can be perceived – as an agent in the physical world. The ego is a precious vehicle once tamed, and if a magician has a goal, an aim, a Quest to continue change, it must be enslaved to the will of the Self, not destroyed.

Means of developing, recognising and finally living the Self are rumoured to be held by most of the world's occult communities. Members of THEM believe, based on our experience with other groups and with the ONA, that the Septenary Way is, in practice, a valid and valuable vehicle for achieving this rare Philosophers Stone. The Way, if it is understood, culminates the magical perpetual alchemy necessary to cause eternal unrest in one's absolutism – hence the alchemy of the triangle that is always squared [Thesis, Antithesis, Synthesis – Synthesis becoming the new Thesis and another Antithesis arising as a reaction to this giving rise to another Synthesis, and so on…] can eventually cause the ego to 'drop out of its own geometry'. In tandem with the Way awakening various grounding energies, connexions to the land and to magic, insight roles, alchemical harshness, solitude and a working model for grasping the world by its horns, all necessary to instilling vital affinity with the world as it is, not as it has come to appear – the Order of Nine Angles offers a path that really does lead to the hallowed ground of finding the Self. Because it is shown to work at least by the six of us, the Way is considered the first journey for one of THEM to undertake and is held in revere and promoted to others. There is no desire to compete or surpass what already works as a fine foundation for this difficult magical process. What comes after the Way is where the Temple differs from ONA by its teachings in what we have written and taught.

After succeeding (unless destroyed) in the Way, a being may feel drawn to what comes after – and we believe, drawn to the Temple of THEM via synchronicity and an acausal bond with others who have attained the Self and rightly perceived the power in returning to work magic rather than heading onward into oblivion. After our decision to return we raised a nexion [The Temple] to gather at – for as stated in our manifesto and elsewhere, we believe that our empathic ring of six Selves has come to understand much that was hidden and that the world requires a sanctuary for the emerging forces of the species of Self.

COLLECTIVE WILL

I believe that the collective will is an abstraction for an ideal that we secretly share some unifying sense of direction; though there is evidence that we do in fact do this – though not in any ingrained ethical moral sense – this appears to be learned behaviour.

The individual will is structured by psycho-physical drives such as fear, absence of fear, survival, the social contract, will to power, and the geometry of the ego that defines and delineates a being's goals and methods to attain them, i.e., what is important to do or achieve for that being. The individual will must be sacrificed any time it joins with another individual will to work on a joint venture; when this happens I refer to people raising a form – wherein the form subjugates (restricts) each individual will by dampening it with laws, restrictions and rules about what it is allowed to do and how it should do it; though often, individual will is required to be poured into the collective sentiment of the form. For example, the Temple of THEM attempted to unite individuals without becoming a group; hence we had no symbol, no banner, and virtually no restrictions – yet in order for people to grasp we were even there, we had to speak the language of forms. We had to create a 'temple', the name of our group, a mythos and story behind it, initiation procedures, and so on – this required distorting what we intended esoterically because all forms distort and create unintended suppositions due to the behaviour and interpretation of language and its ‘meanings’.

My experiment with them showed only that the individual will and thus individuation as Jung speaks of, cannot be achieved in a group environment no matter how few restrictions are imposed. Since, if you impose none, how can you have a group at all? If you impose too few, the necessary structure for a form to take place is missing. If you impose too many, you cease to represent the meaning of THEM and become a dogmatic religion that is merely copying the present oppressors…

Collective Will is for me a moral term – the individual will is more or less toward self-destruction (since without a group of some kind one cannot traditionally survive) – whilst the collective will is toward construction (since ideals, concepts, and symbols live on long past the causal duration of the human life that gave birth to them). But to assume a collective will as ‘real’ cannot be done lightly, if at all – rather, it is a term used (and I use) to provide a sense that there is a level of potential harmony within the chaotic elements that abound in any scheme that meets real-world conflict of interest with ideology.

But when all is said and done it is a support, a construct, a working theory – like all other abstracts, whose evidence for and proof of, rests on the absolute conviction in abstracts; inc. definition, words, language, and so on. And it is rather this uneasy shaky ground where abstracts begin to dissolve with one’s conviction of things that I believe the esoteric truth of being and forms begins to reveal itself. If there is a collective will – it appears to be toward avoiding fear, working within the concepts of its day, tradition, repetition of archetype, and owing to the need to escape fear (which is all around us in our architecture – and I don’t just mean buildings, but language, logic, music, methods etc) an obsessive secretly deferred desire for self-gratification. I would also, optimistically, agree with Jung that individuation is the main collective goal – hence the internet which has joined us all together, PC which is attempting to break down barriers (but sadly just increasing them), and the unerring penetration of the unconscious into our dreams, symbols and turns of phrase, as some examples, which however strongly we repress – has not gone away and is a constant reminder of our fusion from animal to human being and the other processes that drive us beneath our sugary form-covered exteriors.

However, politically speaking – (i.e., in the sense of winning friends and converts) Collective Will is often used to denote a shared agreement (whether people are aware of a particular shared will or not is usually the sticky point) – i.e., the Nazi’s told the German People what their collective will was, as did the Americans, and all other nations with a flag, a culture, an identity and often an ideology or religion. This entrapment in forms keeps most people too busy to ever really consider what is outside those things – and works to create our architecture. Globally – our psycho-physical drives dictate our collective will is survival – and so we make concessions to maintain it by keeping the peace or disturbing it.

CONSPIRACY AND THE NEW WORLD ORDER [1-5] V.3

A particular Conspiracy needs to be proved. The potential for Conspiracy does not.

INTRO
The concept of the New World Order – like a lot of subjects I've tried to cover through 101 – is extremely difficult terrain. I will however present a few of my thoughts on it from a few different angles because I believe the New World Order (NWO) and the presence of 'conspiracy theory' as a prevalent form at large shares relationships with many of the insights I have made and is tied up with secrets of the human condition. As with other subjects I have looked at, I will try to neatly side-step the dizzying labyrinth of historical nomenclature and avoid getting tangled in who did what and said what – none of which I have any evidence for outside of general knowledge, legend or what is observable; and concentrate on where conspiracy comes from, the role it plays as conscious theme, and perhaps the role it might play as a symptomatic indication of something deeper regarding human need and geometry. I will also touch on the Magi and how there may be a conspiracy behind conspiracy that has imprisoned us for millennia. The Gnostic idea of a demiurge who created a false replica earth to imprison us may at first sound outlandish like many other occult concepts of creation – yet my work is increasingly uncovering evidence that there may be more to it than just mythology after all.

PREP
Many years ago, I read the 'Protocols of Zion' – and for anyone who doesn't know what that is, (It's been uploaded to 101) it's sometimes called the 'Granddaddy of conspiracies' and involves an allegedly faked global charter put together by an elite cabal of secret Jewish conspirators as a step-by-step plan to take over the world. The document details a breakdown of practical steps needed to achieve global domination by covert and over measures and methods including manipulating economic pressures via usury, breeding out gentiles and infiltrating gentile society by becoming doctors, lawyers, teachers and other highly positioned socialites within the infrastructure of the gentile to take power and unite against the enemy as one. Presently there is a collective body of testimony that claims the Protocols were faked by the Nazis to get the Jews in trouble. Whether this is true I do not know – and remain undecided – but aside from the frightening lucidity of each of these plans, there is a chilling statement at the end of the document which basically says – 'the proof of any conspiracy lies in what has happened around you – look around you and ask yourself, has what they said would happen, happen?' At the time of writing (2010) I see evidence and live in a world where almost every section of the Protocols can easily be argued to have been implemented. Coincidence? Maybe. Conspiracy? Maybe. If I suddenly turn to discussing the Protocols and attempt to show evidence to prove either way a conspiracy by the Nazis or the Jews; or enter at all into the finer details brought up by the Protocols – according to my approach – I immediately lose a significant amount of information this form is expressive and representative of and enter a labyrinth of aimless semantics. The loss of information I often point out (In 'Ethereal Discourses' for instance) is important here. It is common practice among humans to rely on precedent – i.e. we can discuss something like the Holocaust at length because a lot of information, many views, and seven decades of propaganda from both sides for or against this topic have left a hefty mountain of records and information behind for us to build various cases.

Based on what we have read, or had told us, or imbibed from television, juggled in our heads to sort out the truth – we can go head-to-head in debate against certain opposing views using precedent – dates, decisive military manoeuvres, psychological brainwashing, reports of force, first-hand accounts, footage, photographs, and records; weighing in our evidence to prove or disprove the opposing view. We strengthen our case using precedents, and weaken another's case using precedents – these precedents are generally things that have been proven, accepted as fact, historically recorded, taught in school, written down, or put together by our logical deduction and are accepted as given – but the carrier of such facts itself, i.e. language, moral judgement, ethics, how we prejudice time and space, all weigh in heavily in the relationship – yet are seldom ever analysed. They are treated as pre-existing proven methods of communication – but they are not. This is precisely why all the intelligence, well-read intellectuals, scholars, academics, and so on do not necessarily have greater awareness and lucidity no matter how eloquent or educated. Education tends to cram the brain with catalogues of forms – which are then compared against each other in logical deduction and critical analysis – but without a heuristic analysis of one's own method of enquiry and indeed the general methods of enquiry – empathy with oneself and others remains low, trapped in prisms of words and concepts that bounce endlessly off one another without ever allowing us closer to the source of what we are and how we work.

The majority of occult teachings are human-centred self-masturbation, cliched romanticism about how great we are, how aware we are, and how different some of us are from others far less unintelligent than ourselves; Enlightened, Initiated, Adept, set apart, or so we like to think. The major problem is the ego – it often refuses to be humble, to accept its own failings, to drop its ridiculous self-important visage and allow the stasis it holds so tightly in check – to be dropped so that it can accept an insult for its own good. In a typical conversation regarding the conditions at Auschwitz, precedents (proof/facts) are presented to build a case for one's argument. Following who has the most accurate information, i.e. a guard at Auschwitz may be in a better position to give a clear account of what happened because s/he was there – unless we opt to believe a surviving prisoner of war whom we suspect would be more likely to tell the truth and the guard keep things back to protect themselves, minimise damage, avoid punishment and condemnation etc. In every case where people argue about the War (any war – or in fact, anything at all) – they use precedent (facts, dates, names, proof, first-hand knowledge and cross-reference)– because the War is long gone, many years in the past, precedent is all they have left to prove it ever existed. They therefore compare dates, military decisions, motivation, personal ambition of leaders, tactics and pressures put on the civilians, propaganda, subtlety of persuasion, conversations allegedly had between parties, anecdotal evidence, surviving diaries of prisoners and guards, personal accounts and almost always quote someone who has says something that adds weight to their case. Even if they were present at the War – reports and accounts by people widely vary, especially as regards sensitive issues – for all sorts of reasons, as many as you can think of – and because of this, the variables of information recorded are far too nebulous and vast to ever be sure of their authenticity.

Each human being is possessed of a unique perspective, motivation, memory, associative catalogue for instance, and as a result, people tend toward remembering different things, placing importance on certain things, and things differently [See 'Physis of the Sinister' for loss of information theory]. Consider also that whilst people are social creatures, communicating a great deal to each other with words – in each of us thrives a hidden world; our eyes fall on different places in the world, focus importance in different degrees, take things differently, find different things important, memorable, etc. There is ample evidence to show this is true – in the way hundreds of thousands of different authors who all attended the gulf, Vietnam, or World Wars remember them and what they remember about them. How it affected them or others. This shows how extremely important it is for such stories to be recorded – because subconsciously, they each know the unwritten rule of human history – that if it doesn't exist in some record or another – it never happened. And it never happened – because it was never recorded. The onus for so many things – the rock of science – is on providing 'proof'. But unless we experience firsthand a location or event, we only know of things – and here are a few conspiracy based examples; UFO's, Crop Circles, Aliens, Area 51 – by precedent only.

But if enough scientific magazines pick up and support something, even if its complete theoretical nonsense that speculates on things existing so it can speculate on other things existing without any evidence for the first thing, (Stephen Hawking's – universe in a nutshell for instance) it enters popular culture and can become accepted. Within a few years, 'Quantum' will have always existed for the generation born after me. If we are with a group of people who refuse to acknowledge in speech or writing that what we saw was what they saw, the truth is silenced in favour of conspiracy. It is one thing to observe a UFO landing in a field, quite another for it to have ever happened. I wrote in an earlier post that, in my opinion, you'd have to be blind or deaf to not realise the thousands of mini-conspiracies around us in everyday life.

Music, what we listen to, is a conspiracy, for instance – people conspire to make you buy it, support it, report it. Time, its enforced, and God help you if you refuse to acknowledge it. Roads, they direct your car where to go, it's not easy to go where they don't lead. The traffic lights tell you when to go and stop. Computer games keep you occupied in your house doing destructive things in a virtual world instead of spending that time out on the street doing them for real. Every second you are entertained, you are controlled by someone whose graphic design, dialogue, symbolism, presentation, sales pitch, utilities, is making you think 'frog juice' is PowerAde. And you believe it, because you are trained from birth to pick up the habits of your peers and copy them. You are equipped with the training program and the tools to discern the difference between the two, but never taught to question the training program. There are measures in place that conspire against us daily in thousands of ways from birth to death. I'll cover some soon, but let's ask, how effective is conspiracy against us?

